As the federal budget deficit grows, fiscal Conservatives like Coburn place increasing scrutiny upon items that are put into appropriations bills, like the infamous "bridge to nowhere" linking Ketchikan and Gravina, Alaska. In academic research these earmarks can help to by-pass regular channels for funding that require competitive reviews and evaluations.

"In a time of war and mounting fiscal challenges, taxpayers have a right to know how their money is spent. In these difficult times, Congress, in particular, has a responsibility to conduct aggressive oversight of all areas of the federal budget, which is why this subcommittee has held 45 oversight hearings since 2005," Coburn said in a press release issued on Sept. 12.

A growing budget deficit isn't the only force supporting Coburn's call for greater government transparency. In January 2006 Jack Abramoff, a prominent Washington lobbyist, pled guilty to counts of conspiracy, fraud and tax evasion. Abramoff's plea and his close ties to many prominent politicians led to the disgrace of a number of public officials, including Rep. Bob Ney, R-Ohio, and also led to increased scrutiny of the lobbying industry's role in

See LOBBYING on page 4

Iraq war intensifies terrorist threat

By Nedra Pickler
Associated Press

WASHINGTON—Democrats on Sunday seized on an intelligence assessment that said the Iraq war has increased the terrorist threat, saying it was further evidence that Americans should choose new leadership in the November elections.

The Democrats hoped the report would undermine the GOP's image as the party more capable of handling terrorism as the campaign enters its final six-week stretch.

Their criticisms came in a collection of statements sent to reporters Sunday amid the disclosure of a National Intelligence Estimate that concluded the war has helped create a new generation of Islamic radicalism and that the overall terrorist threat has grown since the Sept. 11 attacks.

The report was completed in April and represented a consensus view of the 16 disparate spy services inside government, according to an intelligence official. The official, confirming accounts first published in Sunday's New York Times and Washington Post, spoke on condition of anonymity on Sunday because the report is classified.

"Unfortunately this report is just confirmation that the Bush administration's stay-the-course approach to the Iraq war has not just made the war more difficult and more deadly for our troops, but has also made the war on terror more dangerous for every American," said Rep. Rahm Emanuel, head of the Democratic effort to take control of the House.

"It's time for a new direction in this country," Emanuel, D-Ill., said in the statement.

"Press reports say our nation's intelligence services have confirmed that President Bush's repeated missteps in Iraq and his stubborn refusal to change course have made America less safe," said Senate Democratic Leader Harry Reid.

"No election-year White House PR campaign can hide this truth."

A White House spokesman, Blair Jones, said, "We don't comment on classified documents." But he said the published accounts' "characterization of the NIE is not representative of the complete document."

The White House issued a written rebuttal that argued administration officials have been making some of the same arguments as in the intelligence estimate. A White House strategy booklet released this month described the terrorists as more dispersed and less centralized and still a threat to the United States.

Bush himself said on Sept. 5 that "terrorist danger remains" and the broader terrorist movement is becoming more spread out and self-directed. He also quoted Osama bin Laden describing Iraq as the central battlefield in the fight against terrorism.

The president has said the United States is safer since the Sept. 11 attacks and that fighting the terrorists in Iraq keeps them from attacking America. He has said leaving Iraq would make the world less safe.

Democrats said Bush had misled people about Iraq's contribution to the terrorist threat.

"It is abundantly clear that we need a new direction in Iraq by strategically redeploying our troops to fight and win the real war on terror and make our country safer," said Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.

"The American people know it and our military leaders do as well. It's only the Republican leaders who have their heads in the sand, stubbornly refusing to change course and making the war on terror harder to win."

Rep. Jane Harman, the leading Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee and one of a few lawmakers to have read the classified report, said she agrees with the findings.

"Even capturing the remaining top al-Qaida leadership isn't going to prevent copycat cells, and it isn't going to change a failed policy in Iraq," she said. "This administration is trying to change the subject. I don't think voters are going to buy that."

In congressional races across the country, Democratic candidates used the report to attack their opponents and tie them to Bush's faltering strategy. In New York, for example, Democratic challenger Kirsten Gillibrand pointed to the report and said GOP Rep. John Sweeney "has supported President Bush 100 percent of the time on Iraq, refusing to ask tough questions or push for honest answers."

"Now is the time for a new direction, and real accountability and oversight," she said, then called for U.S. forces to be moved out of Iraq within six months to a year.

Three leading Republicans – Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist of Tennessee, Sen. John McCain of Arizona and Sen. Mitch McConnell of Kentucky – defended the war in Iraq and said it is vital that U.S. troops stay in the fight. None of them had seen the classified report, but were responding to press coverage of it.

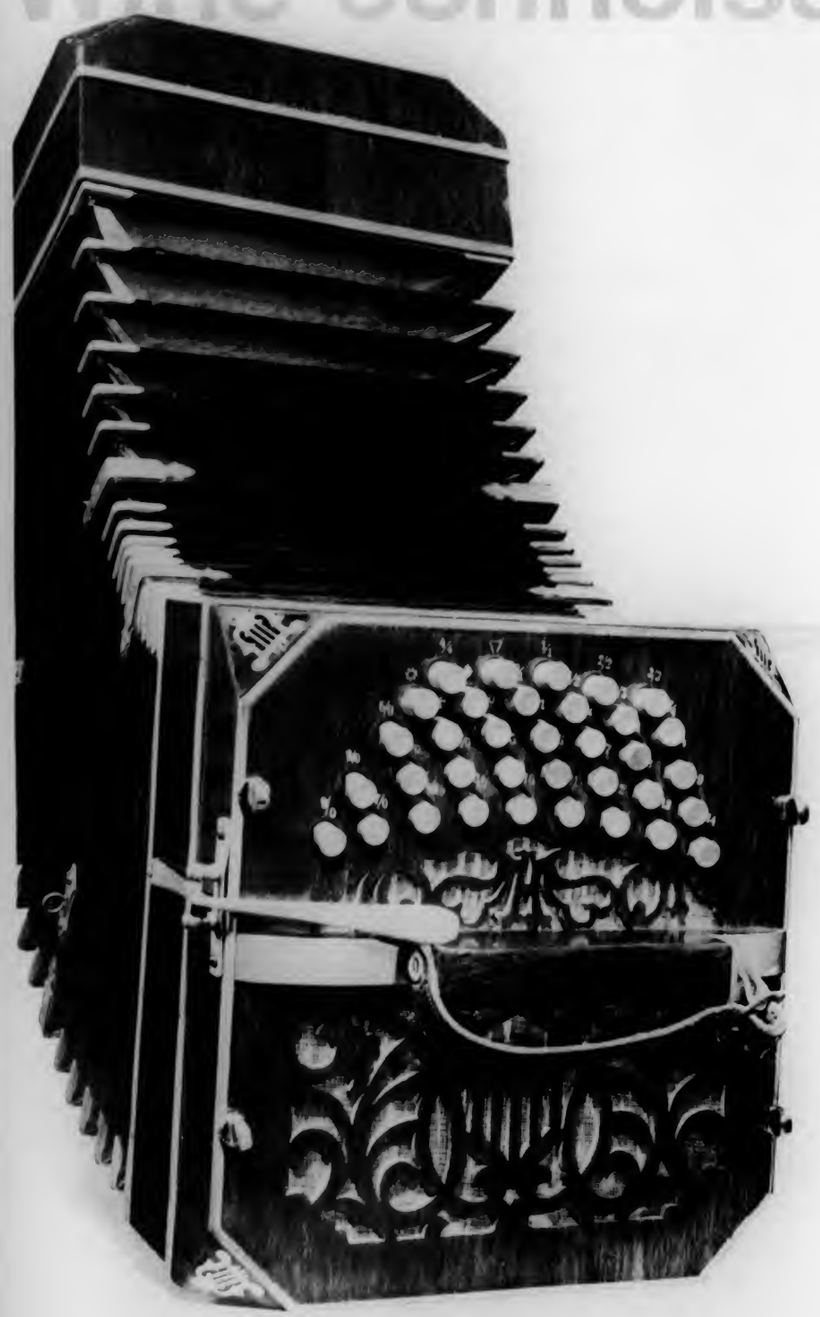
McConnell suggested that the fight in Iraq has stopped terrorists from attacking the United

See IRAQ on page 3

Salman Rushdie visits UMass

Salman Rushdie, author of "Midnight's Children" and "Satanic Verses" lectured at Stockbridge Hall at UMass on Sept. 21. Find the story on pg. 6.

Gastronomist
Tango dancer*
Wine connoisseur



Learn more about Xavier Flores and tell us more about you. Visit pwc.com/bringit.

Your life. You can bring it with you.

*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

Government believes war has increased Islamic fundamentalism

Lawmakers worked out legislation setting terms for the interrogation and trial of suspects in the war on terror.

IRAQ from page 1

States and leaving would only create "a breeding ground for attacks here at home."

"Attacks here at home stopped when we started fighting al-Qaida where they live, rather than responding after they hit," McConnell said in a statement.

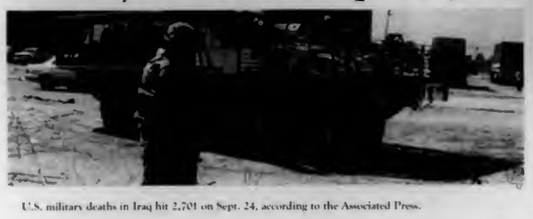
McCain told CBS' "Face the Nation" that if the United States were to fail in Iraq, "then our problems will be much more complicated."

But at least one Republican, Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, said he was very concerned about the intelligence report and agreed that the war had intensified Islamic fundamentalism.

"I think there is a much more fundamental issue how we respond," he said on CNN's "Late Edition." to."

Associated Press writer Jim Drinkard contributed to this report.

Military deaths in Iraq hit 2,701



U.S. military deaths in Iraq hit 2,701 on Sept. 24, according to the Associated Press.

As of Sunday, Sept. 24, 2006, at least 2,701 members of the U.S. military have died since the beginning of the Iraq war in March 2003, according to an Associated Press count. The figure includes seven military civilians. At least 2,150 died as a result of hostile action, according to the military's numbers.

The AP count is six more than the Defense Department's tally, last updated Friday at 10 a.m. EDT.

The British military has reported 118 deaths; Italy, 33; Ukraine, 18; Poland, 17; Bulgaria, 13; Spain, 11; Denmark, five; El Salvador, four; Slovakia, three; Estonia, Netherlands, Thailand, two each, and Australia, Hungary, Kazakhstan, Latvia, Romania, one death each.

—Associated Press

Saddam's defense team boycotts trials

Hussein watched as prosecutors addressed the court during the genocide trial in Baghdad.

By Jamal Halaby
Associated Press

AMMAN, Jordan — Saddam Hussein's defense team will boycott his genocide trial indefinitely, his chief lawyer said Sunday, accusing the judges of violating Iraqi law.

The move was unlikely to halt Saddam's second trial, just as a similar walkout had no effect on it since the chief judge said he would appoint replacements after the lawyers stormed out of court last week. Proceedings resume Monday.

Still, the boycott could raise further questions about the court, which already was under fire over the replacement of the first chief judge after some Iraqis accused him of allegedly favoring the defense.

Saddam's head lawyer, Khalil al-Dulaimi, called the decision to replace Judge Abdullah al-Amiri a "flagrant violation of the law" because it was "dictated by the government and not the court."

Al-Dulaimi also accused the five-judge panel of committing "several violations of the law," including refusing to hear non-Iraqi lawyers and requiring foreign attorneys to seek permission to

See SADDAM on page 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 15

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jamison Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Virgina Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPY EDITOR Sean Durham
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellisseau
SPORTS EDITOR Rob Greenfield
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wollack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Theresa Barbo
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dohanitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjaksakul
ASSISTANT SPORTS Danny Picard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jon Pelland
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS' ACADEMIC SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik

COPY EDITOR
Kristen LaCasse

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Ginny Nielsen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Belanger, Nick Belanger

Girlfriends pocket-money journals
beer
labs academics lectures professors essays parents

YES!+ Accelerating Excellence

IS LIFE DRIVING YOU NUTS???

It's time for YES!+

THE ART OF LIVING

EVENT DETAILS:
Date: Sept 29 - Oct 4, 2006
Venue: LGRC Tower 1632

cafe talésai
let's break rice together®

Check Out Our New Menu!
featuring Stir Fried Chile Garlic Chicken, Orange Shrimp, Beef and Broccoli, Golden Chicken Curry and more...

New Combo Plates
featuring your selection of 2 entrée items, Spring Roll, Steamed Rice or Garlic Rice and any size Fountain Soda for $6.75

DINING SERVICES
UMass

Café Talesai is open Monday Friday from 11:00am to 3:00pm in the Campus Center

UMass spends $280,000 on lobbyists in 2005

LOBBYISTS from page 1

shaping legislation.

Much of the information that Sen. Coburn requested is already publicly available because of the Lobbying Disclosure Act of 1995, which requires financial disclosure for nonprofits, and the public nature of the federal budget.

According to publicly available records from the United States Senate, UMass spent approximately $280,000 on lobbyists during 2005 with fees going to the Washington-based lobbying firm Campbell-Crane & Associates, Inc. and Bradford Penney, a Virginia based lobbyist and attorney. In addition to employing full-time firms, Associate Chancellor James Leheny has served as a part-time lobbyist on behalf of the University. UMass received approximately $21.9 million in federal appropriations in 2005, according to UMass budget figures. Since the University was not subpoenaed, it is under no legal obligation to respond to Coburn's request.

As of deadline, UMass representatives have not responded to requests for comment.

New technology helps students

BY SUYUN HONG
DAILY TEXAN (U. TEXAS)

AUSTIN, Texas- The Engineering Assistance Center and the Faculty Innovation Center have created a way for the iPod generation to receive tips on job hunting through their headphones.

Counselors from the assistance center hope to help engineering students find jobs through the use of podcasts. The podcasts include counselors giving students information and tips about job opportunities, interviews and career fairs, said Michael Powell, director of the assistance center.

"The counselors can't see everyone; there are too many students. But through subscriptions of our podcasts, students have access to counselors 24 hours, seven days a week," said Juan Garcia, audio and visual producer for the Faculty Innovation Center and creator of the podcasts.

The assistance center podcasts are different from audio podcasts because they offer other features, such as a slideshow presentation with graphics and hyperlinks, Garcia said.

"We are one of the only schools to offer help through enhanced podcasts, so we really wanted to set the bar high and provide students with the ultimate amount of tips," said Garcia.

Through the presentations, Garcia said counselors explain what the assistance center does and inform students of upcoming career opportunities.

Aiming to increase students' advantages at career fairs, the podcasts even provide tips on career fair etiquette, Powell said.

The idea of the podcasts came from Powell, Garcia said.

Garcia, a veteran podcast creator, is already well-known for creating SES TV, an online video podcast program that shows works of student filmmakers from around the world, according to a press release. Recognized for his work on SES TV and the assistance center podcasts, Garcia has been asked to speak at the October World eGov Forum in Paris, France.

The podcasts began distribution Sept. 5, according to the iTunes Music Store Web site.

Questions remain in family murder case

Tiffany Hall (left) was charged with one count apiece of first-degree murder and intentional homicide of Jimella Tunstall (right), and her unborn child.

BY JIM SUHR
ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill.—By all accounts, Tiffany Hall and Jimella Tunstall were like sisters, survivors in this place defined by crime, poverty, crumbling buildings and potholed roads.

The two were quiet loners who gravitated toward each other at school. They both became teenage mothers. Years later with two children of her own, according to media reports, Hall baby-sat Tunstall's three kids.

With numbing grief, both families are trying to fathom how things went so horrifically wrong.

Hall, 24, is jailed on $5 million bond, accused on Saturday of killing 23-year-old Tunstall and the fetus that authorities say was cut from her womb, perhaps with scissors.

Later Saturday, a furious two-day search for Tunstall's missing children – ages 7, 2 and 1 – ended with another grisly discovery. Authorities found the children's decomposing bodies stuffed in the washer and dryer at the apartment they shared with their mother.

"At least they're at peace with their mom," LaDonna Tunstall, the slain woman's stepmother, told the Belleville News-Democrat.

As for Hall, she added, "God is going to have to deal with her."

Hall hasn't been charged in the children's deaths. Autopsies were conducted Sunday as investigators traced back over a 10-day stretch that appeared to get darker by the second.

Refusing to discuss a motive, prosecutors say Hall killed Tunstall, who was seven months pregnant, on or about Sept. 15. Later that night, St. Clair County deputy coroner Ace Hart says, Hall summoned authorities to the Frank Holten State Park where police found her with a dead baby she claims she delivered stillborn.

Hall and the baby were taken to a hospital, where she refused to let doctors examine her and gave conflicting accounts of why she went into labor, alternately saying she had consensual sex and was raped, Hart says.

The baby girl showed no signs of trauma and an autopsy the next day failed to pinpoint a cause of death.

"We didn't even figure it was a homicide," Hart said.

When the funeral for the baby, who was buried as Taylor Horn, took place six days later, the mortuary's director found Hall acting strangely. Just minutes before the service, Levi King says, Hall called to ask if she could reschedule for a different day so more family could attend.

Hall turned up two hours late.

"That's never happened before," King says.

Then during the service, Police Chief James Mister says, the woman confided in her boyfriend – a sailor home on leave – that the child belonged to a pregnant woman she said she killed. The boyfriend told police, who arrested Hall hours later.

By that time, authorities already had found Tunstall's body in a weedy lot just blocks from the sprawling state park where Hall had summoned police six days earlier. Near the body were scissors Hart suspects were used to carve out the woman's fetus.

In his nearly quarter century in the coroner's business, Hart says he'd seen it all around this city where violent crime typically dominates the headlines. But this carnage, he admits, "was very graphic and very brutal."

It got worse.

By the next morning, investigators were imploring the media and public to help find Tunstall's three children, who they said were last seen four days earlier with Hall.

Dozens of law enforcers and volunteers converged on the state park in a frantic search by horseback, foot, air and boat. Everything, including cadaver dogs, proved the morning...

See MURDER on page 5

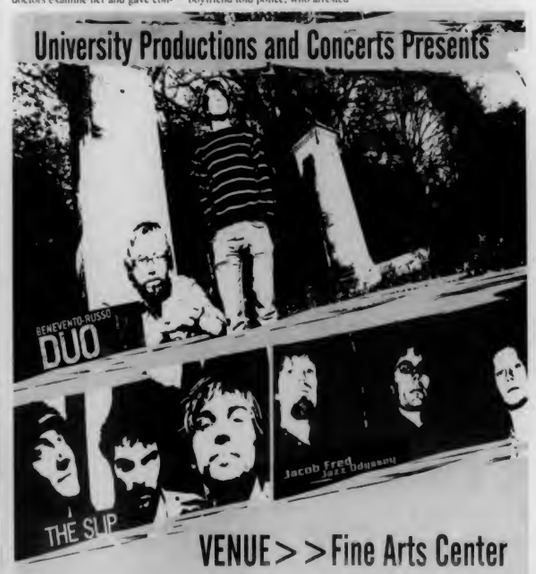
IF YOU'RE AN EARLY RISER...
BEEP BEEP
AND YOU NEED TO KNOW WHAT'S UP ON CAMPUS,
TEAM
HAVE THE LATEST NEWS WAITING FOR YOU...
RIGHT IN YOUR INBOX.

http://www.dailycollegian.com//register

University Productions and Concerts Presents



VENUE>>Fine Arts Center
TIME>>8pm
DATE>>Tuesday, September 26, 2006
TICKETS>>UMASS Amherst - $8.00
Five College - $12.00
General Public - 15.00

UMASS AMHERST

(TICKETS ON SALE AT THE FAC BOX OFFICE ON SEPTEMBER 6, 2006)

Three murdered children's bodies found in laundry machines

MURDER from page 4

fruitless.

On Saturday, searchers rechecked the overgrown plot where Tunstall was found dead, thinking maybe they overlooked something. They scoured other sites around town, only to come away empty-handed.

All the while, neighbors said Sunday, there was little activity around Tunstall's apartment, where Tasha McCray, a frequent visitor, says the woman seldom mingled and routinely sat outside on a red plastic crate to watch DeMond walk to his school bus stop.

By Saturday, investigators remained upbeat. DeMond had many more school days ahead of him, along with his siblings. Illinois State Police Capt. Craig Koehler told reporters "we have no evidence that leads us to believe they're dead."

Little did investigators know they'd already brushed past the kids.

Hart says investigators on Friday had been inside Tunstall's apartment 281 at the John DeShields public housing complex to get photographs of the missing children for media outlets to publicize during the search.

Authorities found nothing unusual and left, only to return on Saturday night when Hall "fessed up where the kids were," Hart says. Inside the closed apartment, the pungent stench of death greeted them.

Police found 7-year-old DeMond Tunstall's body – 4 feet tall, 55 pounds – in the dryer. The other two children – 2-year-old Ivan Tunstall-Collins and 1-year-old Jimela Tunstall – were lifeless in the washer. Two of the children were nude, the third wearing only underpants.

Hart can't fault anyone for not finding the children during their previous visit.

"Who would be looking in the washer and dryer?" he says.

One by one, coroner Rick Stone declared each child dead a minute apart. Hart had the grim chore of pulling each from the appliance, softly laying them on the floor and zipping them into separate body bags.

Saddam may face execution

SADDAM from page 3

Awad Mohammed Faris testified in Saddam Hussein's genocide trial in Baghdad.

enter the courtroom. Among Saddam's nine lawyers are a Jordanian, a Spaniard, a Frenchman and two Americans, including former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark.

"We will not just sit there gagged to give it legitimacy," said al-Dulaimi, an Iraqi. But softening his tone somewhat, he said he hoped "the court will listen to our requests and that's when we'll go back to the courtroom."

Saddam and seven others have been on trial since Aug. 21 for a crackdown on Kurdish guerrillas in the late 1980s. The prosecution says about 180,000 people, mostly civilians, died in attacks that included the use of poison gas against Kurdish towns and villages in northern Iraq. Saddam could face execution if convicted of genocide.

The defense also boycotted the final stages of Saddam's first trial, for his alleged role in the deaths of 148 Shiite Muslims in Dujail following a 1982 assassination attempt against him in the town.

A verdict in that trial, which began Oct. 19, 2005, is expected when the court reconvenes next month. Saddam and his seven co-defendants could receive the death sentence if convicted.

On Tuesday, the government said Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki approved a request by the Iraqi High Tribunal to remove al-Amiri, replacing him with his deputy, Mohammed Oreibi al-Khalifa.

Al-Amiri had angered Kurdish politicians by declaring in court that Saddam was "not a dictator." Saddam's lawyers stormed out of the Wednesday session to protest the change in judges, and al-Khalifa threw the ousted president out of court when he accused the panel of acting outside the law.

"They claim that it's an independent court, but it's not," al-Dulaimi said Sunday.

Another of Saddam's lawyers, a Jordanian, said Saddam would be present at Monday's court session, but suggested it could be against his will.

"They have the power to bring him forcefully and this is what I expect," said Ziad al-Najdawi.

Al-Dulaimi questioned the legal qualifications of the new chief judge, saying that "he lacks the experience and the caliber needed in this trial."

Government grants $5 million for public school hazard radios

The government plans to provide hazard warning radios, which are primarily used for severe weather advisories, to every public school.

BY RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – When the squeal from an automated warning radio brought news a severe storm was approaching, school principal William Tomic acted quickly. He alerted teachers to bring children indoors and to a secure interior hallway for shelter.

Minutes later, 70 mph winds ripped the roof off the kindergarten wing of the Charles E. Johnson Elementary School in Endicott, N.Y.

No one was hurt, thanks to the warning and the timely response to it.

"It really did work very well, we were so pleased with it," Tomic said in a telephone interview. "The parents were as well."

Many were concerned when they arrived to find the roof lying on the side of the building. But their children were safe and had not even seen the damage occur, Tomic said.

Hoping for more such success stories, the government planned to announce on Monday that it will supply hazard warning radios to all 97,000 public schools in the United States.

The National Weather Service, part of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, operates more than 950 short-range radio stations. It has encouraged schools, businesses and homeowners to buy warning radios that are activated with a broadcast signal that automatically turns a radio on and announces a potential hazard.

The Homeland Security Department now has decided to provide $5 million to make sure those radios are in every public school, NOAA Administrator Conrad Lautenbacher said.

Originally conceived as a means to deliver weather warnings, the system now covers all hazards – for example, terrorism, abducted children and derailed trains carrying toxic materials.

Of course, it takes more than just having the warning radio. School authorities have to know what to do when an alarm sounds.

Tomic said his school has two weather drills a year. Each classroom has a kit that the teachers bring along to the shelter area to keep the children occupied with games, stories, songs and other activities.

In Fairfax County, Va., three tornado and severe weather drills are held annually, said Fred Hills, the director of safety and security for public schools.

"Certainly we've had our share of severe weather," Hills said, noting the radios have been in county schools for several years.

Typically they are in the school office where there is always someone to monitor them. "They make quite a racket," Hills said, and it is useful for administrators to keep track of what is happening outside their buildings.

"We're not immune from severe weather and we take that very seriously," Hills said.

In announcing the plan to distribute the radios, NOAA pointed out that more than 10,000 major thunderstorms, 2,500 floods and 1,000 tornadoes hit the United States annually, and that hurricanes threaten the Gulf and East coasts.

Lautenbacher said weather experts from local Weather Service offices will be available to assist school officials in determining how best to use the radios.

The radios operate 24-hours-a-day, receiving forecasts and warnings from the Weather Service's 123 forecast offices as well as other information.

Six states – Washington, Tennessee, North Carolina, Maryland, Florida and Mississippi – already mandate use of the radios in schools. NOAA said those schools will also be included in the new program to make sure they have the most recent models. Also included will be tribal schools and public schools in U.S. territories.

Typically the radios are smaller than a clock radio, have a battery backup in case of power loss and are sold at electronic and other stores for $20 to $80. Most can be programmed to respond only to warnings for a specific area – a county or city, for example.

Lautenbacher said the distribution is expected to begin in October and should take a few months.

He said the NOAA radio system covers about 97 percent of the country with the few gaps in some sparsely populated mountain areas.

Now in three convenient locations!

The Pita Pit
FRESH THINKING • HEALTHY EATING

1 Campus Center Pita Pit
Open Monday through Friday
11:00am to 3:00pm

2 Southwest Café Pita Pit
Open 7 days per week
5:00pm to 1:00am

3 Worcester Pita Pit
Open 7 days per week
5:00pm to 1:00am

A 4th location coming soon!
Watch for the Hatch Pita Pit
Open Monday through Friday
11:00am to 2:00pm
DINING SERVICES

UDRIVE
Anytime.
YOUR FILES
Anywhere.

Upload your files to UDrive, then access them from wherever you have an Internet connection, on-campus or off. No need to save your files to disk, CD-ROM or USB Drive. Use your 250 MB of UDrive space instead.

STORE any type of file from papers to photos.

SHARE files with individuals or groups.

COLLABORATE on group projects.

Office of Information Technologies oit

http://udrive.oit.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The university environment can be torture

Dan Nicastro

In order to win the war on terror, George W. Bush believes drastic measures must be taken. At this very moment, President Bush is attempting to rewrite the rules of torture and change the widely accepted standard of treatment for prisoners of war. Bush is looking for clarification on Geneva Convention Common Article 3, which outlines the rights of detainees in a rather broad manner. It prohibits, among other things, "outrages upon personal dignity, in particular humiliating and degrading treatment," and also prohibits "violence to life and person, in particular murder of all kinds, mutilation, cruel treatment and torture."

Obviously, Bush wants to let the terrorists know we're not going to mess around when we find them (which we will). It seems that not even a coalition of the willing can deter these terrorists, so the best way to beat the root causes of terrorism is to make sure you let everyone in the world know you will torture the crap out of anyone who gets caught.

For the first time in his presidency, Bush seems to be taking his cues from the intellectual community. UMass has had its own strategic, unwritten rules of torture for the last several years, something which is rarely acknowledged amongst the University administration. In the September 25, 2006 issue of "Newsweek," Evan Thomas reported that the Bush administration was seeking to include seven allowed tactics into the torture section of the Geneva Conventions. Amazingly, UMass already has several of these tactics in practice.

1. "Inducing Hypothermia" – Apparently George W. Bush knows being cold sucks and will force people to talk. On the flip side, UMass also knows that being cold sucks, so they have decided to throw up as many construction barriers as possible to try and add an additional five minutes of walking when it's 25 degrees outside, thinking that walking builds character or something.

2. "Forced standing over long periods of time" – George W. Bush is looking for approval for interrogation techniques which force prisoners to stand for long periods of time. The thought is that this will wear the prisoner down until he is ready to talk. UMass created Whitmore for the expressed purpose of wearing you down and keeping your money, since you are so frustrated at standing up for hours on end that you just leave. Touche Whitmore. Touche.

3. "Sleep deprivation" – This is one of the harsher techniques in forcing people to talk. Anyone deprived of sleep is obviously more likely to let their guard down, and perhaps even give false information because their brain is not functioning properly. By the same token, I didn't know there was an eight o'clock in the morning until I signed up for a 9:05 (and if you believe the legends, there are even earlier classes).

4. "Sound and light manipulation" – Switching between bright and soft lighting and blaring Celine Dion for hour upon hour would mess with anyone's psyche and is one of the most egregious examples of horrific torture. Sadly, several similar tactics are used here in Amherst. Most noticeably, UMass has attempted to curb the drinking habits of its roughly 110,000 students living on campus, not only through a much stricter alcohol policy, but also through the presence of garbage trucks. This becomes obvious on Saturday and Sunday mornings, when the garbage is collected at the God-awful hour of 6:30 a.m.

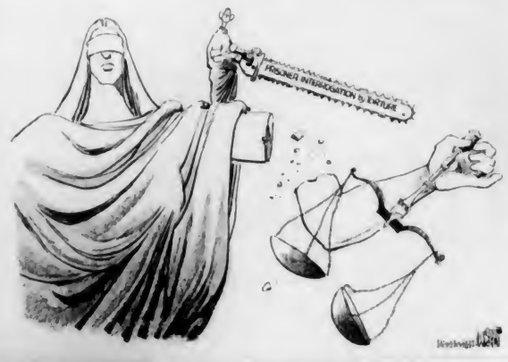
Evan Thomas reported that the Bush administration was seeking to include seven allowed tactics into the torture section of the Geneva Conventions. Amazingly, UMass already has several of these tactics in practice.

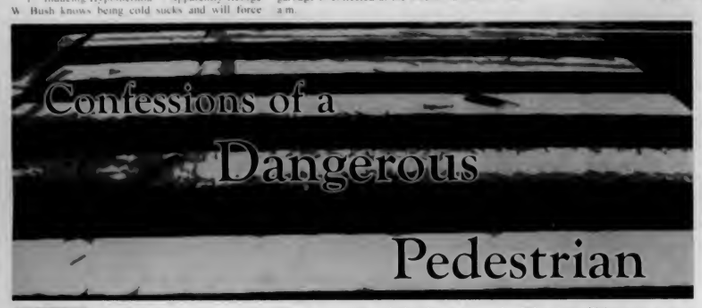
Now, out of the kindness of my heart, I would like to offer the president some alternatives to these tactics, as it may be in bad taste to steal all of your ideas from a state University which has had to suffer due to lack of funding (just one of life's funny little ironies).

If you are scouting for torture, look no further than the shining beacon that is Hollywood. There are so many possibilities to consider. There's the obvious horror of being locked in a closet with Tom Cruise for three hours, or the job of personal assistant to Lindsay Lohan, but there are far more subtle ways to carry out torture in Hollywood. I think I heard somewhere that Tim Allen is looking to make a comeback, and he probably needs another agent to get him cast in "The Santa Clause 4" (unfortunately, this may cross that line of acceptability).

So now it's up to you Mr. President. I understand that you're all about this torture thing, but you really should credit your sources. Obviously, you don't have to listen to my suggestions. In fact, I'm sure you could find something much more devilish and torturous than I've come up with here (I've heard Dick Cheney is looking for a new hunting partner).

Dan Nicastro is a Collegian columnist.





Melissa Garber

My mom taught me when I was a kid that I should always look both ways before crossing the street. Elementary school taught me to buddy up and hold hands with a friend or adult and to wear orange light reflectors when walking around at night. I would say these were simple enough procedures that were instrumental in me not getting hit by oncoming traffic.

Yet, much has changed since my orange reflector wearing, hand holding, look both ways before crossing the street days. My pedestrian track record is not something my mother would be proud of. She didn't waste her precious breath giving me sage advice aimed to save my life just so I could go gallivanting around like I own the streets.

My pedestrian skills are not really a problem in my hometown where the only way to get around is by car. The most walking I do is from my driveway to my front door. Here at UMass though I have been forced to become somewhat of a protest signal walker.

I live in Baker, which might not mean something to everyone but to those who know the buildings in upper Central and Orchard Hill it means I live on the hill. A typical walk to class for me takes on average 15 to 20 minutes.

Monday through Friday, from 11 a.m. to around 4:30 p.m. I am in the center of campus with the rest of the student body. Every single person even mildly affiliated with UMass is on campus, whether they are on foot or in their car. The traffic on North Pleasant Street is stop and go, and the construction all over campus only makes it even more of a three-ring circus.

PVTA buses are pulling in and out of bus stops all up and down the street, and the pedestrian crosswalks have a never ending flow of people. You couldn't pay me to sit through that frustration. On the other hand, I walk through it on a daily basis.

I am not timid, a tell-tale sign of a freshman, when approaching the crosswalk. I walk across bearing no signs that my mother ever taught me proper street crossing etiquette. I storm across the street, usually glaring at the drivers I forced to slam on their brakes and skid to a stop.

I will not spend one second longer in the rain, snow, heat or cold trying to get to or from class. I do not have a roof over my head, those who do can wait.

I have no sympathy for those barreling around in their cars, ignoring glaringly obvious crosswalks. I am a pedestrian, and I have the right of way. I don't feel bad because, unlike those in their always temperate vehicles, I am walking in the incessant rain, humidity or, the most frequent, bitter cold.

I will not spend one second longer in the rain, snow, heat or cold trying to get to or from class. I do not have a roof over my head, those who do can wait. It's not as though I stroll across the street trying to piss people off. I am just utilizing my state given rights.

Maybe if I weren't walking to one miserable class after the other, and maybe if the journey back to my dorm didn't require a walking stick and hiking boots I would be more empathetic. But under the given circumstances I am bitter, and I cross the street giving no heed to my surroundings.

Some people, mainly those who are operating motor vehicles, don't agree with my sentiments. Sophomore Dan Watkins, an experienced PVTA bus driver claims, "It's hard to stop 20 tons in 10 feet." A valid argument, but drivers should steer with caution on roads that have frequent crosswalks.

Granted I do only put this strategy in practice during the day when traffic is going at most 10 miles per hour. I'm not suggesting storming across the street at night when it's harder for drivers to see pedestrians, unless of course you're equipped with orange light reflectors. Even then I would still proceed with caution. Who knows what kind of crazies appear on the roads at night.

I really just don't understand the drivers who won't stop at the crosswalks when they're stuck in traffic anyways. Speeding through the crosswalk just to slam on your breaks directly after so a bus can pull out is absurd. Just let the pedestrians cross.

I have heard that UMass is looking into getting crossing guards to regulate pedestrian traffic at the crosswalks. Could be a good thing – it might help reckless people like me avoid getting hit by careless drivers. But maybe they should just invest in counseling, so I can stop being bitter and take my mom's advice.

Melissa Garber is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

We're sure you have something to say, why don't you let everyone know about it like those people to the right did.

E-mail:
editorial@ daily collegian.
com

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

EFFORTS AT THE ANNEX

There is a need for some correction to statements made in the front-page story about textbooks in the Thursday, September 21, issue. First, I will state very clearly that no leverage is required to have bookstore staff sit down with students or SGA representatives to discuss textbook prices and potential solutions.

On several occasions in the past, I have, as bookstore director, requested to meet with SGA representatives, including the president, only to be rebuffed. Interestingly, when the SGA wanted a recognition prize this past year, they felt free to come and request a donation from us, which we gladly gave.

Hopefully that is a first step toward more open dialogue. With regard to their rental proposal however, when the math and numbers were presented, we demonstrated that our current guaranteed buyback program provides the greatest affordability for students, even beyond aggressive rental programs.

Also, while the math in the article seems at face value to make sense, (the 300 percent "profit" they mention), it ignores two very important facts. First, there is initial inventory investment. In other words, the bookstore must initially buy the books from the vendor.

Inventory acquisition represents our single largest cost, and so, it would make more sense to be working on reducing that cost factor than simply blaming the bookstore for its prices. The downtown stores are subject to the same cost factors when they acquire their inventory.

Second, there are many expenses involved in running the store, most notably the 46 staff people who provide the necessary services. The "profit" in any profit and loss statement is only that money which is left after all expenses have been covered. I can assure you that their number does not represent reality.

The University Store and Textbook Annex make every effort to support the campus community. Last year we contributed over $6,000 to Registered Student Organizations, provided our annual $10,000 in bookstore scholarships, gave back $1.2 million dollars at buyback as well as providing the University nearly $1 million dollars in income.

We hope that SGA will want to work with us in developing greater understanding of the entire textbook cycle, working even closer with faculty to help drive the cost down.

Phill Olson
Textbook Annex Store Director

HELPING THOSE IN NEED

We have been involved in community service since a very young age, and we have always been told that one person can make a difference and help change the world. UMass Amherst, which is considered by the Princeton Review to be a "College with a Conscience," has provided many opportunities for us to reach out to the community during the years we have been here.

We took courses in which we discussed the problems in our society, the changes that need to be made to our education system and the frustration many of us have with the government's inability to successfully address issues like poverty and educational inequity.

This summer, we learned about an organization that impressed us simply because they were actually doing something to improve the education system in the United States. They recognized a problem, brainstormed a solution and put it into practice without waiting for government support or recognition.

Teach For America puts college graduates in low-income areas around the country and helps catch up students who are two to three grade levels behind their peers in high-income areas. Teach For America is not perfect, but the results produced by their corps members are amazing. In fact, the organization is now starting to see the students of former corps members applying to join the corps themselves; if this isn't evidence of the success and impact of Teach For America, we don't know what is.

We're writing this because we feel there are a good number of UMass students who want to make a significant impact on the world but are not sure how and are not sure of exactly what they want to do after they graduate. We also feel that a lot of students have never heard of Teach For America and know as little about it as we did four months ago.

Being a Teach For America corps member is a fully-paid position that allows you to have a direct impact on many children's lives. You can be the difference between them learning to read or not; going to college or not; believing in themselves or not.

If this sparks your interest, as it did ours, there is an information session in room 101 in the Campus Center this Monday at 7:30 p.m. Grab some food, listen to what a former corps member has to say and decide if you want to prove that everyday citizens can address the educational achievement gap in this country outside the voting booth.

Deanna Vasilakis
Matt Sloan
UMass students

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Controversial author speaks at UMass

By Katy Staley
Collegian Correspondent

The anticipation in the air was obvious as students, professors and other interested folks gathered outside of Stockbridge Hall on Thursday afternoon, forming a line that snaked almost all the way to Du Bois Library.

Anyone who stopped to ask what was going on received the same excited answer: "Salman Rushdie is speaking." For many, this name means nothing, but for others Rushdie is quite a familiar name. He was born in Bombay and grew up both in India and in England where he attended school. His first novel was published in 1975, and since then he has published several acclaimed novels, including: "Midnight's Children" and "Satanic Verses." The latter of which resulted in the leader of Iran ordering Rushdie's death.

Rushdie signs his book, "The Moor's Last Sigh" at the National Press Club in Washington earlier this year.

In the clear now and having just come out with his latest novel "Shalimar the Clown," it was a great pleasure to have him come speak at UMass. The mere presence of such an acclaimed writer on campus was enough for many people to come out and see Rushdie speak.

As foreshadowed by the long lines, the auditorium was packed with people sitting in every possible seat or saving seats for others running outside to buy Rushdie's books that were on sale, thanks to Amherst Books. As big as Bowker Auditorium, Stockbridge was not big enough for all the people interested in seeing Rushdie. The lecture was also being fed by video to the Campus Center Auditorium for more of the author's admirers.

Although Rushdie probably would have had no problem speaking about his own books, he was at UMass specifically to give a lecture on the Troy Lecture series entitled "Heraclites, or Character and Destiny." The Troy Lectures are held annually by the English department to pay tribute to Frederick S. Troy, who was an honorary professor at UMass.

From the moment the event started, the atmosphere of the auditorium was taut with suspense. Introductions by Anne Herrington and Stephen Clingman, who read briefly from "Midnight's Children," started off the event. They helped provide background on the lecture series, as well as, give some information about Rushdie's personal achievements.

Finally the moment came when the man himself appeared on stage to thunderous applause. Rushdie began his lecture by raising the question about why there is so much "rape in literature." From there Rushdie went on to reference works from Samuel Richardson, Shakespeare, Cervantes, Charles Shultz and many others to illustrate the idea that character is destiny. One of Rushdie's main points was that a character already has a destiny which the writer has no control over. In effect, the character owns the writer, and the writer is bound by his/her creation.

Although the topic he was speaking on could have quickly become dry, Rushdie wouldn't have it. As much of a comedian as he is a lecturer and writer, Rushdie had the crowd laughing along with him on several occasions – some laughs even resulted from him calling Heraclites, "Part wise man, part fortune cookie." Furthermore, while he tried to stay on topic, his charming digressions about how Moby Dick got his name, among other things, were definitely crowd pleasers.

Rushdie ended his speech only to be graced with a standing ovation from the enthusiastic crowd, after which he answered a few questions before setting up for a book signing. After a week full of work, stress and rushing around, people definitely appeared to enjoy being able to sit and listen to an author many consider to be one of the best of his time.

In 1989 the British-Indian essayist and author of fiction was forced into hiding for two years due to his controversial book "The Satanic Verses," which many Muslims consider blasphemous.

'Weird Al' Yankovic releases new CD 'Straight Outta Lynwood'

By Monica Gleberman
Collegian Staff

Weird Al Yankovic, known for his parodies of celebrities and original sound, is debuting a new CD called, "Straight Outta Lynwood." It is set to hit stores September 26. Weird Al has been performing for a long time – his first single hit the airwaves in 1979. It has been over 20 years, but Weird Al isn't expecting any hall of fame recognition just yet.

You might have heard his recently single called, "White and Nerdy," which pokes fun at the song by Chamillionaire, "Ridin' Dirty," which has been giving Weird Al a lot of press for his upcoming CD. "White and Dirty" was the most fun to parody. I could use things from my nerdy life and incorporate them." Weird Al also mentioned that it might be rare to hear this song at one of his concerts because it's extremely hard and fast.

"The only [reactions to my song] I heard back is from (rapper) Chamillionaire," Yankovic also says he has been saying "nice things" to the media, and posted his song on his MySpace page.

"I was mostly happy that Chamillionaire was extremely happy with it. Apparently I could flow and spit, which is something I didn't know."

Yankovic's new CD is "pirate proof" according to Al.

"You want to give fans something more than just an album that people can download. Not only do you get all 12 songs, but you get tons of extras to make it more private proof. I think that's what makes it more worth while and travel into sales."

He talks about this very topic on his CD in a song called, "Don't Download This Song," which is meant to mimic an 80s charity benefit song, like "We Are the World."

"It's the first single on the CD. Some people think it's pro-downloading, that it's encouraging people not to download off the Internet. My feelings are somewhat grey."

Though, it seems that his CD is basically a split between parodies and originals that Weird Al created.

"I think if I didn't have a polka song my fans would riot," Al said.

He also discussed how the artist feels about him using their songs to create his parodies.

"Generally they never get upset because I get their permission ahead of time. They know it's coming. Most of them get flattered because they know it means they reached a certain point in their career."

However, things don't always go so smoothly. Previously, Weird Al got into a problem with rapper Coolio about doing the parody called, "Amish Paradise," making fun of Coolio's "Gangsta Paradise."

"To this day I really don't know the entire story as to what happened with Coolio, but again this is water under the bridge."

Legally Weird Al doesn't have to ask for permission for making fun of an artist. However, he said he will never make a song without their permission.

"It's a grey area legally. I could get away with it if I wanted to push it. I think one of the reasons my career has gone on the way it has is that I respect the artist and their music and I don't want to go stepping on somebody's toes. It's nice when you're working with rappers to know that I won't be involved in a drive by."

Weird Al's next tour will be next summer 2007. All the information about his tour should be available on ticketmaster when the dates become finalized. Everyone should go check out his concert. I will leave you with Weird Al's reason for why fans should attend:

"If you have never seen what I do on stage, I like to call it a multimedia extravaganza. It shouldn't be missed."

Most of Yankovic's work satirizes the pop-culture of tv, movies, music and news.

Yankovic sometimes clashes with record labels when he tries to parody their music.

This week debuts new drama on TV

By Chuck Barney
Contra Costa Times

"Heroes," NBC's audacious sci-fi drama, should appeal to anyone who, during his youth, draped a beach towel from his shoulders and sealed the backyard fence hoping to prove that he could actually fly – but only achieved a nanosecond of aeronautical ecstasy before going splat.

Feeding upon this kind of comic book-bred fantasy, "Heroes" poses the question: What would you do if you suddenly did acquire the ability to soar – or some other astonishing superpower? In tonight's dense and wildly uneven pilot, that's exactly what is happening to a diverse group of characters scattered all over the globe.

A young New Yorker (Milo Ventimiglia) believes he can take to the sky like a bird. Meanwhile, a Texas cheerleader (Hayden Panettiere) discovers she's indestructible and an office drone in Tokyo (Masi Oka) learns he can teleport himself to far-out places. And so on and so forth.

Thankfully, they don't all don capes and spandex and convene in some Stan Lee-concocted superhero sanctum. But you get the impression that these seemingly ordinary people are destined to cross paths and do something extraordinary – like, perhaps, save the world.

With a massive cast (some characters don't even make it into the pilot) and sci-fi trappings, "Heroes" might be a tough sell. I didn't warm up to it until a second viewing and even then I had misgivings. Some of the story lines felt fresh (the geek in Japan), but others just felt tired (a Las Vegas stripper being chased by the mob).

I also wonder if "Heroes" might be too ambitious for creator Tim Kring ("Crossing Jordan") to get his arms around. If he can hone in on the few characters who click, and get us to care about how these unique people will function in everyday life, the show might build more than a cult audience.

If not, "Heroes" just won't fly.

Here's a look at two other shows debuting this week:

One is "Runaway." This serial thriller is "The Fugitive" done as a family drama.

Donnie Wahlberg plays an attorney who, after getting framed for murder, goes on the lam with his wife (Leslie Hope) and three kids. They assume fake identities and settle into a small Midwestern town. But there's nothing settling about their situation as they're being hunted by both the cops and the bad guys who want dad rubbed out.

Tonight's pilot is a mixed bag, succeeding in conveying an unnerving family-on-edge tension, but striking some false notes when it focuses on the family's rebellious teen son (Dustin Milligan). Much more of that and I'll be the one running away.

The second show debuting this week is "Help Me Help You" (memo to Ted Danson – we forgive you for "Becker").

YouTube finds trouble with content sharing

By Sibai Johnson
Chicago Tribune

It's been more than a little breathtaking, watching YouTube gain heat, light and speed as it streaks across the Internet.

By making it easy for people to upload their own videos and search and play others', the site has unleashed demand that nobody else quite understood existed.

Before YouTube, short films were mostly the province of French animators gunning for one of the lesser Oscars whose awarding time most folks use for a snack break. Now, some 100 million videos per day are viewed there, YouTube says, none of them more than 10 minutes long.

They encompass everything from LonelyGirl15's recently famous fake musings about teenage life to legitimate amateur video to copyrighted clips from "The Daily Show" that their owner, Comedy Central, treats, so far, with a don't-ask-don't-sue policy.

Increasingly, though, there have been suggestions that some might sue, which is why YouTube's content-sharing deal with giant Warner Music Group, announced this week, is so potentially important.

If the cloud of copyright issues is removed, YouTube will have a chance to keep the exponential growth growing. Already, right now, the site accounts for three of every five videos watched online, according to the Hitwise audience measurement service.

YouTube has become the place people look first when there's anything interesting captured on camera. It could be the White Stripes "appearing" on "The Simpsons," Ashlee Simpson's McDonald's meltdown, or Virginia Sen. George Allen's debate response indicating that he thinks asking him whether he's Jewish is an "aspersion."

Go to YouTube (youtube.com), try a search or two for something you've heard about, and there, in all likelihood, it will be – free, watchable, clickable, e-mailable, shareable, blog-importable.

It's pretty much the dream clip, so long as the legitimate copyright holder hasn't noticed and asked for it to be disappeared, like as when NBC last winter famously got YouTube to remove copies of "Saturday Night Live's" sparkling "Lazy Sunday" rap parody. That video, some observers think, is what pushed YouTube into Web superstar status.

Even people without a viewing agenda can wander onto the site and bounce from clip to clip for hours on end, like as folks of an earlier generation used to do when cable TV seemed new and exciting.

But observers have been saying for months that something had to give there. Far too much of the YouTube content, especially the most popular content, flirts with someone else's copyright. The most ominous predictions anticipated those of billionaire NBA owner Mark Cuban, who blogged this week about YouTube heading for a Napster-like fall.

"And it's not just copyright lawsuits that will end up severely impacting YouTube's business," Cuban writes in his entry, "The Coming Dramatic Decline of YouTube," on Blog Maverick (blogmaverick.com). "It's that their business is too easy for the people who own the copyrights to copy."

Cuban, it should be noted, was also the guy who predicted, at the South by Southwest Interactive Festival back in 1999, that MP3 technology wouldn't last six months.

Chad Hurley (left) and Steven Chen (right) are the founders of YouTube, a company that makes it easy to upload and share.

But regardless of its critics' track records, YouTube has been paying attention. It made a deal with NBC back in June that allowed it to host NBC promotional clips and solicited homemade promos for NBC's "The Office." A number of those, quite polished and quite funny, showed on the broadcast network over the summer.

NBC Universal digital content chief Jeff Gaspin said it doesn't bother him that, for instance, almost every moment of the romantic comedy's central relationship, between officemates Jim and Pam, is now up on YouTube, some 15 videos of eight or so minutes apiece amounting, in total, to almost a mini-version of the Season 2 Two DVD set.

"If the Internet helps create buzz for us, great," Gaspin said, reasoning that the Jim and Pam relationship could join TV classics like such as Sam and Diane ("Cheers") and Ross and Rachel ("Friends"), but first viewers have to find out about it.

When you take into account NBC's moderate shift in stance, and, for instance, Comedy Central's wink-and-a-nod at the proliferation of "Daily Show" and "Colbert Report" clips that users upload, you understand that many copyright holders seem to be deciding that the promotional value of YouTube appearances is more valuable than any revenue that might be gained by forcing users to the holders' own Web sites.

But others aren't so sanguine. Last week, Doug Morris, CEO of the giant Universal Music Group, was speaking of YouTube and the less-copyright-dependent MySpace when he said, "These new businesses are copyright infringers and owe us tens of millions of dollars."

Not only are Universal artists' music videos on the site, but popular songs are background music in thousands upon thousands of YouTube's amateur videos. Morris wasn't satisfied with YouTube's policy of taking down copyrighted material upon the holder's request.

This week, as if in response to Universal's beef, YouTube announced a deal with the giant Warner Music Group that may pave the way for a more peaceful coexistence with copyright.

In essence, Warner music videos will go up on YouTube for its users to enjoy. Users will also be granted license to use songs from artists in the stable, which includes the Atlantic, Warner Bros., Rhino and Sire labels.

In return, YouTube is implementing a system that will search its site for copyrighted material and pay royalties to the copyright holder, provided that holder has authorized YouTube to use its content.

Drive-By Truckers conquer the crowd at Pearl Street

By Dave Master
Collegian Staff

Last Wednesday, Pearl Street Night Club in Northampton was rocked to the ground when Drive-By Truckers headlined with opening act Bobby Bare Jr.

Bare, an ill-kept Jack Black, opened his 45-minute set with his most unassuming song, "Mehan." He walked on stage alone breathing into the harmonica he had around his neck, picked up his weathered Gibson acoustic guitar and started to gently finger pick the opening chords. His frazzled hair shined in the stage light and shook when he started to sing. As he sang the chorus, Starvation League member Corey Younts floated on stage like a shadow and strummed a mandolin and sang harmony. "Mehan" was definitely the highlight of Bobby Bare Jr.'s opening performance.

After "Mehan," the rest of Bare's Young Criminals' Starvation League band paraded on stage drinking Budweiser beer. They looked like they were born and raised inside a truck, never seeing the light of day unless they were playing music. Starvation League's lead guitarist, Carl Broemel, had a mustache that looked like he was ready to charge at the union army any second. His vulgar stage moves and facial expressions were hard to watch, but he could play that guitar.

Even harder to watch was drummer Patrick Hallahan, who needed to be held down or put in a straight jacket — his eyes kept rolling in the back of his head as he convulsed violently behind the drum set. His jaw perpetually dropped as drool glistened from his mouth down to his thighs.

The band's most popular song was "Valentine." It was played with straightforward rock rhythms, and it was the only song that was able to have a sing-along. Bare shouted out the chorus at the top of his lungs – "My Valentine/I killed my valentine/and I laughed until I cried for my Valen Tine." The charisma and enthusiasm of the band matched the disturbing qualities of "Valentine" as they all played this song with smiles and bobbed their heads from side to side.

The band played many amusing songs, like "Flat Chested Girl from Maynardville," "That Mother F" and "Demon Valley," all of which had their own, terribly unique qualities. When Bare finished his set, he and his band walked off stage leaving a crowd of confused people behind, who didn't know whether to hate the music they had just listened to, or to hate themselves for listening to the music that was just played before them.

The crowd was infested with long-haired, denim-wearing, 40-year-old fans. They anxiously awaited the sight of Patterson Hood, head front man of the Drive-By Truckers, to come on stage and rock the trucker hats right off their heads.

Drive-By Truckers describe their music as Psychobilly, a mix of '70s British punk rock and '50s American rockabilly.

The band finally walked out on stage holding Amstel Lights, necks cocked back and bottles up. Hood strapped on his Gibson Les Paul, and whole-heartedly strummed the first chord to the well-known song "Sink Hole." Hood sang the lyrics as they fell out of his mouth one by one, each clearly and carefully stated.

When a beer bottle was finished, the Truckers walked to the back of the stage, opened up a red cooler and grabbed another cold one. Their endless supply of booze fueled their endless supply of rock.

Most of the songs played were from the Drive-By Truckers new album, "A Blessing and a Curse." The songs were played in almost the same sequence as the album, starting with the song "Feb. 14th," the first track on "Curse."

By the time the band started to play "Easy on Yourself," a bottle of Jack Daniels was being passed around the band. Shonna Tucker, bass player, opened the bottle first and took a healthy gulp.

Halfway through the concert, the band played "Ronnie and Neil" and launched into a "Southern Rock Opera" string of songs. During "Ronnie and Neil," the most rocking song they played that night, Hood stomped his foot so hard that the entire stage shook — it sent a shock wave throughout the audience. During "Dead, Drunk, and Naked," a fan in the front took off his shirt, revealing his large belly, and swung his shirt in the air. He wasn't dead, but he was drunk and naked and paying homage to his favorite band.

The night was closed with "Let There Be Rock." "This song is about how rock 'n' roll saved my life," said Hood to introduce the song with his southern twang. As he sang the lyrics, Hood seemed possessed, like the devil himself was singing. His grin was wide as he spit the fire of his lyrics at the crowd. Jason Isbell and Mike Cooley played lead back to back unison, while Hood rocked his heart out. Patterson Hood ended the set on the ground, when his fire was put out by exhaustion. He had enough strength to stand up and thank the audience for coming out to the show.

The three-ax attack left the stage together, arms around each other and ready to face the mean old highway to play another show in another state. Wednesday September 20th was just another night of rocking for the Drive-By Truckers, and another night of living.

The band is called a "three axe attack" because it has three guitarists, a bassist and a drummer. Much of their lyrics are about small-town drifters.

'Sexy's Back'

By John J. Moser
The Morning Call

Justin Timberlake swears that when he first sang the line "I'm bringing sexy back," he didn't know it would become the pop-music catch phrase of the year.

But with the release of "SexyBack," the invasive earworm of a song that carries those lyrics, there was no looking back.

"It was the first line that I came up with on the song," Timberlake said during a telephone news conference. "Originally I wasn't even planning on calling the song 'SexyBack.' I was going to call it, you know, something like ... I don't know what we were going to call it.

"(But) I definitely didn't think it would become the most worn-out joke of 2006. It just sounded like a nice opening to the song. I mean, I definitely didn't know it was going to start what if started."

The rest of Timberlake's new CD, "FutureSex/LoveSounds" (Jive), was released last week, and it's clear Timberlake has started something.

The album's 12 beat-heavy, hook-filled songs made it a shoo-in to be No. 1 on this week's Billboard album chart. And though last month's short preview tour of smaller venues sold out in minutes, Timberlake was cautious last week against expectations of a massive hit. After all, his solo debut, 2002's double Grammy Award-winning "Justified," sold three million copies but peaked at No. 2.

Topping the charts is nothing new for Timberlake, who with 'N Sync, the 1990s boy band that made him famous, sold 30 million albums — including 1.1 million in the first day and 2.4 million in the first week for 2000's "No Strings Attached."

But Timberlake says personal artistic growth was his real goal with "FutureSex/LoveSounds," which clearly continues Timberlake's journey away from 'N Sync and moves him closer to R&B stars such as Usher.

He says that when he hooked up with hot hip-hop producer Timbaland, his instructions were that he wanted something different from "Justified."

He thinks they succeeded. "(Timbaland) is so innovative, I think, that he took to that challenge very well, and he definitely wasn't intimidated by it. Even these songs in their rough form, they sounded ... I don't want to say a new sound, but just something that sounded fresh."

Not new, indeed. Timberlake acknowledges "FutureSex/LoveSounds" borrows heavily from 1980s-era Prince.

"Prince to me is the ultimate artist," he says. "It's like the biggest understatement to say that someone like Prince influences someone like me, who grew up listening to all of his work. ... The thing that I love about Prince is he really makes his own rules and I think that in creating something like music, you really shouldn't have any rules."

But the focus on sex is clearly part of an effort by Timberlake, 25, to be seen as a more adult entertainer. The album also carries a parental warning. At his club show last month at Philadelphia's Electric Factory, which was for people 18 and older, he drank beer on stage and made sexual gestures. And the new issue of Rolling Stone magazine talks about him smoking marijuana in Amsterdam.

For now, Timberlake says he expects to start a tour for "FutureSex/LoveSounds" with a North American leg in January. "I don't want to say too much about it, but it's going to be an amazing show," he says. "Me and my manager are just getting together who we're going to take out with us on tour, so we're not really sure yet. ... But the creative ideas that I've come up with, I think it's going to be an amazing show, definitely. The trick for me is to find a way to bring the vibe that we've created, myself and my band, with the club show to an arena."

He says he has written and produced songs for fellow 'N Sync vocalist J.C. Chasez's next solo album and that he's "extremely proud" of them. "I felt like we found a sound for him in working together, probably because I just know him so well. I've known him half of my life."

But Timberlake says he does not foresee a Backstreet Boys-type reunion "in the near future, until we can find out what would work for us. Because I think what we did doesn't work anymore ... I think it's kind of hard to make something work that was kind of a moment in time, especially when you're all such different people now."

Want to study abroad?

Come to the EDUCATION ABROAD FAIR

Today, 4pm - 6pm
Campus Center Auditorium

NES NATIONAL EVALUATION SYSTEMS

National Evaluation Systems, Inc., is a leader in providing educational testing products for teacher certification programs and higher education assessment

CUSTOMER SERVICE OPERATORS

We are seeking to fill 8–10 part-time positions in our examinee registration department. Preferred candidates for these positions will have experience in customer service, excellent oral communication skills, and a proven ability to work successfully in a busy environment. Spanish language skills a plus. Several work schedules are available Monday–Friday, 9:00 a.m.–6:00 p.m.

OCCASIONAL WORKERS

We are looking for part-time assistance with a variety of office and clerical tasks. Preferred candidates will work quickly and accurately and be able to work from 5:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. on days that they work. Pay is $8.00/hour

Please submit a cover letter indicating the position for which you would like to be considered and résumé to:

Personnel
NATIONAL EVALUATION SYSTEMS, INC.
P.O. Box 226 Amherst, MA 01004-0226
personnel@nesinc.com E.O.E.

555 deal

Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5 Each!

Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911

American Red Cross

UMass Blood Drive
TODAY!
10am – 4pm
Campus Center

The New England region is currently facing a critical blood shortage. The Red Cross has been forced to cut standing blood shipments to area hospitals. Blood donors are urgently needed at this time. All blood types are needed. Please Give Blood Today!

No need for an appointment.
Walk-ins Welcome.

Sponsored by Lambda Phi Epsilon Fraternity

To donate blood you must be:

- At least 17 years of age
- Weigh at least 110 pounds
- Be in good general health
- Most medications are OK

Campus to Career PROGRAMS

SENIORS start the year off with a
FREE Pancake Breakfast
Come enjoy pancakes, sausage, OJ & coffe and learn what the Alumni Association has planned for your senior year!
Tuesday, September 26, 2006
9:00 a.m. – 11:00 a.m.
Memorial Hall
No registration required...stop in anytime between 9 & 11 am.

Sponsored by

Alumni Association
alumni loan consolidation program
www.UMassAlumni.com/studentloans
(800) 936-4975

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian

New England's Largest College Daily Est 1890

ONLINE!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian offers a new web page! With a cool new look and a way to get your news on the go!

Featuring:

- Pod Cast
- Streaming radio
- Complete photo gallery
- Internet polls
- Email submissions
- Today's latest news!

Did you miss the news? or is there a story you were looking for?

No worries!

Dailycollegian.com is complete with a set of archives! Great if you are looking for a story for a class or even for your own pleasure!

Visit us now @
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
and satisfy all of your local news needs today!

Minutemen roll over Seawolves

FOOTBALL from page 12

Steve Baylark and an incomplete pass by quarterback Liam Coen brought up a third-and-eight for UMass with about a minute left in the first quarter.

Coen took the snap, and slipped while dropping back near the UMass end zone. After regaining his balance, he lofted a bomb towards the right sideline, where receiver Rasheed Rancher had a step on the Stony Brook defensive back. Rancher grabbed the pass out of the air and sprinted down the field to make the score even more unreachable for the Seawolves at 28-0.

Coen said he took advantage of single coverage on Rancher, who stands at 6-foot-5 and weighs 197 lbs.

"On that particular play Rasheed happened to have one-on-one with the corner, the safety bailed away, and he ran a great route," Coen said. "I thought [the ball] was going to come up short, but he made a great adjustment and obviously finished."

Coen, who only played during the first half due to the score advantage, threw for 177 yards, completing 6-of-8 passes, and registering two touchdowns through the air.

His other passing score came in the second quarter when he connected with Baylark, who was running a short route across the middle of the field at Stony Brook's 16-yard line.

That touchdown was one of three for Baylark, who had 12 carries for 96 yards and two running touchdowns, while catching that one pass. Baylark accounted for the first of many touchdowns on Saturday when he took UMass' first offensive snap from scrimmage 10 yards for a touchdown.

The second score of the game capped a five-play, 52-yard drive, which only took 1:33 for the Maroon and White. It was an end-around handoff to receiver J.J. Moore, who followed his blocks and cruised into the end zone with 8:15 left in the first quarter.

Freshman kicker Chris Koepplin nailed both of his field goal attempts – one from 41 yards, and another from 48 yards – while also tacking on six extra points.

Other than that score, UMass' defense stifled Stony Brook. Cornerback Sean Smalls led the way with five tackles, while James Ihedigbo had a forced fumble and linebacker Jason Hatchel had the game's only sack. The defense held the Seawolves to just 34 net rushing yards.

COURTESY UMASS SPORTS INFO

Junior wide receiver J.J. Moore's 59-yard punt return in the first quarter of Saturday's game was the longest by a UMass player since 1996.

Baylark's three scores carry UM to victory

BAYLARK from page 12

cation of what kind of day the Seawolves' defense was in for.

UMass found itself on the Stony Brook 10-yard line after J.J. Moore returned a punt for 59 yards. That's when Brown called Baylark's number.

Coen handed the ball off on an off-tackle play to the right side of the field. Baylark took it and marched into the endzone, virtually untouched. The scoring drive was one play, and took only 28 seconds off the clock.

Then in the second quarter – with the Minutemen already leading by 28 points – Baylark showcased what can't be taught, field vision.

On third down, Baylark took a handoff and started up the middle of the field. The hole at the line of scrimmage quickly closed, and it looked like Stony Brook had held the Minutemen.

At the last minute, Baylark spotted daylight on the right side of the play and took off. The cutback left many of the Seawolves frozen. When he was finally wrestled to the turf, Baylark picked up 24 yards.

That play set up his second and only receiving touchdown of the day.

Baylark split out wide on the near side of the field. Coen hit him on a drag across the middle and he took off for the 16-yard score. The play showed that Baylark isn't just a bruising runner.

"I tease [Coen] during practice that I have better hands than the receivers," he said. "It's good to stretch the field out and line up out there at receiver to throw the defense off. If I have to I've got to show the hands, and show what I have."

His final touchdown was similar to his first except this time he took a pitch from Coen and walked into the end zone.

Just before that, Baylark helped spring fellow running back Tim Washington for a big gain. Baylark sealed off the defensive end on the left side, allowing Washington to take the ball 18 yards down the field.

Tony Nelson took over the running duties in the second half, leaving Baylark just shy of his 18th career 100-yard game.

"I can't believe we messed him up though," Brown said with a laugh. "I'd like to have seen him get 100 [yards]. He comes walking in and goes 'Coach, so that's the way it is.'" goalkeeper Becky Letourneau to be the team's lone substitute, where she primarily played forward.

News on Parker not good as Huskies win

FIELD HOCKEY from page 12

"She [Becky] understood the circumstances; goalies may not have all the stick skills, but they understand the game a little better," Shea said.

The move did, however, give freshman goalkeeper Sarah Williams the opportunity to make her first start of her career. Williams was thrown right into the fire and ended up allowing six goals. But it could have been far worse, considering the Huskies had 24 shots on net. She had 18 saves at the end of the day.

"It's very nerve-racking and exciting at the same time," Williams said on her debut in net. "I thought I did a few things quite well, but I'm still in the learning phase."

The scoreboard read 0-0 for the first 10 minutes of action, but an unrelenting pressure from a full-equipped Huskies team and a depleted UMass squad meant that the even score was not going to last for long.

The floodgates started to open at the 11:26 mark when Connecticut forward Lauren Aird took a back-hand shot from the left side that found the back of the net, giving the Huskies the only goal they would need during the day.

Don't tell that to the five other Huskies who got into the scoring frenzy by day's end.

UConn's leading scorer, midfielder Lizzy Peijs, triggered a shot off a penalty corner that was deflected in front of Williams and landed in the top-right shelf of the cage, widening the lead to 2-0.

UMass was held to no shots in the first half. Williams did her best to keep her team in the game making eight saves in the first 35 minutes of play.

The Minutewomen were looking to repeat what they did in the second half when they came back to defeat Fairfield 4-2 earlier in the season. Then again, the Huskies are not the Fairfield Stags.

Eleven minutes into the second half UConn forward Mandy Odenbach fired a shot that Williams was able to make a pad-save on, but Odenback's second attempt would not miss, giving UConn a three-goal lead.

UConn forward Lindsay Leck tallied her fourth goal of the year just a few minutes later when UMass turned the ball over in its own striking circle. Leck blasted a shot from point-blank range that Williams had no chance to save.

Two minutes later, UConn midfielder Megan Hoffman walked in on UMass' defense and scored on her own rebound, right through William's legs.

Shea called a timeout after the lead was widened to five goals, and UMass began to add some consistent pressure on the Huskies. It even managed to get two penalty corners, but failed to capitalize on either of the rare scoring opportunities it would have.

Backfielder Jennifer Kleinhans scored UConn's final goal off a penalty corner with nine minutes left.

"We didn't play smart hockey in the second half," Shea said. "It looked almost a little frantic at times. We didn't stay to our tactics in the second half."

UVM snaps UMass' winning streak at six

W. SOCCER from page 12

The Maroon and White had several attempts thwarted by Bradley, who played like a "keeper-sweeper." With the ball at the opposite end of the field, Bradley would play up at midfield, where a player designated as the "sweeper" would normally patrol.

This strategy allowed Bradley to clear out UMass balls that would penetrate the Vermont defense, not even giving the Minutewomen offense a chance.

With about two seconds left in regulation, Canfield again looked as though she would prevent the game from reaching overtime.

The 20-year-old veterinary and animal science major managed to break free on the right flank and took a shot.

However, by the time the ball snuck past Bradley and crossed the goal-line, time had expired, making the goal null and void.

The first overtime was more-or-less uneventful.

With just under six minutes left in the second overtime, however, a Vermont freshman forward took a bouncing through-ball and deposited it into the back of the UMass net.

Rudy said that his team's six-straight victories, which included nationally-ranked Yale University and longtime nemesis Connecticut, might have made UMass a little overconfident.

"Sometimes success is your own worst enemy," Rudy said. "Soccer can be a harsh mistress."

The Minutewomen will now look to start a brand-new winning streak when they compete against George Washington University at Rudd Field on Friday.

Rudy gave his players Saturday and Sunday off, but said that today and tomorrow will bring intense practice sessions, before easing up once again on Wednesday and Thursday.

Williams gets first career start

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

At a glance it would appear as though freshman goalkeeper Sarah Williams would like nothing more than to forget her first collegiate start. But after being out-shot 29-2, six goals allowed doesn't seem so bad.

Williams did all she could to keep the Minutewomen in the game early. But as the team, shorthanded by injury and suspension, fatigued, No. 10 Connecticut put the game on ice. The Huskies peppered Williams with 16 second half shots, almost all of which were quality scoring chances, resulting in four goals.

Williams has been impressive since arriving in Amherst. UMass coach Patty Shea was confident that she would not be intimidated by an explosive Connecticut offense, which had tallied 15 goals in its four previous games.

"She [Williams] has played great in practice," Shea said. "She deserved the start."

Williams had little time to prepare for her start.

"I didn't find out until about a half-hour before the game," Williams said. "It's very exciting and nerve-racking at the same time."

These "nerves" weren't evident at all as Williams played with the poise and confidence of a wily veteran.

Her instincts around the cage were on display early, as she came out of the net and kicked a ball to an open teammate in an attempt to trigger a fast break.

But the Minutewomen, in what would prove to be a microcosm of the entire game, let the opportunity fall by the wayside and promptly turned the ball over, leading to another Connecticut scoring chance.

The Huskies wasted little time testing Williams, and she was up to the challenge, stymieing the UConn offense for a portion of the first half. Her ball skills were remarkable as she cleared several loose balls from the striking circle, preventing any further Connecticut scoring chances.

Williams finished the game with 18 saves, an astonishing number considering UMass had faced an average of 14 shots-on-goal per game before Saturday.

Shea was genuinely excited about Williams' play.

"I thought our goalkeeper, Sarah, played excellent," She said. "We had a freshman in net that stepped up and made some great saves."

Junior Becky Letourneau, who had started every game in goal for the Minutewomen before Saturday, saw action on the field after a shaky outing against Dartmouth. Inconsistency has plagued Letourneau ever since she arrived on campus.

The move appeared to be done more out of necessity than anything else, as UMass would not have had any substitutes otherwise. However, if Williams continues to improve as a goalkeeper, Shea will have quite the quandary on her hands.

"Sarah has some things that can help us, and we'll need to see more of her," Shea said.

Naturally, whispers are starting about a potential controversy in goal. This was news to Williams, as she immediately shot down any of talk of that.

"Becky was very supportive," Williams said. "She told me to hold my own and do my best."

Losing 6-0 is certainly not the outcome you hope for in your first career start, but in an instance like this, the score is secondary. What Williams showed during and after Saturday's game must have Shea, and all of those that follow UMass field hockey, excited about her future in this program.

CHECK OUT THE UMASS CROSS-COUNTRY RESULTS IN TOMORROW'S SPORTS SECTION

McMurphy's
COME WATCH MONDAY NIGHT FOOTBALL
ON OUR NEW FLAT SCREEN TV'S
FREE Slice of Antonio's pizza with EVERY pitcher of beer!
Every Sunday and Monday Night
Now Open Saturday and Sunday at 10:30am!

EVERYWOMAN'S CENTER PRESENTS:
EMERGENCY CONTRACEPTION / PLAN B PANEL:
What is it? How does it work? Where can I get it?
What's the big deal?
marlene gerber fried, director, civil liberties and public policy program lucy hartry, director of administrative services, tapestry health amanda collings vann, uhs health educator / director, womens health project
Tuesday, September 26, 2006, 4:00pm
CAMPUS CENTER 803
FREE · OPEN TO THE PUBLIC · EVERYONE WELCOME!
FMI: 545 - 0883
University of Massachusetts
For more information about EWC Services call 545 0883

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Pioneer Valley Pizza
Ask about our Gourmet Pizza of the week.
Yes, We Deliver!
The best subs, wings, calzones, and entrees.
80 Belchertown Road, Amherst MA
(413) 253-1011 pvpizzalink.com sun, wed 11-1 am thurs 11-2 am fri, sat 11-3 am
Buy a large 1 topping pizza and get boneless wings for one half price
Buy three medium 1 topping pizzas for $5 each plus tax

Submit A Comic Already
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

5								9
	9	4		5	3		7
			2	4
4	2		5	8
	5						6
				7	4		2	3
				2	7
	8		1	3		9	4
2								1

Find today's sudoku solutions at:
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Beatles early lady
6 Pinnacle
10 Donations to the poor
14 Bow of film
15 Magician Henning
16 Front of the calf
17 Of an arm bone
18 Fender flaw
19 "Peter Pan" pouch
20 River barrier
21 Smoothes out the rough spots
23 Hones
26 Torment persistently
27 Ms. McEntire
28 Tent stake
29 Long narrative poems
31 "Kodachrome" singer
37 Actress Linda
38 Marble
39 Options list
40 Engage in disfavored tactics
42 Esau's twin
43 Deposit
44 Actor Grant
45 Kennedy assassin
49 Tablelands
53 Was born in
55 Final degree
56 Pisces river
57 Bow element
58 Lois or Louise
60 Opulent
61 Loosen up
62 Dad impersonator
63 Toward open waters
64 Snow ride
65 Way in

DOWN
1 Desert Storm missiles
2 God of Islam
3 1984 NFL MVP
4 One Gershwin
5 Corn serving
6 Attachment
7 Speaks
8 Part of "Solidarity"
9 Off-white color
10 TV's Mr. Grant
11 City in Tibet
12 Less
13 Breaks
21 Green legume
22 Old stories
24 Scout's job in brief
25 Network of "Nature"
28 TKO
29 O'Neill and Sullivan
30 Gentle caress
31 Talk to God
32 Be ill
33 Reflection
34 Naturalist Attenborough
35 Lennon's love
36 Crux
38 Talks tootsy
41 French pronoun
42 Stick out
44 Showy showmanship
45 Scarlett's lost
46 Rain's wraps
47 Cringe
48 Waikiki greeting
49 Ordinary sitting
50 Rise at an easy pace
51 Absolute
52 Sheltered from the sun
54 Newborn horse
58 Manic
59 Persona grata

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DELANO'S
TONIGHT
TEAM TRIVIA
WIN $$$ & PRIZES
ALSO $2,000 PRIZE POOL!
8PM
DRINK SPECIALS
RED HEADED SLUTS - $3
BRADY BOMBS - $5
PINOCCHIO'S FOOD SPECIALS
DURING TRIVIA MUNCHIES,
PIZZA, AND MORE...
"The Heart of downtown Amherst"

QUOTE OF THE DAY

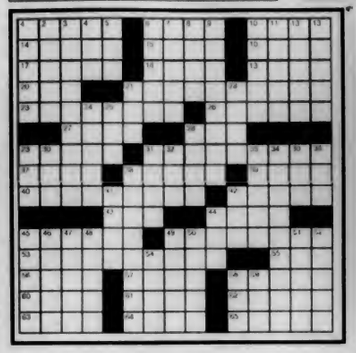
"Build a man a fire, and he'll be warm for a day. Set a man on fire, and he'll be warm for the rest of his life."
—Terry Pratchett

READ IT & WEEP BY TRAVIS DANDRO

WELCOME TO ZOO MASS BY ANNA LEE

OUT OF THE BOX BY ALEX

ELSIE HOOPER BY ROBERT D. KRZYKOWSKI



HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Your fish is out of water, go jump in the campus pond, swim with the geese.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Bukowski. Who would want to be such a control freak?

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Play in a rock and roll band. Rock from the 70s is dope.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You are as smooth as a smoothie from the Blue Wall.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Bob Marley was not only a great musician, but an incredible soul.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Wear purple sneakers. Or don't, the choice is yours.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Say hello to anyone who lives in Puffton 269, especially the rat.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Pancakes are a good idea.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Pancakes are a bad idea.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Try playing rugby or some other club sport like hockey. You need to hit people.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
According to Bob Dylan, "Everybody must get stoned."

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Go whitewater rafting. Keep your feet up though!

Chicago Pizzaria Yes, We Deliver!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES... LIKE NO OTHER!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 3pm 2am
Thurs Sat: 3pm 3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Try out Army ROTC's Minuteman Battalion and join the wave of the new greatest generation. No strings attached! Call 413-545-2321 or www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Play Women's Ice Hockey! Tryouts for the UMass Women's Club Ice Hockey team are Sept. 26th 11pm-12:20 am and Sept. 29th 10 pm- 11:20pm tryouts are at the Mullins Practice rink. umasshockeymail@yahoo.com

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Work on campus & travel to other local colleges. Phone work in evenings Must be on the Phone. Base Pay $12/hr = Bonus & T/E Apply via Email with Resume Attached: bgillard@collegepro.com & contact by phone 603-589-6098

Students Wanted: Looking for energetic students to do computer work from your dorm room. Hours are Flexible. $12 per hour contact Matt 781-910-5053

EMPLOYMENT

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day. Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

Chicago Pizza Drivers wanted pay to $7.00 per hr. =tips. Weekends required. Cashiers pay up to $8.50 per hr. weekends required. Apply in person. 150 fearing St. Amherst 549-6073

EMPLOYMENT

Grand Opening Sept 29th Skyplex Nightclub Presents it's hottest new concept. "Pure" "West Coast Nightlife Comes to Western Mass." Now Hiring: Bartenders, Barbacks, Cashiers, Cocktail Servers, Security Staff. Apply in person only Monday September 25th and Tuesday September 26th, 2006 6-8pm, 10 Steams Square Springfield, MA www.skyplex.us

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

SALE

It's Electric! Unable to burn candles in your dorm, then Scent-Simmer ™ is for you! Over 30 incredible scents in a veg/soy/wax melt. 413-834-7159 or www.TriStateCandle.com

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Publish or perish! Need to be writing but aren't? I can help with motivation, discipline, and support. Dr Ange DiBenedetto 5494145

Do you have legal questions? We have the answers. Contact the Student Legal Services offices at 922 campus center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2007 Celebration 20th anniversary w/ SunSplash Free Trip on 12 before Nov. 1 Free Meals & Parties, Group Discounts 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

TRAVEL

Travel with STS to this year's top 10 spring break destinations! Best deals guaranteed! Highest rep commissions, Visit www.ststravel.com or call 1-800-648-4849. Great group discounts.

TUTOR NEEDED

Disability Student seeking Graduate Student with excellent writing skill to tutor at $10 an hour 582-0799

Submit your classifieds by stopping by the Daily Collegian's Office in the Campus Center basement or submit your classified online at www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Stony Brook no match for UMass

UM scores early and often in 48-7 rout

BY ERIC ATHAS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Anyone who showed up late to watch Saturday's football game between Massachusetts and Stony Brook didn't just miss a few snaps – they missed several touchdowns.

In a 48-7 slaughtering, UMass (3-1, 1-0 Atlantic 10) handled Stony Brook (0-4), ripping through the Seawolves on all bases, and putting the contest in the books by the completion of the first quarter.

UMass	48
Stony Brook	7

The Minutemen will have a week off until they return to the field on Oct. 7 in a clash against A-10 foe William and Mary at McGuirk Stadium.

In front of a crowd of 9,001 at McGuirk on Saturday, UMass dismantled Stony Brook, racking up yards and points, while doing most of the damage in the opening quarter.

"We were ready to play today in all fazes," UMass coach Don Brown said following the win. "Obviously, in a game like this, all we're trying to do is win the game."

The scoring frenzy by the Minutemen opened up following their first two trips to the end zone. After UMass took a 14-0 lead at the 8:15 mark in the first quarter, it only took 21 seconds for the Minutemen to strike for a third time.

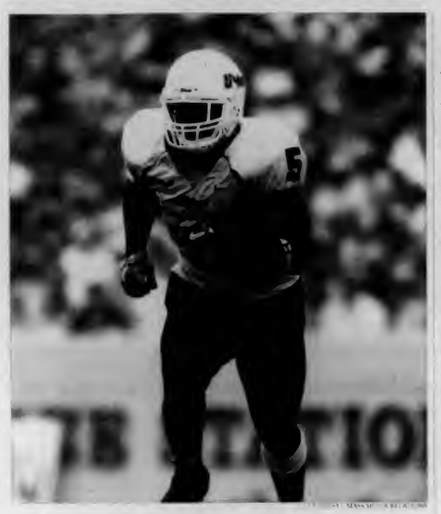
During the ensuing kickoff, Stony Brook return man J.J. Cox got wrapped up by several UMass special teamers around the 15-yard line. Before he was pulled to the ground, the ball was jarred loose by George Byrd, and danced around the field turf before being scooped up by Brandon Smith and carried a short three yards into the Stony Brook end zone.

"When it's close to the end zone, we just try to scoop and score," Smith said. "I saw one of their teammates had it in their hands and then he dropped it, so I just picked it up and scored."

While the quick points made things difficult for the Seawolves, the Minutemen had yet another trick up their sleeves in the first quarter, making even more points magically appear on the scoreboard.

After the Stony Brook offense stalled out at the UMass 43-yard line during its next series, a punt pinned the Minutemen on their own 9-yard line. A 2-yard run by

See FOOTBALL on page 10



Senior running back Steve Baylark scored three touchdowns in the first half of Saturday's 48-7 win over Stony Brook. He finished the game with 96 rushing yards on 12 carries.

Baylark has big day, runs through Seawolves

BY JON PELLAND
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In just one half of football on Saturday, senior Steve Baylark showcased why he has been the Massachusetts football team's featured running back for the past four years.

Baylark sliced through the Stony Brook defense, propelling the Maroon and White to its largest victory this season. The Minutemen stomped the Seawolves, 48-7.

He carried the ball 12 times for 96 yards. He averaged eight yards each time he took a handoff from quarterback Liam Coen. Baylark also tallied two rushing touchdowns on the day to go with one receiving.

His first score moved him into a tie for fifth place on the UMass all-time touchdown list (33), and his second gave him the position all to himself (34), while his third solidified the position (35).

"Today I didn't see the game any different," Baylark said. "I took them as a great opponent and that's how I prepared. Since the beginning of the season I've been coming out strongly and establishing myself this year more so than the past few years. I'm glad I'm coming out [strong] and hopefully I can just keep it going all the way throughout the season."

After the game, UMass coach Don Brown didn't feel as though Baylark was giving himself enough credit.

"He's being a little modest. I think he's gone to this level this year," Brown said, motioning above his head. "I think he's at another level. He's playing the game extremely physical."

Baylark's first carry of the game was an indi-

See BAYLARK on page 10

Minutemen, 49ers end in draw

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's soccer team began to right the ship at just the right time.

With the Atlantic 10 schedule starting next weekend, UMass (6-2-2) snapped its two-game losing streak with a 0-0 tie over A-10 rival Charlotte (4-3-2) on Saturday night.

UMass begins its official A-10 schedule with a weekend road-trip against George Washington and La Salle. Games earlier this season against St. Bonaventure and Charlotte did not count in the conference standings.

The Minutemen nearly endured a third straight 1-0 defeat, as Charlotte had its best opportunity for points in the 85th minute. The 49ers' Michael Rose sent a long shot towards the net. UMass goalkeeper Zack Simmons couldn't stop the ball, but the post kept it out of the net, keeping the game scoreless.

"It was a great shot," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "He took a shot from way out, and I felt like Zack had it covered really well. If it had hit the inside of the post I think it might have gone in, but other than that Zack had it covered."

The game marked the third-straight game in which the Minutemen did not tally a goal. However, it is also the seventh shut-out defensively for UMass.

"I'm not pleased that we didn't score," Koch said. "But I'm very, very pleased with the way we defended on their home field. Overall, I'm pleased with the result."

Simmons had 12 saves in the game, the second-highest total in his career. The sophomore is now tied for fifth in UMass history with 11 career shut-outs. His seventh this year ties him with Bryan O'Quinn for the second most in a single season.

UMass	0
Charlotte	0

Charlotte was dominant offensively, out-shooting the Minutemen 18-5, including an 11-2 advantage in the second half alone. UMass was held without a shot in the first overtime period, however, both teams got off a shot in the second extra frame.

In the first 10 minutes of the second half alone, the 49ers fired off four shots, and kept the heat on for the rest of the game.

"[Simmons] has been fantastic," Koch said. "He came up huge for us today. Charlotte was on fire for a while, but he shut them down every time."

Last week, after the Minutemen's two losses, Koch cited a number of mistakes he saw on the defensive side of the ball that led to the two goals that ended UMass' undefeated streak.

Koch made a change in the backfield, giving sophomore David Spatcher the nod over graduate student Brendon Ferullo. It was Spatcher's first start of the season and the third of his career.

Koch appeared to be happier with his defense's performance in Saturday's game.

"The guys [in the back] did a good job for us," Koch said. "Zack was outstanding. Sometimes you make mistakes. That's going to happen. I felt like we did a good job of minimizing those mistakes [against Charlotte]."

Playing an A-10 rival on the eve of the Maroon and White's conference schedule made for an interesting situation for Koch and the Minutemen.

Despite the fact that the tie will not be recorded in the conference standings, Charlotte could very well be a team UMass sees again in the postseason. Nonetheless, Koch said his approach to the game did not change.

"We were just trying to win the game," he said.

The Minutemen start digging into the meat of their schedule with a three-game road trip spanning the next two weeks, beginning with George Washington on Friday and finishing up with Xavier next Friday.

The next home game for UMass will be on Oct. 13, when Saint Joseph's comes to Rudd Field.

Junior Greg Cirillo (left) leads UMass in assists with four on the year. He is one of four Minutemen with four points in 2006.

Minutewomen lose to UVM in overtime

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A six-game winning streak by the Massachusetts women's soccer team (6-2-0) was snapped by the Vermont Catamounts (2-5-1) with a tough 1-0 double overtime loss on Friday.

The defeat was a tough pill to swallow for everyone associated with the team, especially UMass coach Jim Rudy, who said that his players were very confident heading into the game.

"I don't think there was any point in the game that we thought we were going to lose it," Rudy said. "It was frustrating. We were a little flat. We didn't quite hit our stride."

In addition to a hustling Vermont team, Rudy said that his Minutewomen had to battle some soccer oddities as well.

The grass was cut very short on the Catamounts' soccer field, which is already about five yards narrower than UMass' Rudd Field.

Not to mention the second oddity: the ball itself.

The red, white and blue-colored Nike soccer ball seemed to have a very fickle nature to it; one that was difficult to tame.

"That ball was doing the weirdest dam things you've ever seen," Rudy said. "[The players] would take it off their chests and it bounce over their heads.

"I got to knock it around a few times and I thought, 'Oh, boy. This is nothing like what we play with,'" Rudy continued. "But that's part of having home advantage."

Rudy doesn't mean to take anything away from Vermont, however.

"We faced an opponent who hustled all day," Rudy said. "We deserved a tie, but they kept us out. We couldn't get in."

UMass	0
Vermont	1

Missed opportunities were an uninvited guest that overstayed its welcome until it was too late.

Early in the game, junior forward Britt Canfield forced her way into a one-on-one with Vermont goalkeeper Eliza Bradley. Canfield, however, missed her shot wide.

Shortly after, junior midfielder Jenny Roehrig tried to rebound a shot that was blocked at the edge of the penalty area. However, I-Rio, as she's known to her teammates, put the ball just wide of the net.

See W. SOCCER on page 10

Senior captain Stephanie Barrett (No. 12) has started all eight games for UMass this season. She has two points on two assists.

UConn takes advantage of suspensions

BY KEVIN DOOLEY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

An overcast, ugly day at Garber Field foreshadowed too well the day the Massachusetts field hockey team was going to have on Saturday.

The undermanned and overmatched Minutewomen (2-7) fell to the No. 10 Connecticut Huskies (7-2, 1-1 Big East) 6-0, continuing what is now a four-game losing streak.

UMass	0
Connecticut	6

UMass will play the second of eight-straight home games when it hosts the Siena Saints Tuesday night.

Five players for the Minutewomen were suspended for Saturday's contest due to a violation of team rules. Those players were senior backfielder Kaylan Jaggassar, junior backfielder Paula Verma, junior midfielder Kristina DeRisavio, junior forward Rachael Mervine and sophomore forward Lauren Gillespie. Gillespie currently leads the Maroon and White with eight goals. It is yet to be determined when the five will return to action.

What is determined for the Minutewomen is the loss of sophomore forward Erin Parker for at least four weeks after she broke her leg in the team's loss to Dartmouth Wednesday. Parker and Gillespie have combined for 23 of the Maroon and White's 49 points this year.

When asked to comment on the suspensions, UMass coach Patty Shea said, "It's out of our hands."

However, Shea was proud of the players that did step on the field.

"I'm really proud of the group," Shea said. "I think they performed very admirably. We did an outstanding job under the circumstances. There are a lot of positives in this game."

The suspended players could be heard from atop the press box yelling out encouragement and advice to their fellow teammates during the game, but their words of wisdom weren't getting the ball in the net, or even advancing the ball into Connecticut's half of the field for that matter. UMass triggered only two shots on goal the entire day and didn't receive its first penalty corner until the 53-minute mark.

A depleted bench forced junior

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 10

Sophomore forward Erin Parker is out for at least a month after breaking her leg in last Wednesday's game against Dartmouth.

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

Trevor Hoffman became Major League Baseball's all-time saves leader on Sunday, earning save No. 479. In San Diego's 2-1 win over Pittsburgh yesterday, the Padres' 38-year-old closer passed Lee Smith, who had compiled 478 saves from 1980-1997.

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 71 LO: 41 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 2006

Intentional blaze set in vacant fraternity house

BY ERIC ATHAS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The five houses on Frat Row, which are vacant and will probably be sold to the University of Massachusetts, were broken into early Sunday morning, and an intentional fire was set in one of the houses, according to Amherst Fire Department Officials.

The blaze was intentionally started on an old couch inside of the house located at 375 North Pleasant St., which was formerly home to the Lambda Phi Epsilon fraternity.

Amherst Fire Officials said they arrived to the scene around 4 a.m. Sunday morning and aside from the couch's foam, rubber and cushions, no serious damage was done to the structure itself. No suspects have been identified.

The buildings will be demolished in the near future as part of an agreement last week between UMass and Alpha Tau Gamma Inc., the company that owns the land.

ATG's treasurer, Jim Mulcahy, said the break-ins and the fire are irrelevant, because the buildings will be destroyed anyways.

"It's insignificant. I mean what the hell's the big deal? It wasn't a big deal," said Mulcahy, who heard about the incident on the news. "Who knows why they did it, college kids will do anything, they'll piss on their mother's oriental rug."

Mulcahy said he would not speculate on the possible intention of the person or persons who started the fire, but he did not think it was a malicious act.

Those five houses have all been vacant since last spring when ATG notified the residents that they had to move out prior to the start of the Fall 2006 semester.

While UMass and ATG moved forward in negotiations last week, the process is not complete. Officials from ATG said that the fire did not affect the sale, but is a serious matter.

"Anyone caught trespassing will be charged," said Gary Shepherd, who is one of the overseers of the negotiations for ATG. "We take it really seriously."

Honson Chao, a member of Lambda Phi Epsilon and used to live in the house that was set on fire, was angry that someone would purposely damage his former house.

"I think it's just people not having anything better to do with their lives," said Chao. "It's going to get torn down anyways, so I guess it's just a last hurrah type of thing to go in there and have their own fun."

Lambda Phi Epsilon is still an operating fraternity, but does not have an official house.

The other four parcels included in the UMass-ATG deal are located at 387, 389, 395, and 401 North Pleasant St.

Honson Chao, shown above, speaks to reporters after a fire was intentionally started in the former Lambda Phi Epsilon fraternity house.

Houses to be demolished within the next month

The former Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity house sits vacant at 395 North Pleasant St. The house is scheduled to be demolished within the next month.

BY ERIC ATHAS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts is one step closer to owning the five pieces of property located on Frat Row, and the houses could be demolished within the next month, according to officials from Alpha Tau Gamma Inc., the company that owns the parcels.

An agreement last week between UMass and ATG solidifies the sale, as well as the delivery of the property's deeds, according to Gary Shepherd, a representative from ATG.

"An agreement has been reached last week, and now we're moving ahead with the razing of the buildings," said Shepherd. "It's not done, but it's close enough to say it's well on its way."

According to Shepherd, one of the conditions of the deal between the two parties was that ATG has to tear down the structures located at 375, 387, 389, 395, and 401 North Pleasant St. before the land is sold to UMass. After the five vacant frat houses are leveled, the sale will be complete.

The town of Agrherst Inspection Services is in charge of authorizing any type of demolishing that takes place. A Demolition Permit is required before it can occur. Officials from inspections said that ATG has not notified them of the exact time that the destruction of the five houses will take place, but it will be happening at some point in time.

The Inspections Officials also said that ATG is still in the process of turning off the utilities in the five houses, and that is one reason why the razing does not have an official time and date yet.

ATG's treasurer, Jim Mulcahy, does not know when the demolition will happen either, but thinks if all goes to plan, it could happen as soon as this week.

"The houses are probably going to get knocked down this week," said Mulcahy in a telephone interview yesterday. "You go up there today, and you'll probably see a fence going up around [the properties]."

While the deal is not completely sealed between UMass and ATG, Mulcahy said this recent agreement is a sign that it's progressing quickly.

"The University did not want to be bothered with the demolition," He said. "The University said if you want to sell the property, you get rid of the houses."

This movement comes after over three years of negotiations between UMass and ATG. Talks stood still until last April, when residents of three of the five houses were told they had to move out at the conclusion of the spring semester.

Students compete in second annual business competition

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

A club at the University of Massachusetts wants to know if you have an idea, ...and it's willing to shell out $50,000 if it's good enough.

The second annual UMass Entreclub business competition is now taking applicants. The competition is open to UMass students of any major and hopes to find a team of students whose business idea captures the prize for most well-presented and well-supported proposal.

The prizes for the winning team include academic credit, enhanced job options, personal improvement, and $50,000.

"We gave practical help to raise $50,000-$100,000 based on solid business ideas," said Lowry, founder of Bueno y Sano, located in Amherst. "We also want to promote our several workshops and book club, where we will first be discussing Dale Carnegie's book, 'How to Win Friends and Influence People.'"

One of the upcoming workshops is Invention2Venture, which will be held on Saturday, Sept. 30, from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in the School of Management, room 108. This workshop is for people who wish to turn technical ideas into business ideas, and like to think of it as "entrepreneur boot camp," said the program's directors.

"There's always a risk of proposing a business idea and trying to sell it," said Silva, the co-founder of All inPlay software and co-manager of River Valley Investors in Springfield. "The whole concept of Entreclub is to allow young entrepreneurs, specifically college students, to take that risk early, at no cost."

The competition, Silva described, is helping students sell everyday, mundane ideas in an effective way. In last year's competition, ideas ranged from cancer treatments to selling mattresses. There were a total of five teams who applied for the competition – each team needed a 30-page document and a presentation of the business idea.

The $50,000 business competition, also known as the Technical Innovation Challenge, is in its second year after a very successful first. The winner from last year was Bing Mei, a graduate student majoring in Biology and Business. Mei's team,

See CONTEST on page 3

Murder suspect shot by police

NEW YORK—A Massachusetts man accused of killing his cousin's husband in Rhode Island was shot by police Monday after he crashed his SUV at an intersection, injuring several pedestrians, and then emerged with a knife, authorities said.

A Metropolitan Transportation Authority police officer shot Joel Noonan, 36, of Avon, Mass., in the abdomen and groin after his sport utility vehicle collided with another car, authorities said. Noonan is wanted in East Providence, R.I., in the Sunday stabbing death of his relative, police said.

Noonan and the six other injured people were hospitalized after the incident; one woman was in stable condition, but the conditions of the others weren't immediately disclosed.

Noonan was driving a Jeep in midtown Manhattan shortly after 9 a.m. when he collided with another SUV, police said, sending it onto a sidewalk and into a group of pedestrians.

He jumped out of the vehicle wielding a knife, authorities said. Police said they fired at him and used pepper spray to subdue him. East Providence police told The Providence Journal that Noonan stabbed 37-year-old Steven Dowaglia to death during an argument Sunday evening at a home there. He then attacked his cousin and her 8-year-old daughter, police said.

East Providence police Capt. James Barlow said Noonan is skilled in martial arts and had said he would not be captured alive.

Police didn't say where Noonan was hospitalized. There was no telephone listing for a Joel Noonan in Massachusetts.

—Associated Press

Couple donates $5 million to School of Management

BY JENNA SPATARO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

A former University of Massachusetts student and his wife shelled out $5 million as a gift to the school a week ago.

Alumnus Doug and his wife Diana Berthiaume have donated $5 million to the Isenberg School of Management at the University of Massachusetts. This is the second $5 million donation in the history of UMass. The couple hopes the gift will benefit the curriculums within the School of Management.

Berthiaume received his Bachelor's of Business Administration from UMass in 1971. In 2005, he received an honorary Doctor of Laws degree. He is also the founding director of the UMass Amherst Foundation and chairman of the philanthropic board of Children's Hospital in Boston.

Berthiaume is presently the CEO of Waters Corp., located in Milford, Mass. Water Corps is a high-technology firm that works with pharmaceutical and biotechnology industries. It is a worldwide corporation that is connected with nearly 50 countries. Its exports reached 2.5 billion dollars in 2005, which made up almost two thirds of its annual sales.

Like many alumni at UMass, Berthiaume values his time spent here. He says it was a critical point in his step towards the future. He said the University helped him prepare for the skills and knowledge that were crucial in reaching his career goals. He runs a very successful enterprise and only looks back with appreciation on the institution. His donations are meant to facilitate the next generation of students and faculty to continue toward the kind of success that he has obtained.

UMass alumnus Doug Berthiaume.

Thomas O' Brien, the retired dean of The Isenberg School of Management, said "as leader of one of the nations most innovative firms in the biomedical revolution, Doug exemplifies enlightened leadership that unites science, technology and management. As a UMass Amherst and Isenberg School alumnus, his generosity and gratitude toward his alma mater is an inspiration to us all."

Chancellor John V. Lombardi feels that Berthiaume's enthusiasm for the Isenberg School of Management reflects the exceptional work done there by the faculty, students and staff.

"Like so many of our alumni, Doug appreciates high performance, and sees how the commitment of the school can help enhance its programs," said Lombardi.

"UMass Amherst gave me a solid foundation from which to launch my career in business," said Doug Berthiaume. "Diana and I know that private investment in public universities creates the capacity for high-quality education for our commonwealth. We look forward to seeing the impact of this gift, and we hope that this contribution will encourage other to give."

TOMORROW

Isenberg School of Management
Undergraduate Placement Service
Presents

ISENBERG
SOM
CAREER DAY
2006

All Students Are Cordially Invited to Attend!!
Date: Wednesday, September 27, 2006
Place: Mullins Center
Time: Begins at 12:00 Noon Ends at 5:00 PM

Acosta Sales & Marketing
Aetna
Aldi, Inc.
Alexander, Aronson, Finning & Co. PC
Ameriprise Financial
Babson Capital Management
BDO Seidman LLP
Berkshire Bank
Black & Decker
Blinds to Go
Boston Beer
C.H. Robinson Worldwide, Inc.
C&S Wholesale Grocers
Cambridge Associates LLC
Consolidated Graphics
Deloitte
Drug Enforcement Administration
Eli Lilly
EMC
Enterprise Rent-a-Car
Ercolini & Company LLP
Ernst & Young
Fastenal
Feeley & Driscoll
Forex Capital Markets LLC
Frito-Lay
General Electric
Gorton's
Grant Thornton, LLP
Gray Gray & Gray LLP
Hanover Insurance
The Hartford
The Hertz Corporation
Hyatt Hotels & Resorts
Investors Bank & Trust
Internal Revenue Service
John Hancock Boston Partners
Kohl's Department Stores
Kostin, Ruffkess & Co. LLC
KPMG
Landa & Altsher PC
Liberty Mutual
MassInnovation LLC
MassMutual
Meditech
Mellon Financial
Mesirow Financial Consulting
Millward Brown
Moriarty & Primack
Morris & Morris PC
Needel, Welch & Stone PC
Northwestern Mutual Financial Network
Novogradac & Company
O'Connor & Drew
PeoplesBank
Pepsi Bottling Group
PricewaterhouseCoopers
Protiviti
Radio Waves, Inc.
RSM McGladrey
Raytheon
Samet & Co PC
Sherwin-Williams
State Street Corporation
Talbot's
Target
Teradyne
TJX Companies
Travelers
UMass Army ROTC
United Technologies
United Parcel Service
Vitale, Caturano & Co.
Walgreen's
Walter & Shuffain PC
Wolf & Co. PC
Wolseley North America (Ferguson, Stock, Wolseley Canada)

For your convenience there will be a van leaving Hagis Mall to the Mullins Center every 20 minutes from 3:00pm to 5:00pm.

Some helpful hints: (1) Bring a supply of resumes with you to leave with company representatives you meet; (2) Dress appropriately if possible. This means tie and jacket for men, dress or blouse and skirt for women. (3) Speak with corporate representatives of interest to you and ask for a business card, if available.

Entreclub connects students with resources for success

CONTEST from page 1

Pharma Solutus, also founded by Sarvesh Agrawal and Lindsay Devin, won the prize for commercializing a form of nanotechnology that would improve chemotherapy and help suffering cancer patients. The treatment is currently being developed and will soon be processed, thanks to Entreclub.

There are many success stories like Pharma Solutus due to the help of Entreclub. Edical May, Blue Moon Grocery, River Valley Investors, Cutting Edge Fitness, Regional Technology Corporation, Ian's Pizza, and All mPlay are all thriving businesses founded by Entreclub alumni.

If interested in the competition, all applicants are encouraged to attend a second orientation on Tuesday, Oct. 3 at 4:30 p.m. in the Isenberg School of Management. The first orientation was held last Thursday evening, where directors Bob Lowry and Paul Silva introduced themselves, Entreclub, and the process of forming and writing business ideas.

There is also another competition sponsored by Entreclub, known as the Harold Grinspoon Competition. This challenge, which is in its third year, only requires a two-page document and presentation, and awards $5,000 to the winning team.

"One of the most important things for a student to understand is that you can come here with an idea, win money and earn credits," said Silva. "And you don't need to win the competition to gain a learning experience."

The main goal of Entreclub is to help students turn their ideas into a successful business by connecting them to the skills, resources, and people they need to succeed.

Shanghai leader fired

By Christopher Bodeen
Associated Press

SHANGHAI, China – Shanghai's top leader was dismissed Monday for alleged corruption, the highest level official to be sacked in more than a decade as President Hu Jintao consolidates his power.

Chen Liangyu was fired as Shanghai's Communist Party secretary, kicked off the party's powerful Politburo and is under investigation by its anti-graft watchdog, the official Xinhua News Agency said. His dismissal "demonstrates the party's determination to fight corruption," Xinhua said.

The move ends a potential challenge to Hu, who has been targeting political opponents through an anti-corruption crackdown in the run-up to a key party congress in 2007. That meeting will reapportion jobs among the political elite, with Hu, who heads the party, expected to install favored leaders for his second five-year term.

As a senior member of the party's so-called "Shanghai faction," the 59-year-old Chen was considered a protege of former President Jiang Zemin. Hu has been methodically shredding Jiang's lingering authority.

Sacking Chen shows that Jiang has no power to pro-

See SHANGHAI on page 4

Shanghai leader, Chen Liangyu, allegedly spent $1.2 billion on illegal investments.

First 'fear of flight center' opens

By Lauren Smiley
Associated Press

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina – A review of recent aviation news: Alleged plane terrorism plotters arrested in London. Fighter jets escorting diverted landings in Boston and Amsterdam. Crashes in Ukraine and Kentucky. The anniversary of Sept. 11.

Need a tranquilizer with that plane ticket yet?

Argentines don't. In this South American capital with the highest concentration of shrinks to citizens in the world, nail-biting fliers can now fight their fears while fully conscious.

Called Poder Volar, or Able to Fly, a Spanish and Argentine company has opened what it says is the world's first permanent, in-airport fear of flight center in the Jorge Newbury airport – itself an ill-lit, depressing space that doesn't exactly inspire warm feelings about traveling.

Creators say the center's location in the ground zero of flight panic shows frazzled fliers that help is available, and urges future passengers to visit the den of their fears. Students also can visit for one last pep talk before heading off to the boarding gate.

"It's like a dentist's office next to a restaurant, since people's teeth start hurting when they eat," said Dr. Claudio Pla, the Argentine psychiatrist who started the company in 2000. Those about to board or those coming off a plane may inspired by seeing others facing down their fears, she said.

In an era when alert levels change as often as traffic lights, the center joins a burgeoning cottage industry of flight jitter palliatives, said Marc-Antoine Plourde, the president of a fear of flight treatment company in Montreal. He is one of the organizers of a worldwide industry conference next spring at the International Civil Aviation Organization headquarters, a specialized U.N. agency based in Montreal, where organizers expect more than 200 participants to discuss fear of flying. They plan to create a flight fear guidebook to distribute to travel agents and airports.

The largely unregulated fear of flight treatment industry includes everything from Chicken Soup for the Soul's Fearless Flight Kit to self-help books, hypnosis tapes to therapists specializing in the phobia, and myriad classes offered by private companies and airlines that realize business profits when customers aren't afraid of the product.

Studies estimate that 16 percent of Western adults refuse to fly. An additional 10 percent to 15 percent of adults fly with some degree of fear, be it crashing, enclosed spaces, yielding control or embarrassing oneself onboard with erratic fear-fueled behavior. Also, people tend to project doubts around travel – entering the unknown, separating from loved ones, loneliness – onto the plane itself, Pla says.

Symptoms are easy to detect – tossing down a preflight drink or sedative, canceling tickets right before a flight, refusing to fly or being a wreck when you have to fly.

"I think the number (of people who fear flying) is increasing simply because there's more people that travel," Plourde said. "And certainly the terrorism aspect of commercial aviation today is not helping at all."

Unlike periodic courses offered in airports from Phoenix to the U.K., Poder Volar will have professionals available for consultations 12 hours a day on weekdays, part-time on Saturdays, and on-call during weekends and holidays.

The center offers a three-hour individual class for $170, or eight-hour group classes for $220.

Although Pla offers emergency sessions to walk-in passengers who are between flights or about to board for about $30 per half hour, he says there's little to be done in such little time. Treatment is reduced to a crash

See FLIGHT on page 4

Fox ratings soar after Clinton interview

Former President Bill Clinton was offended by newsman Chris Wallace's questions in an interview on Sept. 22, 2006.

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK – Political combat pays. "Fox News Sunday" drew its best ratings in nearly three years for this weekend's electric confrontation between former President Clinton and newsman Chris Wallace.

Both men's words were being dissected in the aftermath on Monday, with a Clinton spokesman saying Fox and Wallace had attacked Clinton with "an accusation," not a question.

"I think the interview speaks for itself," Wallace said. "They can spin all the conspiracy theories they want."

See CLINTON on page 5

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 16

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Eric Athas
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherd Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jamison Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Editorial Production Virgina Nielsen
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Sean Durham
Editorial Editor Kristen LaCasse
News Editor Matt Bellveau
Sports Editor Rob Greenfield
Circulation Manager Jeff Pentz
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Theresa Barbu
Assistant Business Phil Smedler
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Alex Butler
Assistant News Anna Dollinatis
Assistant News Nicole Buonjukaukul
Assistant Sports Danny Picard
Assistant Sports Jon Pelland
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick
Photo Editor Joan Trinh
Web Editor James Hale

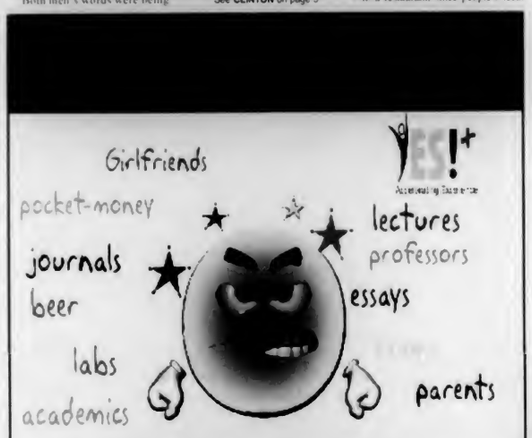
Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Matt Bellveau

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sean Durham, Matt Bellveau



cafe talésai
let's break rice together®
Check Out Our New Menu!
featuring Stir Fried Chile Garlic Chicken, Orange Shrimp, Beef and Broccoli, Golden Chicken Curry and more...
New Combo Plates
featuring your selection of 2 entrée items, Spring Roll, Steamed Rice or Garlic Rice and any size Fountain Soda for $6.75
DINING SERVICES
Café Talesai is open Monday - Friday from 11:00am to 3:00pm in the Campus Center

Chen allegedly abuses power to help relatives

SHANGHAI from page 2

tect his protgs and is in no position to affect the choice of new leaders," said Joseph Cheng, director of the Contemporary China Research Center at Hong Kong's City University.

The investigation into Chen centers on the misuse of at least one-third of a $1.2 billion city pension fund for illicit investments in real estate and other infrastructure. Chen is accused of aiding illegal businesses, shielding corrupt colleagues and abusing his position to benefit family members, Xinhua said.

Chen's removal is also likely to boost Hu's popularity among the Chinese public, who have grown increasingly cynical and angry over pervasive official corruption.

"This is a very popular move," said Li Datong, former editor of a weekly supplement in the party's China Youth Daily newspaper. "This looks like Hu Jintao is getting ready to take some pretty major steps."

Shanghai Mayor Han Zheng was appointed acting party chief, Xinhua said.

The last Politburo member to be purged for corruption was former Beijing party secretary Chen Xitong, who resigned in 1995 and was sentenced to 16 years in prison. He was quietly released on medical parole this year after serving eight years of his sentence. Chen is a common family name in China, and the two men are not related.

The Shanghai Party chief job is a traditional stepping stone to higher office, as well as one of the most powerful local government jobs in China.

Associated Press correspondent Hania Kantenbach contributed to this report.

Passengers learn relaxation techniques in airport's classes

FLIGHT from page 4

course on flight safety, and handing out a booklet on relaxation techniques or a sedative prescription to be filled at the airport pharmacy on the student's way out the door.

Women outnumber men two to one, Pla says, since women traditionally have fewer hang-ups about admitting fears than men.

But here, in a European-flavored city with a neighborhood named Villa Freud for its high concentration of armchairs, and where people talk about their shrinks with as much frequency as New Yorkers, seeking such help carries little stigma.

"It's true that psychotherapy is more popular here than in the United States," Pla said. "But we also have people that reject the idea of therapy, so we try to 'de-psychologize' the treatment," and focus on changing behaviors.

Fernando Autet, a student at a recent class, seemed an unlikely seat clinger. A soft-spoken horse veterinarian, Autet, 30, says he never feared flying as a kid, but a turbulent flight from Wisconsin to Cincinnati last year changed that.

Fearing a flight back to the United States in late August, he showed up for a recent class with Pla's team, including an educational psychologist, and retired Aerolineas Argentinas pilot Cmdr. Jorge Albaiceec, who introduced himself saying, "I've flown into this airport 10,000 times, and I'm still here."

The instructors taught relaxation techniques and airplane safety statistics. Wings move, but they won't break off. Turbulence cannot damage a plane. Lightning cannot enter the cabin. Every system on a plane has several back-ups.

Students take a questionnaire rating their anxiety when facing various flight situations, and their score places them in one of three zones — from green for the mere anxious to red for true phobics. They receive appropriately color-coded pins to wear during the flight to alert flight attendants that they are anxious.

The center claims to improve the quality of flying for 95 percent of its customers. Fresh off his flight to Myrtle Beach, N.C., Autet became one of them. He wrote the team an e-mail, saying that despite turbulence during part of the international flight, he relaxed with breathing exercises.

"The connecting flight in the USA I really enjoyed, watching from the window like I did when I was a kid," he added.

Higher education costs increase

By Jessica Sontchardth
Daily Texan (U. Texas)

AUSTIN, Texas – According to recent reports, higher education in the United States is becoming less affordable across the board, still some states, such as California, are showing up others, such as Texas.

Texas and 43 other states received an F in affordability, according to Measuring Up 2006, a September report by the National Center for Public Policy and Higher Education. California and Utah, which both earned a C-, scored the highest grade.

Texas did beat California in one respect. In 2005, Texas graduates departed their institutions of learning – diploma in hand – with bigger student debt loads, according to an August report by the Project on Student Debt.

Though tuition rates are higher in California, the state has lower student debt rates than Texas. The average student debt for 2005 graduates from public universities in Texas is $16,400, nearly $4,000 more than California at $12,542, according to the student debt report.

According to the report, better availability of financial aid offsets higher tuition rates.

California is out-performing Texas because of complex sociological issues related to financial aid, said Larry Burt, associate vice president of Student Financial Services at UT.

"The most significant of these is the size of the California state grant as opposed to the Texas state grant," Burt said. "The Cal Grant program is several times large than the Texas grant program."

California has seen a 141 percent increase in state financial aid since 1994 and a 19 percent increase from 2002 to 2004, according to a March report by the Ed Fund and the California Student Aid Commission.

The growth stems from legislation in 2000 establishing the Cal Grant program as a guarantee for California high school graduates who meet specific income and grade criteria, according to the California report.

In 2002-03, Texas ranked last in its distribution of grant aid among the nation's six largest states, according to an April report measuring state aid by the Texas Guaranteed Student Loan Corporation, a public nonprofit corporation. California ranked second after New York, according to the report.

"State fiscal misfeasance has got us into this educational funding fix, and it would have been somewhat justifiable if it led to an end result of true affordability of higher education for all qualified young people in this state," wrote Thomas Palaima, a classics professor at the University of Texas who also studies education policy. "But this has not happened."

UT is a tremendous bargain for the many students who come from backgrounds with family incomes of $100,000 or more, Palaima said. Meanwhile he said, it is still expensive to those who come from incomes of under $40,000.

The 40 percent of the Texas population with the lowest income earns an average $18,000 per year. After financial aid, these residents are paying a net college cost of $8,186 a year, nearly 45 percent of their total income, according to the report by the National Center for Public Policy and Higher Education.

Raising tuition and setting aside a proper percentage of revenues for needy students would allow those who can afford to pay to subsidize those who cannot, Palaima said.

"But legislators have not been willing to support this because it looks as if everyone is paying more," he said. "They say that increasing tuition puts education out of reach for the poorer members of society. In fact, it would not. But it would make their richer and more influential constituents pay more. And that is not politically expedient."

After the federal government, institutions are the second largest provider of student aid for both states, according to reports by the Ed Fund and California Student Aid Commission and the Texas Guaranteed Student Loan Corporation.

California provided $2.1 billion in institutional aid, both public and private, in 2003-04, a 20 percent increase from the previous year, according to the California report. This total constitutes 24 percent of student aid in California.

Texas does not have the total estimates for institutional aid. However in 2003-04 $107 million was distributed among public institutions through their own resources, such as tuition and fees, the Texas report said. In 2002-03, $332 million was distributed among private institutions.

The University of California System returns 33 percent of tuition and fees to financial aid, said Shawn Brick, the financial aid coordinator for the UC System.

Full speed ahead.

We remove the barriers, so you can accelerate your career. We've created an environment that's conducive to personal and professional growth and success. At Ernst & Young, we're recognized for our inclusive culture that expects everyone to contribute and everyone to grow. Stop just long enough to visit us on campus, or at ey.com/us/careers

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2006

Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

Fox's Wallace denies intentionally provoking Clinton

CLINTON from page 3

The Sunday talk show had its best ratings since the capture of Saddam Hussein in December 2003, according to Nielsen Media Research's measurement of the top media markets. It even outrated the morning's dominant show, "Meet the Press," although the NBC show was displaced from its usual time slot by golf. (Two versions of the interview were the two most-watched clips on YouTube on Monday, totally more than 800,000 views.)

Wallace said Clinton had agreed to a 15-minute interview, half on his philanthropy efforts and half on any issue Fox wanted. As the interview began, Wallace asked about why Clinton is trying to help save lives in developing countries.

Clinton was angered by Wallace's fourth question, about Clinton's efforts to track down Osama bin Laden. Wallace said he asked because it was on viewers' minds, particularly in the wake of ABC's docudrama "The Path to 9/11," which was widely criticized by Clinton officials.

Wallace asked: "I understand that hindsight is always 20/20, but the question is, why didn't you connect the dots and put him out of business?"

That question represented an attack, said Jay Carson, a Clinton spokesman who was backstage watching. Wallace hasn't asked the same tough question of Bush administration officials, he said.

"That wasn't a question, it was an accusation," Carson said. "He knew exactly what he was doing and we knew exactly what we were going to do if he did that, as we suspected he would. But it's not what we wanted."

Wallace said it couldn't have been asked in a less confrontational way.

"I didn't say 'you didn't,'" he said. "I didn't say, 'you screwed up, you're responsible.' It's the way any newsman worth his salt would have asked the question. I'd be surprised if the president and his team felt brutalized by the question."

Wallace said he tries to ask the most current questions possible with newsmakers. Clinton had accused him of not asking Bush officials about the attack on the USS Cole in 2000, but Wallace said he didn't join the show until 2003.

Wallace said he didn't think it was a planned counterattack by Clinton, who has been praised by many supporters for taking on Fox News.

After Clinton got angry, Wallace said Carson tried to get his producer to stop the interview. Carson said that he was expressing concern that time was running out and that little of the philanthropy effort had been addressed.

"What struck me was that even before the interview had run, I had received hundreds of e-mails," Wallace said. "If they liked Clinton, they hated me. And if they hated Clinton, they thought I was a hero. I think that's too bad for our politics today."

Man faces deportation after court charges

BOSTON – An illegal immigrant from Mexico who became a cause celebre after authorities found him living in a suburban Minneapolis high school pleaded guilty Monday to breaking into an apartment in Boston and was to be turned over to immigration officials for deportation.

Francisco Serrano, 22, was sentenced to six months in jail on a charge of breaking and entering in the nighttime. Since he has already served six months since his arrest in March, a Boston Municipal Court judge said he has completed his sentence. He was expected to be turned over to U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement immediately.

Serrano made national news last year when he was found living in Apple Valley High School. Serrano said he'd been sleeping there for three weeks because he needed a warm place to stay, prompting an outpouring of support in Minneapolis.

A judge ordered him to leave the United States because he was here illegally. He hugged supporters goodbye at Minneapolis-St. Paul International Airport on Jan. 5, but never boarded his plane to Mexico.

Authorities say Serrano never left the country and ended up in Boston, where he was arrested in March for allegedly breaking into an apartment armed with a knife.

Jake Wark, a spokesman for Suffolk District Attorney Daniel Conley, said Serrano was expected to be turned over to the custody of immigration officials late Monday.

"He received a voluntary departure order the first time around, and apparently, because he didn't comply with that voluntary departure, he is now being officially ordered to leave the country," Wark said.

Associated Press

NES NATIONAL EVALUATION SYSTEMS

National Evaluation Systems, Inc., is a leader in providing educational testing products for teacher certification programs and higher education assessment.

CUSTOMER SERVICE OPERATORS

We are seeking to fill 8-10 part-time positions in our examinee registration department. Preferred candidates for these positions will have experience in customer service, excellent oral communication skills, and a proven ability to work successfully in a busy environment. Spanish language skills a plus. Several work schedules are available Monday–Friday, 9:00 a.m.–6:00 p.m.

OCCASIONAL WORKERS

We are looking for part-time assistance with a variety of office and clerical tasks. Preferred candidates will work quickly and accurately and be able to work from 5:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. on days that they work. Pay is $8.00/hour.

Please submit a cover letter indicating the position for which you would like to be considered and résumé to:

Personnel
NATIONAL EVALUATION SYSTEMS, INC.
P.O. Box 226 Amherst, MA 01004-0226
personnel@nesinc.com EOE

Campus to Career PROGRAMS

SENIORS start the year off with a
FREE Pancake Breakfast
Come enjoy pancakes, sausage, OJ & coffee and learn what the Alumni Association has planned for your senior year!
Tuesday, September 26, 2006
9:00 a.m. – 11:00 a.m.
Memorial Hall
No registration required...stop in anytime between 9 & 11 am.

Sponsored by

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
alumni loan consolidation program
www.UMassAlumni.com/studentloans
(800) 936-4975

Afghan women's rights activist killed

By Noor Khan
Associated Press

Afghan women's rights activist and teacher, Safia Ama Jan, was killed by militants targeting her school on Sept. 25, 2006.

KANDAHAR, Afghanistan – Gunmen on a motorbike Monday killed a Afghan women's rights activist who ran an underground school for girls during the Taliban's rule — the latest victim of increasingly brazen militants targeting government officials and schools.

Safia Ama Jan, a provincial director for Afghanistan's Ministry of Women's Affairs, was slain outside her home in the southern city of Kandahar as she was on her way to work, said Tawfiq ul-Ulhakim Parant, senior adviser to the women's ministry in Kabul.

"The enemy of Afghanistan killed her, but they should know it will not derail women from the path we are on. We will continue on our way," said Fariba Ahmedi, a female member of parliament from Kandahar who joined hundreds of men and women, including the provincial governor, at the funeral at a packed Shiite mosque.

Mullah Sadullah, a regional Taliban commander, claimed responsibility for the killing in a telephone call to The Associated Press. It was impossible to verify the claim, and the two attackers fled after the shooting.

A teacher for more than three decades, Ama Jan was known for being an active proponent of women's rights in this former Taliban stronghold. Although she was a women's activist, she always wore a burqa, and was shot dead while wearing the traditional Islamic garment, her son said.

Her death comes at a time of rising violence at the hands of Taliban militants. This month a suicide bomber assassinated a provincial governor — a close associate of President Hamid Karzai — and last week militants killed 19 construction workers riding on a bus in Kandahar province.

Attacks on schools are also increasing. Militants last year burned down or attacked 146 schools, and already this year have attacked 158 schools, said Zuhoor Afghan, the top adviser to Afghanistan's education minister.

The school attacks appear motivated partly by Taliban opposition to education for girls — claiming it is against Islam — but also as a strategy to undermine the already feeble reach of Karzai's U.S.-backed government. The government has tried, with mixed success, to promote women's rights enshrined under Afghanistan's post-Taliban constitution.

Hundreds of men and women, including Kandahar's provincial governor, turned out for her funeral Monday evening at a packed Shiite mosque.

Karzai said he was deeply saddened by her death.

The enemies of Afghanistan are trying to kill those people who are working for the peace and prosperity of Afghanistan," the president said in a statement. "The enemies of Afghanistan must understand that we have millions of people like (Ama Jan) who will continue to serve this great nation."

Ama Jan, who was said to be in her 60s, ran vocational schools for women. Her son, Naqibullah, said she taught girls at an underground school she ran out of their home during the Taliban's ultraconservative rule from 1996-2001.

Naqibullah, who goes by only one name, said his mother had not received any threats on her life, as far as he knew, but that he and his father tried to get her to quit her work because of the deteriorating security situation.

"She said, 'It's my country. I won't quit my job. I want to do this work for our women, for our country. I want women to be able to work just like men,'" Naqibullah recalled.

One of Ama Jan's most successful projects was running schools for women, her secretary Abdullah Khan said. In Kandahar alone, Ama Jan had opened six schools where almost 1,000 women learned how to bake and sell their goods at market. She also taught women how to use computers.

Since May, hundreds of people, mostly militants, have died in violence in Afghanistan each month, mostly in the south where Taliban fighters have clashed with U.S. and NATO-led forces — the bloodiest clashes since the Taliban regime's ouster in late 2001.

Now in three convenient locations!

The Pita Pit
FRESH THINKING • HEALTHY EATING

1 Campus Center Pita Pit
Open Monday through Friday
11:00am to 3:00pm

2 Southwest Café Pita Pit
Open 7 days per week
5:00pm to 1:00am

3 Worcester Pita Pit
Open 7 days per week
5:00pm to 1:00am

A 4th location coming soon!
Watch for the Hatch Pita Pit
Open Monday through Friday
11:00am to 2:00pm
DINING SERVICES

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Cheap food at expensive prices

Caroline Moretti

Technically, we're all required to buy a residential meal plan the first two years we are on campus at the University of Massachusetts. We're stuck, whether we like it or not, buying this over $1,000 food allotment every semester. It wouldn't be so bad if we were all eating $1,100 worth of food every four months (this is the cheapest residential meal plan, only available to North residents), but we are definitely not eating that much.

According to the Dining Service Web site, a dinner at the Dining Commons is worth $10.50. Now I don't know about the rest of you, but I can't ever recall a time when I looked at the slimy, fatty meat entrees, congealed pasta dishes and amorphous vegan stews and walked away eating a $10 meal. Actually, I can't remember the last time I've gone to the DC without settling for a bowl of Lucky Charms and an out-of-season pear.

After two years of getting creative in the Dining Common (there are a surprising number of things you can make with a sandwich press) you can finally switch over to this glorious-sounding thing called "Your Campus Meal Plan" (YCMP).

Dining Services makes you think you have all these wonderful options, you can put all this money into YCMP and eat at the Blue Wall all you want. You can buy 90 meals for $750 with YCMP, and every swipe is worth $6.75. I don't know if you math majors out there noticed this, but we spend $8.20 to get $6.75 worth of food. My $1.25 disappeared there somewhere, and I'd really like it back please.

With all the money they're charging us for meal plans, all the thousands and thousands of dollars they're raking in from every single student on campus, Dining Services still can't make the Blue Wall reasonably priced. Seriously, they're starting to encroach on the snack costs at Six Flags.

I can't think of many other restaurants where $5.50 is an acceptable price for two slices of pizza with crust like cardboard and a flimsy cup of watered-down Fanta. Why would a box of gritty, cold popcorn chicken and rubbery fries merit a $7 price tag? Maybe if we didn't waste our money on flat-screen TVs at Worcester and obnoxious DJ's at Dining Common midnight buffets, we'd have enough cash to up the food quality and make that La Familia pizza worth the $2.50 a slice.

I can't think of many other restaurants where $5.50 is an acceptable price for two slices of pizza with crust like cardboard and a flimsy cup of watered-down Fanta.

It's so much cheaper just to take the money you would put into buying all those YCMP swipes, and put it towards buying your own food and cooking for yourself. Or even take that $6.75 and go down to the Black Sheep Deli, and buy yourself an amazing sandwich that's actually worth the dough.

Maybe I could even stomach the egregious charges for food if going to the Dining Common was a truly pleasurable experience, but we're seldom treated like valued customers. I don't know how many times I've only wanted something from the salad bar, and have been forced to wait for 10 minutes while the swiper-lady holds my UCard and stares off into space, waiting for the entrée line to thin out.

Want to use the restroom while you're at Franklin? Be sure to ask permission from the lunch lady first.

We put a hell of a lot of money into the Dining Services coffer to be treated like a bunch of thieves in a busy marketplace.

Why not grab a cup of cereal to eat as a snack later? How about an apple or two to tide you over once the DC closes? Just be careful not to get caught, or else you might get scolded for stealing by a mean looking lady in a fruit-pattern shirt.

I don't think it's quite fair that we can be forced to eat at these places, be forced to pay for this food and get yelled at for attempting to take some fruit salad for the road. How is taking some food that we've already paid for, and then some, out of the DC "stealing"? If anything, Dining Services is stealing from us.

Every year, the cost of attending this school gets higher, and the money we lose on our meal plans is just another example of the University sucking us dry. At the end of the year, all of your unused swipes disappear, and the money you put toward those uneaten meals goes with it.

It's plain to see that the same people who think $150 is a fair price for a textbook think we're willing to eat $10 of chicken tenders and mozzarella sticks and call it a meal. For thousands of dollars a year, we should demand higher quality food, and more choices on the menu.

For what they charge us, we should be able to drink something other than soda or milk with our meals. I'm forced to pay way too much for way too little, and for $3350 a year (for the only meal plan offering 3 meals a day) the standards ought to be raised.

Caroline Moretti is a Collegian columnist

Alcohol ads not cutting it

Hinlan Wong

We have all seen this poster with a backdrop of UMass students cheering in the Mullins Center, with the message, "2 out of 3 UMass students have 4 or fewer drinks when they party." You can also find these posters all over the dining halls, dormitories, sporting events and anywhere else the University can legally place them.

This ad campaign is the University's most recent attempt to fight against underage and binge drinking; it's also one of the most confusing. Are they promoting that students should be having at least four drinks at a party? Maybe what they are trying to convey in a subtle tone is that we should drink until we get drunk? Perhaps students shouldn't be drinking at all? Should we be shocked at those numbers? Should I even be drinking more?

In fact, I shouldn't even be asking these questions. Ad campaigns are not supposed to be this baffling. When I see women strutting around in revealing underwear, I know they are selling lingerie. I should be thinking about what the message means in my life, not the point you are trying to convey to me.

The "2 out of 3" poster dubbed the "Social Norms Campaign," is part of a larger project on campus from the Campus Community Partnership Initiative, which belongs to a larger federal agency dedicated to preventing underage and binge drinking among college students in the Commonwealth. The Campus Partnership gave a hefty grant to UMass to implement programs and campaigns like the "2 out of 3" posters and gave a hand to programs such as Brief Alcohol Screening and Intervention for College Students (BASIC) and the now required freshman course from MyStudentMyBody.com.

We are not the only party school in the state to participate in this initiative. Fitchburg State College, Clark University, Boston College and the prestigious Massachusetts Institute of Technology are also part of this alcohol prevention campaign.

The alcohol screening for students program will be replacing the old mandatory course taken by underage students charged with possession of alcohol on campus. To teach freshmen about the risks of alcohol, the University has enlisted the help of MyStudentMyBody.com. According to the Arts & Events calendar on the University Web site, first-year students need to complete the MyStudentMyBody.com quiz or receive a registration hold. MyStudentMyBody.com is like a sugar-covered version of DARE, without the uniformed police officer.

Your intended goal of educating students isn't working. Underage students are still drinking, and we are still partying on the weekends.

I had the opportunity to register for the MyStudentMyBody.com course and take the same test as fellow first-year students. The online pamphlets you had to read were flashy, artistic, have great advice and are easy to read, but I can imagine they're just going to go in one ear and out the other. You have to take into consideration that students are just reading it to take the 20-question test, score an 80 or higher and receive a certificate of completion for UMass.

Your intended goal of educating students isn't working. Underage students are still drinking, and we are still partying on the weekends.

This is my favorite question from the mandatory first-year test, "Which of the following would result in the greatest increase in blood alcohol content?

A.) One 12-ounce beer.

B.) One 12-ounce glass of wine.

C.) One shot of hard liquor.

D.) They all have the same amount of alcohol."

If I were a freshman in need of getting intoxicated, the answer to that question would be extremely beneficial. The Web site also has an extensive survey; it felt like I was filling out my medical history. Students are not going to fill out this survey with complete truth or accuracy. The Web site has more mandatory survey questions than the real exam.

I will be the first to admit that I skipped through survey questions, randomly checking boxes, to get to the exam. I am sure a bundle of other first-year students did the same thing as me; nobody wants to do surveys if they are not in the mood.

The Web site and ad campaign might make some students stop and think about their actions, but for the rest, getting intoxicated is a choice. For most of us, we cannot choose to work part-time to pay off tuition costs, we cannot choose to not attend class and, for many of us, we cannot choose to park our car in the cheapest parking lot that isn't even paved.

Give students, and give me, a break. Put the rest of the grant money towards something more rewarding, something that will benefit the entire UMass community. Do not put it into something that is confusing and time consuming and makes students regret ever deciding to enter this institution.

Hinlan Wong is a Collegian columnist

Begging for impartiality in search for justice

Safia Albaiti

Something is rotten in the state of Iraq. Among the major debacles, one has to take into account how Saddam Hussein's trial has been conducted. It has been a mockery of the justice system and the international community in general. Saddam Hussein was a tyrant, no question about it. But to get at the facts of the case, to ask a court to be impartial, to consider the value of one group of people as equal as another group, is that too much to ask? Is it too much to ask that we apply the same standards to one situation as we would to another?

From the very beginning, the trial has been a mess. Firstly, there were the kidnappings and killings of three lawyers in the defense team. Then, the actual proceedings would have made the Queen of Hearts blush. Defendants screaming at the top of their lungs, and judges vainly calling for quiet are usually the order of the day.

The alarming thing is how Kafkaesque the whole affair has become. It begs the question of why Saddam Hussein was not tried in an international court of law. Why, as an alleged perpetrator of crimes against humanity and war crimes, is this man not tried in the International Criminal Court (ICC) like Slobodan Milosevic or Charles Taylor?

If it is proven that the man truly committed genocide, then how can it make sense to try him within his own country? It makes perfect sense to try such a person in an international court where there is a chance for impartiality in the proceedings. That is what the UN did when they established the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda to try those who were responsible for the Rwandan genocide.

If Milosevic had been tried in Serbia, he would have been treated as a hero and let off. Likewise, if he had been tried in Bosnia, he would probably have gotten the death penalty. It makes all the difference if the court appears impartial, even if the verdict and the outcome turns out the same.

That is what the ICC is for. It is therefore not unreasonable to think the entire matter political. If the international community considers Saddam Hussein a waste of their time and energy and better off gone, of course they will let his people, particularly those he oppressed, try him. Of course the Kurds and Shiites can't wait until they exact vengeance. It is to be expected; they have been persecuted in that part of the world for too long to let any bit of justice escape them. That does not make the court any more legitimate.

It is no surprise, then, that the cynical Kurdish judge presiding switched off Saddam's microphone to prevent him from defending himself. No judge at the ICC with such ethnic attachments would have been allowed to do that.

Another biased aspect is the case in question. So far, Saddam has been accused of the massacre of 143 Shiites in Dujail and the genocide of 50,000 to 100,000 Kurds in Halabja. But, I have to ask, what about the invasion of Iran and the killing of more than 100,000 Iranian civilians? Or is it not the right time in history to feel sorry for Iran?

Lest we forget, major players in the international community, like the United States, France, the former Soviet Union and key Arab nations, armed Saddam during the Iran-Iraq war.

Lest we forget, major players in the international community, like the United States, France, the former Soviet Union and key Arab nations, armed Saddam during the Iran-Iraq war. Where is the justice in forgetting the Iranian victims? If crimes against humanity in Saddam's case are limited to his nation's borders, should we have applied the same position against those who stood accused in the Nuremberg trials and accuse them of crimes committed only in Germany?

Another highly dubious question is the possibility the witnesses in the trial might have been coached. The Chief Prosecutor, Jaafar al-Mousawi, has been accused by the defense of bribing witnesses to give false evidence. One witness, Najib Khudair Ahmad, from the village of Sheikwasan, declared that, "During those nine days, it was like the apocalypse. Even Hitler didn't do this."

I wouldn't go so far as to say her account of the atrocities committed was false, but that's a pretty heavy and imbalanced accusation to make. I don't think a 41-year-old Kurdish woman from a little village could have come up with so inflammatory and dramatic a statement as that on her own. If witnesses can't be trusted to answer truthfully and lawyers can't find better witnesses, then they should all be dismissed.

It truly is despicable to see Saddam Hussein cowering in front of the judge, a shell of his former self. There are those who say he deserves a good hanging. Perhaps, but that is not what the law is for. The court is meant to bear witness to the right of all to defend themselves and speak. So this is the freedom Iraqis are being given. Freedom is feeding a guilty pleasure in watching this man crumble and fetch for scraps of hope. This is how we intend to appease Iraqis: by labeling freedom in the image of a dead man walking.

Safia Albaiti is a Collegian columnist

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

SPACE FOR IMPROVEMENT

While Michael Shulman might not like NASA very much, like he says in his article "Rockets are a waste of money," he doesn't include many accurate statements to defend his position.

First he says that Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin were the first and only men to walk on the moon. What he doesn't include, or probably doesn't even know, is that there have been five other moon landings by manned space shuttles, the last in 1972. Alan Shepard is one of the other astronauts to walk on the moon, and I don't think that should be belittled by Shulman.

Other problems mentioned include the Hubble Telescope and its flawed pictures. The Hubble Telescope did indeed launch in 1990 with a faulty mirror, but was fixed only four years later and has since become one of the most important telescopes in history. It has given us our only images of Pluto, until recently our farthest planet.

Also, Shulman references the Columbia explosion, but says it took place in 2001. Ignoring the fact that Shulman didn't even spell it right, the disintegration of the shuttle took place on February 1, 2003.

Finally, Shulman claims repeatedly that NASA no longer uses the shuttles and that men are no longer going to space. I refer Shulman to the Atlantis, which has been in space for almost 12 days and will be landing Thursday morning, returning six men to Earth safely.

Even though I disagree with Shulman's point of view, I would have at least respected his article had his argument not been filled with so many holes. Next time Michael, do a little research.

Marc Lerman
UMass student

MORE RESEARCH NEEDED

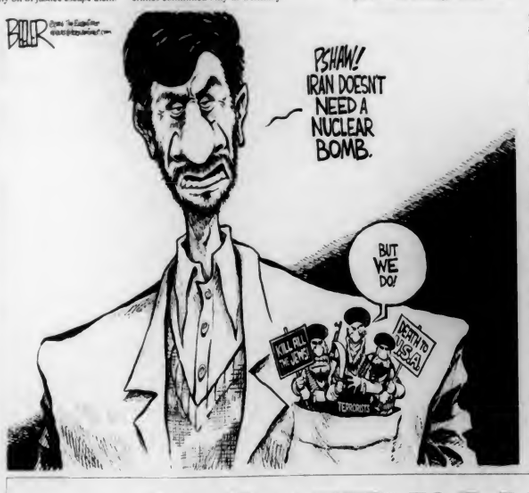
In the September 19th issue, columnist Dominic Poli claimed Albert Einstein "believed in the existence of a superior being." This is a complete fiction popular among today's religious, presumably on the erroneous pretense that Einstein's brilliance in the field of science also lends him authority in the field of theology.

There may be "a lot of mysteries in this universe of ours," but even the most cursory research will reveal this issue is not among them.

Furthermore, an appeal to the number of religious people in the world is logically fallacious: history abounds with examples of a majority holding beliefs that are, through our modern lenses, completely untenable.

Poli's work is slick but does not, ultimately, stand up to scrutiny.

Casey J. Morris
UMass student



SUBMIT A LETTER TO THE EDITOR!

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com or go to: dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Poetry bus arrives

By Luke Bloomfield
Collegian Staff

Rock stars now share the stage with poets. For those who would thrill to see a poet as they would Mick Jagger, Wave Books' Poetry Bus is doing in its own right what rock tours have done since "A Hard Days Night". For fifty days, Poetry Bus is traveling around the U.S. and Canada with some of the most compelling contemporary poets on board. It stops in fifty cities where accomplished poets give readings in such places as concert halls, bars, universities, prisons, elementary schools, art galleries, farms, the space needle, a naval academy and a volcanic crater.

Poet's might not be as trendy as rock stars, but that doesn't mean they can't tour the country like one.

Among the stops Poetry Bus is making is the Pioneer Valley. There will be readings by Mathew Zapruder, Travis Nicols, Valzhyna Mort, Mutant Ballyhoo and the type-writer phenomenon Typing Explosion at the Basement in Northampton on Sept. 26 at 9 P.M., and readings by James Tate, Caroline Knox, Joshua Beckman, Polina Barskova, Noelle Kocot, Mary Jo Bang, Monica Youn, Lori Shine and James Haug at Memorial Hall in University of Massachusetts on September 27 at 7 P.M. During the day on September 27, Poetry Bus will be making a mini tour around the five colleges.

Lori Shine, managing editor of Wave Books and a UMass MFA graduate, calls the Poetry Bus' stop in the Pioneer Valley a homecoming of sorts. Wave Books, a small publisher of poetry exclusively, is located in Seattle, WA and Easthampton, MA. Further, it has a tight relationship with the UMass MFA program.

"Wave began as Verse Press, founded by Matthew Zapruder and Brian Henry, UMass MFA grads, here in the Valley. I still live here and work as managing editor for Wave, as I did for Verse. Joshua Beckman, Wave's other editor, is a Hampshire College grad, and Matthew Zapruder is an Amherst College alum. Our marketing director, Monica Fambrough, and the tour manager, Travis Nichols also have their MFAs from UMass. We're all poets," Shine said in an interview with the Collegian.

Wave Books intends for this tour to be purely literary.

"The Poetry Bus' vibe is fun and energetic, but it's not a slam environment per se. I would say it's distinctly literary without the sometimes off-putting trappings of being literary. No elbow patches or boring attitudes. But there's also no rating system or competition as with slam-style readings," Shine said.

Although poetry has always had its niche in American culture, it has never gained the spotlight in the way popular music does, though the two mediums arguably share many things in common. Poetry Bus seeks to serve poetry by bringing its popularity to a new degree. There is no doubt that the tour is stopping at some places that has never before had the pleasure of hearing such talented poets read. In fact, it is most likely that no place has ever seen the likes of a poetry bus tour at all. Hopefully, after this tour, people will find poetry more accessible, which has always been a difficult aim to achieve in the poetry world. This tour may not attract hordes of screaming girls, but the achievement of Wave Books to pull something like this off is remarkable and well worth checking out.

Oprah signs deal for her own radio show

By Phil Rosenthal
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — Fresh flowers are to be brought in every week, complementing the potted plants. There are curtains, comfy chairs, a pair of end tables and a coffee table. There's even crown molding atop the walls.

Tastefully done up in warm earth tones, it's a beautiful place, but meant to be heard, not seen.

It's Oprah Winfrey's radio studio, home base for her new XM Satellite Radio channel, Oprah & Friends, which made its debut Monday morning on the subscription service.

"The listener notices little differences, and I think Oprah realizes that," said John Gehron, the longtime local radio executive who's general manager of Harpo Radio. "That molding, we could have done without it. But it adds to the total picture. ... It's all part of the feel of the channel. It creates a feel. It creates a creative environment."

XM has signed Winfrey to a three-year, $55 million deal to provide it with her brand name, her sensibility and a channel staffed by experts already showcased on her TV show, Web site and magazines.

"She's kind of the spiritual leader of what we're doing," Gehron said. "All these things are her vision, and she guides it."

Although Gehron credits Winfrey with coming up with the studio's decorative grace notes, one also senses the touch of Chicago-based design guru Nate Berkus, the only one of Winfrey's XM hosts expected to regularly originate a show from the new facility kitty-corner from the Harpo TV studio home of "The Oprah Winfrey Show," which just launched its 21st syndicated season.

Winfrey is to give the ad-supported channel its identity and co-host a weekly show culled from telephone conversations with her pal, Gayle King, who will also have her own XM interview program.

Oprah and Friends, recorded and edited at the new Harpo Radio facility then run in six-hour cycles repeated four times daily, will feature psychologist Robin Smith from Philadelphia, author Marianne Williamson from Detroit and personal trainer Bob Greene from California and Hawaii. Cardiologist Mehmet Oz and money columnist Jean Chatzky also will have shows, as will poet Maya Angelou.

"Maya Angelou," Gehron said, "really creates theater of the mind."

OK, so maybe it's not everybody's cup of wheatgrass. It doesn't have to be.

"Women have been (largely) ignored in information-and-talk radio," Gehron said, noting that the "loud, shouting and angry radio" doesn't appeal to them and talk formats aimed specifically at women have been hit or miss. "You didn't have someone as strong as Oprah driving it. You had men deciding what women wanted to hear."

Analysts, such as Susan Kalla of Caris & Co., nonetheless are wary of whether Team Winfrey can generate anywhere near the same number of subscribers for XM that, say, Howard Stern has brought to rival Sirius because, unlike Stern, the Oprah gang is not exclusive to their pay service.

XM has around 7 million subscribers; Sirius has about 5 million.

If nothing else, XM has given Winfrey the seed money for Harpo already a success in television, publishing and the Internet to try its hand at audio programming.

Oprah and Friends provides a virtual broadcast training academy for those friends, helping them get accustomed to hosting their own shows, a la syndicated TV star and best-selling author Dr. Phil McGraw, an earlier Winfrey protege. It also provides synergy opportunities with Winfrey's TV show, O magazine and Oprah.com. And there is practically no risk for Winfrey, who doesn't need the cash or exposure.

But the high cost of luring names such as Winfrey and Stern has contributed to XM's stock being down more than 60 percent from a 52-week high in October and Sirius shares being off around 50 percent from a December peak. Maybe these programming services should be heard online or in some other format.

"If anything," Gehron said, "distribution systems are becoming less important and content is becoming more important because the distribution systems are all merging."

There's no question Oprah & Friends has something unique going for it. "There isn't a radio studio in America that's set up like this," Gehron said. "But that's part of the feel and says something about the level of quality she's looking for." Besides, where else are you going to hear fresh flowers?

Television personality Winfrey attemps to bring her show to the radio successfully.

Goats cure dreary Sunday

By Alex Butler
Collegian Staff

Although everyone wouldn't agree, the weekend was pretty quiet around the Pioneer Valley. Sure, there were parties galore among the usual spots, but come Saturday morning, everything was dead. Grey skies and a tired breeze swept in early. Winter is coming; there is no question of this. With this yearly transition, it's not hard to find a feeling of loss in some aspect, whether it's a relationship, just summer, or whatever. Whatever it is, it's the perfect set for the Mountain Goats to come to Northampton. And on Sunday night, it was the perfect way to finish it quietly.

Little by little, in groups of twos and threes, a crowd began to mill about the Pearl Street Nightclub. Tall and short, wearing smooth dark clothes, the audience mounted to around eighty or nine when Christine Fellows took the stage.

She was an interesting character of sorts; a mid-sized blonde Canadian who sat alone onstage with just two keyboards and a microphone. She looked innocent enough, and when she opened her mouth, the suspicion was confirmed. It's a bit jarring to hear the voice of a young boy bellow out from a large and full female body.

Indie folks may not approve of many musicians, but they approved of Daniells last Sunday.

A bit jarring, but it was clear it worked.

The indie-music crowd is one of the most difficult groups of people to judge. The kids do not dance, nor do they even sway much. They just stare blankly. It is only until the end of each song that you realize they are still alive and are clapping furiously. Everything leading up to that point is just guesswork. Though they may even look disinterested, indie folk tends to simply soak it all in and hold it until the end. It's as if they are afraid to show any emotion.

But Christine Fellows took to the crowd very delightfully. She had no doubt dealt with them before, maybe even took part in

See MOUNTAIN GOATS on page 8

Peters to be first Canadian comedian to perform in India

By Cary Darling
McClatchy Newspapers

Stand-up comedian Russell Peters is supposed to be getting ready for his first shows in India at the end of this month. In fact, it will be the first-ever tour by a North American comic in that country.

Yet instead of packing for a visit to the land of the Taj Mahal, he's on a cellphone from a car wash on Ventura Boulevard in Los Angeles' San Fernando Valley. The Himalayas, it's not.

But if Peters, the first comic of Indian descent to become a marquee name in the U.S., is wallowing in disappointment, he's not showing it. The performances have been postponed, but they will be rescheduled, and he concedes he's a little on edge about the whole thing.

After all, Canadian-born, Los Angeles-based Peters, 35, has turned his Indian heritage into his very funny shtick-in-trade, gently lampooning growing up Asian in North America while peering into the wider cultural divide. He's not as in-your-face as such other new comedic draws as Dane Cook and Carlos Mencia. But Peters' more reserved style and amusing tales of racial ridiculousness give him the same kind of rock-star bragging rights: the first South Asian to sell out Harlem's famed Apollo Theater; seven shows of an upcoming eight-date Australian tour of 2,000-seat halls are sold out; a no-tickets-left four-night stand at Singapore's Orchestra Concert Hall; and a U.S. deal with Warner Bros., which just released his new CD and DVD, "Outsourced."

He has played all over the planet, from China to South Africa, Vietnam to Jamaica, Sri Lanka to the United Arab Emirates. But it remains to be seen what Indians will think of it all.

"I am nervous," he admits. "I've got fans over there, so that'll be good. But they'll miss the point of a lot of things. They'll understand it, but they won't get it. I'm going there early so I can adjust and get in their frame of mind, to a certain degree."

Adjusting is something Peters has had to do a lot of. Born in cosmopolitan Toronto but raised in more conservative Brampton, Ontario, Peters says he didn't always get along with white kids in the neighborhood, and got beaten up a lot. He ended up hanging with black kids, many of whom were of immigrant Jamaican descent. They let him look up boxing, and could stand up to the bullies.

In fact, by the late '80s, he was pursuing an odd three-branched career path: comedy, boxing and hip-hop DJing. "I was kind of trying everything at once," he recalls. "Seeing which one would hit." Sometimes he combined them, throwing some humor into the boxing ring. "There would be some boxers with a really good defense but I would get in a clinch with them and I'd tell them, 'You smell fantastic. They'd freak out.

Russell is the first Indian american comic to ever sell out the Apollo Theater in New York.

See COMEDIAN on page 8

American Idol is priciest show for advertisers

By Phyllis Furman
New York Daily News

And your next American Idol is ... "American Idol."

Fox's blockbuster hit once again takes the top prize as the most expensive show on television.

Advertisers will pay a whopping $700,000 per 30-second spot for the Tuesday night edition of the singing contest bonanza when it starts up again in January, according to a survey of media buyers conducted by Advertising Age.

This is the third year in row that "Idol" the highest rated show of the past season tops the charts as the priciest show in TV-land.

The show's big sponsors have been Coke, Ford and Cingular.

The Wednesday-night edition remains the second-most expensive, with prices ranging between $550,000 and $700,000.

"The audience numbers support the price," said Pattie Garrahy, chief executive of media buyer PGR Media. Garrahy noted "the age and quality of viewer," who are in the 25 to 49-year-old demographic coveted by advertisers.

The show is "so hyped and Fox builds up an appetite by putting it on in midseason," said Brad Adgate, director of research for Horizon Media.

Other shows commanding top dollar are Fox drama "House" (its prices are through the roof, double last year's $200,000 for a 30-second spot.

Also fetching big ad bucks are ABC's "Desperate Housewives," and "Brothers and Sisters," making its debut this season on ABC.

But there are also bargains to be had on the TV dial. News Corp.'s brand new network, My Network TV, has priced its tele-novelas at the bottom of the barrel. "Desire Table for Two" and "Fashion House" are priced at anywhere between $20,000 and $35,000 a spot, Advertising Age said.

New Music Tuesday

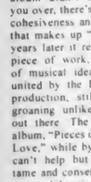
Rapture's album lacks hooks

Say what you will about "Echoes," The Rapture's 2003 album. Call it overindulgent, call it lyrically weak, call it over-hyped. For every glowing review hailing The Rapture as the saviors of dance punk, there was an equally unimpressed critic hurling those adjectives at the group. But even if the album didn't completely win you over, there's no denying the cohesiveness and manic energy that makes up "Echoes." Three years later it remains a unique piece of work, a hodgepodge of musical ideas triumphantly united by the DFA's excellent production, still buzzing and groaning unlike anything else out there. The Rapture's new album, "Pieces of the People We Love," while by no means bad, can't help but feel somewhat tame and conservative after the pure exhilaration of the group's last offering.

Right from the streamlined harmonies of opening track "Don Gone Do It," it's obvious this is an entirely different beast. Gone is the characteristic raw paranoia of past songs; the band sounds infinitely sleeker here. Save for the occasional second or two of guitar feedback, there's barely anything that could be considered spontaneous. Most everything sounds preplanned (after three years, they've had some time to think about this tracks) and, as a result, considerably less edgy than the band's previous work.

This safer sound isn't necessarily a bad thing. After all, the band can still write a mean hook and a fine melody. Matt Safer's sing-song lines mesh perfectly with the swinging beats on the album's title track, and the chorus of "na-na-na"s (provided by Cee-Lo Green) are positively infectious. On "Get Myself Into It," the first single off the album, Luke Jenner's mantra of "Gotta get myself into it, why not help me do it?" is catchy enough that the listener doesn't need to question what "it" is or how they can help him get into it. Complicated lyrics these certainly aren't, but words have never been the band's forte.

The album's high point is one of the two tracks produced by Danger Mouse, the awkwardly-titled "Whoo! Alright-Yeah... Uh Huh." Fueled by a persistent bass line and steady



"Pieces of the People We Love"

The Rapture

Universal Records

3.5 / 5

syncopated cowbell, Safer belts out surprisingly clever line after line on the state of today's dance music before reaching the apex. "People don't dance no more / they just stand there like this / they cross their arms and stare you down and drink and moan and diss." Indeed, this seems to convey the philosophy behind The Rapture, and it's nothing too complicated they just want you to dance.

Though it's tough to declare any songs as truly bad, there are certainly some that are blander than others. "Calling Me" finds Jenner singing falsetto over a lackluster drumbeat and filler arpeggiated bass line. It's easy to envision the atmosphere the band was going for, but the song doesn't go anywhere and it lacks any sort of body. The next two songs, "Down for So Long" and "The Sound," are nice enough, but again lack any real hooks. One can't help feeling that surely, out of the thirty or so songs the band claims to have written for this album, they could have found some that had a little more punch.

It's a pity that the album takes a dull turn in its last four songs after such a solid first half. "The Devil" presents a thrilling combination of a perpetually slithering bass line with Jenner's best Michael Jackson shrieks, switching things up for good measure with several unexpected key changes. "First Gear" is an exhilarating six-minute build-up with Safer crooning about his Ford Mustang over a pulsing electro-fuzz bass.

"Pieces of the People We Love" is a mixed bag. The increased accessibility of the songs isn't inherently bad and the sleeker, more processed sound actually works quite well for the first chunk of the album. It's only the weaker songwriting found with "Calling Me" and the following tracks that bogs down the end of the album, making for a lopsided listening experience. A lack of cohesiveness doesn't help matters. One can't help but wonder what a DFA-produced "Pieces of the People We Love" would sound like, instead of the album we have now, which was tackled by three different producers.

All this said it's still one of the more enjoyable albums to come out this year. While not a failure by any means, one can't really claim "Pieces of the People We Love" to be a complete success, either. If you loved "Echoes," this album is more conservative album is likely to be somewhat of a disappointment; if "Echoes" was too out there for you, this may be right up your alley.

—Alex Hornbeck
Collegian Correspondent

Zappruder's songs create life

Coming down like green speeding bullets from the sky is Michael Zapruder's Rain of Frogs' latest album, "New Ways of Letting Go."

The album, which is a follow-up to his 2004 release of "This is a Beautiful Town", is an eleven track odyssey full of hardships, love, and pain in which Zapruder transcends himself in the form of lyrical melody, where even the smallest understatements reveal truth.

Along with a hand-picked orchestra of 20 members, Yair Evnine and Nate Query from the Decemberists contributed to the making of the album, but don't expect accordions and pipers. The album consists of mostly folk ballads, where Zapruder succeeds in obtaining his own, unique and timeless sound, almost something biblical. Each song is a snippet in the life of specific characters, taken place in an old medieval imperial town, full of haymaker markets, shepherds, and violins. Zapruder can be found in town square, holding a guitar, as the bustling crowd moves past.

Zapruder claims his independence as a songwriter with "New Ways of Letting Go." A melting pot of influences with lean beef and starchy potatoes as key stew ingredients, the closest comparison to Zapruder is Sufjan Stevens and Jason Molina's Songs Ohia. Similar to Stevens, Zapruder heartily surrounds his sung melodies with various brass, woodwind, and stringed instruments. Sparse, understated percussion is parallel to Molina's music, a bed of sustain greatly compliments the syncopated rhythms. Listen to track three, "Butterfield's and Baker's."

The opening track, "The Alchemist",- the most deserved listen -launches this record with an intricate piano melody that sounds like fluttering

"New Ways of Letting Go"

Michael Zappruder's Rain of Frogs

Howells Transmitters

3.5 / 5

leaves. When Zapruder begins to finger pick the guitar, nostalgia sets in and the leaves begin to fall. You've been here before, whether in a dream or in the past. Zapruder forlornly sings "Everybody knows me/ Do my work", from a discouraged Alchemist's point of view, which mixes potions and explosive ingredients. The Alchemist must complete his work, but everybody must get stoned, once in a while he's got the bruises to prove it.

A song full of pomp and splendor, Shepherd's Purse holds seeds against the wind, letting them be carried away by the melody. With a faint organ backdrop, the seeds embed themselves into the ground and grow throughout the season. "Scattered a thousand seeds around my careful garden bed/ It's been a windy season just like I said" Zapruder sings with hope. Maybe this season will be more profitable than the last.

"On the Arm of a Burning City" is an incantation-like song with tender, vulnerable lyrics where Zapruder lays down the melody like dry pieces of wood. Zapruder scarcely strums his guitar, only playing the chord changes. He let's the melody speak for itself. Soft strings linger in the background, like rising smoke. "You can't spin around and remember things/ You can't touch your face and keep speaking." At the end of the song, cinder is left behind, slowly sizzling in the dirt.

Michael Zapruder's Rain of Frog's "New Ways of Letting Go", putting cats and dogs to shame, is full of life and emotion. Hop to your local record store and make the purchase, you won't be let down.

Dave Masley
Collegian Staff

Daniells' songs not for everyone

Daniells' songs are for the sad indie kid in us all the ritual herself at one point. She sat with a smug smile and joked conversationally throughout her set. Her youthful innocence warmed the crowd, but by the time she was finished, the majority of the crowd had lost much interest. Her songs had no build and though her lyrics were unique and cute, their childlike quality was a bit too much.

MOUNTAIN GOATS from page 7

After a short break, John Darnielle and bassist Peter Hughes of the Mountain Goats galloped onstage with a quiet enthusiasm that would linger for the rest of the night. The duo, a guitar and bass, seemed to complement each other perfectly. Hughes would pull out notes, and at times it was as if the two rhythms were the same.

Darnielle's voice, along with many in the obscure indie-culture, is hard to swallow. It presents itself in a type of whine, and he doesn't help the matter with a painful countenance to along with it. But there's the rub, the beauty is not with the sound but with the emotion. His songs are of loss. If you can't relate to defeat in any aspect, you might as well just forget it, you're in for a long night. But if you can see something beyond the strained whimpers, it can be a beautiful remembrance that it's human to hurt, and that sooner or later, the most important person in your life will have to leave. If it were up to John Darnielle, everyone would get lonely. He finds a home in it, somehow.

With that, the crowd left feeling like a million bucks — bright, young faces meddled in the street afterwards, feeling united. It was a warm hug (complete with dozens of lit cigarettes) that we all needed at the end of a grey weekend.

Russells discuses race and TV

COMEDIAN from page 7

drop their guard, and I would hit them."

Ultimately, comedy won out, but it wasn't until about seven years ago that he traded in generic humor for something more culturally specific and relevant to his Anglo-Indian roots. "I did all the hackneyed jokes in the beginning," he says. "You go through your phases; no one is brilliant right away. At least, I hope not.

"I started to realize that (my old material) was kind of hollow. It was getting laughs, but it wasn't saying anything. I said, 'You've got an audience now. Take the advantage.'"

Peters began building buzz on the Canadian scene, culminating in two one-hour "Comedy Now!" specials on that country's Comedy Network. Fans illegally put portions of the 2004 show on the Internet, sparking global interest.

Yet unlike so many of his comedic contemporaries, he's neither particularly loud nor lewd. "A lot of people mistake loud for funny, or attitude for being funny. For me, a lot of times it's just not," he explains. "If you have something to say, say it, and make it work."

Peters is part of a wave of Asians making inroads in American media, including Sandra Oh on "Grey's Anatomy," Parminder Nagra on "ER," and several cast members on "Lost" and the new ABC series "Heroes." But he takes it with several big grains of salt.

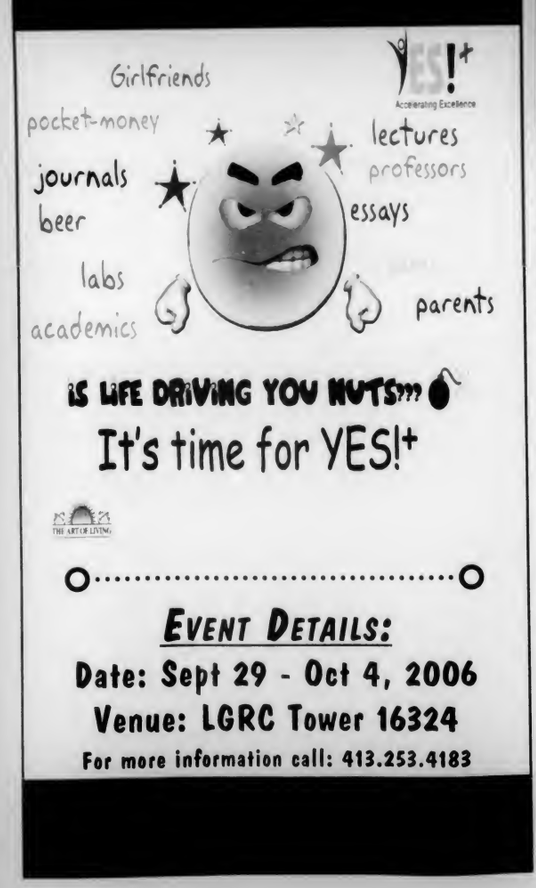
"The doctor on 'ER' fills all kinds of quotas," Peters says, laughing. "She's female, Indian, and I wouldn't be surprised if they made her character a lesbian next. It's supposed to be a hospital in Chicago, and there's only one Indian. Do you know how many Indian doctors there are in Chicago? It's absurd to think there can only be one."

But he concedes that things are improving. Even warped visibility can be better than absolute invisibility. "It's all changing ... I'm not really mad at the system," he says. "They're making the attempt, and eventually it will reflect what's real."

As "Outsourced" proves, Peters not only sends up his culture but talks about Latinos, blacks and whites as well. But there's only one group which seems, he says, to take offense. "The only people who get upset are liberal white people," he says with a laugh. "And those are the ones who shouldn't be upset; they're liberals."

It looked like Peters might really be making a splash in the mainstream when it was announced a while back that he'd signed a sitcom deal with the now-extinct WB network. That has fallen through but, as with the delayed trip to India, Peters isn't shedding any tears over it.

"Getting a sitcom in L.A. is like getting a goldfish," he explains. "You get one, it dies, you flush it down the toilet and you get another one."



Ball chases history at UNH

Jerry Rice had 28 touchdown receptions during his senior year at Mississippi Valley State in 1984, while tallying over 1,800 total yards.

A-10 FOOTBALL from page 12

hands of I-A opponent Navy two weeks ago in a one-point loss.

The Best of the Rest

Junior running back Eugene Holkman of No. 17 James Madison (2-1, 1-0 A-10) ran for a 74-yard touchdown on just the second play from scrimmage sparking the Dukes' 51-14 blowout over conference opponent Northeastern.

In other head-to-head A-10 action, No. 18 Delaware (2-1, 1-0 A-10) held Rhode Island (1-2, 0-1 A-10) to just 32 yards through the air and scored 14 unanswered fourth-quarter points to complete the comeback road victory, 24-17.

In another conference nail-biter, No. 21 Towson (4-0, 1-0 A-10), which jumped into the Top 25 for just the second time in school history this past week, pulled off a 31-30 win on the road over Hofstra. Towson's sophomore quarterback Sean Schaefer went 43-for-60 on his way to compiling 458 yards and three touchdown passes, leading the Tigers to victory.

To complete this weekend's A-10 domination, Maine (2-1, 1-0 A-10) won in decisive fashion over Shaw, 62-12. Villanova (1-3, 0-1 A-10) and William & Mary (1-2, 0-1 A-10) both picked up their first W's of the season.

Conference Performer of the Week

It is pretty hard to out-perform Schaefer's 458 yards through the air and Santos' five touchdown passes, but David Ball's record-tying day lands him as the offensive star of the week. Ball tallied 12 catches for 179 yards en route to his three first-half scores.

Somewhat of an off week

No. 1 New Hampshire, No. 9 Massachusetts, No. 18 Delaware, and No. 21 Towson all have off weeks, allowing some other teams to step into the spotlight. Maine will have the toughest test of the weekend as they travel to Chestnut Hill to take on I-A Boston College.

In conference play, Hofstra will travel to William & Mary in a sub-500 battle and No. 7 Richmond will host Northeastern.

'Dig for the Cure' raises cancer funding of the profit goes directly to breast cancer research.

VOLLEYBALL from page 12

Stay the Main Course

After last weekend's conference play appetizers, A-10 volleyball hungers for this week's upcoming entrée. Waiting through a month of prelude-ing, the schedule finally gets hot with each of the A-10 teams dining with conference rivals.

George Washington (7-7, 0-2 A-10) and Charlotte (10-7, 0-2 A-10) made reservations at Duquesne (7-12, 1-1 A-10) and St. Louis (9-5, 2-0 A-10). Fans of both of the visiting teams are still waiting to receive their first win in a conference game, something they ordered over a week ago.

Meanwhile, Fordham (13-6) and Rhode Island (3-13) will simultaneously call it quits on their conference play diets, both surrendering to the taste of Philadelphia favorites, Temple (7-8, 1-1) and La Salle (6-12, 0-2).

After devouring last week's opposition, Xavier (8-7, 2-0) and Dayton (11-5, 2-0) the West division leaders, sandwich two non-conference games (Xavier at Morehead State, Wright State at Dayton) around their mean mid-week match up.

Patriots bound for China next summer

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBOROUGH — The Patriots travel to China for an exhibition game next summer. It they fall next Sunday to stop the big play against the Bengals, the trip home from Cincinnati might seem just as long. They haven't done a very good job of it so far and Cincinnati "is one of the most explosive offensive teams I've seen in a while," New England coach Bill Belichick said Monday. "I'm sure they can't wait to get a hold of me."

His defense has allowed five touchdowns this season. Four were pass plays covering 32, 46, 71 and 83 yards. The other was an 18-yard run.

So Belichick has no time to think about that game at Workers Stadium in Beijing next Aug. 8 against Seattle. He's too busy trying to figure out how to stop Carson Palmer and the quarterback's big-play wide receivers, Chad Johnson, T.J. Houshmandzadeh and Chris Henry.

"Right now, I really couldn't care less about China or any place else I mention, that's the only destination I'm really concerned with," Belichick said. "That stuff is so far in the future that I don't know if China will be there a year from now. I don't know if I'll be there a year from now."

Barring the demise of the most populous nation in the world and the most successful NFL team over the past five seasons, both should still be around.

And just because the Patriots struggled offensively and allowed big plays defensively in Sunday's 17-7 loss to the Denver Broncos, they still could have a successful season.

"I don't think you can sit there and say, this team's going to the Super Bowl or we're not going to the Super Bowl' based on our performance to date," linebacker Rosevelt Colvin said.

Punter Josh Miller may have been the Patriots' most effective unit against the Broncos. He punted four times, averaging 48.2 yards on three of their kicks, but each time they got at least one first down.

"Football's a game of field position," Colvin said. "A couple of times we got them in third-and-long [plays] but they converted a first down and now they face up on the 15 and they move the ball a little bit. Now they're punting the ball a little deeper."

The Patriots gave up 17 points in each of their three games but only the first two against Buffalo and the New York Jets. The Denver defense is much tougher than both those teams so the New England offense needed to be stronger.

New Orleans packs Superdome for the year

By Nancy Armour
Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — Brian McGowan never hesitated when it came time to renew his New Orleans Saints tickets.

The Saints reopen the Superdome on Monday night with a game against Atlanta that's got all the trappings of a Super Bowl. The group U2 will perform and the first President Bush will make an appearance. The game will be a celebration of one of the country's most unique cities, and the people who call it home.

Along with his wife, McGowan is still living in Dallas a year after Hurricane Katrina destroyed their home and ravaged their city.

The government trailer they've been waiting on for months has yet to materialize, and they're only now starting to rebuild their home. Their close-knit family is strewn across the country — some in Phoenix, some in Baltimore, only one sibling in New Orleans.

"I said, 'Brian, we lost everything we had. We have nothing. We're fighting with the insurance company and FEMA, and you're going to spend money we don't have to hold onto these tickets?'" Lafchandra McGowan recalled.

"He said, 'That's all I have left and I won't let them go. We'll put it on a credit card, we'll do whatever it takes. I won't let them go.'"

Sure enough, the McGowans and their two sons were back in New Orleans on Sunday. Their trip will be brief, time enough to see some family and friends and the Saints' triumphant return home. But their presence — and that of thousands others like them — is as much a testament to the loyalty of Saints fans as to the resilience of the city itself.

"It's the beginning for New Orleans to come alive again," said Beverly Broussard, a season-ticket holder who has been making the three-hour trip from Marrero, La., for years now. "It's a celebration of life, back in our city."

New Orleans has always had a unique — albeit complicated — relationship with the Saints. The team has been dismal for most of its existence, not finishing with a winning record until 1987 and managing it only six times since then. Legend has it that the tradition of embarrassed fans donning paper bags began here, and the team was often derided as the "Ants."

But much like Green Bay and its beloved Packers, the Saints are considered family in New Orleans. You may not like them much sometimes, but they're yours and the only one you've got.

Fans filled the dome year after year, and the city's mood rose and fell with the team's won-loss record. Monica Ramsey took her devotion one step further, decorating her kitchen with Saints wallpaper, curtains and a rug, and topping it all off with a black and gold ceiling fan.

"We like our little team," said Larry Broussard, Ramsey's father.

Which made last year's hardships all the more difficult. Residents who were evacuated scoured their "new" cities for sports bars that showed Saints games. Some couldn't always get the games, and had to be content with highlights here and there. Fans living outside New Orleans missed the routine they'd settled into over the years.

Tom Lambert, a New Orleans native who now lives in Tampa, has been making the 20-hour round trip for Saints home games for years. But the closest he got last season was watching on television with the half-dozen relatives who took shelter in his house.

"It was kind of odd," he said.

Even those who got to see the Saints play in person said it didn't feel quite right. Chased out of New Orleans like most residents when Katrina struck on Aug. 29, 2005, the nomadic Saints played "home" games in Baton Rouge, San Antonio and New York.

"It was a little hard. I went to games in Baton Rouge, but it wasn't the same," said Kris Trahan, a season-ticket holder from New Orleans who was already wearing his Saints T-shirt on Sunday. "You've got to be in the dome."

Added Ramsey, "The dome is just home for us. It's where we belong."

So when the Saints announced they were coming home to New Orleans this season, their fans responded with an unprecedented show of loyalty.

Though the city's population is about half of what it was pre-Katrina and many residents are still trying to put their lives back together, the team sold out the dome for the entire regular-season schedule. More impressive, all of those seats were bought as season tickets, meaning there are no single-game tickets available.

Seats were so hard to come by, the McGowans bought a season ticket for their son Brian Jr., who turned 8 on Sunday and asked to see the Saints as his present.

"New Orleans is my home," Brian Sr. said when asked to explain his family's ties to the team. "And I'm really anticipating coming back."

Some fans bought Saints tickets simply to give a beleaguered city a boost.

Though Wade and Sherri Adams had always followed the Saints, their home in Gulf Shores, Ala., is about 3 1/2 hours away from New Orleans. But they've had enough close calls with hurricanes — a tree fell on their daughter's bedroom during Hurricane Danny in 1997 — to know how devastating the storms can be.

When the team announced it would return to New Orleans, the couple bought eight Saints season tickets.

"We could afford it, and it needed to be done. We wanted to support the city," Wade Adams said. "We will probably be lifelong season-ticket holders from here on."

As people like the McGowans, Ramseys, Broussards can tell him, the team has a way of getting in fans' blood. Fans dressed in black and gold wandered downtown, where banners reading, "Our Home. Our Team. He A Saint," lined the streets. There was a festive mood rarely seen in the past year.

Some neighborhoods may still be deserted, the recovery is moving slowly and it will be years before the city is fully on its feet again. But on this weekend — and seven others after it — it was like old times in New Orleans again.

"It's very exciting," Lambert said. "I've been waiting all year for this."

IF YOU SAVE A HERO WHAT DOES THAT MAKE YOU?
U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE
More men and women on the front lines are surviving their encounters than ever before for one reason. We have the most elite nurses in the world. As a U.S. Air Force nurse, you receive the most advanced training and have access to the best medical technology on the planet. And whether you're treating Airmen on foreign soil or their families on bases here in the U.S., you can put all of that training to use. If you're interested in learning more about a better place to practice medicine, call or visit us online.
1-800-588-5260 • AIRFORCE.COM/HEALTHCARE

Campus to Career PROGRAMS
Etiquette Dinner
What are the do's and don'ts of business dinner etiquette?
Come learn from etiquette professional Carol McGuiggan how to avoid potential pitfalls as you enter the business world
Tuesday, October 3 at 5:00 p.m.
Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union
$7.00 per person - Space is limited
Go to UMassAlumni.com/students to register.
Sponsored by:
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
alumni loan consolidation program
www.UMassAlumni.com/studentloans
(800) 936-4975
University Solutions

Submit A Comic
S'il Vous Plait
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Sudoku brought to you by andiamo 256 • FOOD

4				7	6			8
	6	8		2		5
			3			6	2
		9			8
	3						7
			1			9
	5	3			7
		6		1		7	8
1				5	9			6

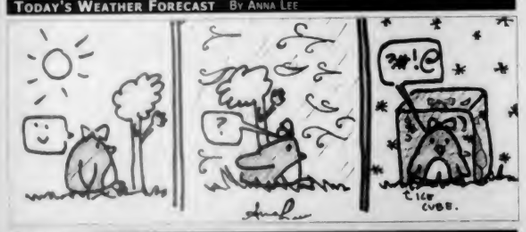
Quote of the Day

"Trees cause more pollution than automobiles do."

—Ronald Reagan

Read It & Weep By Travis Dandro

Today's Weather Forecast By Anna Lee



Labrats By Richard Martelly

Functional Dystopia By Zeid Rusan

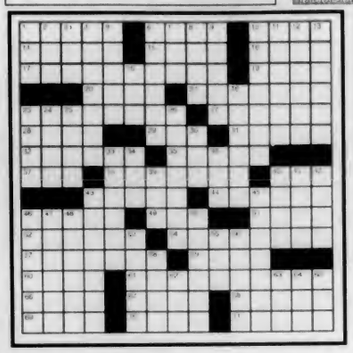
ACROSS
1 Deep gorge
6 Party giver
10 Funeral bugle call
14 Republic on Hispaniola
15 Declare firmly
16 Assist
17 Light up
18 Part of HOMES
20 Dope fans
21 Roman wall builder
23 Distributed fixed portions
27 Claim as a right
28 Lotion ingredient
29 August (com probably
31 Young horses
32 Newfoundland airport
35 Flies alone
37 Double curve
38 Cut a V into
40 Wind dir.
43 Check recipient
44 Outburst of rage
46 Patriarchic title
48 Pua
51 Dynamic start?
52 Egg dish
54 Marriage endings
57 Used translations
59 Jacob's third son
60 Actor Guinness
61 Lessening of tension
66 Old cash in Como
67 With no ice
68 Bird from Flanch Lick
69 Grassy-spoon sign
70 Hebrides isle
71 List of candidates

DOWN
1 Greek letter
2 Actor Linden
3 Feel poorly
4 Examined in detail
5 Outmoded copier briefly
6 Greeter's brother
7 Eggs to Nero
8 Third son
9 Walk on
10 Vacuum bottle trademark
11 Radio antenna
12 Supple
13 Pays out
18 Trawler's stopover
22 Translate an encryption
23 Violent anger
24 Exclamation of sorrow
25 Sheen
26 Calms down
30 Le de Wight
33 Tooth covering
34 Rogers or Clark
36 Do over service
38 Bressed drink
40 Oil ___ (as a gathering)
41 Withered
42 Dad of love
43 Royal homes
45 Conquer
46 Expert de corps
47 Aviator Earhart
48 Abandon
50 Make write
53 Guild inhabits
55 Annoy
56 Track shapes
58 Go in search of
62 Set down
63 Writer Levin
64 Tablet script
65 Louis or Carne

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE HARP
FALL SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT • Trivia Night!
WED • 1/2 price apps!
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the river 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate readers poll
OCMC & All credit cards accepted
163 Sunderland Rd - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-9988 www.theharp.net



Best Bar Around
Seven O's
KARAOKE EVERY WEDNESDAY
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
413-665-9788
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
Next To Cottonse Apts.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You drink too much coffee. And no, it's not 'kind of cool'.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Ask yourself, are you a good witch or a bad witch?

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You have negative eight dollars and fifteen cents on your u-card. As of today.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You may find that there is a congruence in sexual activity and academic apathy.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Stop wearing those sunglasses. Especially on your head.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
No, your sign does not mean you will get cancer.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Reconnect with your teenage mutant ninja turtle name-sake.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
"Va te faire foutre" means something bad in French.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Stay gold, pony boy.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You should not steal those things you "find".

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Spell racecar backwards.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Try taking the stairs instead of the elevator. No really, you should.

THANK YOU FOR READING
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10 20 am Sundays See you there! www dwightchapel org

Our Nurses deserve Respect as Army Officers and call the shots! Guaranteed 2 to 3 ½ year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5.000 yearly Call 413-545-2321

Play Women's Ice Hockey! Tryouts for the UMass Women's Club Ice Hockey team are Sept. 26th 11pm-12:20 am and Sept. 29th 10 pm-11:20 pm umass-hockeymail@yahoo.com

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Work on campus & travel to other local colleges. Phone work in evenings. Must be on the Phone. Base Pay $12/hr = Bonus & T/E Apply via Email with Resume Attached: bgillard@collegepro.com & contact by phone 603-589-6098

Students Wanted: Looking for energetic students to do computer work from your dorm room. Hours are Flexible. $12 per hour contact Matt 781-910-5053

EMPLOYMENT

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day. Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

Chicago Pizza Drivers wanted pay to $7.00 per hr. =tips. Weekends required. Cashiers pay up to $8.50 per hr. weekends required. Apply in person. 150 fearing St. Amherst 549-6073

EMPLOYMENT

Grand Opening Sept 29th Skyplex Nightclub Presents it's hottest new concept. "Pure" "West Coast Nightlife Comes to Western Mass." Now Hiring: Bartenders, Barbacks, Cashiers, Cocktail Servers, Security Staff. Apply in person only, Monday September 25th and Tuesday September 26th, 2006 6-8pm, 10 Stearns Square, Springfield, MA www.skyplex.us

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

SERVICES

Do you know your rights as a student, tenant, worker and consumer? The Student Legal Services office can help with your questions. Come to 922 campus center or call 545-1995

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2007 Celebration 20th anniversary w/ SunSplash Free Trip on 12 before Nov. 1 Free Meals & Parties, Group Discounts 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

TUTOR NEEDED

Disability Student seeking Graduate Student with excellent writing skill to tutor at $10 an hour 582-0799

CLASSIFEID

Want to advertise in the Daily Collegian Marketplace?

It's easy!

Submit your Classifeid online at www.dailycollegian.com

Or, you can visit our office in the Campus Center Basement and speak with an experienced Classified Advertising Professional.

Or call us at 545-3500

Seahawks find offense; Giants suffer blow

By Dave Goldberg
Associated Press

Seattle is playing like a team on track for another Super Bowl.

Pittsburgh is not.

In a weekend full of strange doings, the Seahawks finally got their offense on track against the New York Giants' struggling defense. Despite some late mishaps, Seattle looked every bit a team headed for its second straight NFC championship, and losing running back Shaun Alexander for a couple of weeks to a broken foot should be a minor setback.

The Steelers? With Ben Roethlisberger still struggling (the official term seems to be "rusty"), they are 1-2. Sure, they came back from a mediocre first three-quarters of last season and won the whole thing, but this could be harder – they are down two games to both Cincinnati and Baltimore in the improved AFC North.

At the top level, Sunday provided a little definition to the early season, even in Week 3.

But there also were some things that seemed very awry.

For one, visiting teams won 10 of the 13 games, including the Bengals over the Steelers in Pittsburgh and Chicago's late win over the Vikings in Minneapolis, which set a tone for the two Norths. That's part of the early trend: After three weeks, visitors were a remarkable 25-20, not counting Atlanta's visit to New Orleans on Monday night.

But maybe the most interesting part was the disparate fates of the two most recent Super Bowl participants.

The Steelers' 28-20 loss at home to the Bengals was not simply a case of Carson Palmer's ability to find Chris Henry and T.J. Houshmandzadeh in the end zone. The last two TDs, to Houshmandzadeh, came a minute apart in the final quarter after fumbles by Ricardo Colclough (on a punt) and Vernon Haynes.

Those fumbles were among five turnovers by the Steelers. Indeed, turnovers played a huge role in results around the league.

Three were interceptions thrown by Roethlisberger, who is recovering from an offseason motorcycle accident and appendicitis attack and was 18-of-39 for 209 yards.

Two of the INTs were with Pittsburgh in scoring position, including one on a third-and-10 from the Bengals 16 with Pittsburgh trying to tie the score in the closing seconds. But even more important may have been one Roethlisberger threw on first-down from the Cincinnati 6 on the first play of the second quarter when the Steelers seemed about to take a 14-0 lead.

Yes, the Steelers made the playoffs as the sixth and last seed in the AFC last season and won four straight to take the title. But now they are chasing two 3-0 teams in the AFC North after the Ravens capitalized on an interception of Charlie Frye to win in Cleveland on Matt Stover's last-second, 52-yard field goal.

"There were a lot of ebbs and flows, but I think today was a big step for me," Roethlisberger said.

He had better be right, because there are signs he will be needed more this year, both as a passer and a leader. There is no Jerome Bettis to do the leaning and the short-yardage running, and the receiving corps is depleted with the departure of Antwaan Randle El.

So Big Ben, "rust" and all, will have to carry a bigger load.

As for Seattle, the Seahawks' defense was solid in its first two games, but not so the offense, which will have to get along for a little while without Alexander. Last season's league MVP has a cracked bone in his left foot and will miss at least a couple of games.

He will be replaced by Maurice Morris, one of the NFL's better backup running backs who has started only four games in four-plus NFL seasons, but has 872 yards and 4.5 per carry average during that time.

And it's not as if Alexander was such a big part of Seattle's offensive explosion Sunday. While Alexander only managed 47 yards on 20 carries, the Seahawks jumped to a 35-0 lead en route to a 42-30 win over the Giants, whose loudest mouths – Jeremy Shockey this time – shouted "we were outcoached."

One major element was Deion Branch. Not in numbers (two catches for 23 yards) but in the fact the Seahawks were able to play a four-wide-receiver alignment that had New York confused and led to five TD passes by Matt Hasselbeck – to four different receivers.

"It was a pleasure to play a little different way," offensive coordinator Gil Haskell said.

It didn't hurt that the Seattle defense came up with three first-quarter interceptions against a team that should have beaten the Seahawks last year and expected to be better this year.

It's early, but Seattle has a schedule that easily could give it home-field advantage again in the NFC – although given those home-away numbers, that might not mean anything.

The Seahawks go to Chicago next Sunday night in what will be more a test for the Bears than Seattle. Chicago's win in Minnesota wasn't very pretty, after all. Beyond that, there's little that looks threatening other than a trip to Denver on Dec. 3 and a home game with San Diego three weeks later. Fortunately for the Seahawks, the NFC West might be almost as bad as the NFC North.

Turnovers: Coaches never stop preaching the importance of turnovers. Sunday provided a perfect example of what they mean.

In addition to Bengals-Steelers (and Giants-Seahawks to a lesser extent), turnovers played a major role in three other games: Ravens-Browns, Bears-Vikings and Rams-Cardinals.

In Cleveland, the Browns held a 14-12 lead and had a second-and-goal at the Baltimore 4 with 3:29 left. But linebacker Hart Scott hit Frye as he threw, and Chris McAlister picked off the ball. From there, Steve McNair led the Ravens downfield for Stover's winning kick.

In Minneapolis, Antoine Winfield put the Vikings in front by intercepting Rex Grossman's weak pass for a touchdown. But Chester Taylor's fumble that gave up the ball at the Vikings 17 led to Grossman's 2-yard winning TD pass to Rashied Davis.

And in Arizona, Kurt Warner fumbled a snap at the Rams 18 with Neil Rackers in easy field goal position, and St. Louis beat the Cardinals 16-14. That followed a fumble by Marc Bulger, Warner's old running mate with the Rams, that put the Cardinals in scoring position.

Still, Warner had the worse game, getting intercepted three times, twice inside the St. Louis 14.

Consolation? Warner threw for 256 yards, getting him to 20,000 yards faster than any QB in NFL history except Dan Marino, 76 games to 74.

He'd surely give that up for hanging on to the ball.

Finally, with Jacksonville leading 7-0 late in the first period in its attempt to wrest control of the AFC South from Indianapolis, Byron Leftwich tried to find George Wrightster on a deep route from the Indianapolis 34. Instead, Jason David intercepted.

Then the Colts' Terrence Wilkins returned a punt 82 yards for a touchdown to tie it, and Indy went on to win 21-14 despite 191 yards rushing for the Jaguars.

Without that turnover, who knows?

Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger, after receiving an appendectomy before his team's second game at Jacksonville, has struggled while the Steelers have tumbled to a 1-2 start.

Cincinnati Bengals quarterback Carson Palmer (No. 9) threw four touchdown passes against the Pittsburgh Steelers on Sunday, while New York Giants quarterback Eli Manning (No. 10) struggled against Seattle.

Join our team.
Write for Sports.
call (413) 545-0719

Attention First-Year Students:
Have you completed MyStudentBody? It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, October 16th. For instructions, go to the University Health Services website.
www.umass.edu/uhs
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

We're hiring software developers to help us transform the airline industry by solving some of its toughest computing problems. No airline industry experience necessary, just a love of hacking and a desire to work in a fast-moving, knowledge-expanding environment created by computer scientists to help you succeed. Visit our website at www.itasoftware.com/joinus.
ita Software
Visit us at the Engineering & Computer Science Career Fair '06
Wednesday October 11, 2006
On-campus interviewing will be held on October 27, 2006
Submit resumes through Umass Amherst Career Services by October 17, 2006

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Saints are coming

Junior Erin O'Brien has started all nine games for the Minutewomen this season and has made one defensive stop. The Minutewomen were shutout by No. 10 Connecticut, 6-0, Saturday and fell to 2-7 on the season.

BY KEVIN DOOLEY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Massachusetts field hockey team (2-7) is more than happy to see the Connecticut Huskies leave town after UConn had its way with the Minutewomen in a 6-0 rout Saturday.

UConn paved the way for the Minutewomen's fourth straight defeat.

The Maroon and White must now turn its attention to the Siena Saints (0-5, 0-1 Northeast Conference) who will come into town looking for their first victory of the season Tuesday night at Garber Field. The meeting will be the first time the two teams have matched up.

This upcoming game can only conjure memories of when UMass had an opportunity to defeat another winless team – Dartmouth – after losing two games in Beantown to Northeastern and Boston University.

The Minutewomen were unable to pick up a win vs. the Big Green, suffering a devastating 5-4 loss in overtime.

Another similarity between the Dartmouth disaster and the upcoming Siena game that UMass doesn't want to see occur – other than the final outcome – is another injury.

The Dartmouth loss also saw the loss of sophomore forward Erin Parker to injury after breaking her leg. She is expected to be out for at least four weeks.

Just as Dartmouth's stats weren't flattering entering the game against the Minutewomen, neither are the numbers for Siena.

In four games this year, the Saints have managed to get off just 17 shots while opponents have taken 119. Siena is averaging just over three shots per game and opponents have had four times as many penalty corner opportunities, 60-15.

The Saints are averaging less than a goal per game while opponents have hammered home just under five goals per game. All of Siena's four goals have come in the second half of their games. Junior Traci Baldwin leads Siena's offense with two goals on the season.

Holy Cross found the back of the net 10 times against the Saints in 10-2 blowout win earlier this month.

The Saints were able to hang tight against a Northeast Conference powerhouse – the Lock Haven Eagles – last Sunday, but Siena was not to win its first game, falling to the Eagles, 3-1. Lock Haven outshot the Saints, 29-2, the same margin the Huskies outshot the Minutewomen by Saturday.

Last year's Siena squad had an anemic 10 goals at season's end and went 1-13 overall, picking up its lone victory when it knocked off Robert Morris, 2-1.

Sienna was picked eighth out of nine teams in a preseason Northeast Conference coach's poll.

"Siena is a young team, and tactically they're working on different things," UMass coach Patty Shea said. "They're still in the process of developing their team. We understand the structures and styles they play in. They're trying to learn by baptism by fire.

"We'll play a different press in this game and we'll have more of an opportunity to use our team speed," Shea added. "We'll match up very well with this team."

There is still no news on whether the five players suspended for Saturday's game will be in action for the Minutewomen against Siena. Senior defender Kwylan Jaggassar, junior midfielder Kristina DoRasario, junior backfielder Paula Verma, junior forward Rachael Mervine, and sophomore forward Lauren Gillespie all missed Saturday's game against the Huskies due to a violation of team rules.

Shea said that it will be a "game-time decision" if they play or not Tuesday.

Wildcats are team to beat in the Atlantic 10

BY MIKE WALSH
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Wide receiver David Ball's third touchdown reception of the first half and 50th of his illustrious career – tying him with Jerry Rice for the all time 1-AA record – highlighted another successful weekend of Atlantic 10 football.

Ball's six-yard touchdown reception came with 2:43 left in the first half and increased New Hampshire's lead over Dartmouth to 35-0. The No. 1 Wildcats went on to a 56-14 victory and increased their perfect record to 3-0 on the young season. UNH quarterback Ricky Santos threw for over 300 yards on the day to go along with five touchdown passes in the route.

The rest of the A-10 combined to go 8-3 over the weekend with the only three losses coming at the hands of conference foes. All six nationally-ranked A-10 teams prevailed and will look to move up in this week's poll. The A-10 is by far the most represented of any 1-AA conference on the board.

A-10 Football

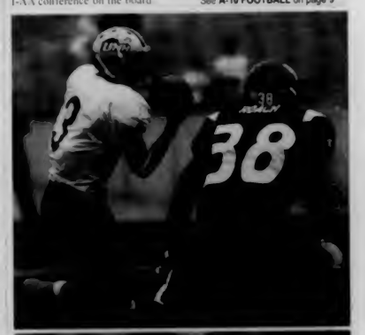
GUNNING FOR NEW HAMPSHIRE

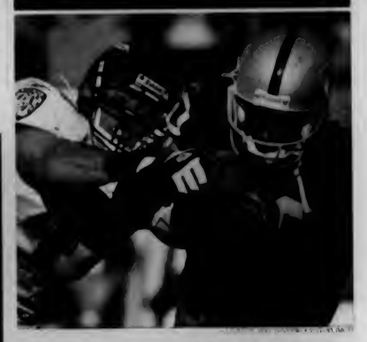
No. 7 Richmond (3-0) and No. 9 Massachusetts (3-1, 1-0 A-10) once again looked very impressive and have clearly established themselves as the two teams who have the strongest chances of upsetting New Hampshire.

Richmond improved to 3-0 with its 48-21 romp over Bucknell at home on Saturday. Although the visitors struck first with an early first-quarter touchdown run, the Richmond backfield responded as it barreled for 243 yards on just 37 carries and three scores to take complete control of the game.

Massachusetts scored on its first seven drives of the contest on its way to a 48-7 victory over Stony Brook to improve its record to 3-1. Sophomore quarterback and last week's conference Offensive Player of the Week Liam Coen was, once again, extremely efficient as he went 6-for-8 on his way to throwing for 177 yards and two touchdowns. UMass' only blemish came at the

See A-10 FOOTBALL on page 9





New Hampshire wide receiver David Ball (No. 3) tied Jerry Rice's all-time I-AA touchdown receptions record this weekend when he grabbed his 50th.

Minutemen top Eagles and Black Bears

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Massachusetts cross country teams ran strong on their new course Saturday morning. In the rainy conditions the men defeated Maine and Boston College and the women placed third behind the Eagles and the Black Bears.

The Minutemen placed first, Maine followed in second, and Boston College placed last. The Minutemen had three runners in the top five. Sophomore Jessie Regnier finished first overall and set the course record with a time of 25:11:00.

With downpours before the women's race, the condition of the course worsened. At some points on the course the mud became very thick and it proved to be a challenge for the runners to keep their footing.

Nevertheless, the Minutemen were able to get their best runners to run their best race.

Behind Regnier, junior Nils Fischer finished fourth overall with a time of 25:32:00, freshman Nicolai Naranjo finished fifth overall (25:42:00), freshman Andrew McCann placed 10th (26:04:00), and one second behind McCann was junior Ryan Durkin (26:05:00).

"This was only our second meet, but I think this team is showing that we have a lot of depth," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "We have maybe 10 or 11 people who can find their way into the top five at some point in the season."

O'Brien was surprised that his top runners ran a great race. He also noted that for the team to be successful it will depend on how the fifth runner can place.

The depth showed for the Minutemen, as five freshmen placed in the top 20. With a good mix of young talent, and good leadership from Durkin and Fischer, the team is in good shape if it can avoid any injuries.

The Minutewomen ran strong but fell short of victory. Boston College placed first in the meet with 31 points, Maine placed second with 38 points, and UMass finished third with 58 points.

Junior Christina Derosa continued to impress by placing second overall (18:33:00). BC senior Jessica Flinn set the new course record with a time of 18:21:00.

The women ran in harsh conditions as it started down pouring five minutes before the race started and continued throughout the contest.

"I think the girls ran the best they could with the conditions. Christina Derosa ran extremely well today and gave a great effort," UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said.

Freshman Lauren Liuzzo ran well again, placing 10th overall, second on the team (19:27:00). Junior Amber Sayer usually runs with Liuzzo but she battled the flu all week and finished 18th with a time of 19:59:00.

"Amber Sayer has had a fever, it was very gusty," LaFreniere said. "If the race was any longer I don't think she would have faired well."

Senior Cuisle Kierans finished 11th (19:33:00), and her younger sister, freshman Ellis Kierans, placed 13th (19:38:00).

LaFreniere noted that the team has too big of a space between Derosa and the rest of the pack. Derosa finished second and the next highest UMass runners placed 10th and 11th in the meet.

The cross country teams will he on the road at the Meet of Champions in New York, N.Y., this Saturday.

The Minutemen finished first in this weekend's meet, placing three runners in the top five to defeat Maine and Boston College.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

This week's stand-out athlete is sophomore runner Jesse Regnier. Competing in his first meet of the season Saturday, Regnier led all runners with a time of 25:11 defeating participants from Boston College and Maine, the other two schools that participated in Saturday's contest. Regnier was one of three Minutemen who placed in the top five at Saturday's meet.

Saturday's individual first place finish was the first collegiate win of Regnier's career.

Volleyball conference play in full swing

BY MICHAEL CHANDLER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

With conference play beginning last week, the Atlantic 10 West sent a clearly-received message to the East by winning seven of eight games. Dayton, St. Louis, and Xavier from the West now rest atop the A-10 with perfect conference records, only Temple salvaged a win in the East beating Duquesne 3-0.

Nationally-recognized Dayton and Xavier proved their A-10 dominance by easily dispatching George Washington and Charlotte. The two remain early favorites to compete for the West division title, reflecting preseason rankings. Temple and Charlotte stay the favorites in the East despite Charlotte going 0-2 against the West last week.

This trend appears also in the latest fan poll taken on the A-10 volleyball website.

A-10 Volleyball

According to the poll, Xavier, with 18.5% of the fan vote, and Dayton, with 17.5%, are slated to be the conference heavyweights. This coincides with the preseason rankings.

Despite being the only Eastern team with a conference win at this point, Temple received only five percent of the fan vote.

DIGGING DEEP

Next month is National Breast Cancer Awareness month, and A-10 volleyball does not plan to idly watch it pass. For the fourth consecutive year, a rapidly growing tradition started by A-10 volleyball dubbed "Dig for the Cure" plans to help raise at least $25,000 for breast cancer research. The program has raised an average of $12,000 per year in '03-'05 but now the top of net is set especially high.

Lisa Marston, head coach of Charlotte University Volleyball, annually dedicates a home match to raising as much money as possible and donating the proceeds to the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation. Last year, Marston's work caught the eye of each A-10 team, and even some teams nationwide. Participants hope to see the largest "Dig for the Cure" to date.

To raise the money, schools designated one home game in October to allow individual sponsors to pledge allotted amounts of money for every dig earned by their team. Individual donations are also encouraged. One hundred percent

See VOLLEYBALL on page 9

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

Football legend Jerry Rice had over 1,000 yards receiving in three consecutive seasons at Mississippi Valley State, and hauled in over 100 receptions in both his junior and senior campaigns.

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI. 72 LO: 52 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 2006

CriticalMASS cyclists participate in a day-long demonstration in Amherst aimed to fight for a more bicycle-friendly community, Friday, Sept. 22, 2006.

UMass employees claim shortage in pay

BY FRANK VITALE
COLLEGIAN STAFF REPORTER

As many as 1,700 former University of Massachusetts employees and 1,800 graduate students were left out of a package that paid $14.6 million in retroactive pay.

The $14.6 million is the last part of a set of retroactive pay raises laid out in the 2002 contracts, which also included $67 million already paid to about 7,000 former employees.

Governor Mitt Romney had vetoed the retroactive pay raises after the legislature closed its formal session on July 31st. Since a formal session and a two-thirds majority are required to overturn a gubernatorial veto, the legislature must either call a special session or wait until the new legislature begins this coming January.

Many former employees don't have that long to wait, especially retirees.

"Like everyone, they have been waiting for this money since '01 or '02 and they have to live off a pension," said Donna M. Johnson, president of the University Staff Association. "Every penny counts."

Graduate students who work for the University are affected as well.

"We've gotten into the habit of waiting for our checks," said Srinivas Lankala, president of the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO), referring to retroactive payments five to six years overdue. "But we've never had this level of complication."

If local lawmakers have their way, the GEO shouldn't have to worry much longer.

"We're very supportive of insuring the Commonwealth meets its financial obligations to the workers of UMass," said State Rep. Peter Kocot, D-Northampton.

Though workers have been waiting for about a month for the official date of the special session, lawmakers are confident the session will be called this fall, according to Rep. Ellen Story, D-Amherst.

"The House and Senate were told by the Speaker and Senate President that a session will occur," said Story, "just not the exact date."

If and when the legislature does meet, it's unlikely that an override will fail, since the legislature overturned Romney's attempt to use a line item veto on the back pay compensation for current employees.

The pay in question is already counted in the legislature's budget for 2006.

"The money's already appropriated," claimed Rep. Story. "It's there, it's just a matter of changing the language."

The president of the University Staff Association, Donna Johnson (left) and Srinivas Lankala, President of the Graduate Employment Organization.

UMass holds dedication ceremony for new track and field complex

BY ANNA DOTHANTES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Alumni, fans, and members of the administration joined the University of Massachusetts men's and women's Track and Field teams at the dedication of their $3.1 million track and field facility on Saturday.

One-hundred fifty attendees listened to speeches made by members of the administration, and watched the ribbon cutting ceremony. UMass president, Jack Wilson, Chancellor John V. Lombardi, UMass Trustee John Armstrong, Athletic Director John McCutcheon, alumnus and former team captain John Hunt, men's cross country and track and field coach Kenneth O'Brien, and women's cross country and track and field coach, Julie LaFreniere all participated in the ceremony, along with team members, Troyanah Evans and James.

The new track is located next to Rudd Field. It replaces the track program's old facility, which has been demolished to make room for a new central heating plant, which is now under construction, according to John Sinnet, Assistant Director for Media Relations of UMass Athletics.

The project was funded through bonds issued by the University of Massachusetts Building Authority, in connection with the central heating plant project.

"The need to replace the old track when the steam plant had to be located there, created an opportunity to not only create fine new facilities, but to locate it in a much more accessible area," said Chancellor Lombardi.

Construction on the new track began in April 2005 and was finished in mid-October 2005, according to Sinnet.

Although the dedication ceremony didn't take place until this past weekend, members of the team began practicing on the track, "pretty much as soon as it got cleared and they had some decent weather to be outside on it," said Sinnet. "They were itching to get on it."

In addition to the track itself, the new construction also consists of a separate facility for throwing events, located behind the football stadium.

"That's really big because when you're hosting meets, those events are the ones that take the longest to complete. Also, it gives the throwers a place to go out and practice," said Sinnet.

The complex includes a nine-lane, 400-meter synthetic surface track, a steeplechase water-jump area, long- and triple-jump areas, high-hump and pole vault areas, and a state-of-the-art timing system.

"I've seen quite a few tracks," said Sinnet. "And not a lot have separate throwing facilities, so that really makes it a special and unique place."

"The track is incredibly fast and the track surface is one of a kind," said junior Nathan Barksdale, who competes in the 200 and 400 meter sprints. "We're getting great new hurdles this year which will benefit our hurdlers a lot," he added.

Sophomore Mark Anderson, a hurdler and high jumper for UMass, predicts that the new facility will help the team's practice routine and will lead to better performance in competitions, ultimately gaining more recognition for the team.

"It's a cycle," said Anderson. "When you recruit better, you perform better. When you perform better, you recruit better," he continued. "When you have a better program, you have better opportunity to raise money from alumni who are more willing to support a team that succeeds, which leads to better scholarship endowments," he added. "All this leads to better recruiting and a better team."

Prior to the completion of the new track complex, the team practiced at Boyden athletic fields or inside the Curry Hicks Cage. In order to practice their jumps, they went to Amherst College or Smith College, according to Sinnet.

"Before the track was built, we had to run over to Amherst College at 6:30 in the morning, or five in the afternoon, to use their track," said Anderson. "It makes our job as student athletes easier because we don't have to worry about other facilities to schedule times."

The Amherst College facility, where the team often practiced, was far away and placed strains on the team because they couldn't all practice together.

"Since we have been practicing at our new track, it's a lot better. You can tell with practices because we have the entire team practicing together. It's just a better team atmosphere," said Barksdale.

"You go by it on the weekends or in the afternoons, and you see people from the community walking and jogging on it. You can tell that they're really enjoying having that kind of facility," said Sinnet.

The complex was designed by Clough, Harbor, & Associates and Paige Design Group and built by Clark Companies.

The first of three meets, which will be hosted on the new facilities in the upcoming season, will be held on March 31, 2007.

"The track program has been without a facility for a little over a decade, so to have something this nice really makes them feel proud," Sinnet added.

UMass president Jack Wilson (fourth from left), Chancellor John Lombardi (fifth from left), along with UMass officials and team members, participate in ribbon-cut ceremony, Sept. 23, 2006.

TOMORROW

Isenberg School of Management
Undergraduate Placement Service
Presents

ISENBERG
SOM
CAREER DAY
2006

All Students Are Cordially Invited to Attend!!
Date: Wednesday, September 27, 2006
Place: Mullins Center
Time: Begins at 12:00 Noon Ends at 5:00 PM

Acosta Sales & Marketing
Aetna
Aldi, Inc.
Alexander, Aronson, Finning & Co. PC
Ameriprise Financial
Babson Capital Management
BDO Seidman LLP
Berkshire Bank
Black & Decker
Blinds to Go
Boston Beer
C.H. Robinson Worldwide, Inc.
C&S Wholesale Grocers
Cambridge Associates LLC
Consolidated Graphics
Deloitte
Drug Enforcement Administration
Eli Lilly
EMC
Enterprise Rent-a-Car
Ercolini & Company LLP
Ernst & Young
Fastenal
Feeley & Driscoll
Forex Capital Markets LLC
Frito-Lay
General Electric
Gorton's
Grant Thornton, LLP
Gray Gray & Gray LLP
Hanover Insurance
The Hartford
The Hertz Corporation
Hyatt Hotels & Resorts
Investors Bank & Trust
Internal Revenue Service
John Hancock Boston Partners
Kohl's Department Stores
Kostin, Ruffkess & Co. LLC
KPMG
Landa & Altsher PC
Liberty Mutual
MassInnovation LLC
MassMutual
Meditech
Mellon Financial
Mesirow Financial Consulting
Millward Brown
Moriarty & Primack
Morris & Morris PC
Needel, Welch & Stone PC
Northwestern Mutual Financial Network
Novogradac & Company
O'Connor & Drew
PeoplesBank
Pepsi Bottling Group
PricewaterhouseCoopers
Protiviti
Radio Waves, Inc.
RSM McGladrey
Raytheon
Samet & Co PC
Sherwin-Williams
State Street Corporation
Talbot's
Target
Teradyne
TJX Companies
Travelers
UMass Army ROTC
United Technologies
United Parcel Service
Vitale, Caturano & Co.
Walgreen's
Walter & Shuffain PC
Wolf & Co. PC
Wolseley North America (Ferguson, Stock, Wolseley Canada)

For your convenience there will be a van leaving Hagis Mall to the Mullins Center every 20 minutes from 3:00pm to 5:00pm.

Some helpful hints: (1) Bring a supply of resumes with you to leave with company representatives you meet; (2) Dress appropriately if possible. This means tie and jacket for men; dress or blouse and skirt for women. (3) Speak with corporate representatives of interest to you and ask for a business card, if available.

Starbucks raises prices

BY JENNIFER METZ
THE OBSERVER (NOTRE DAME)

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Starbucks announced Thursday that coffee-drinkers nationwide will have to fork over an extra nickel for drinks bought at any of their 8,614 locations, including the LaFortune Student Center shop.

In the first price change since 2004, all drinks will cost an extra five cents and all pound bags of whole bean coffee will go up by fifty cents, David Prentkowski, Director of Food Services, said.

The increase — which Prentkowski said was "not unusual" — was necessary to cover increasing labor, product and fuel costs associated with the procurement of coffee beans.

As a licensed store, the LaFortune branch will follow the practices recommended by the company, Prentkowski said.

Analysts say that the price change — which is set to take place sometime this week — comes at a good time for the company because "the average price of gasoline has declined 16 percent" in the last month alone, according to Reuters. Though there are many economic pressures facing consumers, a decrease in gas prices always alleviates some of the pressure from consumer wallets.

In July, Starbucks posted its weakest monthly same-store sales increase since 2001, which it blames on the high demand for Frappuccino drinks that take a longer time to prepare, according to a Sept. 22 Reuters article. Customers are becoming unwilling to wait on long lines for these drinks, taking a toll on overall sales.

Notre Dame University freshman Courtney Ball said she isn't happy with the price increase on her tall vanilla latte, which already costs $3.00.

"It seems like [Starbucks] makes a significant profit ... I don't see why they need to raise their prices ... it's already 'designer coffee,'" she said.

While students may not be pleased with the price hike, those on Wall Street were pleasantly surprised, telling Reuters that the move "is sure to boost sales and earnings, but unlikely to spook customers who see a trip to the chain as an affordable luxury."

The company's management has also said that Starbucks stores are unlikely to be effected if the economy takes a turn for the worse.

"I don't see anything that indicates in the near future that Starbucks is going to be susceptible to the economy," chairman Howard Schultz told Reuters on Monday.

Pilot escapes from blimp crash unharmed

MANCHESTER-BY-THE-SEA, Mass. — A Hood blimp that regularly flies above Fenway Park crashed into a wooded area Tuesday when the pilot lost rudder control shortly after takeoff and tried to make an emergency landing on a nearby beach, authorities said.

Instead, the 90-foot-long blimp was blown inland and became stuck atop trees near an elementary school in this town about 25 miles north of Boston. It took two hours to rescue pilot Leigh Bradbury, who was not injured, from his perch about 30 feet above the ground, authorities said.

Robert Mezzetti, manager of Beverly Municipal Airport, said the blimp left there around 12:15 p.m. and lost rudder control minutes later.

Bradbury was doing "exposure flying" or recreational flying — and was not on a business run, said Mickey Wittman, director of client services for Lightship Group of Orlando, Fla., which owns the aircraft.

The white blimp emblazoned with the red Hood logo has become a fixture in the skies above Red Sox games since Chelsea-based Hood started renting advertising space from Lightship Group eight years ago. Lynne Bohan, a spokeswoman for the dairy food company, said the blimp had been scheduled to fly above the Red Sox game at Fenway Park on Tuesday night.

Wittman said blimp accidents sometimes happen, but "I've never known anyone to be hurt."

Associated Press

Morning-after pill angers Chileans

Students from Catholic high schools protest against government plan to freely distribute contraceptives to girls without parent authorization, Sept. 15, 2006.

BY EDUARDO GALLARDO
AP LATIN I PRESS

Chile began supplying morning-after pills to girls as young as 14 this week under a program that has created an uproar in the politically leftist but socially conservative country, which still outlaws all abortions and only legalized divorce two years ago.

The liberalized contraceptive policy is close to the heart of President Michelle Bachelet, a socialist physician who took office as Chile's first female president in March vowing to promote equality between men and women.

"Equality means that for a person who does not have choices, who does not have options, we have to give them these options," Bachelet told The Associated Press at the United Nations last week.

It also echoes a debate between reformers and conservatives across Latin America, where the Roman Catholic Church is a powerful force.

The program provides contraceptives — including the morning-after pill — to girls as young as 14 without notifying their parents. Until now, the age limit was 16, and the morning-after pill was given only to women who had been raped.

The government began handing out the pills this week after an appeals court lifted an injunction won by two conservative mayors and a Catholic parents association. Pablo Zalaquett, mayor of the middle-class Santiago suburb of La Florida, called Friday's ruling "a slap in the face of Chile's mothers and fathers" and said the court battle would continue.

Health Minister Maria Soledad Barria said free contraceptives would help reduce adolescent pregnancy, especially among the poor. Her ministry says women age 15 to 19 account for 17 percent of pregnancies nationwide and estimates that 32,000 women go to hospitals each year for complications from abortions, which are illegal in Chile.

The Catholic parents association says contraceptives encourage sexual promiscuity and sexually transmitted diseases among youths, and Catholic high school students protested in the capital, carrying balloons and Chilean flags.

But many younger Chileans say their parents' generation is out of touch — and that teenagers need medical support because they're already having sex.

"I would not use it, but I think it is a good idea to make it available at age 14, and without telling the parents," high school student Maria Jose Guzman said. "Many girls ... would be ashamed to tell them they had sex."

The morning-after pill contains the hormone levonorgestrel and prevents pregnancy by inhibiting ovulation or fertilization of an egg. To be effective, it must be taken within 72 hours of intercourse.

Religious leaders compare the pill to abortion and say it violates the right to life. A statement by Chile's Catholic bishops equates the program to "policies imposed by totalitarian regimes to establish state control over the intimate lives of citizens."

Despite Friday's court ruling, Mayor Marta Ehlers of Lo Barnechea, an upper-class district in Santiago, said her municipality will not implement the program, "even if it means that I have to go to jail."

Chile's struggle over contraception and abortion is echoed around Latin America.

In neighboring Peru, a nonprofit Catholic organization won an injunction blocking free distribution of the morning-after pill in public clinics in September 2005. Peru's Congress is now debating whether to let pharmacies sell the pills without a prescription to women over 18.

In Paraguay, church leaders have repeatedly condemned the availability of the morning-after pill and opposed efforts to distribute donated contraceptives. Argentina's leftist government is debating whether to liberalize laws that make abortion a crime in most circumstances.

And in Nicaragua, conservatives raised an uproar in 2004 when a women's group arranged an abortion for an 11-year-old rape victim.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration began allowing nonprescription sales of the morning-after pill to adult women in August. Girls 17 and younger still need a prescription.

Until now, Chile has been considered a socially conservative nation. Seventy-five percent of the population calls itself Catholic and divorce only became legal in 2004.

The morning-after pill became legal in Chile in 2002 after a Supreme Court battle, and two-pill packages sell in pharmacies for $22. But the government says that price is beyond the reach of poorer women. It noted that 3,954 packages of the pills were sold over 12 months in five affluent Santiago districts, and just 344 in five poorer ones.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 17

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherri Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jamison Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Virginia Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPIES EDITOR Sean Durham
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Rob Greenfield
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pyatt
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Theresa Barba
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Sneiller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Deliantis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT SPORTS Danny Picard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jon Pelland
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Mermick
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCRIBE IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED CONTINUOUSLY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED FIRST PLACE FOR GENERAL EXCELLENCE THREE TIMES SINCE 1990 BY THE NEW ENGLAND NEWSPAPER ASSOCIATION. CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Belliveau

COPY EDITOR
Mathesa Hughes

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sean Duram, Tiffany Van Langen

The Office of Jewish Affairs would like to wish all Jewish students

Happy New Year!

Shanah tovah!

We also extend a warm greeting to our Muslim brothers and sisters as you begin the month-long celebration of Ramadan...

Ramadan mubarak!

If you will be missing classes because of the holidays...

Whatever your religion or level of observance, the University's policy concerning days of religious observance guarantees that "any student [whether Jewish, Muslim, Hindu, Bahai, Christian, Buddhist, or any other religion] who is unable to attend classes or to participate in any examination, study or work requirement because of religious observance is to be provided with an opportunity to make up the examination, study or work requirement." However, it is the student's responsibility to notify your professor at least a week in advance.

Most professors are respectful of this policy, but if you do encounter a problem, you can call the department head, the Ombuds Office (545-0867), or the Office of Jewish Affairs (545-9642). We're happy to help.

May this be a sweet and peaceful year for us all!!

For more information: www.umass.edu/jewish or 545-9642

Thursday, September 28, 2006
Sustainable Seafood Dinner
Enjoy the Harvest from the Sea...
Make Choices for Healthy Oceans!
Menu Featuring:
Wild Salmon with Thai Green Curry Sauce
Battered Pacific Cod with Tartar Sauce
Chicken with New England Cranberry Stuffing
Harvest Stuffed Acorn Squash (local)
Nature Burger
Falafel Pocket Sandwich
Fresh Carrots (local)
Fresh summer squash (local)
Rice Pilaf
Cole Slaw (local)
Boston Cream Pie
Pura Vita Coffee
(Fair Trade and Organic)
Learn about Sustainable Seafood
Sampling by Australis Aquaculture
Sustainable Seafood DVDs will be shown in all DCs.
www.umass.edu/diningservices
All DCs from 5-9pm

UMass police log

Tuesday Sept 19

On Tuesday night, there was a police call to the Observatory building which houses WMUA and Nextel's cell tower. A follow-up investigation revealed a breaking-and-entering incident, as well as vandalism to the premises in the form of cut wires. There are no suspects at this time.

Later that night, UMass police responded to a suspicious call in Webster Hall. An individual in the dorm appeared to be intoxicated and incoherent due to the consumption of Salbia, an over the counter hallucinogen. Emergency services were called and the individual was transferred to Cooley Dickinson Hospital due to breathing difficulties.

Wednesday Sept 20

On Wednesday morning, officers gained entry into a room in the John Quincy Adams Hall where less than a gram of marijuana was confiscated for processing. No arrest was made.

Later that night, Thomas Dacey was arrested and charged with assault and battery in Grayson Hall. Dacey was apprehended after physically assaulting his ex-girlfriend and fleeing the scene. According to police, Dacey shoved and choked his ex-girlfriend before leaving the scene of the fight. Charges are pending.

Thursday Sept 21

On Thursday night, Aldo Combariza was arrested in Dickinson Hall after a warrant for his arrest was found for violating the terms of a restraining order. Combariza was transferred to the Hampshire County house of corrections, and charges were formally filed.

Friday Sept 22

On Friday morning, Thomas Sirois was arrested due to an attempt at solicitation of a college age male on Amity St. Sirois had arranged a time and date to meet such individual and was apprehended by police and charged with sexual conduct for fee after having driven down from Great Barrington, MA.

—Compiled By Michelle Osorio

Iraq War considered 'cause celebre' for Islamic extremists

By Katherine Shrader and Jennifer Loven
Associated Press

President Bush gestures while speaking at a news conference with President Hamid Karzai of Afghanistan, Sept. 26, 2006.

WASHINGTON — The war in Iraq has become a "cause celebre" for Islamic extremists, breeding deep resentment of the U.S. that probably will get worse before it gets better, federal intelligence analysts conclude in a report at odds with President Bush's portrayal of a world growing safer.

In the bleak report, declassified and released Tuesday on Bush's orders, the nation's most veteran analysts conclude that despite serious damage to the leadership of al-Qaida, the threat from Islamic extremists has spread both in numbers and in geographic reach.

Bush and his top advisers have said the formerly classified assessment of global terrorism supported their arguments that the world is safer because of the war. But more than three pages of stark judgments warning about the spread of terrorism contrasted with the administration's glass-half-full declarations.

"If this trend continues, threats to U.S. interests at home and abroad will become more diverse, leading to increasing attacks worldwide," the document says. "The confluence of shared purpose and dispersed actors will make it harder to find and undermine jihadist groups."

The intelligence assessment, completed in April, has stirred a heated election-season argument over the course of U.S. national security in the years following the 2003 U.S.-led invasion of Iraq.

Virtually all assessments of the current situation were bad news. The report's few positive notes were couched in conditional terms, depending on successful completion of difficult tasks ahead for the U.S. and its allies. In one example, analysts concluded that more responsive political systems in Muslim nations could erode support for jihadist extremists.

Bush ordered a declassified section of the secret report released after several days of criticism sparked by portions that were leaked to the news media over the weekend.

At a news conference, Bush said critics who believe the Iraq war has worsened terrorism are naive and mistaken, noting that al-Qaida and other groups have found inspiration to attack for more than a decade. "My judgment is, if we weren't in Iraq, they'd find some other excuse, because they have ambitions," he said.

The unclassified document said that increased role of Iraqis in opposing al-Qaida in Iraq might lead the terror group's veteran foreign fighters to refocus their efforts outside that country.

While Iran and Syria are the most active state sponsors of terror, many other countries will be unable to prevent their resources from being exploited by terrorists.

The underlying factors that are fueling the spread of the extremist Muslim movement outweigh its vulnerabilities. These factors are entrenched grievances and a slow pace of reform in home countries, rising anti-U.S. sentiment and the Iraq war.

Groups "of all stripes" will increasingly use the Internet to communicate, train, recruit and obtain support.

Pakistani President Pervez Musharraf, a U.S. ally in Washington for a Thursday meeting with Bush, found himself drawn into the political dispute. He was asked in a CNN interview about an assertion in his new book that he opposed the invasion of Iraq because he feared that it would only encourage extremists and leave the world less safe.

"I stand by it, absolutely," Musharraf said. "It has made the world a more dangerous place."

White House homeland security adviser Frances Fragos Townsend took issue with one of the report's most damning conclusions: that the number of jihadists has increased.

"I don't think there's any question that there's an increase in rhetoric," she said. But "I think it's difficult to count the number of true jihadists that are willing to commit murder or kill themselves in the process."

The intelligence assessment also lays out weaknesses of the movement that analysts say must be exploited if its spread is to be slowed. For instance, they note that extremists want to see the establishment of strict Islamic governments in the Arab world — a development they say would be unpopular with most Muslims.

The report also argues that the loss of key al-Qaida leaders — Osama bin Laden, Ayman al-Zawahri and Abu Musab al-Zarqawi — in "rapid succession" would probably cause the group to fracture. Al-Zarqawi was killed in June, but the top two al-Qaida leaders have remained elusive for years.

WalMart to change health plan for new hires

By Marcus Kabel
Associated Press

Wal-Mart Stores Inc. will stop offering traditional low-deductible health plans for new hires next year in favor of low-premium plans with higher deductibles, a move it says will put more health care money and choices in the hands of its more than 1.3 million U.S. workers.

Union-backed Wal-Mart critics, who made the change public Tuesday based on internal company documents, claimed the nation's largest private employer was pushing the rising costs of health care onto its workers.

Wal-Mart confirmed to The Associated Press that it will drop traditional plans for new hires from January 1. Those plans offer annual deductibles as low as $350 for a yearly premium of $1,043 for single person coverage.

New hires from next year will only be able to sign up for one of two plans that have premiums as low as $11 a month but annual deductibles starting at $1,000 for most medical expenses as well as separate deductibles for special events, like outpatient treatment, and for prescriptions.

One of the new plans also includes a health savings account, which allows an employee to put money aside tax-free in a special account reserved for health costs.

Wal-Mart's current employees will still have the option of coverage under the traditional plans, according to the company benefits guide for 2007.

Only 7 percent of companies that provide health coverage currently offer high-deductible plans with a savings option, according to an annual survey released Tuesday by the Kaiser Family Foundation, a health care research organization.

WalkerjpWalMart.com said the change meant the retailer was providing worse health coverage because it would be more expensive.

"This sends a terrible message to every responsible corporation that is trying to do the right thing for their employees," said Paul Blank, campaign director for WalkerjpWalMart.com.

Wal-Mart spokesman Dan Fogleman said the change was aimed at helping employees, which it calls associates, after internal surveys showed that half of all workers with company insurance used up less than their full deductible last year.

This meant they were paying more in premiums than they were getting out in benefits, he said.

"They're paying more than they need to because they're buying more insurance than they need," Fogleman said.

Fogleman said Wal-Mart is also trying to help push down the rising costs of health care by leaving more cash in the pockets of its employees. Lower premiums mean more money left to cover the deductibles, the argument goes, and employees will be smart consumers of health care and go where prices are lower.

"The Value Plan meets the needs of the bulk of our associates," he said.

The Value Plan is a new offering Wal-Mart introduced late last year under fire from unions and other critics, who claim Wal-Mart offers too little health coverage to its workers and pushes them off into taxpayer-supported care.

It starts at $23 a month and includes three doctors visits and three prescriptions for a copay before the annual deductible starting at $1,000 kicks in.

The plan is available for $11 a month in a limited number of areas where Wal-Mart has struck cost-cutting deals with local health care providers. The company says it plans to expand availability of the $11 premium to 40 percent of its work force by the start of next year.

Bin Laden rumors found false

By Paul Haven
Associated Press

He was blown up in the caves of Tora Bora. He was on dialysis and dying of kidney disease. He was in the hands of Pakistani intelligence and about to be turned over to the United States. Rumors of Osama bin Laden's death or capture go back years, and they have always proved greatly exaggerated.

The latest came Saturday, when a leaked French intelligence document citing a "usually reliable" source said the Saudi secret service was convinced the 52-year-old al-Qaida terror chief had died of typhoid last month in Pakistan.

Officials from Riyadh to Paris to Washington rushed to insist they had nothing to substantiate the report, but not before news of it reached every corner of the globe and renewed the debate about why the world's largest dragnet has failed to get its man.

"There has been a grave failure five years after 9/11 that the true leaders of the attacks are still free, and that they are still alive," said Rohan Gunaratna, head of terrorism research at Singapore's Institute of Defense and Strategic Studies.

Gunaratna cited comments by bin Laden's no. 2, Ayman al-Zawahri, released on the fifth anniversary of the attacks, as evidence the French report was erroneous.

"Ayman al-Zawahri issued a statement on Sept. 11 in which he specifically refers to Osama bin Laden being alive," Gunaratna says. "There is no reason for al-Zawahri to lie, since he wants to keep his credibility within the movement."

A Pakistani counterterrorism official with intimate knowledge of the hunt also dismissed the French report, saying nothing was known about bin Laden's health or location. He spoke on condition of anonymity, citing the sensitivity of the matter.

The denial was echoed by a purported spokesman for the Taliban, the former Afghan regime that sheltered bin Laden after the 9/11 attacks. He also asked not to be named.

The French report is not the first to allude to bin Laden suffering from a life-threatening illness.

For years, intelligence services took seriously assessments that bin Laden might be suffering from kidney disease, and there were even reports he was forced to lug a dialysis machine from one mountain hideout to another.

But in 2003, Amer Aziz, bin Laden's former doctor in Afghanistan, shot down the reports. He told The Associated Press he gave bin Laden a complete physical in 1999, and saw him again in November 2001 while he was on the run from U.S. forces, and found no sign of illness on either occasion.

"If you are on dialysis, you have a special look. I didn't see any of that," Aziz told a reporter at his office in Lahore, Pakistan following his release from U.S. custody.

The latest video featuring fresh footage of bin Laden came out in 2004, just before the U.S. presidential elections. In it he appeared healthy and relaxed, particularly for a man who was believed to be hiding in the rugged mountains between Pakistan and Afghanistan, or possibly in Afghanistan itself, in the remote, forested eastern province of Nuristan.

The U.S. has conducted hundreds of search-and-seizure operations in the region but has been stonewalled by an increasingly unfriendly local population.

A number of audiotapes of the terror leader have come out since the 2004 video, the latest in June, and a video that featured what appears to be older footage of bin Laden was released in September.

The lack of film of the terror chief since 2004 has further muddied the waters. His decision to appear only on tape could be his way of heightening his mystique, or denying his pursuers visuals that might reveal his whereabouts. Or it could be an effort to hide his state of health.

Paul Wilkinson of the Centre for the Study of Terrorism and Political Violence at the University of St. Andrews in Scotland said the latest report of bin Laden's death could prompt his inner circle to advise him to deliver proof he is alive and healthy.

He speculated that the French report may have been leaked to shake the branches and illicit just such a response from the terror leader, giving the intelligence community a chance to home in on "chatter" among terrorists.

"It does create psychological pressure on the people and operatives" close to bin Laden, Wilkinson said. "There will be an expectation that he make some sort of appearance."

The years of false hope and genuine close calls have contributed to the aura that bin Laden enjoys among his followers. They have also added to the frustration of those charged with bringing him to justice.

In 1998, following the bombing of two U.S. embassies in Africa, the U.S. launched 62 Tomahawk cruise missiles at two al-Qaida training camps in Afghanistan. It was believed bin Laden was at one of them meeting with several of his top men, but left shortly before the missiles struck.

Following the Sept. 11 attacks and the fall of the Taliban, Afghan militiamen fighting on behalf of the United States felt certain they had surrounded bin Laden at Tora Bora.

Villagers reported seeing him hike into the mountains, and accounts of devastating air strikes on the caves prompted rumors that bin Laden was dead.

He wasn't.

In the end, one of the Afghan warlords the United States was relying on for ground operations betrayed the others, Afghan fighters told the Associated Press, and bin Laden escaped into Pakistan.

In 2003, Pakistani forces raided the village of Lattaka, near the border with Afghanistan, on intelligence that bin Laden might be hiding there. In 2004, U.S. Lt. Gen. David Barno said from Afghanistan that he expected to bring bin Laden to justice that year, and Pakistani intelligence officials described him as being boxed in, but he was never captured.

Since then, the trail of the world's most wanted man has gone cold, but that hasn't stopped the rumors.

An undated picture of Osama bin Laden. A French intelligence memo suggested the al Qaeda leader might have died of typhoid.

UDRIVE
Anytime.
YOUR FILES
Anywhere.

Upload your files to UDrive, then access them from wherever you have an Internet connection, on-campus or off. No need to save your files to disk, CD-ROM or USB Drive. Use your 250 MB of UDrive space instead.

STORE any type of file from papers to photos.

SHARE files with individuals or groups.

COLLABORATE on group projects.

Office of Information Technologies oit

http://udrive.oit.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Student credit

Andrew Freeman

If college life could be summed up in one word, it would be responsibility. Students are exhorted to drink responsibly, drive responsibly and work responsibly. This discussion of responsibility focuses largely on drugs and alcohol, ignoring another problem – financial irresponsibility, specifically the misuse of credit cards.

You probably have a credit card, like most students. In 2004, 72 percent of college students in the Northeast had credit cards, according to a 2005 Nellie Mae study. The average student has around four cards, and $1,850 in credit card debt. Of those with credit cards, 20 percent have debt of over $3,000, and 5 percent have debts exceeding $7,000.

Credit cards are a right of passage in our society. There is an implicit message – your credit card gives you the power to buy whatever you want, with no consequences. This power is illusory – once you start using a credit card, you put yourself at risk. Companies can change the terms of your card at will. Any and all pretexts are employed to raise interest rates, and the slightest misstep can lead to disaster.

At their worst, credit cards foster carelessness. When you pay in cash, you see the money leaving your hands, something one can lose track of when paying in credit. Get into the habit of using a credit card, and you can quickly accumulate debt. As long as you pay the bills on time and every time, this is fine. But most college students, and most Americans in general, do not pay the full balance of the bill. The Nellie Mae study found that only 21 percent of students paid off all cards every month, while 19 percent of students pay less than the minimum balance.

The reasons given for credit card use are convenience, necessity, and the desire to build up a credit rating. If you have a credit card, you can make a purchase without running to a bank. However, you end up paying more later on for your purchase, making that added convenience costly. Credit cards are necessary for making purchases online or over the phone, although most necessities for college are available in real life.

The biggest reason for having a credit card is to build a credit record. Establishing a history of good credit means the rates at which you borrow for future purchases will be lower. Alternatively, students who develop a history of bad credit set themselves up for failure, with consequences like higher interest rates or difficulty getting loans.

To financial firms, a bad credit score is seen as a risk for embezzlement, and other companies seem to view debt as a sign of dishonesty or poor character.

Bad credit can also affect your future employment increasingly, employers check credit reports of applicants, whether you apply to an investment bank or a retailer. The Boston Globe reported the story of LaToya Horton, who was denied a full-time clerical job because her employer discovered she had $18,000 in deferred student loans. To financial firms, a bad credit score is seen as a risk for embezzlement, and other companies seem to view debt as a sign of dishonesty or poor character.

The value of credit cards is dubious. Paying bills with credit cards results in larger payments later on, and the interest is so high that it is unwise to pay any substantial amount with a credit card. For inexpensive purchases, paying in cash also makes more sense, as it is always less expensive than paying with credit. Moreover, credit cards are as much a path to bad credit as they are to good, and the former can cost you both money and employment. For all this, Visa, MasterCard and their ilk are fixtures of our economy, and as long as we choose to tolerate them, we must use them responsibly.

Several actions can be taken to reduce the danger of credit cards. First, read the disclosure – the fine print that tells you what the policies of the company are. According to a 2006 Braun Research survey, one-third of consumers cannot understand this legalese; this gives card issuers more power over them. Study the terms of your credit card every month – because they can change every month – and you will know how to avoid fees and falling into worse debt.

Second, if you get into debt, call your company to negotiate a lower rate: a 2002 MASSPIRG study found that 56 percent of customers who called were able to lower their interest rate, averaging a reduction of over one-third. More detailed advice can be found online, at sites like www.bankrate.com or at local credit counseling agencies, like the Credit Counseling Service of Massachusetts in Springfield.

UMass can do more to help students handle debt responsibly. The University could hire a financial advisor to provide credit counseling and advice to students. Students at Orientation should be informed of the dangers of credit cards, and instructed in how to deal with them. Crippling student debt has consequences: Indiana University administrator John Simpson declared "We lose more students to credit card debt than academic failure," and debt may affect UMass students just as badly. Nobody benefits when students begin their life with substantial debt, and it is the responsibility of both students and society to avoid that end.

Andrew Freeman is a Collegian columnist.

?
This could be you!

Become a columnist!
Stop by our office in the Campus Center basement today!

Or send an e-mail to: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Incumbency is the enemy

Michael Dennis

In today's political climate, there are plenty of excuses for not participating. "There's no real choice." "My vote doesn't actually count." "The candidates are all the same." Perhaps one could argue that it is our duty as citizens to register to vote, but certainly we are not required to participate. We can't be forced to vote, so therefore, we must be convinced that it's worth it and that our voices will count.

The reason why voters are so apathetic in America today is because politicians do such a frightfully atrocious job of keeping the attention of the voting public, and giving them hope that things can and will get better. It's not just individual politicians who are at fault, either – they have simply learned to act the way they do as a result of our deeply flawed system. The dog trainer that is American democracy has taught its loyal, obedient politicians to roll over and play dead whenever it sees fit.

The key to understanding this notion of a troubled political climate is to distance oneself from the temptation to place blame upon any one individual or group. A small child in a candy store would not turn her nose up at an offer of free sweets. So why should politicians resist when our government, due to its lack of regulation against corruption, hands them the key to the entire candy store?

One's conscience only goes so far, and as we've seen, time and time again, most politicians are running on empty when it comes to morality. We can despise someone like George Bush, but do we blame him for being who he is, or do we blame our democracy for allowing him to be?

In this sense, the real enemy is not the Left or the Right, nor is it voter apathy. It's incumbency. Our democracy is only a stone's throw away from a monarchy – except instead of one old white male king, we have a bunch of old white male (some female) senators.

Our democracy is only a stone's throw away from a monarchy – except instead of one old white male king, we have a bunch of old white male (some female) senators

But much like with a monarchy, only death can take the throne away from our venerable rulers. (Just look at Strom Thurmond – with all due respect to the elderly, what could this man have possibly contributed in his later years, other than pushing for the Civil Rights Act to be repealed?) Incumbency forces politicians to play it straight and avoid controversy, or else risk losing their seat. There's a reason why very few in the Senate, including supposed Liberals, like John Kerry, bothered to speak up against going to war in Iraq.

The sad reality is that incumbency is as bad as it has ever been. In recent years, the incumbency rating has hovered around 90 percent, meaning that in every election cycle, nine out of 10 senators and congressmen are reelected. In many cases candidates run completely unopposed, and the voting process becomes a mere formality. Even in offices where there are term limits, such as governor's races, it's oftentimes hard to break a long streak of rule by only one party.

Perhaps there is hope on the horizon. Voters in Connecticut made a huge statement by ousting longtime Democratic Sen. Joe Lieberman, who lost out to upstart Ned Lamont in the recent primary. Citizens in the Constitution State proved it is possible to uproot and overthrow the king (err, senator – if you're displeased with his results and feel as though he's out of touch.

And in Massachusetts, a huge win for grassroots politics was chalked up when Deval Patrick triumphed over his more politically seasoned opponents in the Democratic Gubernatorial Primary. Patrick showed that a fresh face can score a victory even in the face of someone like Tom Reilly, who has a deep base of cronies – err, supporters.

The apathy of voters is a direct result of the complacency of politicians. The complacency of politicians is born from our democracy, which embodies a shady, back-alley dealer much more so than a noble, fair judge of character. Our election process itself is a victim of blind negligence in a number of ways, including a lack of consistency in the actual act of voting, such as with the use of electronic voting machines.

It's astonishing that these machines are actually used in elections with monumental implications (i.e. in the state of Ohio during the 2004 Presidential Election), despite the fact it is universally acknowledged this is a volatile and unreliable technology.

It's impossible to achieve perfection with government, but there's still a lot more that could be done in this country. The voting process itself must be standardized. Either through term limits or finance reform, the incumbency rate must be drastically slashed.

Though we love to scapegoat others, we can't place blame on voters, or even our politicians, when it is our system that enables them to act the fool. Apathy is a big problem in America, but it's not the voters who are apathetic, it's our entire democracy. And until there is a wave of fundamental and structural change in our system, it'll just be more of the same.

Michael Dennis is a Collegian columnist

Extremism

Jackie Hai

Two weeks ago, George W. Bush spoke to the nation in a televised address on the fifth anniversary of the September 11th attacks. For 13 million viewers tuned in to ABC that night, the speech took place in the middle of the network's airing of its controversial mini-series, "The Path to 9/11." The juxtaposition sent an unmistakable message to the same tune that's been played since the original attacks: Islamic extremism is the single greatest threat to civilization today.

The people who send this message are forgetting – or intentionally omitting – something that should be obvious. Rarely does major conflict arise where there is only one extreme; rather, the root of struggle usually grows between two extremes. Case in point: Christian versus Islamic fundamentalism, that centuries-old battle which has once again broken out to dominate the world stage.

Our administration has done their best to spin it differently. Said Bush in his recent address, "We have learned that they [the enemy] are evil and kill without mercy – but not without purpose. We have learned that they form a global network of extremists who are driven by a perverted vision of Islam – a totalitarian ideology that hates freedom, rejects tolerance, and despises all dissent."

But this line of thought is flawed in its logic, so much so that Osama bin Laden himself once retorted in a televised speech, "[Bush claims] that we hate freedom. If so, then let him explain to us why we don't strike, for example, Sweden?"

What we really have here is a battle of ideologies. Even the rhetoric is the same. In the book "American Theocracy," author and political commentator Kevin Phillips quotes professor of religion Bruce Lincoln from the University of Chicago: Lincoln analyzed speeches given by Bush and bin Laden and noted, "Both men construct a Manichaean struggle, where Sons of Light confront Sons of Darkness, and all must enlist on one side or another, without possibility of neutrality, hesitation, or middle ground."

Lincoln also draws attention to the frequent double-coding in Bush's speeches. Biblical allusions that speak to his Christian base but would generally go unnoticed by the uninitiated. The religious overtones of his speeches range from subtle (speaking of "hills to climb" and "seeing the valley below" during the 2004 RNC) to hitting us over the head with its blatancy (for the last 9/11 anniversary, he spoke of Americans uniting on their knees in prayer).

Here in Amherst, hotbed of liberalism and secular education, we're often oblivious to just how much of this country is affected by Christian fundamentalism.

Here in Amherst, hotbed of liberalism and secular education, we're often oblivious to just how much of this country is affected by Christian fundamentalism. Yet in a 2004 Newsweek poll, 55 percent of a national sample is reported to believe that the Bible is literally accurate. A 2002 CNN-Time poll found that 59 percent of Christians in America believe the events in the Book of Revelation will come to pass, among born-again, fundamentalist and evangelical groups, 77 percent believed the same.

Let's return to ABC's "Path to 9/11" for a moment. In a revealing story by Max Blumenthal in The Nation, it turns out that director David Cunningham is the son of Loren Cunningham, founder of the evangelical group Youth with a Mission (YWAM). David Cunningham, in turn, helped found The Film Institute (TFI), an organization whose mission statement claims dedication to "a Godly transformation and revolution TO and THROUGH the Film and Television industry." This is the group that made an intentionally misleading film to blame the Clinton administration for the September 11th attacks.

For all its finger-pointing, "Path to 9/11" ignored the broader context of the so-called war on terror. Yes, bin Laden was planning and executing acts of terrorism before September 11, 2001 – most notably the 1993 bombing of the World Trade Center and the 2000 attack on the USS Cole. The difference between then and now is this: pre-9/11, bin Laden represented a small, fringe group of extremists without mass support throughout the Middle East.

After 9/11, all-out invasions and botched occupations of Afghanistan and Iraq have changed that demographic. We're beginning to see that now; a National Intelligence Estimate disclosed to the public last weekend concludes that the war in Iraq has "helped spawn a new generation of Islamic radicalism and that the overall terrorist threat has grown since the Sept. 11 attacks," according to The New York Times. Rather than defeat bin Laden's army, our administration's actions have played a key role in creating it.

Each extreme fuels the other in this conflict. However, extremism, by nature, is unlikely to ever catch on with the masses. Both Bush and bin Laden represent the far and opposing ends, not the majority of the world, but they try their best to drag everyone else into their fight. The question is, how long will the middle majority stand for it?

Jackie Hai is a Collegian columnist

ATTENTION, PLEASE! THE PRESIDENTS OF THE U.S. AND IRAN WERE BOTH FOUND WANDERING IN THE AISLES! WILL THEIR MOTHERS PLEASE PICK THEM UP AT THE FRONT DESK?

Decline in literary skills

Luke Bloomfield

I am compelled to address the issue of writing as it exists here at UMass and in college in general. Ultimately, I cannot truly attest to the overall quality (which I am about to criticize) of writing here at UMass and elsewhere, so if you pass by me on campus and by some chance recognize me, please, tell me to my face that I am full of it and should be allowed to write for neither the Collegian nor any other publication, ever. And as a side-note, this goes for any column I ever write.

Nevertheless, I have an impression that the quality of writing is decreasing. This impression derives itself primarily from my own observations, which are arguably incredible, though I have been witness to other's criticisms of the current status of writing as well. Nevertheless, like everything else, this should be taken with a grain of salt.

In any case, it occurred to me that maybe my impression is not wholly without evidential support. If there is in fact a diminishing quality in University writing, could it directly, or indirectly, correlate with the affirmed popularity of such things as IM, Facebook, text messaging and anything else that demands efficiency over quality? Could it be the case that you find yourself writing sentences as brief and bland as something you wrote on your friend's Facebook wall (henceforth Facebook is the new paradigm) earlier in the evening?

I'm not suggesting that grammar and syntax is being compromised by Facebook. If you are writing at the college level, it is assumed that you have a grasp on the basic mechanics of writing. Rather, I'm concerned with esthetic and integrity. There was a time when anyone who wrote to be read made it paramount that their writing be beautiful, elegant. Writing was a craft, not merely a means to a degree or a job. Writing was once intrinsically valuable.

Pretension is an issue for me. There is no doubt a certain style of writing that is arrogantly convoluted (believe me, I'm personally familiar with it) and if you are reading this right now and loath me as a hypocrite, great. Nevertheless, I feel obliged to draw a line between ostentatious writing and a developed esthetic. This line, I am sure, is often blurred at times, even erased. I ask, however, is that always such a bad thing? So what if your style is accused of being pretentious? A voice is a voice, and if it is consistent, then it is my belief that it is an achievement. Further, if you clearly get your point across, why should you suffer criticism? What one college professor might call showy, someone like, say, Cormac McCarthy, might call a developing style.

Tying this back to Facebook, there is usually nothing that can be called pompous about writing on someone's wall in terms of vocabulary use and syntax. This style transfers itself to college paper writing. I get the impression that a college paper must be accessible to a 16-year-old. Between Facebook writing habits and professors who come down on students who test the boundaries of esthetic, University writing is being tailored to some principle that puts drab accessibility above style.

But 10-year-olds are not reading college papers, so why can one not write it with a flourish? Why is it necessary to be utilitarian about writing a college paper when, in fact, writing is a craft and should be treated as such? No one criticized Jackson Pollock for being inaccessible to a majority of people. I believe that in writing a college paper, one should be allowed to experiment with interesting vocabulary and worthy stretches of syntactic breath. Would college papers not be more fun if one was given room to exert a certain degree of affectation? I think it would. So screw you Facebook, and screw every instructor who lowers a grade because the style is "too pretentious."

College is a great opportunity to explore the possibilities of self-definition. The most prevalent opportunity to do so is in writing insofar as you attend class and do the work (which is what school is about, right?). That established integrity should be foremost in communicating your point through writing. There are many ways to develop a consistent, smart voice – that should go without saying. However, don't discount any method of developing your voice through flourish and a tasteful dose of affectation. You would be steering the principle of writing back in the right direction.

Thus, I urge you to think about using an interesting word once in a while in writing a paper. Spice it up. Also, think about phrasing. Is there a more interesting way to explain global market flux or Wittgenstein's "Tractatus?" I think so. Do this out of principle or rebellion or whatever, but don't be surprised if your papers are returned with red ink everywhere. Systems don't change overnight.

Luke Bloomfield is a Collegian columnist

WRITE SUBMISSIONS FOR THE ED/OP PAGE!
(650 WORD LIMIT)

Pick your own topics, and get your writing published!

Send submissions to: editorial@dailycollegian.com, or go to: dailycollegian.com.

All for nothing?

Michael Cartwright

Today, thousands of overambitious business majors will be dressed to impress, holding their recently revised resumes tightly in hand at the Mullins Center, during the Isenberg School of Management's annual career fair.

Representatives from Pepsi and General Electric will also be present, promoting themselves and pretending to focus on recruiting new employment.

Meanwhile, I, a mere journalism major, will be somewhere inside Bartlett Hall, waiting for bricks of the ancient building to collapse around me like Indiana Jones during the closing moments of "The Last Crusade." I'd love to think of my journalism degree as the Holy Grail, but this analogy becomes laughable when subjected to stories of Isenberg students and their $70,000 starting salaries.

Last week, Doug Berthuaume donated $5 million to the Isenberg School of Management. This will allow SOM to construct more state-of-the-art junk and further widen the gap between itself and everyone else.

If buildings had a blue-book value, SOM would be the equivalent of a 2006 Porsche Carrera while Bartlett would be somewhere in the neighborhood of an '82 Honda Civic. Whenever I set foot inside Isenberg Palace, I can't help but think that they're the Jetsons, and we're the Flintstones, and that's depressing.

Did I struggle to stay awake during those early morning hours, drooling on a dingy desk in Bartlett Hall for nothing?

If I'm able to withdraw a sizeable sum of money from a bank sometime in the near future, it won't be unless I'm crazily waving a .38-caliber pistol around the inside of my local credit union. My most impressive moments as a first-year journalist will likely include successfully fetching coffee brewed from an exotic bean, and sitting through a city council meeting without blowing my brains out with the aforementioned Saturday-night-special. But if I'm lucky enough, I can someday make $12-an-hour covering chili cook-offs for The Greenfield Recorder.

The average holder of a journalism degree makes less than $34,000 per year, and even those low-paying job opportunities are few and far between.

I can happily consign my anxieties aside however, because while typing this, a solution to all of my career problems thankfully hit me.

My elaborate plan is this: shortly after commencement, I'll dump my degree in the back of my bedroom closet, somewhere amongst Puff Daddy's "No Way Out," a broken VHS copy of

I will effortlessly churn out a smash-hit country song called "John Daly Drinkin' Jack Daniels on a John Deere. " The addictive chorus is as follows: / It's been a rough week / it's been a long year / with lots of cheap shots along with warm beer / and I feel like John Daly drinkin' Jack Daniels on a John Deere /...

"Larry Bird: A Basketball Legend" and a cluster of embarrassing waffle-shirts from "Structure" (from those long-forgotten pre-"Express" days). I'll promise not to type a single word of my resume. I'll refuse to produce that customary sheet of embellishment, even though I do consider BS'ing to be one of my favorite pastimes.

Instead, I will sit on the floor, in the middle of a lightly lit room, with a pen, a legal pad and a guitar I have absolutely no idea how to play. I will effortlessly churn out a smash-hit country song called "John Daly Drinkin' Jack Daniels on a John Deere."

The addictive chorus is as follows: /It's been a rough week / it's been a long year / with lots of cheap shots along with warm beer / and I feel like John Daly drinkin' Jack Daniels on a John Deere /...

Once Jed, Jeb and Mary Sue Bob cease to remove my catchy little ditty from their heads, royalties will roll in out of nowhere like a pack of Oompa Loompas. I will use these royalty checks to cure my case of cold feet, buying a one-way bus ticket to Albuquerque (a la Jennifer "the Runaway Bride" Wilbanks) to escape an enormously overwhelming future.

I will assume a new identity and open up a small Tex-Mex restaurant called "Nina's Cocina," "Loco Locale" or "Carlos Mencia Sucks." I haven't decided yet.

Admittedly, this has potential to grow old. 10,000 chimichangas, twice as many burritos and a couple underage Mexican girlfriends later, and I'll probably decide (again like the Runaway Bride) to suck it up and return home to an understanding family environment (living in my parents' basement).

I'll be messing around with a keyboard yet again; my bloodshot eyes burning as I chain-smoke like Bogart and binge drink like Bukowski. I'll probably do some freelance work for a short while, constantly upsetting editors with an abundance of non-sequiturs, but this short while would, of course, turn into a dreadful long one.

Do I want that kind of existence? I could just as easily take the responsible route, selling out to become an advertising copywriter (preferably someone who comes up with attractive slogans for frequently overlooked beverages like "Slice" and "Fresca").

This is a profession I'd conceivably find five times easier and three times as lucrative. I could then withdraw a small truckload of Ben Franklins without using a firearm.

However, in writing this, I realize I sadly enjoy it enough to spend my post-college years typing away on a laptop in a coffee shop while getting paid pennies to do it. And besides, thinking back to "The Last Crusade," the Holy Grail was not the lavish chalice, but rather, the cup that reflected an understated simple life. Hopefully, I chose wisely.

Michael Cartwright is a Collegian columnist

We put them through a lot

Kevin Dooley

I think when we all arrive at college, we realize that we put a lot of hard work into getting to this point. But as much as we may like to think we made it here all on our own effort, we didn't. If you're anything like me (I hope to God you're not) your parents made major sacrifices to send you on your way to a higher education. Because let's face it, no one wants their son or daughter to be a professional joke writer for a popsicle stick company.

However, as much of a sacrifice putting us through school is, there are some sacrifices our parents made as we were growing up that rival even trying to pay the ever increasing cost of a higher education. The following are just a few.

Just for the record, there was no bigger "Sesame Street" fanatic than me. When Big Bird and his gang bid me farewell at the end of the show, I would freak out, and my mom was always ready for a possible emergency trip to the hospital. Matters got a little better when the "Sesame Street" movie "Follow That Bird" was released on home video, and I could be with my pals all day if I chose.

So for any "Sesame Street" fanatic, the only natural place to head to is the Mecca of "Sesame Street," Sesame Place, located in the wonderful state of New Jersey. Imagine "Sesame Street" brought to life. Really, it was too much for me to take.

I planted myself right in front of Oscar the Grouch's trash can for over four hours just waiting for him to come out.

Now, the place did have a water park, and you would think on a day when it was well over 100 degrees I would be living at the water park, but there was no way I was leaving 123 Sesame Street Way. I was there to meet my heroes: Cookie Monster, Elmo or maybe even Big Bird himself. I planted myself right in front of Oscar the Grouch's trash can for over four hours just waiting for him to come out.

Since I wasn't going anywhere near the water park, and my dad was dying from heat exhaustion, he was forced to make the visit to the water park by himself. I'm surprised he wasn't arrested on suspicion of being a child molester.

In 1990, the popular "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" animated series found its way into Radio City Music Hall as a pay-per-view special where the real life Ninja Turtles put on a rock 'n' roll concert for fans everywhere. I was not one of the lucky ones in attendance, but my parents were willing to shell out the $30 for me to watch it anyways.

The stakes were very high that night as Leonardo, Michelangelo, Donatello and Raphael – is that the correct order – performed a rock 'n' roll concert much to the chagrine of the evil Shredder, who was fed up with music and was making a serious attempt to steal music from the world with help from his friend, the mad scientist, Baxter. I now kind of sympathize with Shredder, because after hearing everyone at Radio City Music Hall sing "Pizza Power," including myself decked out in my Ninja Turtles costume, at the top of their lungs it would drive anyone insane.

In my hometown of Weymouth, Mass., if you didn't play youth soccer on Saturdays, the town would send out a search party thinking you were kidnapped. Starting from the age of four until I was 16, my parents headed up to the field to see me play and maybe get a chance to take a photo of me within 15 feet of the ball one time every Saturday during the spring and fall. My poor dad, instead of seeing his son, the future athlete, he witnessed his son drawing pictures in the patches of dirt that scattered the soccer fields. (Just to clear up some confusion, this was when I was younger. I was not sitting in dirt mounds at the age of 16.)

In the Kindergarten, or K-division as they called it, our team would just ignore the game entirely and carry on very important discussions to a Kindergartner, including who was going to bring home the class hamster next weekend, or maybe discuss our favorite items from show-and-tell that past Friday.

Who could forget all the disastrous movies our parents had to take us to over the years? Anything made by Nickelodeon could be included in this list, but don't forget the "Power Rangers Movie" and the "Little Rascals." When people were screaming coming out of the theatre in horror from witnessing the end of civilization after watching "Good Burger," my mom bravely dished out the $10 for my popcorn and soda and had the stamina to sit through a movie like "Good Burger." Now that takes guts.

So the next time your mom is crying that she didn't get tickets to see Barry Manilow in concert or your dad is spending $400 to see the Rolling Stones 40 years past their prime, remember, they've seen a lot worse.

Kevin Dooley is a Collegian columnist

POLITICAL PARTIES PUSH FUND-RAISING
WELL, I DON'T THINK HE WAS A POLITICAL FUND-RAISER OR HE WOULD HAVE GIVEN US A CAMPAIGN BROCHURE!
STAYSKAL TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES, INC.

Get involved

John Gruenenfelder

I arrived just in time for the end of the countdown. I was more than a little anxious, as were the others present, but I was also fairly certain the launch would proceed according to plan. Finally, my satellites would be up in space and, I hoped, functioning as designed.

In truth, I was nowhere near the launch site. The rocket was being launched from the Cosmodrome in Baikonur, Kazakhstan while I was half a world away sizzling through the summer heat-wave in Amherst. Nor was I with my compatriots who gathered to watch the live video feed at the University of Arizona. Thanks to the Internet, though, I was able to join an Internet Relay Chat (IRC) channel filled with students from a number of schools who also had satellites going up on that same launch.

Then the countdown ended and the rocket was away. Information, flowing from Russian controllers to a CalPoly student on site to another student stateside over a cell phone to those of us on the IRC channel, was slow and staggered. For the first five minutes, all was well and everybody was busy typing congratulations to one another.

When word of trouble came, the sense of despair was evident. Details on what had occurred were slow in coming, but it didn't really matter. If the rocket encountered any trouble during launch it was a safe bet that our satellites were gone. The first stage of the rocket had not separated and all that hard work was now a crater in the Kazakhstan desert. Despite the loss the mission as a whole was a resounding success.

I and the others were members of the Cubesat program. The goal was for groups of students at each school to design and build a 10cm cube satellite. And we certainly did well. The group at the University of Arizona built four, two of which were on the ill-fated rocket. I had the similarly large task of programming them to perform their on-orbit tasks: two-way communication with the Earth, taking measurements from an array of sensors and storing data for later transmission.

Most of the satellites would not necessarily contribute much to science. Rather, the goal was for students to partake in a large and complex project, have a tangible result at the end and, hopefully, learn a bit along the way. In this respect the program was extremely successful.

Like the small satellites, the end product of the job is usually much less important than the road taken there.

Extracurricular activities like this one occur all over our campus. The wide variety of opportunities is one of the big advantages of attending a large public University. I can't promise they'll all be rocket science. Sadly, some may not even involve rockets at all, but you won't really know until you look. Like the small satellites, the end product of the job is usually much less important than the road taken to get there. That's why my CraterSat is still a success despite the minor problem of no longer existing.

The best place to start your search for an extracurricular activity is with your major's office. You will often find a nearby bulletin board and may find useful information there, or perhaps there will be liers around the halls. Be sure to check with the secretary, too. Your major's office may be the most obvious place to start, but it definitely shouldn't be the last place you look.

When I joined the Cubesat program I was an astronomy major. I noticed a flier on the wall one day and decided to attend an informational meeting at the start of the semester. In the end I was programming the satellites, helping with some engineering tasks and writing documentation. Some of this was only tangentially related to my major.

If a project sounds interesting, don't be afraid to attend that first meeting. Speaking from my own experience, we were happy to have just about anybody join as long as they had an interest in the project. Even if the project appears to be rather technical and you happen to lack such skills, ask anyway. The Cubesat group I worked with could have definitely used somebody to maintain a nice Web site, or even just keep a photographic record of some of the major work.

Complexity should also not scare you away, even if you are just a freshman. The truth is that undergraduates in most majors don't learn many of the important skills for complex work until near the end of their curriculum. Because of this there is a large amount of on-the-job training occurring. As long as you have a desire to learn and participate, most projects will welcome you aboard.

Don't let the opportunities of a big campus pass you by as they provide excellent experience regardless of your major. The earlier you join a project the more room you have to grow within the group. With that comes greater responsibility and, in the end, a greater reward, even if it doesn't quite make it into space.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A LOW BLOW

I was dismayed to read the article today entitled "Cheap Food at expensive prices" written by one of your columnists. It was a cheap shot at Dining Services and does not reflect the general comments from our students.

The columnist complained about the prices of the meal plan, quality and variety. First of all, Dining Services is a self-supporting unit, we do not receive any funding from the state. Our meal plan is one of the lowest in the country, lower than UNH and UConn and much lower than private schools. The YCMP meal plans are priced to give students the option to eat in either the all-you-care-to-eat Dining Commons or in the retail operations. This year, we increased the meal exchange dollar to $6.75 to provide better value.

In terms of quality and variety, UMass Dining Services has one of the most diversified menus in the country. The all-you-care-to-eat program includes food from a 42-item salad bar, grab-n-go, sushi bar, carving station, healthy choices to weekly specials, just to name a few. Over the past year, we implemented many fresh concepts by offering more fresh fruit such as melons, blueberries, berries, grapes, trail mix and display cooking. Last year we spent $2 million more than the previous year for our food budget as we continue to enhance our program. In fact, we are the only school in the nation offering weekly specials.

The pizza that she mentioned is a New York style which is a thin crust and very popular with students. The chicken tenders she wrote about are not even on the regular menu this year as we are striving to provide more healthy choices such as Mediterranean cuisine.

In terms of convenience and hours of operations, UMass Dining Services opens from 7:00 a.m. to 11:00 p.m. at Worcester and until midnight at Berkshire, Monday to Thursday. Most schools close their DCs at 7:30 p.m. or earlier. This is of great value for students on the meal plan as we understand that students have a different lifestyle due to their studies.

I will be inviting the student to have a meal with me and we can discuss her concerns then.

UMass Dining Services will continue to improve. We take pride in what we do.

Ken Toong
Director of Dining and Retail Food Services

BIBLICAL DIFFERENCES

I would like to say a few things in response to Kevin Pascucci's "Separation of Church and Faith." He laments that many people "twist the teachings of the Bible...distorting the original text." I don't doubt that some do, but isn't this a natural result of "reading the Bible for yourself"– something he strongly advocates later in the article?

And how can Mr. Pascucci's faith not lie in man, as he claims, if he is letting everyone interpret the Bible for himself, and thus basing his faith in his own human interpretation of it, rather than responding to the interpretation of those whom Christ chose to represent Himself?

I agree that all men are equal in the eyes of God, but that doesn't mean we should let them live in what we believe to be sin. The free will of choosing not to follow God does not make it right. It's an act of Christian love to point out this error, granted in a kindly manner – but his interpretation of the Bible allows him to just let homosexuals live in sin without him doing anything about it.

Jesus asks what merit there is in serving only those who love us? If one has faith and believes in something, how can one not protest opposition to it – silence would do nothing to help those who mock the faith. Mr. Pascucci advocates emulation of selfless acts. It would be selfish for us to keep our faith to ourselves.

Speaking out, debate and not passive acceptance of the state of things enables us to "emulate to others the love and selfless acts which Jesus exemplified," by helping others spiritually (by verbal communication) as well as physically ("feeding the poor").

Jenniler Fill
UMass Student

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

Respond to what we print!

(550 word limit)

Please attach your name and phone number.

Send letters to:

editorial@dailycollegian.com

or go to:

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 2006 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Banned book week

BY FERNANDO DUTRA
THE DAILY CAMPUS (U. CONNECTICUT)

STORRS, Conn. — For 25 years, the American Library Association (ALA) has observed the last week of September as "Banned Books Week: Celebrating the Freedom to Read," an event that stresses the importance of intellectual freedom. Started in 1982, Banned Books Week (BBW) is a celebration of both the freedom of choice and the freedom of expression. According to the ALA's Web site, ala.org, BBW "stresses the importance of ensuring the availability of those unpopular or unorthodox viewpoints to all those that wish to read them." The Web site itself is a platform that leads to numerous links explaining First Amendment rights and key Supreme Court cases regarding the issue of academic freedom.

The ALA is quick to point out the books featured on its Web site's list are not currently banned, but have been repeatedly challenged over the years. The ALA submits that were it not for librarians' resolution throughout the United States, it is possible these books may have been banned throughout the country. However, by retaining the books on their shelves, librarians reinforced the importance of literature and intellectual liberty. Since then, BBW has been used "to teach the importance of our First Amendment rights and the power of literature, and to draw attention to the danger that exists when restraints are imposed on the availability of information in a free society."

The majority of challenges originate from society's desire to "protect children from 'inappropriate' sexual content or 'offensive' language," according to the ALA. As a result, the ALA, expressed in "Free Access to Libraries for Minors" (an interpretation of the Library Bill of Rights), strongly advocate a parent's role in what a child reads and that the parent decides what is proper and improper for their child or children. Therefore, if censorship should be enforced, it would be within the confines of a household, rather than be endemic to the entire nation.

The books that comprise the most frequently challenged books are also the books that dominate elementary and high school reading lists. In partnership with ALA and to help promote awareness about BBW, Google has created a site that presents a critic's brief appraisal of some of the most challenged books, while the ALA Web site provides specifics such as why, when, or where a certain book was challenged. Some of the challenged books that have been challenged repeatedly includ e, "To Kill a Mockingbird" by Harper Lee; "1984" by George Orwell; "The Great Gatsby" by F. Scott Fitzgerald, "The Catcher In the Rye" by J.D. Salinger, "Lord of The Flies" by William Golding; "Ulysses" by James Joyce; "Brave New World" by Aldous Huxley; "Slaughterhouse Five" and "Cat's Cradle," both by Kurt Vonnegut; "Of Mice And Men" and "Grapes of Wrath," both by John Steinbeck; "A Separate Piece" by John Knowles; "In Cold Blood" by Truman Capote; "All The King's Men" by Robert Penn Warren and "A Clockwork Orange" by Anthony Burgess, which are just a few of several other challenged books. After a brief walk searching for course books in the University of Connecticut Co-op, the importance of these novels becomes quite clear.

The range of critiques is vast, yet most deal with the same questionable elements in a particular story. "The Great Gatsby" received flack in 1987 due to "language and sexual references in the book." "To Kill a Mockingbird" was temporarily banned in Eden Valley, Minn., in 1977 for the use of the words "damn" and "whore lady." "Ulysses" was banned in the United States in 1918, in Ireland and Canada in 1922, and in England in 1923. The extent to which these burnings occurred isn't described on the site, but England banned the book in 1929. "The Lord of the Flies" was challenged at Owen High School in 1981 because it was seen as "demoralizing inasmuch as it implies that man is little more than an animal." "1984" was challenged in Jackson County, Fla., because it was believed that the novel was "pro-communist and contained explicit sexual matter." In 1960 a teacher in Tulsa, Okla., was fired for assigning "Catcher in the Rye." After appealing, the teacher was reinstated, but the book was removed from the itinerary in the school.

After reading a few of these challenges, it is clear why the ALA strongly promotes BBW and firmly believes in former Supreme Court Justice William J. Brennan Jr.'s words, "If there is a bedrock principle underlying the First Amendment, it is that the government may not prohibit the expression of an idea simply because society itself [finds it] offensive or disagreeable."

Two musical gems shine on Pearl Street

'Architecture' on set for tonight

BY COREY CHARRON
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Australia invades Northampton tonight when Architecture in Helsinki headlines Pearl Street's Clubroom. Portland, Oregon's The Blow will open for the Australian seven-piece, along with Greece's FDR.

Architecture in Helsinki combines indie rock, twee pop, and orchestral electronica to form songs that are catchy as well as musically complex and impressive. They feature a menagerie of instruments, including analog synthesizers and samplers, clarinet, and good ol' fashioned guitar. A solid brass section complements the already eclectic instrumental ensemble. Each member of the band is able to play several musical devices, sometimes even switching it up mid-song, a remarkable sight when seen live.

Architecture in Helsinki formed out of core members Cameron Bird, Jamie Midren, and Sam Perry's childhood band stemming from Fitzroy, Melbourne, Australia. When in high school, Cameron was known to pull such stunts as riding exercise bikes onstage or leading the audience in aerobics. After James Cecil, Kellie Sunderland, Tara Shackell, Isobel Knowles and Gus Franklin joined as members, the band was finally able to perform as the inspiring band we knows today. Once the lineup was set, they were able to successfully record their first album, "In Case We Die," released in 2004. Popularity and critical adoration has built up steadily ever since. Tara Shackell and Isobel Knowles recently left the group but this hasn't slowed their entertaining live performances one bit.

Although they haven't hit it big in mainstream America, the band has accumulated an impressive underground fan base. Their debut album was considered one of the best in 2005 in many indie rock circles. Australian radio station Triple J has placed their song, "It's," at number fifty-six on their annual top one hundred songs of the year. The album was recorded in James Cecil's Supermelodyworld Studios in Australia and self-released on their own Tailem Bend label, Bar/None Records provided for a stateside issue.

Their next album is slated for a 2007 release date. Percussionist Cameron Bird said that a recent performance from notable hip-hop legends Wu-Tang Clan inspired him, and might play a role in possibly influencing their sophomore album.

Most bands gain notoriety by opening for more established groups, and Architecture in Helsinki can be included in this mix. They have toured with such emo-rock heavy hitters as Death Cab for Cutie, and Ben Kweller. David Byrne (of The Talking Heads), Bright Eyes, Clap Your Hands Say Yeah, and Belle & Sebastian have all asked Architecture in Helsinki to open for them on past tours.

On their myspace.com page (http://myspace.com/architecture) you can find remixes of songs from "In Case We Die," featuring Busta Rhymes rapping over one of their tracks, a "mash-up," similar to DJ Dangermouse's Grey Album (which Jay-Z's "Black Album" is mixed with The Beatles' "White Album"). Indie rock group Hot Chip also contributes a track on the website. A remix album will be available on tour.

Opening band, The Blow, is an electronic-pop group consisting of two members: Khaela Maricich & Jona Bechtolt. The band first started in 2004 with their EP, "Poor Aim, Love Songs." They are slated to release their first full length album, "Paper Television," on October 24th on K Records. Yet another remix album, "Paper Tivo," is also ready to be released. Jona Bechtolt, the band's singer, described the album as "awesome bullsh."

FDR, a second opener, is an experimental band from Thessaloniki, Greece and is one of few bands featured on Ambrosia Records.

Tickets for the show are $17 at the door. Doors open at 7:30 p.m. and the show starts at 8:30 p.m.

Australian band and underground treasure Architecture in Helsinki is featured tonight at Pearl Street.

Jewish holiday calls for feasts

BY BILL DALEY
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Judaism is an ancient faith rife with symbols, many of them food-related. Who doesn't think of matzo at Passover or latkes at Hanukkah? Rosh Hashanah has its foods too. The challah, a long, braided bread, is shaped into rounds for the holiday to underscore the circle of life.

But many of the holiday symbols find representation on the sweets table.

Desserts, especially those taking advantage of autumnal fruits such as apples and pomegranates, are traditional. Honey is used liberally in recipes, both for sweetness and for symbolism.

Rosh Hashanah began Friday at sundown and marks the start of the year 5767 on the Jewish calendar. It ushers in a 10-day period of prayer, reflection, repentance and acts of charity, culminating Oct. 1 at sundown with Yom Kippur, the solemn day of atonement. This period is known as the "Days of Awe." That this also is the time when seasons change underscores a sense of renewal for many.

"Something about the fall season clicks with me, partially because of the Jewish holidays," said Eden Rosenbush, chef-owner of Big Red Oven, a Chicago catering company.

"My favorite holiday is Rosh Hashanah, followed closely by Thanksgiving," Rosenbush said. "It feels like the start of something. The beautiful symbols resonate."

The honey symbol has "a duality," said Laura Frankel, chef-owner of Shallots, a kosher restaurant in Skokie, Ill., and author of a new cookbook, "Jewish Cooking for All Seasons" (Wiley, $34.95). "The bee can sting and inflict pain, yet there is this delicious honey. We know things can be great or bad in the future."

Many honeys are golden, and Frankel noted that this is the time when the sun sinks lower in the sky and the light takes on a more honeyed hue. Colors deepen into warm oranges and browns.

"For me, the holiday is a very happy time," said Linda Neiman, owner of Zelda's Sweet Shoppe in Skokie. "It's a time of harvest, a time when people reflect. That's why you'll see a lot of silvers and gold. They

See JEWISH on page 8

Second Jackass flick falls flat

BY RHIAN HIBNER
DAILY LOBO (U. NEW MEXICO)

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — I think my IQ just dropped a few points.

"Jackass Number Two" is a bit like a train wreck. No one wants to see it, but sometimes it's impossible to look away. Much like its predecessor, the film is exceptional only for its inexplicable ability to fill movie seats.

There is no plot. There is no script except for a rather annoying musical routine at the end of the film, which features even more abuse to the various cast members. The entire film is a long string of disconnected episodes, all of which feature one of the cast members being injured, disgusting or, quite frequently, both at the same time.

Bam Margera takes a disproportionately large amount of abuse throughout this film. One might almost feel sorry for him, except for the fact that it is completely voluntary.

Normally, when reviewing a movie, it's customary to remark on a particular actor's abilities. In this case, it is easy. They don't have any ability. "Jackass Number Two" is the functional equivalent of a second-grade play on nutrition, only here, instead of dressing up like vegetables, Johnny Knoxville and company dress up like naked elderly people. Instead of short little skits on the importance of healthy eating, they highlight how drunk one can get from a beer bong if you don't use your mouth to imbibe with. Think lower down and dirtier. Come to think of it, a second-grade play at least requires the actors to behave like children, rather than animals. Comparing the two isn't really fair to the second-graders.

Out of this entire misanthropic mess, there were a couple slightly redeeming moments. These moments did not make up for the rest of the movie — not by a long shot — but they were just enough to keep the average viewer from gouging his eyes out. For instance, toward the end of the film, Johnny Knoxville, straddling a large rocket, shoots himself about 70 feet in the air and into a lake.

In another skit, Margera runs to the top of a small skate ramp, turns around, sighs resignedly, and proceeds to skate down at high speed, slamming face first into a Plexiglas barrier directly in front of the camera.

It is unfortunate the cast of "Jackass" feels it necessary to resort to toilet humor to try to make people laugh. It really is quite skilled at slapstick. The

See JACKASS on page 8

John Brown's Body tomorrow

BY LAUREN MOUSSETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As we begin crawling towards the center of this semester, everyone is beginning to feel the pressure and stress of their new classes and upcoming tests. Take a night off this Thursday, September 28, and head down to Pearl Street Night Club and check out John Brown's Body.

The eight member band has established a high level of respect for themselves from several critics across the map.

The New York Daily News said, "if it is possible to be both reverent and revolutionary, JBB has found a way with their new album." Their new album "Pressure Points" was released in April 2005 and is still being talked about.

The Rent claims they are "confident and humble, edgy and easygoing. Pressure Points is a brilliantly realized step forward for John Brown's Body, for American reggae and for reggae in general".

John Brown's Body is stretching past a ten-year career that has brought them all over the country. They have shared the stage with many well respected artists such as Jurassic 5, The Dave Matthews Band, and Broken Social Scene. Since their careers commenced they have played at countless festivals and line ups, totaling about a hundred concerts a year.

They have many diverse influences like Johnny Cash, 311, Massive Attack, and Sam Cooke. The Boston Herald stated that JBB is "one of the world's best roots-style reggae bands" after their release of "This Day" in 2000.

The diverse instrumentals and vocal styles of John Brown's Body originated from an early 90's rock and reggae band called Tribulations and grew to form their unique 21st century sound. They have also continued to shine through their vocal harmony, horn instrumentalists, and what they call a "torque heavy drum and bass". The once small-time band from upstate New York has certainly made a name for themselves.

The eight members each contribute to their exclusive sound with their personal expertise in a wide variety of instrumentals. Kevin Kinsella is a vocalist and a rhythm guitarist along side Nate Silas Richardson who plays keys, guitar, and vocals. Included are two more vocalists, Elliot Martin (who also rocks the tambourine) and Chris Wetter (who is known for his trumpet and B3 skills). Tommy Benedetti plays the drums while Alex Beram jams out on the trombone and the bingo drums. Reserving the heart of the band with Scott Palmer on bass and Dan Deliceaz on tenor sax.

Kinsella tells us "I grew up in small town America, upstate New York, and we were listening to a healthy dose of Motown, Americana and singer-songwriters. As a guitarist and singer, I construct my tunes on the porch, work out the changes and melody and then later add the rhythm section."

Tickets are $14 in advance and $17 at the door. Doors open at 7:30 p.m. and the show start at 8:30 p.m. Shows generally continue to run until about midnight and there is a starting band called the Fear Nuttin' Band. IHUG describes them as "combining the hardest elements of metal with a stunning combination of dancehall reggae and serious hip hop. FNB mixes all three genres for a sound guaranteed to amuse fans of each one." Hope to see you there.

Claimed as "one of the world's best roots-style reggae bands," John Brown's Body will be featured on Thursday night at 8:30 p.m.

Fruits, honey a-plenty

JEWISH from page 7

set the table with their best silver. Everything is shiny, and everyone is truly on their best behavior."

Sometimes, though, tradition trumps taste.

Among the kids in Michael Morowitz's family, the fruit compote served by his grandmother, Yetta Morowitz, at Rosh Hashanah had a special nickname: "kapur."

"It became a joke of its own because of all those prunes," recalled Morowitz, a Chicago software engineer and host of a food blog, EatChicago (eatchicago.net) who clearly considers "kapur" to be no joke today.

This simple medley of prunes, apples and golden raisins has become an edible bit of family lore to be cherished and served each Jewish new year, after the gefilte fish and the kreplach soup and the brisket, and alongside an apple cake.

Morowitz grew up in a secular household. For him, Rosh Hashanah is less a religious holiday and more an occasion for the family to get together.

Grandma Yetta, 89, who divides her time between Skokie, Ill., and Miami Beach, Fla., has begun turning over the holiday duties to others but her menu is still scrupulously observed. The foods the family will enjoy are familiar and comfortable, he said.

Although Morowitz finds that his family's holiday desserts, which also include an apple cake and a bowl of fresh fruit, are sometimes "a letdown," it wouldn't be Rosh Hashanah without them, he said. Sweets are a vital component of the holiday table, symbolizing the hope for a good year ahead.

Baked apples (above) and poached pears (below) are just two of the many delicious foods baked for Rosh Hashanah.

Netflix fan, know thyself well

By JOCELYN NOVACK
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK (AP) - Does it sometimes seem like Netflix knows your tastes better than your friends, your spouse, even you?

"You loved it," the DVD rental site will remind you, offering a movie for sale that yes, by golly, you did love.

Now, they can tell you what everyone else loves, too. A new feature lets you pop in a zip code to find what's popular anywhere — from Anchorage to Kalamazoo to Tallahassee, to anywhere else recognized by the post office.

You have to take the Netflix folks at their word — the company doesn't give out specific numbers. But it's an entertaining look at tastes across the country. New Yorkers, perhaps not surprisingly, seem to like French films a lot — but not as much as films about New York. In Miami, Cuban films dominate the list. And so on.

And yet, an important caveat. The geographical list gives you not the top rentals in a particular area, but only titles people there ordered "much more than other Netflix members." And so, we wondered, how would a straight top-rentals list look for various areas? Would the same interesting regional qualities play a role?

The answer: Not so much. Turns out we all like pretty much the same things.

"Crash," for example. The surprise Oscar winner about racial strife in Los Angeles was No. 1 not only in LA, but on all but one of the lists we asked Netflix for: Boston, New York City, Billings, Mont., Albany, N.Y., and Miami. In Mobile, Ala., it came in second.

Mobile's first choice, "Mr. and Mrs. Smith" (the film that spawned Brangelina), was in the top three on all lists — except for Boston, where it came in fifth. And so on. The Johnny Cash biopic "Walk the Line" was in the top 10 everywhere except Miami. "Hotel Rwanda," about the 1994 genocide in Rwanda, was in the top 10 everywhere but Mobile. Clint Eastwood's "Million Dollar Baby" and the Vince Vaughn/Owen Wilson buddy comedy "Wedding Crashers" were also universally popular.

"Yes, I think taste is uniform across the country — and across the world, and the millennia," says Richard Walter, a film professor at the University of California, Los Angeles. "People everywhere respond to the same kind of drama, the same characters, the same conflict."

That may be basically true, but modest differences appear once you get beyond the top tier of films, says John Fithian, president of the National Association of Theater Owners.

"Pirates of the Caribbean is going to work everywhere, period," says Fithian, of the Johnny Depp vehicle that's the year's biggest hit. "But there are enough differences to be statistically relevant." Family pictures, for example, play a few percentage points better in the middle of the country; R-rated fare plays better on the coasts. Foreign films play best in big cities, but are spreading somewhat.

The new Netflix feature stemmed from internal research the company was already doing. "We thought, this is cool," says Steve Swasey, spokesman for Netflix Inc. "Let's show people what they're asking for in their neighborhoods."

He wouldn't give numbers but said the weekly lists are tabulated using a complex analysis of how members add and subtract from their queues. Scientific or not, the results are often intriguing _ and show that in many (but not all) cases, we like to watch, well, ourselves.

To wit: this week in Alaska, "Northern Exposure" tops the list in both Fairbanks and Juneau — that's the TV series about quirky Cicely, Alaska. In Phoenix, people loved Kevin Costner in "Wyatt Earp: Special Edition," which features Tombstone, Ariz.

In Washington, D.C., a documentary on a local drug dealer tops the list. In Hawaii, it's a film about a surfing star — from Hawaii. In Savannah, Ga., No. 2 is Eastwood's "Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil," about the city's infamous murder case.

In New York City, Ric Burn's historical series "New York" tops the list. "New York Stories" is up there. And yes, Woody Allen's "Manhattan" makes the top 25. As does "LA Story" on the Los Angeles list, which is topped by "Mi Vida Loca," about the city's Echo Park neighborhood.

But type in Fargo, N.D., and "Fargo" is nowhere to be found. The top of that list is Disney's "Wild Hearts Can't be Broken," a family film. A bit south in Sioux Falls, S.D., you can't find "Deadwood," which is based in the state. But the HBO series is right on top in Burlington, Vt.

In Odessa, Texas, the top choice is "The Three Burials of Melquiades Estrada," but you can't find "Friday Night Lights" — about a high school football team from Odessa. You can find that film, though, on the list for Paris, Texas.

And no, film buffs, we looked. Wim Wenders' "Paris, Texas" is NOT on the list for Paris, Texas.

New MTV stunt flops

JACKASS from page 7

most amusing moments in the entire film appear when the various cast members are beating on each other or launching at high speed into solid objects. Rockets are often involved.

If "Jackass Number Two" had comprised purely physical humor, it still would have been stupid. But it also would have been funny rather than incredibly disgusting.

Out of the entire film, there are roughly ten minutes of good material. Sitting through the other eighty-five minutes really wasn't worth it. Those who don't appreciate scatological humor should probably avoid this one.

Pardon me while I go scrub my eyes with bleach.

To many, this envelope is a familiar sight. Thousands of DVDs are shipped out daily in these packages.

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

find out what's blowing in the wind

If 20 of GE's wind turbines were used to replace the same amount of energy generated in the U.S. through traditional sources, greenhouse gas emissions could be reduced by an amount equal to taking nearly 27,000 cars off the road in the U.S. We call this ecomagination. At GE we invite you to find your answer to ecomagination through a career in engineering, finance, manufacturing, sales and marketing, human resources, or information technology.

Visit gecareers.com
an equal opportunity employer

ecomagination CHALLENGE Take the challenge
ecocollegechallenge.com

Come see us at the

Isenburg School of Management Career Day

September 27, 2006
Mullins Center
12 - 5 PM

imagination at work

Who knew MERCHANDISING was such BUSINESS?

...how would you manage $150 Million?

Corporate Merchandise Training Program
www.tjx.com/CMTP

Come see us at the career fair today

TJX
T.J. Maxx Marshalls Winners HomeGoods

"Results you can feel ...without the side effects."

- headaches
- neck pain
- back pain
- automobile injuries
- sports injuries
- shoulder pain
- TMJ syndrome
- knee pain
- ...and more

Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician

Participating provider for HMO's Student insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, no insurance & most others

www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com

Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health

228 Triangle St
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)

Most insurance accepted

549-1500

Minutewomen march to win

FIELD HOCKEY from page 12

UMass goalkeeper Sarah Williams had two saves on seven Siena shots last night in the Minutewomen's 4-0 win against Siena.

made a sprawling save after a Siena forward took a shot that appeared to be destined for the back of the net. The freshman goalkeeper has been very impressive in her two starts.

The other Minutewomen score, also the product of a penalty corner, came at the 19:46 mark of the first half as junior midfielder Nicole Phelan stole a rebound from a Siena defender and slid it past Siena goalkeeper Renee Clavette.

The lone bright spot for Siena, Clavette was remarkable in net for the Saints. The sophomore did all she could to keep the game close. She recorded 19 saves, many of the spectacular variety.

Phelan's goal was huge for the Minutewomen. After the initial Maroon and White score, Siena briefly controlled possession and appeared to be on the verge of deadlocking the game.

But Williams was determined to keep the Saints off of the scoreboard. This, paired with great defensive play by the entire team, prevented any real quality threats from the Saint offense.

One player whose defensive efforts were on display was junior defender Paula Verma. She controlled her side of the field and was lauded for her great play after the game.

"I thought Paula Verma played the best game of her career," said Shea.

Also playing well for the Minutewomen was junior forward Rachael Mervine and sophomore forward Lauren Gillespie. Mervine recorded three assists as a result of her spectacular play on penalty corners. Gillespie recorded five shots on goal and forced a few good scoring chances for her teammates.

The Minutewomen have to be pleased to get a victory after such a tough stretch. But Shea is not getting complacent and is by no means satisfied.

"We're going to have to play better," Shea said. "But this is a great start."

Shea's 100th win adds to impressive resume

By MICHAEL CHANDLER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Last week, two-time Olympian and University of Massachusetts alumnus Patty Shea notched her 100th career victory as head coach of the field hockey team, adding one more notch to her already dazzling resume.

Shea's remarkable perseverance helped her to frustrate opposing offenses for 20 years as a Hall of Fame goalkeeper for Belmont High School, UMass, and the United States of America.

While playing at UMass, Shea posted 0.62 goals-against average and a school-record 54 shutouts. After graduating, Shea ascended to the national level, guarding USA's net from 1985 to 1996.

Throughout her career, one was just never enough for Shea. Over her 20-year field hockey career, Shea assembled two Olympic game appearances (Seoul in '88, Atlanta in '96), two World Cups ('86, '94), two Pan American Games silver medals ('87 and '95), two USA Field Hockey Athlete of the Year ('88 and '96) awards, two All-America selections ('82 and '83), two Atlantic 10 Coach of the Year awards ('99 and '00), spent 11 years on the national team, and made 87 national appearances, all while overcoming 13 knee surgeries.

Unfortunately for the rest of the A-10, 100 wins probably won't be enough either.

Early Player of the Year Discussion

This season has been a breakout year for two early A-10 Player of the Year candidates, Richmond's junior forward Shannon Taylor, and UMass' sophomore forward Lauren Gillespie. Through eight games, Taylor leads in six of eight offensive categories. However, Gillespie, with far fewer shots (18 to Taylor's 42) and shots per game (2.25 to 5.25), has the same number of goals and goals per game as Taylor.

Gillespie's shots have scooted past the goalie almost half the time. Gillespie has scored on 44% of her shots, boding well for her continued success. Taylor, however, only scores on 19% of the shots she takes. Also, Taylor's team – the Richmond Spiders – does not have another player in the top 18 for shots, while Gillespie is not even the leading shooter on her own team.

While Taylor has put up greater numbers thus far in the season, Gillespie has been far more efficient and economical for her team, and with continued success could be a definite Player of the Year contender.

Preparation

With conference play only a one week away, A-10 teams will be spending the next few days preparing against non-divisional opponents.

West Chester (2-8) will get things started on Thursday traveling to Lehigh.

UMass (2-7) will host Syracuse Friday at 3:00 in their last game before conference heavyweight Temple (8-3).

Saturday looks to be a busy day with four A-10 games beginning at 12 p.m. St. Joe's (5-4), coming off its first home loss, welcomes Longwood University. La Salle (3-7) visits Villanova after beating Lehigh, 1-0, in overtime. Richmond (5-3) and the A-10 Player of the Week (Taylor) will play Radford in a Virginia match up. And Saint Louis (3-4) will try to protect the Anheuser-Busch Center from Kent State.

On Sunday, Richmond will try and make Davidson's voyage to Virginia as unpleasant as possible while Rhode Island (3-4) heads to winless Siena.

UMass coach Patty Shea led the Minutewomen to their third win of the season last night against the Siena Saints, taking the contest, 4-0.

Americans sore after Ryder Cup defeat

By DOUG FERGUSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHANDLER'S CROSS, England – Now that the Ryder Cup is over, golf returns to normal.

Of the 19 flags that rippled in a cool breeze Tuesday morning at The Grove, none was a blue banner with 13 gold stars. They were from Northern Ireland and South Africa, Canada and Australia, the United States and England.

Chad Campbell, Brett Wetterich and Jim Furyk walked down the first fairway as friends, but not teammates. Phil Mickelson has gone back on vacation, if he ever left. No one will pick up a ball from anywhere but the bottom of the cup.

Everyone is responsible for his own golf. Only one player gets the trophy.

The winner gets $1.3 million.

The only winning streak anyone is talking about involves Tiger Woods, the best in the world when he's playing for himself. While his streak ended two weeks ago at the World Match Play Championship about 30 miles down the M25 at Wentworth, a victory in the American Express Championship would be his sixth in a row at PGA Tour events.

Ah, this is more like it.

Sure, Woods successfully defending his title at this World Golf Championship would only emphasize that Americans care more about their own achievements than winning a 17-inch golf trophy named after an English seed merchant. But that's how it should be.

Golf is an individual game. Legacies are built on personal success, not team play that happens one week out of the year. Think of the players who are linked with their performance in team events, and you'll find guys who have never won a major, some who have never won many tournaments at all.

Colin Montgomerie. Sergio Garcia. Chris DiMarco.

No one has won more points for Europe than Nick Faldo, but that's only a postscript on the resume of a six-time major champion who won back-to-back at the Masters and once made 18 pars in his final round to win the British Open.

The Europeans are not just winning the Ryder Cup – three in a row, five of the last six – but dominating. Just don't get the idea that Europe is dominating the world of golf.

How else to explain why their players have been shut out in the last 29 majors?

"We've got a lot more top 10s in the majors, we've got more wins in the majors, we've got more tournament wins," Stewart Cink said. "In every category, we outpace them."

The exception, of course, is the Ryder Cup.

But does that matter?

We give the Ryder Cup too much credit for its place in the game. It is a wonderful exhibition, and because it is so different from the 72 holes of stroke play seen the majority of the year, it is by far the most exciting tournament in golf to watch.

If imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, consider what has followed the Presidents Cup, the Seve Trophy, the Royal Trophy, the UBS Warburg Cup (now extinct, thankfully), the Lexus Cup and something called the Hilda Trophy, which pits senior U.S. women against senior women from the rest of the world.

All of them were or still are promoted as being styled after the Ryder Cup.

But these matches only decide which team gets the trophy. It doesn't make the Americans a bunch of chops, nor does it make the Europeans a world power.

Perhaps the most telling match of the Ryder Cup was when Garcia and Luke Donald defeated Woods and Furyk in a foursomes match Friday afternoon. Garcia played in the final round against Woods at the British Open and got smoked. Donald was tied for the lead with Woods in the final round at the PGA Championship and fell apart.

As partners, Garcia and Donald are 4-0 in foursomes play at the Ryder Cup.

"It's match play over 18 holes, and anything can happen in an 18-hole sprint," Woods said. "You play a stroke-play event, all you're looking for is one shot over 72 holes. It's more of a marathon. It's about being consistent. It's about never making big numbers. You could be three down after the first nine holes ... you've got 63 holes to go.

"In match play, it can turn pretty quickly."

The Ryder Cup was never that big of a deal before World War II, when the United States won four matches and Britain won twice. After the war, when Britain took far longer to recover, the Americans won the Ryder Cup 18 out of 19 times before the other side caught up. Britain first got help from Ireland in 1973, then all of continental Europe in 1979.

Just like the America's Cup, it became a big deal when the Americans started losing.

Now, the PGA of America wants it to be a big event because the Ryder Cup has become its biggest money-maker. Europe needs it to become a big event – and needs to win – to help increase sponsorship for its tour.

No doubt, the top 12 Europeans as a whole are equal to the top 12 Americans, and Ian Woosnam probably was right when he said Europe is strong enough now to field two teams.

Stewart Cink believes that American golfers have "outpaced" European golfers in "every category" except the Ryder Cup.

O'Brien notches hat trick under the lights

O'BRIEN from page 12

"[You try] and keep everything organized."

Talking to O'Brien, she was humble and quick to attribute the win, along with her outstanding performance, to her teammates.

"On the field a lot of people step up and take different leadership roles," O'Brien said. "I don't think it's all placed on me and Gina [the other team captain]."

It's rare for a defensive player like O'Brien to have such an offensively potent night.

"We made some changes in our game and in our setup over the past few weeks," O'Brien said. "It just so happened I was coming up more [in the offensive zone] tonight and other players were stepping up and taking a bigger defensive role."

While the story of the game was the outstanding play of O'Brien, putting a shutout from Williams is not something that Shea will overlook.

"I thought Sarah did a great job in goal," Shea said. "She made a couple of great saves in the second half to preserve the shutout."

Goaltending has been an area of concern this season, and while Williams did not see a great deal of action, she made a key stop in the first half that would have put the Saints up 1-0.

The Minutewomen are all too familiar with falling behind this season, having done so in eight of their previous nine games.

After commanding play for the first 10 minutes of the contest, not allowing Siena to carry the ball past midfield, the Saints got their first prime scoring chance at the 22-minute mark. Luckily for UMass, the shot rang off the post.

In a season that has seen the bounces go in favor of the opposition, the Minutewomen are due for some good fortune.

Heading into a matchup against a tough Big East opponent in Syracuse this Friday, everyone close to the Minutewomen know that victory will take more than a lucky break.

"I think tonight was a big game for us," O'Brien said. "It was good to get a win under our belts, and I think everyone has seen now the ability they can play to so it's just keeping that positive mentality and continuing to play our best."

If O'Brien and her teammates continue to play like they did last night, they should have no problems keeping their confidence and continuing to put games in the win column.

New Orleans returns to reality, normalcy

By PAUL NEWBERRY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS – The beignets at Cafe Du Monde tasted especially sweet. A French Market musician pounded out a peppy tune on his keyboard. Smiling – if somewhat weary – revelers strolled through the narrow streets of the French Quarter in their Reggie Bush jerseys and "Home Sweet Dome" T-shirts.

"What a Show!" the local newspaper blared across its front page.

Life in New Orleans had an air of normalcy Tuesday, the morning after the New Orleans Saints returned to the Superdome with a rousing, inspiring victory.

But plenty of difficult questions remain for this team and its hurricane-ravaged city.

The population is still less than half what it was before Hurricane Katrina. Who knows if enough deep-pocketed companies will return to buy up those pricey club seats and luxury boxes. And the Superdome is still a 31-year-old stadium – all spruced up, to be sure, but ancient in the what-new-stadium-have-you-built-for-me-lately NFL.

"In terms of the Saints' future, we've got a ways to go," acknowledged Doug Thornton, who runs the Superdome and oversees its $185 million renovation. "There's no doubt the public will support the team. But there's always that issue of the economic base, the corporate base."

The support was certainly there Monday night. An earsplitting crowd of 70,000 packed the Superdome for the Saints' 23-3 victory over the Atlanta Falcons in a showdown of unbeaten NFC South rivals.

New Orleans (3-0) has first place all to itself and a reason to feel proud of just how far it's come since Katrina flooded the Big Easy nearly 13 months ago.

The Superdome is the most noticeable symbol of the halting rebirth. A scene of misery and shame in the days after the hurricane, it now has a new roof, improved scoreboards, larger video screens and several fresh coats of paint. The second phase of the renovation will take place after the season with the construction of four 19,000-square-foot lounges for club seat holders.

"New life has been breathed into this place," Thornton said. "Out of the destruction came opportunity. You never know how things will turn out. It's an ironic twist of fate."

For now, there's no talk of moving the Saints to another city, not with the NFL's commitment to having the team serve as a catalyst for the massive rebuilding job and the fans' overwhelming show of support in the wake of the storm. The Superdome is sold out for the season – the first time that's ever happened – and owner-in-exile Tom Benson seems to have made an uneasy truce with the team's passionate fans. He even broke out his parasol and did the "Benson Boogie" on his way out of the stadium after the Saints' dominating victory.

"This stadium has got to be as good as many stadiums around the NFL," Thornton insisted. "It's not the best, but it's somewhere in the middle of the pack."

Even so, the refurbished stadium isn't likely to squelch talk of the need for more money-generating improvements. Before Katrina, Benson angered the fan base by demanding a new stadium or a much more profitable deal with the Superdome if he was to keep the Saints in New Orleans. The storm didn't totally blow away all those thorny issues.

Thornton is already making plans for a new round of renovations that might address some of Benson's long-term concerns. He wants to widen the concourse around the lower deck to create better sightlines and more space for concession stands, restrooms and other amenities. He looks toward the towering, largely barren walls above each end zone and envisions several decks of profitable new luxury suites.

"We still face challenges in rebuilding our homes and businesses, but this game ... is proof of what we can accomplish if we work together," said Rita Benson LeBlanc, the team's executive vice president. "The Saints have been a unifying force in this community for 40 years now, and we are proud to use this occasion to announce to the world that New Orleans is open for business."

Campus to Career PROGRAMS

Etiquette Dinner

What are the do's and don ts of business dinner etiquette? Come learn from etiquette professional Carol McGuiggan how to avoid potential pitfalls as you enter the business world

Tuesday, October 3 at 5:00 p.m.
Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union

$7.00 per person - Space is limited

Go to UMassAlumni.com/students to register.

Sponsored by
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
alumni loan consolidation program
www.UMassAlumni.com/studentloans
(800) 936-4975

A-10 kicks off on right foot

By Michael King
Collegian Correspondent

If the first match of the Atlantic 10 regular season is a sign of things to come, then fans should brace for an exciting season.

On Sept. 22, the Dayton women's soccer team (3-3-3, 1-0 A-10) began A-10 play with a victory over rival Xavier (4-6-0, 0-1 A-10).

The Flyers scored the first two goals of the game within the first nine minutes of play.

Xavier was held scoreless until the final two minutes of the second half. Musketeer junior Allison Osborne finished off a pass from a corner kick served up by senior forward Amber Silvis.

Dayton allowed another goal at the 58:28 mark that tied the score, 2-2.

The Flyers regained the lead 14 minutes later, capitalizing on a Xavier tripping foul committed just outside the penalty box. Junior forward Courtney Simsans bent the free kick into the upper right corner of the goal, completely out of the reach of Musketeer goalkeeper Kelly Farrell.

The Flyers victory was their ninth victory in a row over Xavier, extending back several seasons. Dayton earned its third victory of the season two days later when it defeated Oakland University, 4-1, on the road.

Xavier, meanwhile, followed the loss to Dayton with a win against Butler University, 2-1, on Sept. 24.

National Rankings

A-10 W. Soccer

Saint Louis (5-1-2) continues its march up the Top 30 rankings. The Billikens are ranked 'a program-best No. 20, moving up six spots from last week, according to Soccer Buzz Magazine.

Although Saint Louis has not played since last Monday, Sept. 18, the team is still gaining momentum in the polls from its impressive victories over nationally-ranked Illinois and Southeast Missouri State last week. The school was slated to play Illinois State on Sept. 22, but the game was postponed due to inclement weather.

Nationally, Notre Dame (9-0-0) is still No. 1, but North Carolina (10-1-0) and Florida State (7-1-0) at Nos. 2 and 3, respectively, are not far behind.

Boston University (7-2-1) overtook Connecticut (5-5-1) as the top ranked team in the region. The Terriers are ranked No. 19, while the Huskies dropped out of the Top 30.

Also, Boston College (7-2-0) moved back into the rankings to No. 26, after winning two games last week.

One team from the Northeast to watch is Maine (8-0-1). The Black Bears are unbeaten this season, but they have not yet proven that they can compete with the nation's elite teams.

Player of the Week

Junior midfielder Jenny Roehrig of Massachusetts (6-2-0) and sophomore forward Katie Sanchez of Fordham (6-3-0) were named A-10 Co-Players of the Week.

Roehrig scored the winning goal against Connecticut in the 62nd minute of the 2-1 victory on Sept. 19. The goal was Roehrig's first of seven and came on one of her game-high seven shots. The win was the first time the Minutewomen have beaten UConn since 1993 and the first goal they scored against the Huskies in seven years.

Sanchez scored her second game-winning goal of the season on Sept. 22 against Manhattan. She also has scored a goal in four straight matches and she posted a goal and two assists against in a 4-2 Ram victory over Lafayette on Sept. 24. This is the second week in a row that Sanchez has earned Player of the Week honors.

Rookie of the Week

The Atlantic 10 named freshman forward Brittany Hogan of Fordham its Rookie of the Week. On Sept. 24, Hogan scored her first-career goal and the game-winner against Lafayette. The Smithfield, Rhode Island, native also recorded an assist in the game. ... Richmond (6-7-2) will try to record its first victory of the season this week with home games against Saint Joseph's on Friday and Temple on Sunday. ... George Washington (6-3-1) leads the conference in penalties, averaging over 13 per game.

... On the other hand, Temple (3-6-0) is the cleanest A-10 team. The Owls have only committed 75 fouls in nine games for an average of 8.33 per game.

The Saint Louis Billikens continue to climb the national rankings. They are now ranked No. 20, up six spots from last week.

Spiders upset Hokies in 3-2 win

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Richmond Spiders (3-5-2) scored a 3-2 upset victory over Virginia Tech. The Hokies started the season 4-0 and ranked as high as No. 8 in the nation. The Spiders are the third Atlantic 10 team this season to upset a ranked opponent, joining Fordham and Saint Louis. The Spiders have struggled this season, but look to rebound as they start their A-10 conference schedule, at Saint Joseph's, at Temple, and home versus George Washington.

A-10 M. Soccer

Conference games to start

With the A-10 championships more than a month away the conference games are underway this week. On Friday night, Massachusetts (6-2-2) visits George Washington (3-4-1), Charlotte (4-3-2) will host Temple (1-6-1), and Richmond (3-5-2) will travel to Saint Joseph's (3-3-1). Last year, UMass tied George Washington, 2-2, in double overtime. Charlotte is coming off a 0-0 tie with UMass and is 3-1-1 in its last five games. Meanwhile, Temple has struggled, losing its last five games and only scoring a total of two goals. Saint Joseph's is coming off a strong performance against the La Salle Explorers, defeating them 3-2.

Rookies of the Week

Saint Joseph's freshman defender Travis Gast and Charlotte freshman goalkeeper David Martin earned Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week honors for the week of Sept. 18-24. Gast led the Hawks to a 3-2 victory over La Salle on Saturday. The rookie defender collected three points, scoring the game-tying goal in the second half. Martin earned his first-career shutouts with a 3-0 win over Gardner-Webb and a 0-0 tie against UMass. This season, he has only allowed eight goals in 572 minutes of action. Martin is the first player in the program's history to earn A-10 Rookie of the Week honors.

Player of the Week

Richmond sophomore forward Scott Loesser was named Atlantic 10 Men's Soccer Player of the Week. Loesser led the Spiders to a 3-2 upset victory over No. 16 Virginia Tech. He scored the game-winning goal just two minutes into the first overtime period. He also added an assist to give the Spiders the 2-1 lead, but Virginia Tech tied the game with 40 seconds left to play, forcing overtime. The score was his second game-winning goal of the year. He leads the team with five points on the season.

Simmons saves UMass

UMass continues to struggle scoring goals. The Minutemen could not score a goal last week, losing to UNH, 1-0, and tying Charlotte, 0-0. Keeping the games close is senior goalkeeper Zack Simmons, who made 16 saves in two games and notched his seventh shutout of the season. He ranks second in the nation in both goals-against average (0.291) and save percentage (.947).

A-10 Leaders

Fordham junior midfielder Kevin Meyer is tied for the lead in the A-10 with 10 points and four goals. All four goals for Meyer have been game-winning goals. Fordham sophomore midfielder Grant Kerr is tied for the lead with four assists but leads the A-10 with 0.50 assist per game. Simmons leads all goalies with seven shutouts and 47 saves. Fordham goalie Doug Deveraux ranks second with three shutouts.

UMass forward Prince Otosu (No. 10) and the Minutemen are tied for the lead in the Atlantic 10 with six wins in 10 contests.

Byron Nelson dead at age 84

By Jaime Aron
Associated Press

IRVING, Texas — Byron Nelson, golf's courtly "Lord Byron" whose 11 straight tournament victories in 1945 stand as one of sports' most enduring records, died Tuesday. He was 94.

His wife, Peggy Nelson, told family friend Angela Enright that her husband appeared fine as she left for Bible study Tuesday morning. As she left their Roanoke home, he told her, "I'm so proud of you," something he often said about her church involvement. When she returned, she found him on the back porch facing his woodworking shop.

The Tarrant County Medical Examiner's Office said he died of natural causes.

Known for his graceful swing and gentle manner, Nelson had the greatest year in the history of professional golf in 1945 when he won 18 tournaments.

He captured 31 of 54 tournaments in 1944-45. Then, at age 34, he retired after the 1946 season to spend more time on his Texas ranch.

"When I was playing regularly, I had a goal," Nelson recalled years later. "I could see the prize money going into the ranch, buying a tractor, or a cow. It gave me incentive."

That incentive pushed Nelson to become one of the best players of his era. He won the Masters in 1937 and '42, the U.S. Open in 1939 and the PGA Championship in 1940 and '45.

He also finished second once in the U.S. Open, twice in the Masters and three times in the PGA. Nelson played in British Open only twice, finishing fifth in 1937.

Nelson's long, fluid swing is considered the model of the modern way to strike a golf ball and his kind, caring style with fans and competitors made him one of the most well-liked people in sports. "I don't know very much," Nelson said in a 1997 interview with The Associated Press. "I know a little bit about golf. I know how to make a stew. And I know how to be a decent man."

Arnold Palmer called Nelson "one of the greatest players who ever lived."

"I don't think that anyone will ever exceed the things that Byron did by winning 11 tournaments in a row in one year," Palmer said in a statement. "But I suppose that is not the most admirable thing that he did, although it was certainly tremendous. He was a fantastic person whom I admired from the time I was a boy."

Nelson's second British Open was in 1955, when he was no longer a serious competitor, although he did win the French Open on that trip for his last professional victory. His prize money, however, was not enough to pay the hotel bill.

"I had to put up another $2000," he told the AP with a huge smile.

Nelson was born Feb. 4, 1912, on the family farm and started in golf in 1922 as a caddie at Glen Garden Country Club in Fort Worth. One year, he won the caddies' championship, defeating Hogan in a playoff.

It was the beginning of a rivalry that never really materialized. Though they were born six months apart, Nelson won all five of his major championships before he was 34 and Hogan won all nine of his after he was 34. Sam Snead, the all-time leader in PGA victories, also was born in 1912.

After graduating from high school, Nelson got a job as a file clerk in the accounting office of the Fort Worth and Denver Railroad and played golf in his spare time.

He lost his job during the Great Depression but found work in 1931 with a bankers' magazine. The same year, he entered his first tournament, the National Amateur in Chicago, where he missed qualifying by one stroke. With jobs hard to find, he turned professional in 1932.

Nelson started out competing against Gene Sarazen and lived to see Tiger Woods, an era that went from hickory shafts to titanium heads.

He made an appearance each year at the Masters, joining Snead and Gene Sarazen in hitting the ceremonial first balls, and hosted the Byron Nelson Classic each May.

"I did not ever dream in my wildest imagination there would be as much money or that people would hit the ball so far," Nelson said in his 1997 interview with the AP.

"I only won $182,000 in my whole life," he said. "In 1937, I got fifth-place money at the British Open — $187 — and it cost me $3,000 to play because I had to take a one-month leave of absence from my club job to go."

As a hemophiliac, Nelson was excused from military service during World War II. But despite the weak fields, his accomplishments in the war years were astounding.

In 1944, he won 13 of the 23 tournaments he played. The following year he won a record 18 times in 31 starts, including 11 in a row — also a record. Nelson finished second seven times in 1945, was never out of the top 10 and at one point played 19 consecutive rounds under 70. His stroke average of 68.33 for the season is still the record.

"Any time you make a record that stands for 55 years, you've done pretty good," Nelson told the AP in 2000 when Woods was on a PGA Tour winning streak that reached six.

Asked in 1997 how the winning streak affected him financially, Nelson said: "Well, I got some wheaties, but not until after I had won seven or eight in a row, did I get them. And I got 200 bucks."

The attention on Nelson as the streak lengthened grew quicker than the money.

"There wasn't any pressure at first, but it pyramided as the string grew," Nelson remembered. "It got to be like an auction. The headlines would say, 'Nelson wins No. 5, can he make it 6?' or 'Who can stop Nelson?'"

He was voted AP Male Athlete of the Year in 1944 and 1945. Nelson's 52 PGA Tour victories — a mark tied by Woods this year — was fifth on the career list behind Snead, Jack Nicklaus, Hogan and Palmer. He was elected to the PGA Hall of Fame in 1953 and to the World Golf Hall of Fame in 1974.

In the 1960s, he became one of golf's early TV announcers.

Although Nelson continued to play in an occasional tournament after 1946, he retreated to his 673-acre ranch in Roanoke, Texas, and never returned to competitive golf full time.

Nelson developed a widely imitated "Texas style" swing that was upright and compact, unlike some of the unwieldy swings of early players.

"The mechanics of my swing were such that it required no thought," Nelson said. "It's like eating. You don't think to feed yourself. If you have to think about your swing it takes that much away from your scoring concentration."

Nelson, who tutored eight-time major championship winner Tom Watson, had a swing players envied.

"I once watched him hit 20 drivers off a fairway in practice, and the trajectory never varied," recalled Bob Toski, who toured with Nelson and became a famous teacher.

"And he could hit a 1-iron or a 2-iron that carried over 200 yards no more than 15 feet in the air," Toski said. "I've never seen anybody else hit the ball quite the way he did."

Asked in 1997 what made Woods special as a golfer, Nelson sounded as if he were describing his own swing.

"He has perfect balance," Nelson said. "His coordination from the feet up is all synchronized. And you've got to feel through your sight. He does that great."

Then, with a graceful demonstration of the part of the golf swing from the waist on the downswing to the waist on the follow through, Nelson said: "From here to here, you can't see anything because he moves so fast."

Beside the flowing swing, Nelson saw another similarity.

"I was taught to do the best I could possibly do," Nelson said. "When he hits a bad shot, he doesn't like it. He wants to do the best he can do and when he doesn't, he doesn't like it."

Important Notice from the Student Government Association Regarding Upcoming Special Elections:

Referendum to Increase Senators' Represented Constituents from 250 Students per Senator, to 500 Students per Senator:

Vote Wednesday & Thursday, 10/11 & 10/12
10am - 2pm & 5pm - 8pm
in all DCs & the Campus Center Concourse

SGA Senator Elections

Vote Wednesday & Thursday, 10/18 & 10/19
10am - 2pm & 5pm - 8pm
in all DCs & the Campus Center Concourse

To run as a SGA Senator, you must sign out a nomination form and collect 25 signatures from students from your residential area (students who live off-campus may also run and must collect signatures from other commuters).

Nominations are currently open. Nomination forms can be picked up in the Student Government Association office (420 Student Union) between 10am - 4pm, Monday through Friday. Completed nomination forms must be returned by 5pm on Thursday, 10/5.

For more information, contact:
Priyanka Pant, SGA Chancellor of Elections
Office Hours:
413.545.0341
sga@stuaf.umass.edu

Submit Your Comic
S'IL VOUS PLAIT
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Sudoku brought to you by andamo 256 • FOOD

3				4	2		7
		8	9					3
2						1
			7	6		4
9			2		4			6
		2		9	3
		3						1
1					7	6
	6		3	8				4

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Deadwood
6 Concentrate
10 Pub projectile
14 "Aida" or "Carmen"
15 Organic compound
16 Needle case
17 Kind of numeral
18 Conception
19 Consult 20 6th sense
21 Ballerina's skirt
22 Hassle to swallow?
25 Fine match
27 Hares it up
28 Stable dweller
30 Chest of drawers
32 "Quickly"
33 Alleviate
34 Mime mockers
38 Explore publicly
39 Museum purchases
40 Regular or high end
42 "Roses ... red"
43 Town leader
45 Corn units
47 Handhold
48 Centers
50 Nabisco cookie
51 Counsel
54 Meeting outline
58 Cargo carriers
61 Moderate
62 Playground
63 Feather tail
64 Terrific rates
65 Colorful boat
66 Fiction org.
67 Actress Verdugo
68 Wishes for a contest
69 Partners in comfort

DOWN
1 Fairway part
2 PR's successors
3 Fix a rotted tree
4 Pokemon, e.g.
5 Dance Comedy part
6 Sam Hall?
7 Tamales
8 Female deer
9 Ladies' cardholders
10 Penguin stamps
11 Lose focus, lower
12 Nice (with) generosity
13 Staunch (ward)
21 Happening to 24 Prayer ending
26 Type of bait
28 Lady Lindsay
29 Hammerdown's guide
31 Text again
35 Unsolved
36 Nagged, scolded
37 Ellis Island hero, Mario
39 Get up
41 Balance sheet item
44 Left off the list
46 Mickey Hearse?
47 George Burns part
49 Sister org.
51 Sun rises
52 Crime ad
53 The 4 Seasons season
55 Approaches
56 Foundation
60 Grade god of war
63 Gwinnett city
65 Hawaiian garland

THE HARP
FALL SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURS · Reggae All Stars No Cover!
FRI · Irish Seisiun
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the river 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate readers poll
ON MP & All Credit cards accepted
161 Sunderland Rd. (Rt. 9) Amherst
just north of the apartments
413-548-0000 www.theharp.net

Quote of the Day

"Stupidity, like hydrogen, is one of the basic building blocks of the universe."
—Frank Zappa

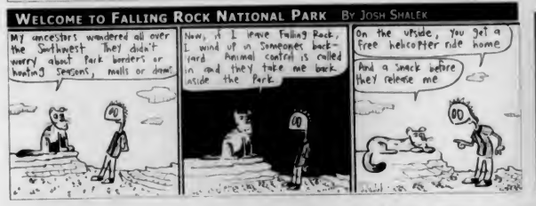
Read it & Weep By Travis Dandro

Wombat By Neil Bryer

THAT'S WHEN I REALIZED THAT THE MOVIES HAVE LIED TO US. I MEAN, WHERE ARE ALL THE FLYING CARS THEY PROMISED US?
UM, IT IS NOT SURE THAT WAS A PROMISE, NEIL
YEAH, IT WAS MORE LIKE WISHFUL THINKING
I HAD AN ORAL CONTRACT WITH "RACE TO THE FUTURE PART II" IF DOC BROWN CAN'T LIVE UP TO HIS END OF THE BARGAIN, THAT'S NOT MY FAULT

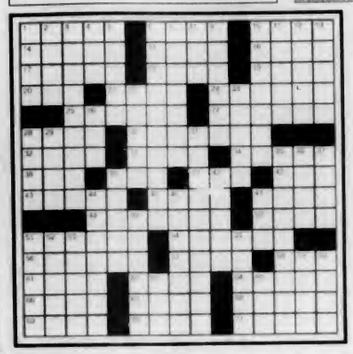
Labrats By Richard Martelly

Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek



My ancestors wandered all over the Southwest. They didn't worry about park borders or hunting seasons, walls or doors.
Now, if I move Falling Rock, I wind up in someone's backyard. Animal control is called in and they take me back outside the park.
On the upside, you get a free helicopter ride home.
And a snack before they release me.

THANK YOU FOR READING
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN



Best Bar Around
Seven Os
KARAOKE EVERY WEDNESDAY
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
Next To Cinemas Arts

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
There may be a difference between a compliment and a horrific lie.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Bring a slicker and galoshes to class. They're testing the sprinklers.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Join a Frat — They're going fast.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Sick? Stay Hydrated. Now that means no peeing.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
The size of your yearly salary will depend on praying to the right god.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
In the future you'll total your new space jet, but it will be the other drivers fault.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Your surname will someday be used to define "cumquat" in the dictionary.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Stay away from everything yellow and graveyards.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Look at how beautiful the arts page is today. God bless you.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Someone's been lying to you...

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Every little thing you do is magic... wait... no... YES, yes definitely.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You have a beautiful voice. Not for singing though; more like toothpaste commercials.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Be and Do something Bigger than yourself. Learn, Lead, and Succeed with Army ROTC Full Scholarships plus $5,00 yearly. Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Play Women's Ice Hockey! Tryouts for the UMass Women's Club Ice Hockey team are Sept. 26th 11pm-12:20 am and Sept. 29th 10 pm- 11:20 pm umasshockeymail@yahoo.com

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Work on campus & travel to other local colleges. Phone work in evenings Must be on the Phone. Base Pay $12/hr = Bonus & T/E Apply via Email with Resume Attached: bgillard@collegepro.com & contact by phone 603-589-6098

Students Wanted: Looking for energetic students to do computer work from your dorm room. Hours are Flexible. $12 per hour contact Matt 781-910-5053

Employment

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day. Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

Chicago Pizza Drivers wanted pay to $7.00 per hr. =tips. Weekends required. Cashiers pay up to $8.50 per hr. weekends required. Apply in person. 150 fearing St. Amherst 549-6073

Employment

Graphic Designer wanted. Undergraduate okay. Only requirements, talent and desire to work 5/10 hours/wk. Interesting Work. Competive pay. Resume and portfolio to bob@buenoysano.com

Grand Opening Sept 29th Skyplex Nightclub Presents it's hottest new concept. "Pure" "West Coast Nightlife Comes to Western Mass." Now Hiring: Bartenders, Barbacks, Cashiers, Cocktail Servers, Security Staff. Apply in person only. Monday September 25th and Tuesday September 26th, 2006 6-8pm, 10 Stearns Square, Springfield, MA www.skyplex.us

Entertainment

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

Services

Pregnancy Testing. HIV Testing. Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health. 27 Pray Street. Amherst. 548-9992.

Need help filling out Immigration forms? Do you want advice on arranging documents for filing with the INS? Contact the Student Legal Services office for help. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Publish or perish! Need to be writing but aren't? I can help with motivation, discipline, and support. Dr Ange DiBenedetto 5494145

Travel

Spring Break 2007 Celebration 20th anniversary w/ SunSplash Free Trip on 12 before Nov. 1 Free Meals & Parties. Group Discounts 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

Tutor Needed

Disability Student seeking Graduate Student with excellent writing skill to tutor at $10 an hour 582-0799

Submit your classified online at www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen march

UMass thumps Siena to notch its third win of the 2006 season

By Joe Melone
COLLEGIAN STAFF

UMass	4
Siena	0

The Massachusetts field hockey team (3-7) ended its four-game skid with a 4-0 victory over the hapless Siena Saints (0-6) under the Garber Field lights on Tuesday evening.

Desperate for something to build on heading into Friday's matchup against Syracuse, the Minutewomen welcomed the return of the five players suspended from last Saturday's match against Connecticut.

The Maroon and White took it to Siena from the onset, out-shooting the overmatched Saints, 36-7, and recording 14 penalty corners while yielding just three.

Junior forward Erin O'Brien kicked off the scoring, slamming home a penalty corner setup beautifully by junior forward Kristina DoRosario and junior midfielder Rachel Mervine.

"We practice corners everyday," UMass coach Patty Shea said. "So we really needed to put ourselves under the gun to be able to draw corners and score off of them."

O'Brien was brilliant in every aspect of Tuesday's game, intercepting several Siena passes and setting her teammates up for quality scoring chances.

The junior captain has really established herself as a sort of "field-general," according to Shea. She would go on to score two more times and record her first collegiate hat trick, the first at any level for the defender.

The game was strikingly similar to Saturday's contest against UConn. However, this time the Minutewomen played the role of aggressor as the Saints could muster just seven shots, all handled by freshman goalkeeper Sarah Williams who recorded her first career shutout in just her second career start.

"I thought Sarah played excellent. She made some great saves," Shea said. The only real test for Williams came 10 minutes into the second half. She

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 9

O'Brien hat trick silences the Saints in 4-0 win at Garber

By J.M. Friedman
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Under the bright lights at Garber Field, the Massachusetts field hockey team dominated an overmatched Siena Saints team to get back in the win column.

While the chilly fall night reminded the 200-plus in attendance that the Pioneer Valley tends to skip transitional seasons, the Maroon and White (2-7) needed a transition of its own coming off four straight losses.

After suffering a 6-0 pummeling by UConn in the home-opener on Saturday - a game that saw five players sit for an undisclosed violation of team rules, coupled with the loss of sophomore forward Erin Parker to a broken leg - the Minutewomen were in dire need of leadership and a victory.

On Tuesday night, they got both. Junior back and team captain Erin O'Brien registered the second hat trick of the season for UMass, while freshman goalkeeper Sarah Williams notched a shutout in her first collegiate start in goal. The Minutewomen blanked the Saints, 4-0.

It's not often that an individual performance besides the goalkeepers overshadows a shutout, but that was the case last night against Siena.

O'Brien stole the show, controlling play defensively with several key interceptions while showcasing an offensive prowess highlighted by a powerful and accurate shot that found the back of the net on three occasions.

O'Brien is a leader for the Minutewomen both on and off the field. On Tuesday night she played nearly the entire game, and at times seemed to be on a different level both physically and mentally.

Controlling play with and without possession of the ball, UMass coach Patty Shea compared O'Brien's role on the team to a field general, while O'Brien favored the catcher position as an analogy.

"You're kind of directing everybody in front of you," O'Brien said.

See O'BRIEN on page 9

Kristian Arez / Collegian

Katelyn Orlando (No. 3) and Christine Rodgers (No. 2) helped the Minutewomen to their third win on the season under the lights last night.

Football or futbol: A viewer's dilemma?

Danny Picard

Are you ready for some futbol?

No, not the game that takes over the lives of Americans every Sunday afternoon, the game that takes over the world once every four years, everywhere but the U.S. that is . . . until now.

Futbol – or as we call it here in America, soccer – is growing.

Like it or not, the 2006 World Cup was the most popular event in our country. ESPN/ABC covered every game of the tournament, and as a result, the ratings went through the roof. Each game saw an average audience of 3.2 million viewers, increasing the U.S. audience by 112 percent when compared to the 2002 World Cup ratings.

Americans finally gave soccer a chance in 2006. But will the interest continue to grow?

The 10,000 people that watched the final game between France and Italy at Boston's City Hall Plaza would tell you 'yes'. But even they must have their doubts when tuning into a New England Revolution game.

Major League Soccer is just not the same. There are no jam-packed stadiums, no out-of-control crowds, and the talent level in America's version of professional soccer is laughable when compared to that of the top European premier leagues.

The MLS does not give us the pleasure of watching the likes of Ronaldo, Zidane, Beckham, and Ronaldinho. In fact, it comes nowhere close.

Watching the Revolution play the Red Bulls is like hitting up your nearest rectory and cheering on grandma as she tries to out-duel the other elderly women on your street in a classic game of bingo.

No thanks.

That doesn't mean we should stop caring about the game entirely. And recent history shows that we won't. "We," speaking of the wonderful country that is the U.S.A.

The 2006 World Cup has opened the eyes of a country to a sport that hasn't really changed at all. Soccer has always been the same low-scoring affair. It has just been marketed in a more audience-related fashion as of late. Some of those examples have been shown in the television, video game, and clothing industries this year.

While ESPN/ABC was able to cover every second of the event this summer, its best marketing scheme was shown in its commercials. It was able to use Bono in an effort to grab the attention of those who may not have liked soccer, but enjoyed listening to the music of U2.

"It's a simple thing: just a ball and a goal," Bono said in a World Cup commercial to the background music of 'City of Blinding Lights.' "But once every four years, that simple thing drastically changes the world. It closes the schools; it closes the shops; it closes the city, it stops a war. A simple ball fills the passion and pride of nations. It gives people everywhere something to hope for. It gives countries respect where respect is in short supply, and achieves more than the politicians ever could. Once every four years, a ball does the impossible. And if history means anything, the world as we know it, is about to change."

I couldn't have said it better myself. In a country where baseball, basketball, and the "other" football are dominant, soccer has taken a backseat.

But today, you will find that FIFA 2006 is one of, if not the most popular video games on the market. Also, tell me what stores were selling Manchester United jerseys before the 2002 World Cup?

You're probably asking yourself: why is this being talked about now?

It's because your beloved Massachusetts men's soccer team is turning heads. The Minutemen are sporting a 6-2-2 record heading into Atlantic 10 play this weekend, and expectations are high.

Chances are you haven't been to Rudd Field to see your former No. 22 team in the nation continue its dominance. Why? Because Americans love football, not futbol.

At least, until now.

Sure, the love for the pigskin will always be prevalent in our culture. But I'm giving you fair warning. Jump on the soccer bandwagon now, before it's too late.

So are you ready for some futbol?

I hope so . . . because the soccer revolution is underway.

Danny Picard is a Collegian Columnist

Bonaventure is tops in Atlantic 10 golf

By Michael King
Collegian Correspondent

On Sept. 25, the St. Bonaventure men's golf team won the SBU Keenan Invitational in Olean, NY, besting 14 other schools. The Bonnies posted a total score of 578, three strokes better than second-place finisher Siena.

Junior Andy Whalen was St. Bonaventure's top golfer, shooting a five over par score of 145 (74-71) during the two-round tournament.

On the same day, George Washington golfed its way to victory in the Rehoboth Fall Invitational in Rehoboth Beach, Delaware.

The hosting Colonials finished in the top two spots, playing with a split squad. The "B team" defeated the "A team" by one stroke. This victory marks the third time George Washington has won the tournament in its six-year existence.

Freshman Tyler Wendelken was the team medalist in the 36-hole tournament. His score of 142 was second overall among 65 other competitors.

On the George Washington Athletics website, GW coach Scott Allen said, "I'm very happy with the way our guys played. I came into the tournament hoping to have seven players finish in the Top 15 and we wound up having seven players among the Top 19 that included a pair of freshmen in the top three."

A-10 rival La Salle was among the 13 teams the Colonials defeated. La Salle placed 7th overall.

Golfer of the Week

Senior Chris Reedman of Saint Joseph's was named Atlantic 10 Golfer of the Week. Reedman shot scores of 71 and 73 during the 36 holes of the Towson Invitational on Sept. 18-19. The senior led the Hawks to a second-place finish and his score of 144 was eighth best overall in the field of 76 golfers.

Rookie of the Week

Another Hawk player, freshman Cole Wilcox, was named Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week. The Gladwyn, PA, native finished in 17th place at the Towson Invitational with a score of 147 (73-74) ... Three Xavier golfers lead the league in stroke average this season. Senior Jason Kokrak is first, averaging 68.0 strokes per round, followed by Senior John Streibich and freshman Alan Glynn with averages of 70.0 and 70.3, respectively ... Kokrak also owns the low round of the season with a 65.

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

Dan Marino (420) and Brett Favre (400) are the only quarterbacks in NFL history to have thrown for 400 or more career touchdowns. Fran Tarkenton is third with 342.

Spiess and Pozar lead UMass to UConn

Senior Michelle Spiess and junior Masha Pozar reached the quarterfinals last week at the Cissie Leary Invitational tournament.

By Mike Walsh
Collegian Correspondent

Senior Michelle Spiess and junior Masha Pozar both reached the quarterfinals this past weekend at the prestigious Cissie Leary Invitational, which was hosted by the University of Pennsylvania.

Facing off against top competition from across the country, the Minutewomen turned in very successful performances.

In Singles A, Spiess began her weekend by knocking off Amanda Avdivsan of host Pennsylvania, 6-1, 6-4. In Round 2 action, the senior handled her next foe, Mariana Spilea of Minnesota, in a similar fashion by winning a fairly tight match, 6-3, 6-4.

The victory pushed Spiess into the quarterfinals where she faced No. 3-seeded Milena Kachar of Columbia. Kachar eliminated last year's Atlantic 10 Performer of the Year, 6-2, 6-3.

Spiess had been off the courts nearly all summer so she is still regaining her stroke back. In fact, her only practice has come in the past few weeks, so reaching the quarters is quite an impressive feat.

A-10 competition will be better off avoiding this young star out of Germany after she has had more practice time under her belt.

Masha Pozar represented Massachusetts in Singles B where, just like her teammate, played well enough to advance to the quarters in Round 1. Pozar was given a little scare from Angela Hendry of Columbia but was able to regain her composure and win the match 7-6 (7-5), 6-2.

Following her round one victory, Pozar really stepped up her game in defeating Lindsay Risebrough of Minnesota, 6-4, 6-2.

In quarterfinals play, Pozar was matched up against a fellow A-10 rival, freshman Radka Feraneova from Temple. Pozar was able to keep the match close but in the end Feraneova had the upper hand as she walked away from the match with a 6-4, 6-1 victory.

The UMass duo also took part in doubles play where they were able to win their first match against a team of Angela Dipastina from Ohio State and Elizabeth Googe from Cornell. In the second round, Spiess and Pozar were not as successful, as they were knocked off in a very tight match by the freshman combo of Wong and Tansil of Pennsylvania 8-6.

The Massachusetts team will face off against Connecticut this afternoon on the road. Both Spiess and Pozar saw success when they faced the Huskies last fall. Spiess was victorious in No. 1 singles and doubles, where she was paired up with freshman Stephanie Gimenez. Pozar took the crown for No. 1 singles when she last took on UConn.

Spiess and Pozar will surely anchor what it a very strong UMass team. Their performances against some of the best competition around this past weekend will hopefully be a sign of things to come. The pair teamed up in doubles action last year on a few occasions and could become a force to be reckoned with in A-10 play.

The rest of the Minutewomen team have yet to see much action this fall so the match against UConn this afternoon will provide a good test for UMass coach Judy Dixon's squad.

T.O. REJECTS SUICIDE REPORT PAGE 10

TOOL TO PERFORM AT TWITTER CENTER PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 74 LO: 57 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 2006

MtvU, GE, and students work for environment

By Stella Cernak
Collegian Correspondent

Recently, mtvU, MTV's 24-hour college network, and General Electric (GE) have combined forces to work towards a common goal — a cleaner environment.

GE and mtvU have compiled a contest in which college students must put their minds to work outside the classroom to help improve the environment both locally and worldwide.

The contest, an essential part of mtvU and GE's "Ecomagination challenge," is seeking out contest entries that utilize creative and ground-breaking tactics to "green" their campus.

The student with the most innovative project will receive $25,000 to transform his or her project from idea to action.

The winner's school does not make out empty-handed, either. The school will receive an mtvU Earth Day concert in spring 2007 with performances by some of this year's top artists.

"It's this kind of fresh thinking by tomorrow's leaders that will help us tackle our toughest environmental chal-

See MTV on page 3

UMass aims to preserve seafood

Dining Services at the University of Massachusetts is participating in a national effort to support seafood sustainability. A kick-off event is today and will include a lecture on sustainable seafood by alumnus Mark Lussier at 7 p.m. in the Berkshire Dining Commons.

Lussier is a conservationist and seafood buyer for North Coast Seafoods, the largest seafood distributor in the nation with headquarters in New Bedford.

Dining Services has also joined forces with Seafood Watch, a program of the Monterey Bay Aquarium in California that is designed to inform consumers of the importance of purchasing sustainable seafood — fish that comes from sources that can continue to exist over a long period of time without causing damage to a species or the environment.

Overfishing and farm fishing that pollutes surrounding waters are two problems that Seafood Watch seeks to solve by urging consumers to buy certain types of fish that are known to be plentiful, well managed and caught in environmentally friendly ways.

"Supporting overall sustainability is good for the long run — for our students and for the environment," says Ken Toong, director of Dining Services. "We feel as a large public, land-grant university it is important for us to be proactive and to take leadership roles with issues concerning dining and the environment."

Sustainable seafood that will now be served at the dining commons includes wild salmon, haddock and Alaskan or Pacific cod. Besides sustainability, dining services has also implemented fair trade and buy local programs in an effort to serve better quality, environmentally friendly food, Toong says.

—UMass News Office

Local stores feeling effects of E-Coli outbreak

Dining Services at the University of Massachusetts has pulled spinach from its menus. "Due to the recommendations from the FDA, we will not serve spinach until further notice" have been posted in the DC's.

By Elizabeth Beamer
Collegian Correspondent

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) released a warning to all consumers about the outbreak of E. coli O157:H7 on September 14, advising consumers to not eat bagged fresh spinach, and leaving local companies like Trader Joes in Amherst to pull the item off their shelves indefinitely.

E. coli can cause Hemolytic Uremic Syndrome (HUS), a form of kidney failure and blood disorder, often with bloody stools. While HUS most commonly affects young children and the elderly, it can lead to serious kidney damage and even death.

So far, cases of E. coli from spinach have been reported in Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Maryland, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Mexico, Nevada, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Utah, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin and Wyoming, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The death occurred in Wisconsin.

The outbreak was linked to products sold by Natural Selection Foods LLC. The connection was made by patient accounts of what they had eaten before they became sick.

The FDA stated that the outbreak had not been isolated to only Natural Selection Foods.

Spinach is sold under many Natural Selection Food brands, including Earthbound Farm, Dole, Green Harvest, Rave Spinach, Ready Pac and Trader Joe's. Supermarkets and restaurants nationwide have pulled spinach from their shelves and menus. This seems to be the best way to stop the outbreak, because rinsing off spinach is ineffective in killing E. coli.

E. coli typically lives in the intestines of cattle and other animals. It is usually spread through the contamination of fecal material. When contaminated manure is used as fertilizer on crops where the product being grown is consumed raw, like spinach, the product is then contaminated.

Many local grocery stores such Trader Joe's and Whole Foods have stopped selling spinach and anything containing spinach.

See SPINACH on page 3

Red Bull's 'Crashed Ice' heads to UMass

Energy drink company Red Bull is holding open tryouts for "Crashed Ice" in the Mullins Center at the University of Massachusetts, a competition that combines ice hockey, speed skating and boarder-cross in a no-holds-bar skating competition that asks skaters to scramble through hoops, gap jumps and beams in heats of four dressed in full hockey gear.

The event will kick-off Saturday, September 30, at 2:30 p.m.

At the end of the day, one will rule as Red Bull Crashed Ice Champion, splitting the prize purse of $16,000 with the other top finishers. The first 100 athletes to register online for the Amherst tryouts will get the chance to prove their speed and skills on ice skates as they fight for a place at Red Bull Crashed Ice.

During the tryouts, skaters will be split into Men, Women and Collegiate brackets with the skaters advancing from each. These skaters will join 15 pre-seeded international athletes Nov. 11 for the main event in downtown Boston to participate in a downhill race on a 1,100-ft. ice course built in Boston's City Hall Plaza.

For more information and to register, go to www.redbullcrashedice.com.

Matt Bellinvou

Red Bull's "Crashed Ice" will kickoff Saturday, September 30, at 2:30 p.m. in the Mullins Center at the University of Massachusetts.

Gunman holds hostages at Colorado school

By Chase Squires
Associated Press

BAILEY, Colo.—A gunman walked into the high school in this mountain town Wednesday, fired at least two shots and took six people hostage, authorities said. Hundreds of students were evacuated in a scene that recalled the horror at Columbine just a short drive away.

There were no immediate reports of injuries. Four hostages were released, but two girls remained inside the Platte Canyon High School more than three hours after the gunman arrived, said Jacki Kelley, spokeswoman for the Jefferson County sheriff.

The gunman was believed to be an adult. Kelley did not release his name or identify the hostages, but said the girls were believed to be unharmed.

Authorities sent a bomb squad and SWAT team to the high school.

The evacuation of the high school and a nearby middle school came after a loud noise, said Jan Howard, a secretary to the superintendent of schools.

"I don't know what the noise was," she said. She said students were taken to a safe location, but predicted parents would not be able to immediately reach them because the only highway in and out of town had been shut down.

Jefferson County authorities are all too familiar with school attacks: The sheriff's office handled the 1999 attack at Columbine High School in which two students killed 13 people before taking their own lives.

"I'm just terrified. I'm terrified," said Sherry Husen, whose son plays on the high school football team and was told not to return to school from his part-time job. "I know so many kids in that school."

Parents pressed authorities for details but had little information on their children.

Bill Twyford said he received a text message from his 15-year-old son, Billy, a student at the high school, at about 11:30 a.m. It said: "Hey there, there's a gun hijacking in school right now. I'm fine, bad situation though."

Twyford said he had not heard from his son since then and was not sure if he was among the hostages.

Students from the two evacuated schools were taken to an elementary school for a head count. Ambulances were parked in the end zone of the school's football field.

Michael Owens, who has one son at the middle school and another in the high school, said the anxiety was worse because of the memory of Columbine.

"It's like an earthquake," he said.

Tom Mauser, whose son Daniel was among the students slain at Columbine, said: "Any adult who holds kids hostage is reprehensible."

The schools are in a narrow, winding canyon carved by the South Platte River about 35 miles southwest of Denver. They have an enrollment of about 770 students, with 460 in the high school.

Husen's family moved to Bailey from suburban Denver about 14 years ago.

"We moved up here for the mountain solitude, and I just never thought this would happen in this school, but it happens everywhere," she said.

Other schools in the area were put in lockdown, meaning students would not be allowed to leave until administrators determined it was safe.

Unidentified parents walk from a staging area and head to a nearby elementary school in Bailey, Colo. on Sept. 27,2006. A gunman took at least five people hostage in a Colorado school, prompting the evacuation.

Minn. Police find drunk three-year-old

A 14-year-old boy was arrested after his 3-year-old sister was found passed out drunk from hard liquor at a home, police said.

The girl was unconscious when she was taken to a hospital after her sister called police Monday night, police spokesman Lt. Greg Reinhardt said. "The child could have easily died," he said.

She was recovering and had been released to a children's home by Wednesday morning.

The girl's teenage brother was arrested Tuesday on suspicion of child endangerment, Reinhardt said. He said neglect or abuse appeared to have caused the girl's condition, rather than accidental alcohol poisoning.

Police would not release further details on the boy and any court proceedings because he is a juvenile.

The girl's blood alcohol level was 0.12 percent, authorities said. Minnesota law considers drivers drunk when their blood alcohol level is 0.08 percent.

About one ounce of 40-proof liquor would cause that blood alcohol level in a 3-year-old child of average weight, about 28 pounds, Kirk Hughes of the Minnesota Poison Control System said one ounce would be about two mouthfuls for such a child.

Reinhardt said police don't know what kind of hard liquor the girl drank.

Reinhardt said the girl's mother was not home at the time.

—Associated Press

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 18
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherel Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jamison Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Virginia Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Sean Duram
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Rob Greenfield
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Penn
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Theresa Barba
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smuller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dollanton
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT SPORTS Danny Picard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jon Pelland
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC SERVICES. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATED ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER CAME TO ALSIE LAY, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCAN IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1954 AND THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN WAS REDESIGNED AND LAUNCHED JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 4:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Chris Martin, Sarah Belanger

Fox news chief blasts Clinton

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Fox News chief Roger Ailes says former President Clinton's response to Chris Wallace's question about going after Osama bin Laden represents "an assault on all journalists."

Ailes said Clinton had a "wild overreaction" in the interview, broadcast on "Fox News Sunday." Hundreds of thousands of people subsequently watched clips over the Internet, with Fox foes rallying behind Clinton.

"If you can't sit there and answer a question from a professional, mild-mannered, respectful reporter like Chris Wallace, then the hatred for journalists is showing," Ailes said in an interview with The Associated Press on Wednesday. "All journalists need to raise their eyebrows and say, 'hold on a second.'"

Wallace has said he asked Clinton about bin Laden partly because of ABC's recent docudrama "The Path to 9/11," widely criticized as full of falsehoods by former Clinton administration officials for depicting a bungling effort at going after the terrorist leader.

Wallace asked: "I understand that hindsight is always 20/20, but the question is, why didn't you connect the dots and put him out of business?"

Clinton said his administration did more than President Bush to go after bin Laden before the terrorist attacks. While Clinton said Wallace's question was legitimate, he called it a "conservative hit job" and accused Fox of not being similarly tough on Bush.

Clinton aides later said they considered the question an attack.

"They're out there saying [Wallace] was savage, he sandbagged [Clinton], he was taking orders on the question," Ailes said. "Chris Wallace has never taken orders on questions in his life. There's never been a discussion of that. I frankly think the assault on Chris Wallace is an assault on all journalists."

Barbara Cochran, president of the Radio and Television News Directors Association, said she worked with Wallace at NBC's "Meet the Press," where she was once executive producer. Wallace, who left ABC News to become "Fox News Sunday" host in 2003, was always a professional who asked tough questions and was not partisan, she said.

But Cochran said she would not comment on the larger question of what this meant for all journalists.

The liberal media watchdog Fairness and Accuracy in Reporting, which has repeatedly criticized Fox News Channel for favoring Republican and conservative points of view, said it could see why Clinton got frustrated. Steve Rendell, FAIR senior media analyst, said it appeared Wallace was trying to cut off Clinton's answer

Local high schools see jump in MCAS scores

By Melissa Trujillo
Associated Press

BOSTON — Nontraditional schools filled the list of the 10 schools with greatest improvements on the yearly MCAS test scores, with the top five in the Boston area, according to school and district scores released Wednesday by the Department of Education.

Three of the five high schools that most improved make up the Dorchester Education Complex Academy of Public Service, Noonan Business Academy and Tech Boston Academy. During the 2003-04 school year, Dorchester High School was split into the three smaller academies, each with a distinct focus.

The Noonan Business Academy increased its 10th grade math scores by 38 percentage points and its English language arts scores by 33 percentage points for the state's largest gains, according to the Department of Education.

Boston Community Leadership and New Mission High School in Boston's Roxbury neighborhood also were in the top five. The other most-improved high schools included technical and vocational high schools and charter schools from across the state.

Last week, education officials said 84 percent of students in the class of 2008 passed both the English language arts and math exams in 2006 — up from 81 percent in 2005 and 68 percent in 2001, the first year 10th graders took the test as a graduation requirement. Students must score a 220 out of 280 to pass the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System test, which is considered needing improvement.

House approves legislation on terror detainees

By Anne Plummer Flaherty
Associated Press

National Security Advisor Stephen Hadley, left, talks with Senate Armed Service Committee Chairmen Sen. John Warner, Sept. 26,2006.

The House approved legislation Wednesday giving the Bush administration authority to interrogate and prosecute terrorism detainees, moving President Bush to the edge of a pre-election victory with a key piece of his anti-terror plan.

The mostly party-line 253-168 vote in the Republican-run House came shortly after senators agreed to limit debate on their own nearly identical bill, all but assuring its passage on Thursday.

Republican leaders are hoping to work out differences and send Bush a final version before leaving town this weekend to campaign for the Nov. 7 congressional elections.

For nearly two weeks the GOP have been embarrassed as the White House and rebellious Republican senators have fought publicly over whether Bush's plan would give him too much authority. But they struck a compromise last Thursday, and Republicans are hoping approval will bolster their effort to cast themselves as strong on national security, a marquee issue this election year.

House Majority Leader John Boehner, R-Ohio, all but dared Democrats to vote against the legislation.

"Will my Democrat friends work with Republicans to give the president the tools he needs to continue to stop terrorist attacks before they happen, or will they vote to force him to fight the terrorists with one arm tied behind his back?" he asked just before members cast their ballots.

Democrats opposed the bill by about a five-to-one margin, with many wanting to tone down the powers it would give to Bush and the limits it would impose on terror-war suspects' abilities to defend themselves during trials.

Said Dennis Kucinich, D-Ohio: "This bill is everything we don't believe in."

The legislation would establish a military court system to prosecute terror suspects, a response to the Supreme Court ruling last June that Congress' blessing was necessary. While the bill would grant defendants more legal rights than they had under the administration's old system, it nevertheless would eliminate rights usually granted in civilian and military courts.

The measure also provides extensive definitions of war crimes such as torture, rape and biological experiments — but gives Bush broad authority to decide which other techniques U.S. interrogators can legally use. The provisions are intended to protect CIA interrogators from being prosecuted for war crimes.

With elections just weeks away, the debate over the legal handling of terrorists was often partisan with some Democrats contending the bill would approve torture.

"All Americans want to hold terrorists accountable, but if we try to redefine the nature of torture, whisk people into secret detention facilities and use secret evidence to convict them in special courts, our actions do in fact embolden our enemies," said Rep. Jim Moran, D-Va.

Others vehemently opposed language that would give the president wide latitude to interpret international standards of prisoner treatment and bar detainees from going to federal court to protest their treatment and detention under the right of habeas corpus. Supporters of the bill have said eliminating habeas corpus was intended to keep detainees from flooding federal courts with appeals.

The bill also gives the president the ability to interpret international standards for prisoner treatment when an act does not fall under the definition of a war crime, such as rape and torture.

"It gives too much leeway to the president," said Rep. John Murtha, D-Pa. "And I think when you tamper with the Geneva Conventions ... you hurt our ability to protect the troops."

Republicans said time was critical so that terrorists could be brought to justice.

Lawmakers shrugged off multiple disruptions from citizens watching the floor debate from inside the Capitol.

As the House finished its bill, Senate leaders agreed to limit debate on their version of the measure. Four Democrats and Republican Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania were given opportunities to offer amendments in the Senate, but all were expected to be rejected.

"Until Congress passes this legislation, terrorists ... cannot be tried for war crimes in the United States and the United States risks fighting a blind war without adequate intelligence," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn. "That's simply unacceptable."

WHERE IMAGINATION MEETS INNOVATION

UMass Amherst Fine Arts Center Series 2006-2007 Season

Mombasa Party and the Royal Drummers of Burundi
Friday, Sept 29 at 8pm
A get-together of some of East Africa's most well-known taarab artists joined by one of the greatest percussion ensembles in the world- the Royal Drummers of Burundi. Their live performances are the ultimate African drum experience.

SITI Company
Midsummer Night's Dream
Tuesday & Wednesday, October 3&4 at 7:30 pm
This production is born in the land of John Steinbeck's Grapes of Wrath. The enchantment appears as if by magic via the imagination of people who have nothing to share but their hopes and dreams.
Bowker Auditorium
Funded in part by the Expeditions program of the New England Foundation for the Arts

Sean Jones
Thursday, October 19 at 7:30 pm
Jones is steeped heavily in 21st century modern bop. He is joined by his quartet for this performance. Don't miss this hot, new trumpet sensation.
Bowker Auditorium
Part of the Ninth Annual Billy Taylor Jazz Residency

TICKETS ARE ON SALE NOW!
TICKETS ARE ONLY $37, $30, $15 FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS
UMass Amherst FINE ARTS CENTER
CALL 545-2511 OR 1-800-999-UMAS WWW.FINEARTSCENTER.COM

Thursday, September 28, 2006
Sustainable Seafood Dinner
Enjoy the Harvest from the Sea...
Make Choices for Healthy Oceans!
Learn about Sustainable Seafood
Join Mark Lussier (UMass '82) in the Private Dining Room at Berkshire DC from 7:00 to 7:30 pm
Lussier is a Conservationist & Seafood buyer for North Coast Seafoods (the largest seafood distributor in the Northeast)
There will be refreshments & door prizes.
Menu Featuring:
Wild Salmon with Thai Green Curry Sauce
Battered Pacific Cod with Tartar Sauce
Chicken with New England Cranberry Stuffing
Harvest Stuffed Acorn Squash (local)
Nature Burger
Falafel Pocket Sandwich
Fresh Carrots (local)
Fresh summer squash (local)
Rice Pilaf
Cole Slaw (local)
Boston Cream Pie
Pura Vita Coffee
(Fair Trade and Organic)
Sampling by Australis Aquaculture
Sustainable Seafood DVDs will be shown in all DCs.
www.umass.edu/diningservices
All DCs from 5-9pm

Testosterone may kill brain cells

By Maggie Fox
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Too much testosterone can kill brain cells, researchers said on Tuesday in a finding that may help explain why steroid abuse can cause behavior changes like aggressiveness and suicidal tendencies.

Tests on brain cells in lab dishes showed that while a little of the male hormone is good, too much of it causes cells to self-destruct in a process similar to that seen in brain illnesses such as Alzheimer's.

"Too little testosterone is bad, too much is bad but the right amount is perfect," said Barbara Ehrlich of Yale University in Connecticut, who led the study.

Testosterone is key to the development, differentiation and growth of cells and is produced by both men and women, although men produce about 20 times more of the hormone.

It can also be abused, and recent scandals have involved athletes who use the hormone, or steroids that turn into testosterone in the body, for an unfair advantage.

"Other people have shown that high levels of steroid can cause behavioral changes," Ehrlich said in a telephone interview.

"We can show that when you have high levels of steroids, you have high testosterone and that can destroy the nerve cells. We know that when you lose brain cells you lose function."

Ehrlich's team tried the same thing with the "female" hormone estrogen, just to be fair.

"We were surprised, but it actually looks like estrogen is neuroprotective. If anything, there is less cell death in the presence of estrogen," she said.

Writing in the Journal of Biological Chemistry, Ehrlich and colleagues said their findings meant people should think twice about supplementing with testosterone, even if it does build muscle mass and aid recovery after exercise.

"These effects of testosterone on neurons will have long-term effects on brain function," they wrote.

"Next time a muscle-bound guy in a sports car cuts you off on the highway, don't get mad — just take a deep breath and realize that it might not be his fault," Ehrlich said in a statement.

The cells die via a process called apoptosis, also known as cell suicide or programmed cell death.

"Apoptosis is an important thing for the brain — the brain needs to weed out some of the cells. But when it happens too frequently, you lose too many cells and causes problems."

UM officials set to break ground

An official groundbreaking for the Studio Arts Building will take place on Tuesday, Oct. 3 at 1:30 p.m.

To accommodate the groundbreaking ceremony, the Stockbridge Access Road will be closed in the afternoon on Monday, Oct. 2, and will remain closed until approximately 6 p.m. on Tuesday, Oct. 3.

Access to Stockbridge Road will be available via the Mornill Service Drive north of the Franklin Dining Commons. In addition, the southernmost portion of Lot 63, west of Fernald Hall, will be closed as of Sunday night, October 1, and will reopen at approximately 6 p.m. October 3.

—Jim Hunt, Communications Manager Facilities & Campus Planning, University of Massachusetts

The Stockbridge Access Road will be closed in the afternoon on Monday, Oct. 2 to 6p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 3.

Contest asks students to help environment

MTV from page 1

lenges — developing solutions that are broad, meaningful and long-lasting. MtvU has a unique understanding of the power of this audience and we are pleased to partner with the network on this innovative program," said Lorraine Bolsinger, GE Vice President for Ecomagination.

Stephen Friedman, General Manager of mtvU, said, "GE has taken a leadership role in pioneering innovative environmental solutions, and we're proud to help them partner with the audience that will pioneer the eco-breakthroughs of tomorrow."

It is mtvU's voice and connection with the college-age audience which provides GE with a connection that may help mobilize the betterment of our environment, one of GE's goals.

As Freidman states, "A big mission of mtvU is not to entertain, but to act as a laboratory and a resource for college students. We heard that the environment is one of the top issues that they care about. They want to make their voice heard and we want to give them the channel as a megaphone to spread that message on a national level."

College students, Freidman suggests, are a crucial tool to spreading change and making an impact towards solving the environmental issues of today.

"We have seen the big environmental issues affecting us in a global way," said Freidman. "It's inspiring that college students are leading the charge, they are the engine for change."

An mtvU poll revealed that as people across the globe are becoming more aware of the environmental changes linked to global warming and other related issues, our generation has increasingly seen environmental awareness as a personal responsibility.

Local supermarkets forced to pull spinach off shelves

SPINACH from page 1

Trader Joe's in the Hampshire Mall Plaza in Hadley has pulled everything containing fresh spinach, including their mixed salads, sushi rolls and pre-made sandwiches, according to full-timer Jennifer Rivers. Trader Joe's is still able to sell items with frozen spinach because it is frozen and the package dates were before the recent outbreak.

Rivers said some people have brought back pre-packaged spinach they bought and were able to receive a full refund.

The Panera Bread located at 351 Russell St. in Hadley used spinach in their field greens, which is used in some of their sandwiches and salads. Management at Panera Bread made the decision to begin ordering field greens without spinach after learning about the E. coli outbreak on the news. The field greens without spinach is a little more expensive, but Panera Bread is also planning to wait until the FDA says spinach is safe again and the general public feels safe to consume spinach before adding it back in their field greens, according to assistant manager Jon Dasilva.

Dining Services at the University of Massachusetts has pulled spinach from its menus and has posted a blog about spinach on its Web site (http://www.umass.edu/diningservices/). Although much of the spinach used by dining services at this time of year comes from local farmers, signs reading "Due to the recommendations from the FDA, we will not serve spinach until further notice" have been posted.

"We do not want to take any chances and we will not serve any spinach until FDA officials say it is safe to consume," stated Ken Toong, Director of Dining Services.

On average, students and customers consume about 800 pounds of spinach weekly at dining commons around campus. It is served in the salad bar daily, in side dishes two to three times weekly, and in hot entrees once weekly at the dining halls. Dining Services has replaced its use of spinach with kale and other leafy greens.

"We understand that spinach is an all-time favorite health food for some students, but we need to be on the safe side, since we serve over 30,000 meals daily. Our goal is to we provide our customers with a variety of high quality foods in a safe and pleasant environment. Food safety is our number one concern," stated Toong.

The FDA urges anyone that experiences symptoms of E. coli, must commonly bloody diarrhea to see a doctor immediately.

The O157 type of E. coli usually goes undiagnosed because labs don't test for it. Therefore, it is important to seek medical attention if you have experienced any of the symptoms in order to be tested specially for E. coli O157:H7. Most people affected with this strain of E. coli usually recover within five to 10 days without treatment.

Mona Lisa may have been pregnant

By Rob Gillies
Associated Press

Researchers studying the 'Mona Lisa' say she may have been pregnant or had just given birth during her pose.

PARIS — Maybe they should call it the "Mama Lisa." Researchers studying 3-D images of the "Mona Lisa" say she was probably either pregnant or had just given birth when she sat for Leonardo da Vinci's 16th-century masterpiece. The clue was something she wore.

Scans turned up evidence of a fine, gauzy veil around Mona Lisa's shoulders — a garment women of the Italian Renaissance wore when they were expecting, a leading French museum researcher, Michel Menu, told The Associated Press in an interview Wednesday.

As the painting aged, the veil darkened. The thick, dark varnish on the work made it hard even to know what color her dress is — it has been described as everything from black to brown to green. A piece of fabric draped over Mona Lisa's shoulder was sometimes interpreted as a shawl or a scarf.

But images obtained from infrared reflectography tell a different story. The veil — called a guarnello — is transparent, and it looks similar to a gauzy garment in Sandro Botticelli's "Portrait of a Lady," depicting a pregnant woman with her hand over her stomach.

Tradition holds that the "Mona Lisa" is a painting of Lisa Gherardini, wife of Florentine merchant Francesco del Giocondo, and that Leonardo started painting it in 1503. In France, the painting, on display at the Louvre Museum, is referred to as La Joconde — the French version of her married name. The name Mona Lisa is the equivalent of "Madam Lisa."

The veil "would confirm art historians' hypothesis that Giocondo asked for a painting of his wife to celebrate the birth of his second son," said Mona, chief of the research department at the French Museums' Center for Research and Restoration, which has its offices in the Louvre.

The scans also make clear that Mona Lisa does not have her hair down, as it appears. Most of her tresses are pinned back into a chignon and covered with a veil, Menu said. The analyses of hairstyle and clothes were made by Bruno Mottin, curator of the research department at the center.

FOUR SEASONS
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
333 Russell St., Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174
Sale date 9-28-06 to 10-04-06
not responsible for typographical errors

Beer
Twisted Tea
Spaten
Pyar Ale
Warsteiner
Shapes Hazy Variety
Killians Irish Red

Liquor
Grand Marnier 750 ml $29.99
Hendrick's Gin 750 ml $26.99
Ballantine's Scotch 1.75 liter $24.99
Seagram's VO Canadian Whiskey 1.75 liter $21.99
Bora Irish Vodka 1.75 liter $19.99
Denaka Vodka 80° 1.75 liter $16.99
Early Times Bourbon Whiskey 1.75 liter $16.99
Jim Beam Black Bourbon 750 ml $16.99
Island Breeze Flavored Light Rum 750 ml $11.99
Pinnacle Vodka 80° 750 ml $10.99
J & J VS Brandy 750 ml $8.99
Admiral Nelson Raspberry Rum 1.0 liter $8.99

Wine
Black Box 3.0 liter $16.99
Blackstone 1.5 liter $16.99
Fat Bastard 1.5 liter $14.99
Big Mama Pinot Grigio 750 ml 2 for $10.00
St. Francis Red 750 ml $9.99
J. Lohr Chardonnay 750 ml $9.99
Sterling Vintners Varietals 750 ml $9.99
Rivalto Merlot 750 ml $9.99
Mondavi Private Select 750 ml $8.99
Rosenblum Zinfandel 750 ml $8.99
Four Emus 750 ml $7.99
Wolf Blass 750 ml $5.99

Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm, Sunday 12pm - 11pm

Campus to Career PROGRAMS
Etiquette Dinner
What are the do's and don'ts of business dinner etiquette? Come learn from etiquette professional Carol McGuiggan how to avoid potential pitfalls as you enter the business world
Tuesday, October 3 at 5:00 p.m.
Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union
$7.00 per person - Space is limited
Go to UMassAlumni.com/students to register.
Sponsored by:
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
alumni loan consolidation program
www.UMassAlumni.com/studentloans
(800) 936-4975
University Catering

All East College Pass
mount snow · PEAKS · Attitash · Wildcat · Sunday River · sugarloaf/usa
All East SUNDAY-FRIDAY COLLEGE PASS $229*
Ski and ride Sunday through Friday at Sunday River, ME, Attitash, NH, Wildcat, Pinkham Notch and Mount Snow, VT with the most affordable season pass with no blackout dates. Spring Break is on!
BLACKOUT DATES all SAT, HOLIDAYS AND Dec. 25, 2006 - Jan. 1, 2007 Jan 13-15, 2007
$649
The Ultimate 7 Pass
NO BLACKOUT DATES Ski and ride at all participating All East resorts! The Ultimate 7 Pass is valid at all participating All East resorts including Sugarloaf and Sunday River, ME; Attitash, NH; Wildcat, Pinkham Notch and Mount Snow, VT; and West (Steamboat, CO and Jackson Hole, WY) with no blackout dates. Spring Break is on!
$375* All East College Pass
NO BLACKOUT DATES
Visit peaks.com/collegepass for details.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No news on Sunday

The weekend newspapers have been blurred out of the UMass Dining Commons

Adam McGillen

Wherefore art thou Funky Winkerbean? Dilbert? Foxtrot?

This past weekend I awoke to find no weekend papers at the DC. I was forced to look at other people and have a conversation over breakfast. Heading back to class on Monday, I felt empty, uninformed and totally lacking in the inspiration department after missing an uplifting episode of Fred Basset in the Sunday comics.

Weekend newspapers are much more than just a retainer for the colorful comics page though, they're vital to being an informed student. As I learned from a friend and representative in the SGA, allegedly Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano has decided to do away with the weekend papers, cutting the supply lines of information and opinion that once flowed straight into the minds of UMass diners.

The value of having a choice of papers to read on Saturday, and especially Sunday, is immeasurable. Sure, students can keep up on current events during the week, but the rest of the world doesn't stop on Friday night to take shots and chase them with a 40 of malt liquor for two days straight. Earth keeps rotating, bombs keep falling, soldiers continue to give their lives, governments crumble, the atmosphere gets more polluted and Justin Timberlake continues to bring sexy back.

For the students who don't keep up with the papers during the week, the weekend publications offer insight and summaries of what has been happening over the past seven days as well as reporting on up-to-date events. The Sunday paper generally offers much more analysis than regular readers get every day, making the weekend papers the most valuable.

Most full-time students don't have the time during the week to be doing anything but reading textbooks and doing homework when they're not in class. To be able to grab a hefty paper on Sunday, and even just skim through it, is something that should be held on to, not just cast aside for the sake of funding another hole in the ground to be filled with New Dirt.

Sure, students can keep up on current events during the week, but the rest of the world doesn't stop on Friday night to take shots and chase them with a 40 of malt liquor for two days straight.

Yes, it costs a great deal of money for a yearly subscription to a major newspaper publication like The New York Times or The Boston Globe, but can we really put a price tag on being informed? Buildings, loaded with all the newest comforts, shoot out of the ground all around us, and our tuition rushes skyward right alongside them. Are we not paying UMass for an education? Why should informative newspapers be the first thing to go?

The Internet offers a wealth of information, but we should cling to print publications for as long as possible. Newspapers, that one can actually touch and turn over in their hands, offer so much more than their online counterparts. Certain aspects of online publications are locked up for members only; customers who want access to all the news has to offer must foot the bill for all the work done by journalists, photographers and various other staffers.

It costs money to see the editorial and opinion sections of major newspapers online. Having access to these treasure troves of news and analysis gives students an incredible advantage, and being able to just grab the papers for free (if you exclude $17,000 a year in tuition and fees) is a necessity. At an institution of higher education, information should be the last thing to be cut for financial reasons, not one of the first.

I admit, I might be a little biased because I am a journalism major, but I know quite a few people who enjoy getting a good fill of news with their omelet on the weekend. To take this away is a crime against humanity.

Even for the comics alone. We all have a right, as hard working and hard partying students to relax and enjoy how lazy Garfield is, or how much of a loser Charlie Brown is or how awesomely depressing Funky Winkerbean can be. What is Sunday morning without a little bit of news and the comics in color? It's just another black and white Monday, and nobody wants that.

Adam McGillen is a Collegian columnist.

The dangers with bloggers

Kaitlyn Silva

Lately, student privacy has become a huge issue on campus. After the hypocritical crusade against Facebook, we've all been a little more aware of the privacy controls most websites possess. News reports constantly highlight stalkers lurking around every popular networking site popular with high school and college kids. So what are we doing to keep ourselves safe? According to YouTube.com, we're doing absolutely nothing.

At first, there was the online writing and picture blog, LiveJournal being the most popular one today. Next came networking sites such as Facebook and MySpace. Just recently, a new generation of bloggers was spawned from the growing sale of webcams. Video blogs were once scarce, but with sites like YouTube making video uploading easy, they've sprung up all over the place.

If you type in the word "blog" in the search bar on YouTube.com, you'll find approximately 27,000 entries waiting to be devoured. Any random person who happens to stumble across these blogs can view them without even having to save it on their own computer. Each video entry is accompanied by a picture of the blogger, which is usually contorted and at such a strange camera angle you'd think it was part of the Blair Witch Project.

When a person updates their blog regularly, YouTube allows absolute strangers to subscribe to their videos and thus to information about their personal lives.

Thanks to the handy pictures, curious Web site wanderers can choose the face the interests them the most, click, sit back and enjoy. When a person updates their blog regularly, YouTube allows absolute strangers to subscribe to their videos and thus to information about their personal lives. These attention-seeking bloggers aren't all adolescents, either. So if teenyboppers aren't your thing, you can still see college students and some older adults throwing their life story at you through the computer screen. If your English isn't too sharp, you can still manage to find people video blogging in several other languages.

Video bloggers post up clips, usually lasting between one and ten minutes, in which they expose their daily activities, their personal lives, and their thoughts. In the background, their bedroom, dorm or computer room sits invitingly, allowing us to take in every detail. If a twisted stalker really wanted to find a blogger, it would be relatively simple. These video bloggers aren't shielding their lives from anybody. All they need to do to become vulnerable is slip up on a detail such as their location or their last name. They may also be putting their friends and family in danger.

Is a portion of Generation Y so desperate for attention that they'll completely ignore the concept of personal privacy and practically ask for stalkers? It seems so.

So while you're fuming at Facebook for announcing to all of the friends you accepted that you are no longer in a relationship, the next step is not setting up your webcam in your dorm and crying to thousands of strangers about how devastating the breakup has been. Though squeezing out a single tear in front of the camera may get you sympathy from strangers, you'll also get these people to judge and analyze you despite the fact that you're unaware of their existence. A psychologist would have a field day with these people.

This form of blogging has become so popular that people are even willing to make fake blogs.

LonelyGirl15, a legend among frequent YouTube blog users, is a prime example of this. Bree was an attractive home-schooled cheery teenager who often discussed her lack of friends, her overbearing father and the rocky relationship she has with her friend/crush, Daniel. As interesting as Bree's life seemed to be, each update from her bedroom began to look more and more scripted.

Finally, Bree's origins were exposed by New York Magazine. She was nothing but a series created by two filmmakers in Marin County, California. Bree turned out to be aspiring actress Jessica Rose, a New Zealand native. Though the series is continuing, many people are appalled that an actress fooled them into loving her blogs. Several personal photos of Jessica Rose have been leaked onto YouTube as users made videos to "expose" her. So wait, it's not okay to introduce stalkers to your pretend life and pretend friends, but it's okay to show them everything about your real, everyday life?

I can't say I blame YouTube for this one either. Unlike MySpace or Facebook, YouTube users aren't given the option of exposing their personal information in their profile. YouTube allows you to upload videos. The site is better known for allowing people like Gary Brolsma, the "Numa Numa" guy, experience their fifteen minutes of fame through homemade gag videos. Users can also enjoy good old fashioned illegal TV and movie clips, as well as a large assortment of commercials and public service announcements (even the government is in on it). The video bloggers choose to expose their personal information on a site where they are not asked to do so. I'm not quite sure if this generation understands privacy. As much as we claim to desire privacy, I can think of approximately 27,000 reasons why some of us are hypocrites.

Kaitlyn Silva is a Collegian columnist.

Erasing the fat (factor)

Chris Reardon

My mirror is my best and worst friend. I see it everyday, but it never fails to make me feel like crap. I've thought about throwing it out the window, but then I put on a certain pair of jeans, and it's like my mirror and I never fought in our lives. Lately those days have been few and far between, and more and more I find myself acting like one of those people we hate: "I'm so fat."

Everyone has insecurities about their image, especially college-aged men and women. The media directed toward this demographic has the devastating habit of focusing on appearance and presenting nearly impossible standards for young adults to live up to. We've all heard about how the media is corrupting society's young minds, and how advertisers using sex as their top motivator leave us brainwashed into thinking looking perfect is the number one priority.

The result is a generation of depressed 20-somethings with low self-esteem and eating disorders, mostly because of what has been drilled into our heads by the media since we moved from "Sesame Street." The obsession with self-image is so pervasive it overtakes many of the more socially responsible aspects of life, so that a student may end up spending three hours working out, showering and doing his hair instead of studying for that big test next week.

I fell into that very pattern last semester and nearly failed out of school because of it. I began noticing a slimmer physique and more people checking me out almost simultaneously, and it felt good enough to forsake classes and homework for extra exercise and primping.

It wasn't long before I realized how destructive my obsession with self-image was. Getting noticed more around campus simply was not an adequate replacement for being responsible and doing something important with my life. By the end of the semester I had several Fs and a new anti-depressant prescription: proof positive that what I was doing to myself was not improving my self-esteem at all, but diminishing it.

The result is a generation of depressed 20-somethings with low self-esteem and eating disorders, mostly because of what has been drilled into our heads by the media since we moved from "Sesame Street."

Not everyone has to get so close to the bottom before they see the folly of self-image obsession. It sounds so cliche, but really all it takes is acceptance of who you are. My main motivation in making myself look good was meeting a hot guy to date.

Well, after several encounters with the beautiful elite — guys who look good but are either colossal jerks or completely brain dead — I came to the conclusion that I didn't care to surround myself with people who would only make me feel worse about myself than I already did. Once I removed myself from that cancerous clique, I found it far easier to grow comfortable in my own skin.

So what if Heidi Klum makes a Gucci dress sparkle even when she's eight months pregnant? Who cares if Brad Pitt can stop traffic even if he hasn't shaved for three weeks? I'm not friends with those people, and I would venture to guess that not many University of Massachusetts students are.

It's time to stop comparing ourselves to the upper crust of Hollywood stars and starlets, because no matter how hard we try we'll never look like them. No matter how much effort we put into making ourselves beautiful, those with stylists and endless supplies of designer clothing will always look better.

Now that I'm trying to go to all my classes and do all my work, I don't have the time to go running or do hundreds of sit-ups, and those hot jeans just aren't fitting the way they used to. Yet, I was able to find a man — a real man — who cares about me, not because I can rock a FCUK t-shirt, but because of who I am. The real me, not the shallow mess of a human who was more concerned with appearance than performance. Guess what? I didn't feel this good about myself when my grades dropped along with my waist size.

That's not to say you need a boyfriend or girlfriend in order to feel good about yourself. All you need is the capacity to take Hollywood's bastardization of the human body at face value; they're trying to sell you perfection, and since perfection is impossible, they're trying to drag you into a loop of buying to try to make yourself feel better, when all you're really doing is making yourself look better at the expense of feeling worse.

Chris Reardon is a Collegian columnist.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Tool is not a band about messages

By Morgan-Ann Rousseau
Collegian Staff

Tool's latest album "10,000 Days" has gone platinum just eight months after its release.

At times they reach a climax of chaotic release, but approach it with complete control. The band is sometimes understated, and often over-analyzed, but at the core of their raw and powerful music, these five musicians deliver eloquence in its richest, most leather-bound state of glory.

Patient fans both here and abroad wondered where they went and waited as the band's eclectic members worked on other musical projects. But truly, how long could A Perfect Circle keep us fed? It's not that "Thirteenth Step" and "eMOTIVE" didn't have their good points — it's just that the true Tool fans salivated for their own distinct brand of raw musical meat.

It was finally served. Their latest album "10,000 Days," surfaced to platinum status after its U.S. release in May of this year, and climbed to top ten of the Billboard 200 charts. But as far as we're concerned, there's only one thing that tops topping the charts — and that's Tool on tour.

Though all members of the band know how to deliver chills, there's one in particular that stands out as the strange beauty of an uncompromised communication.

His lyrics have left us breathless. A front man painted black and packed with fury — he unleashes a frenzy of emotion that if you've ever heard, you've surely felt. For a musician that craves the shadow so much more than the spot light, it's a rare and coveted moment when he agrees to give an interview.

Lucky me.

In a conversation over the phone on Tuesday, Maynard James Keenan said a few things about their new tour, their latest album, and more.

Morgan-Ann: What was your initial intention when you set out to make "10,000 days?" Did it have a particular purpose?

Maynard: No. Nothing in particular. We just pretty much explore each other in a room and write music. The result is what it is.

Morgan-Ann: I'm sure it's never smooth when you're making an album, but comparatively, anyway, was it a difficult album to make?

Maynard: No, they're all challenging in their own way. We were in the studio for about three or four months.

Morgan-Ann: Some of your songs have advocated enlightenment as the key to change. Somewhere in there is a sense of optimism. Do you maintain optimism about people and problems in the world?

Maynard: Optimism? No. I've never considered myself an optimist. I think that there is a balance between pessimism and optimism. You find it for yourself.

Morgan-Ann: Do you think your music has an influence over the decisions that people make?

Maynard: I'd hope not.

Morgan-Ann: Why not?

Maynard: Because if my music has an influence, then that means that other bands have an influence. And if those bands have the wrong message, then they could influence people in the wrong way.

Morgan-Ann: But what about your lyrical references to people being sheep?

Maynard: I think that some people see that way. They let anything guide them in any direction but not all people.

Morgan-Ann: And your fans? Do you think you are reaching the same people now that you did at the time of "Opiate's" release, or do you think your audience has changed?

Maynard: Well, after our first album, we played in front of audiences of 100 people. Now about 17,0000 people show up to our performances. So certainly our fan base has grown. As for the people ... I don't know what kind of people are coming to our shows, but whoever they are, certainly more of them are coming.

Morgan-Ann: When you are touring, how does it compare to play the United States versus other nations?

Maynard: They're all pretty much unique in their own ways. Every country and every venue is completely different. For every show we give, we make changes and alterations. That's what makes each show unique. [This tour] is going great so far.

Morgan-Ann: I'm looking forward to your show this Friday in Mansfield. I've been to your shows before, and the performance, absolutely blew me away, especially the aesthetics. How do the shows on this tour differ from the shows on previous tours?

Maynard: It's hard to say. I'm not very objective. The differences in each show don't really change how we relate to each other when we're performing. But as far as what we do and how we do it ... it's all really the same.

Morgan-Ann: Have you come to a point where you would say it's easier now to maintain your integrity as a band who refuses to compromise their art? Or do you still encounter pressure to conform to what popular culture requires of popular musicians?

Maynard: There's always pressure. People always want to manipulate other people in power, to seek their own power. You can't avoid that. We still see it. No matter what, we'll always face this.

Morgan-Ann: Are there any artists out there who you think succeed at stimulating an emotional and artistic consciousness?

Maynard: In general, people that are writing music from the heart. Nobody in particular, really.

Morgan-Ann: What's next?

Maynard: We're going to Europe.

Morgan-Ann: Any plans for another album yet?

Maynard: We've just had a baby.

Morgan-Ann: Of course.

Maynard: We have no plans yet for another baby. We're still taking care of this baby.

Morgan-Ann: Is the band where you pictured it would be at this point in time?

Maynard: Where I pictured ... I suppose so. We're always taking things in different directions. But yes, I'm very happy.

Maynard believes if music has any influence it could potentially be bad for the listeners and the industry.

Writer of hit song still alive

By Justin M. Norton
Associated Press

The man who co-wrote the song "Itsy Bitsy Teenie Weenie Yellow Polka Dot Bikini" had the unsettling experience this week of reading his own obituary — the result of an impostor who went through life claiming to be the author of the 1960s smash hit.

On Tuesday, The Associated Press reported on the death of a 68-year-old man named Paul Van Valkenburgh of Ormond Beach, Fla., who claimed to have written the song under the name Paul Vance. The story cited the man's wife as the source for that claim. But the music industry's real Paul Vance, a 76-year-old man from Coral Springs, Fla., is alive and well, and says the other Paul Vance appears to have made the whole thing up.

The Paul Vance who wrote the songs and provided proof with royalty payments he is still receiving for the hit said he has been inundated with calls from people who think he died. An owner of racehorses, Vance said two of his horses were scratched from races Wednesday because people thought he had died.

"Do you know what it's like to have grandchildren calling you and say, 'Grandpa, you're still alive?'" he said in a telephone interview from Coral Springs. "This is not a game. I am who I am and I'm proud of who I am. But these phones don't stop with people calling thinking I'm dead."

Rose Leroux, the widow of the man who died, said she was surprised by the disclosure, and "kind of devastated." She said she had no reason to doubt that her husband who apparently had some sort of music career when he was younger was the writer of the famous tune.

She said her husband told her that he never got any royalties because he sold the rights when he was young, around 19. She said that by the time they met almost 40 years ago, he was making his living as a salesman. He later became a painting contractor.

"If this other man says he did it then my husband's a liar, or he's a liar," Leroux said.

The living Paul Vance estimated he has made several million dollars from the song, which was recorded by 16-year-old teen idol Brian Hyland, surged to No. 1 on the Billboard charts in August 1960 and has been a pop culture staple ever since.

The song about a bashful young woman in a skimpy bathing suit has been used in such movies as "Sister Act 2" and "Revenge of the Nerds II" and was more recently revived in a yogurt commercial.

"It's a money machine," Vance said.

Vance said his first hit was

See SONG on page 6

New coffee shop a success

By Teresa Reilly
Collegian Correspondent

Amherst Coffee proudly serves the local community coffee and tea at a fair price.

In the midst of the commotion of downtown Amherst lies Amherst Coffee, a petite coffee house on Amity Street. Once customers enter the café, the bustle of the street can barely be heard and is instead replaced with conversations and the calming sound of jazz music.

The open room has an intimate setting, appearing large enough to hold 25-30 people. There are a few small tables set up as well as bar stools that line the counters. Atop these counters are little candles that add a sense of warmth to the café.

Dimly lit bulbs hang from the ceiling over the bar and decorative lights help to illuminate the table seating. During the day, light enters through the two walls of windows, making reading simple.

Coffee and tea are served properly. Your shot of espresso will come to you in a little cup along with a saucer and a tiny spoon. Tea is presented with a mug, a mini tea kettle that contains hot water, and a strainer that holds the tea leaves.

The shop's prices are also very competitive with those of other coffee places in town, such as Rao's Coffee and Starbucks. A small coffee is only $1.19 and a shot of espresso is $1.90.

The co-owner of Amherst Coffee, Mukunda Selvman, thinks that Starbucks has "raised the bar" for coffee service.

"I have no problem with them," he said about his rivals who are only a few feet away.

Selvman hails from Great Barrington, where he got his start with coffee from working at a roasting company. The same roasting company in fact that he currently gets his product for the store from.

The Barrington Coffee Roasting Company gets its coffee from small farms across the world.

"The best coffees are produced on small farms," said Selvman.

A portion of their coffee is also organic and fair-trade.

Selvman and his partner, David Clark, opened up Amherst Coffee in December 2005. The shop is an addition to their café in Northampton called Northampton Coffee, which opened in 2003.

Selvman had been concerned about a potential decline in the number of customers over the summer. "We actually did well over the summer, better than I thought," said Selvman.

He said that the majority of his customers were local people from Amherst. A quick look at the café showed that most of his consumers are, in fact, the older generation of Amherst, which includes townies and professors.

Customers seem to agree on the quality of the coffee.

"This is the best shot of espresso I've ever had, second only to the Caffe Vittoria in the North End of Boston," said Joe DeSimone, a sophomore at the University of Massachusetts.

If coffee and tea aren't your thing, the bar at Amherst Coffee opens up at around 5 p.m. It isn't your typical college bar, though. Here they serve scotch and fine wine in glasses.

So, if you are ever looking for a pleasant place to study or chat with a friend with a cup of coffee or tea, or even a glass of wine, Amherst Coffee just might be perfect for you.

Name brand bags latest trend

By Sandra Jones
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO—Handbags are big this fall. Really big.

The cult of the handbag has reached new heights, literally. The hottest handbags are close to 2 feet tall and wider than a doorway — power bags large enough to hold a small bureau and topple a passerby with one swing of the shoulder. And the price tags are just as hefty, at $1,500 and up.

Chalk it up to the celebrity culture, women's rising economic clout and one undeniable, intoxicating fact: You don't have to be model thin to wear one.

Observers of fashion and culture say It Bags are to women what sports cars are to men, a competitive status symbol that knows no rational limits.

In a day when jeans and t-shirts are common and upper echelon executive women dress down to preserve authority, an outrageously expensive must-have It Bag, especially one so big it's hard to miss, announces its owner has arrived.

"It's like a Hummer built to do the kind of things no driver would ever do," said Robert Thompson, professor of popular culture at Syracuse University. "It's excessively overbuilt for what you need it for. The really giant purse has got that same sense. It says, 'I can afford this excess even though all I've got in this is a wallet and an LG Chocolate cell phone.'"

In the past two years, sales of handbags soared at a pace of nearly 6 percent a year to an estimated $6 billion in 2006, according to a report from market research firm Mintel International Group. While the pace of growth is expected to slow slightly, to more than 5 percent a year through 2010, luxury analysts and culture experts predict the handbag hoopla will continue.

Celebrity and fashion magazines devote pages to stars and their handbags. Online chat forums and blogs, including Purseblog.com and Handbag.com, have sprung up for fans to swap tales about their favorite purses and the famous people who lug them.

Kate Moss strolling down the street with her Mulberry Bayswater. Victoria Beckham hopping out of a car with her supersized quilted Prada shopper. Lindsay Lohan swinging her curvy Fendi B. Heidi Klum vogueing with her oversized YSL white ostrich Muse.

And, of course, the famous Hermes Birkin that Martha Stewart toted to her trial. Stewart revealed in a Barbara Walters interview, before heading off to prison, that she bought the bag to reward herself after she became successful.

The Birkin is the holy grail of handbags. It takes years just to get on the wait-list. The price can range from $10,000 to $50,000. And carrying one sends a signal of privilege that is difficult to match. The TV show "Sex and the City" built an entire episode around the outrageous length the character of Samantha goes to in order to secure the coveted treasure.

Stewart isn't the only woman to splurge on a handbag after reaching a certain echelon. It's a common practice, say several executive women.

"It shows you mean business," said Melissa Giovagnoli, president of Chicago-based Networlding.com, who totes a $1,500 Prada. "It doesn't matter if I'm using a Bic pen, as long as I have my Prada bag."

Giovagnoli bought her first designer handbag four years ago. She was window shopping, eyeing a $600 Ferragamo purse, but decided to wait for a big account to justify the splurge. When a call came in from a longtime client asking her to speak at an event, she offered to do so for free as a favor.

The client insisted on paying, so Giovagnoli charged $600 and bagged the handbag. She carried it for years as a good luck charm and a reminder that she should charge what she's worth, a message she shares with other businesswomen as part of her networking and coaching business.

Women have always been attached to their handbags. They carry them close to their sides. It holds all their personal belongings. It's almost an "intimate extension of the body," writes Anna Johnson in her book "Handbags: The Power of the Purse."

Research shows women buy on average three bags a year, up from one every two years in 2000, according to NPD Group.

Anne MacDonald, chief marketing officer of Federated Department Stores Inc., parent of Marshall Field's-turned-Macy's, changes her bag daily. She has a closet full of Lambertson Truex handbags all neatly stacked on shelves, stuffed with tissue paper to keep their shape.

"I'm like Imelda Marcos with shoes," MacDonald laughs, show-

See HAND BAGS on page 6

Guys and girls are different about cheating

Jasmine Monteiro

Everybody can relate to someone who has been cheated on in one way or another. Whether you have experienced it first-hand or have observed it from afar, we're all well aware of the effects it has on a relationship. First of all, men and women are both guilty of being cheaters (just accept it girls). However, I believe that girls have a different way of dealing with getting cheated on, that's not very effective. I will not try to justify the act of cheating, I know better. Although I will enlighten you with a more appropriate way of handling it.

Girls have a misconception when it comes to cheating and the question of who's to blame. Having a good perspective of both ends of the spectrum, I know exactly how it works. Your boyfriend cheats on you and you rightfully feel betrayed. But an almost instant reaction is, "Who is she?" or "I'm going to kill that—" Well, you get the picture. These are all very understandable reactions, but you have to think about what you are doing when you say it. You are inadvertently taking the focus away from your guy and putting it on the other girl. You rack your brain wondering if she's prettier than you or has a nicer body than you or, worst of all, if she's better in bed than you.

The truth is, most guys don't really think about that kind of thing. A majority of the time they aren't browsing around looking for someone, it just happens. So the point is, don't ask questions, just take what he tells you for what it is and leave it alone. Otherwise, you'll drive yourself crazy trying to cope with your feelings. Trust me, the more you know isn't always better.

Most importantly, if you've been cheated on, give him hell for it. Someone else may have had him physically, but he is supposed to be your boyfriend, and if he can't control his urges, you need to put him in his place.

It's true that there are rare cases where someone cheats and sincerely feels remorse. But it's your job to decide what the right thing to do is. Some people can't risk finding out if that'll be the first and last time. Others don't think they can break up so quickly because they've been together for so long. It's a difficult decision. In any case, if you decide to stay with someone, there's nothing wrong with making him prove that he's sorry. If he's worth it, he will do anything to make it right. And if you do give him that second chance and things are where you want them to be, don't pick fights with him about it all the time. All you're doing is creating more holes in your relationship and making it weaker. If you can't learn to trust him again, there's nothing left to build on.

An important thing to remember when you give someone a second chance is that you lose your right to be bitter. If you consciously made the decision to take him back and he turns out to be a complete sleazeball, then you are just as guilty for giving him the chance to be. I understand how difficult it can be to do what you think is right, but some people have to learn to act accordingly to the decisions they make.

Many years ago, an old friend once said to me, "Fool me once, shame on you; fool me twice, shame on me." Its significance never occurred to me until a couple of years later. I know we are all humans and we are entitled to our bad judgments, it's how we live and learn. Pay attention to those mistakes and you will start to see what's missing in your relationships. Stay strong for you and never forget that trust is a luxury that is earned, not a privilege.

The search for the perfect bag

HANDBAGS from page 5

ing off the luxurious inside lining of a Lambertson satchel she bought 11 years ago.

Grace Tsao-Wu, owner of Tabula Tua, once carried the same bag for three months. Now, she has set up a small table by her door to hold her handbags for the week, right next to her cell phone charger and Blackberry.

"Lately, I switch bags often," said Tsao-Wu. "I easily carry two or three bags a week. I didn't used to do that. There's some addictive quality about it. A handbag has a major presence on the body. They take up a lot of space, especially these days."

Alice Peterson has always been in favor of one big bag and finds it easier than ever to find one. She just bought a Marc Jacobs leather tote that has extra straps to prevent back problems, a common complaint from carriers of big bags.

"I tend to have a whole lot of stuff that allows me to be productive in different situations in my one big bag," said Peterson, founder and president of Chicago-based Syrus Global and a former Sears, Roebuck and Co. executive. "I buy one, spend a lot of money on it and select it with great care. It's easier to take a bag like that anywhere, to the opera or airplane or board meeting or just schlepping on the train."

The Mintel report noted women from all demographics are susceptible to buying a purse on impulse on any given day. It is no wonder, then, that many department stores have moved their handbag departments to prominent spaces near the stores' entrance.

Nelman Marcus on North Michigan Avenue in Chicago counts its handbag business, which takes up a good chunk of the first floor, as "one of the best businesses in the store," said Wendy Krimins, vice president and general manager of the Magnificent Mile store. Some bags, like Chanel's shiny black Coco Cabas for $1,995, are so popular they are snapped up by wait-listed customers before the bags make it to the display shelf.

"There's no price resistance," said Krimins. "No one flinches. The business just keeps getting better and better. It doesn't matter if you've gained a pound or lost a pound, you can carry an It Bag."

Just ask cartoonist Cathy Guisewite. Her comic strip "Cathy," about the average woman's anxieties, has run a series for the past two weeks on the supersized handbag — an accessory she calls "a garage with shoulder straps." A saleswoman tells Cathy when she puts a purse on her shoulder that is bigger than she is, "It makes you look petite by comparison!"

To be sure, most women can't help but carry way too much in their handbags. And who knows how many women will be visiting their doctors' offices this year with knotted necks and twisted shoulders.

Cindy Burrell won't be one of them. The Northbrook, Ill.-based executive for Boardroom Bound, a Washington, D.C. organization that helps women get on corporate boards, said she got tired of being the porter for her family.

"You just end up carrying everyone else's stuff around," said Burrell. "When I had a larger purse my husband and children would give me their stuff. I carry a little purse now."

Six Flags offers cockroach pass

By Dave Wischnowsky
Chicago Tribune

"FrightFest" goes "Fear Factor."

Beginning Oct. 7, Six Flags Great America's annual Halloween-season event will pull a page from the popular NBC gross-out reality show and dare visitors to eat a giant, live, Madagascar hissing cockroach.

The stunt which has the Lake County Illinois Health Department furrowing its brow will be in return for perks at the Gurnee, Ill., amusement park, Six Flags spokesman Jim Taylor said.

Anyone who successfully downs the 3-inch-long cockroach will receive a free T-shirt and a "flash pass" allowing that person and three friends to jump to the head of any ride's line through Oct. 29.

A cockroach swallower will have to sign a waiver before eating and still will have to buy a ticket to enter the park, Taylor said.

In many countries, Madagascar hissing cockroaches, which have horns and can make a hissing sound, are considered a delicacy. Taylor said Six Flags' roaches were raised in a controlled laboratory environment.

Nevertheless, the county Health Department discourages people from consuming cockroaches due to the risk of gastrointestinal illness and allergies, according to community health director Bill Mays.

Six Flags announced its new promotion Tuesday. Events like it previously have been held at a dozen theme parks in North America. Taylor said the reactions have been mixed and spirited.

"I've heard people say, 'Wow,' 'Ewww' a lot of one-worders," the park spokesman said. "A lot have said that they wouldn't eat a cockroach, but they sure would like to see someone else do it."

At 7 p.m., Oct. 13, Great America also plans to hold an eating contest for cooked Madagascar hissing cockroaches. Taylor said park officials hope someone might break a British man's world record of consuming 36 of the cooked insects in one minute.

Royalities not worth writers time

SONG from page 5

"Catch a Falling Star," recorded by Perry Como, and he went on to write numerous million-sellers for Como, Johnny Mathis and others.

To prove he is the real songwriter, Vance provided royalty statements showing dozens of payments for the tune sent to his address in Westbury, N.Y., where he lived before moving to Florida. Jim Steinblatt, an official with the American Society for Composers, Authors and Publishers, confirmed that royalty checks for the song were being mailed to Vance in Westbury.

Steinblatt also said he knows Vance personally and had visited him at his Westbury home last year. He said he had never heard of the man who died and took credit for composing the song.

Vance said he has no animosity toward the impostor or his wife.

Vance's songwriting partner, Lee Pockriss, who shares credit on "Itsy Bitsy ...', lives in Bridgewater, Conn., and is recovering from a stroke. His wife, Sonya, said her husband's writing partner is the living Paul Vance, and she had never heard of the Paul Vance from Ormond Beach.

Leroux said she wished the other Paul Vance had never spoken up.

"It's such a long time ago. To have it come out now, I'm kind of devastated," she said. "If this man is getting the royalties why wouldn't he be happy? The more you stir this up the more you'll

Albom enjoys touring lifestyle

By Marta Salij
Detroit Free Press

The line is so obvious I won't fight it. No more days to wait before Mitch Albom's second novel, "For One More Day," hits stores.

According to Hyperion, the publisher, 2.2 million copies of Albom's tale of a suicidal ex-ballplayer and a visitation from his dead mother will be fanned out over the country.

That's the largest one-day release for a fiction title this fall, though not the largest for any book. That distinction belongs to John Grisham. "The Innocent Man," the true story of an ex-ballplayer wrongly convicted of murder, will be published Oct. 10 with a first printing of 2.8 million.

These are nice numbers for a year in publishing without a Harry Potter installment. Last year's "Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince" had a first print run of 10.8 million copies in the United States alone.

And in a marketing blitz befitting such numbers, Albom is embarking on a 63-city, 10-week tour.

There will be the Q&A in this week's Time magazine, launch-day appearances on "Good Morning America" and CNN's "American Morning" a little later, the blog on Albom's Web site, www.foronemoreday.com, and the sale of the book in Starbucks stores starting Oct. 3.

What would Morrie, from Albom's first mega-seller, "Tuesdays With Morrie," say to a tour like that? Didn't Morrie tell him to slow down?

Albom laughs and protests that his schedule can't be judged by the hectic weeks of a tour, even if it does have him continuing to write for The Detroit Free Press, where he is a sports and Sunday columnist.

"I really like meeting readers," he says.

A book such as Albom's can be a great help to a publisher this year, because year-to-date sales of adult hardcover books are down 9.9 percent compared to 2005, according to the Association of American Publishers.

Albom can't slow his down.

Little wonder that when Albom mentioned the book to his publisher early this year — and told them it was three-quarters done — they wanted it immediately for their fall offerings.

Albom's sales record is impressive. "The Five People You Meet in Heaven," his first novel, published in September 2003, has sold 9.6 million copies in hardcover in the United States.

The size and inspirational subject of "For One More Day" make it seem like a perfect holiday gift.

Like "Five People," it's smaller than most hardcovers — call it stocking-size. At 208 pages, it can be read in one sitting; Albom read it for an audio CD that runs 3.5 hours.

What's it about? Former baseball player Chick Benetto bumps along after his career ends and his mother dies. But he's a failure at his sales career and a failure at his marriage. Soon he abandons his family and takes to drinking.

When his estranged daughter doesn't invite him to her wedding, Benetto takes a leap off a water tower. He lives — and then looks up to see his mother, standing on a ballfield.

Publishers Weekly's review was largely positive. "Albom foregrounds family sanctity, maternal self-sacrifice and the destructive power of personal ambition and male self-involvement. He wields pathos as if it were a Louisville Slugger ... but Albom often strikes a nerve on his way to the heart.

cingular
raising the bar
WIN THE ULTIMATE BCS GAME GETAWAY!
TEXT FIGHT TO 288 to download your college fight song Answer Tone™ now! Callers can hear it and cheer when they dial your number!
Answer with Your Team Tone & Sit in the End Zone!
Enter for a chance to win a trip to a Bowl Championship Series football game or a new Sony Ericsson W810 Walkman® phone*. It's easy. You'll be automatically entered every time you purchase one or more college fight song Answer Tones.
Sony Ericsson
*The Sony Ericsson marble logo is a trademark of Sony Ericsson Mobile Communications AB. Sony is a trademark of Sony Corporation. Ericsson is a trademark of Telefonaktiebolaget LM Ericsson. WALKMAN® is a registered trademark of Sony Corporation. Bluetooth® is a registered trademark of Bluetooth SIG, Inc. and is used under license.
Cingular and the graphic icon are registered trademarks of Cingular Wireless, LLC. Raising The Bar is a service mark of Cingular Wireless, LLC. ©2006 Cingular Wireless, LLC. All rights reserved.
NO PURCHASE NECESSARY. These are not the complete Official Rules. In addition to purchase price, standard data rates will apply based on a customer's current feature subscription. Additional terms, conditions and restrictions apply. See Official Rules at www.cingularpromo.com/answertonerules.jhtml. Begins 9/2/06 and ends 12/2/06. Must be U.S. resident, 18 or older, to enter. Cingular and participating employees not eligible. Void in Puerto Rico, and where prohibited. Odds of winning depend on number of entries received.

"Results you can feel ...without the side effects."
• headaches • neck pain • back pain • automobile injuries
• sports injuries • shoulder pain • TMJ syndrome • knee pain ...and more
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Participating provider for HMO's, Student Insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, car insurance, & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle St. Amherst, MA (near Bertucci's)
Most insurance accepted
549-1500

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterseauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Attention First-Year Students:
Have you completed MyStudentBody?
It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, October 16th. For instructions, go to the University Health Services website,
www.umass.edu/uhs
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

Food is Fun! Potato cannons, trebuchet & lots more.
JULIA!!
MikesMaze 2006
Rt. 47, Sunderland
www.mikesmaze.com
Weekends & Holidays 11am-5pm now thru Oct.

All eyes on Dallas since Owens signed hurt, renowned for working hard and wanting to be out here, we don't have any concerns."

T.O. from page 10

Aug. 5 — An MRI shows no major problems with Owens' hamstring.

Aug. 7 — Owens says he's flying in doctors and trainers to examine his hamstring.

Aug. 8 — Parcells seems flustered by all the T.O. talk:

"I'm getting the sense that most of the media is just waiting for something to be controversial in that regard. And I'm here to tell you, it's not going to happen from me. So you need to get that in your head. OK?"

Aug. 10 — Owens wears the silver and blue uniform of Lance Armstrong's Discovery Channel pro cycling team while riding a stationary bicycle. He calls it "my little kickoff for the Tour de T.O. Comeback."

Aug. 16 — Owens returns to practice after missing 14 straight workouts.

Aug. 18 — Parcells tells Owens he hasn't practiced enough to play in the second preseason game.

Aug. 19 — After working out in the morning, Owens misses the afternoon session because of a setback with his hamstring. He later blames coaches for using him too much.

Aug. 25 — Owens is fined $9,500 for missing a team meeting and a rehabilitation session, and being late to an offensive meeting. He later says he overslept. "It's not a big deal," he says.

Aug. 28 — An Internet gambling site posts a 50-50 bet on whether Owens is still employed by the Cowboys at the end of this season.

Aug. 29 — Owens returns to practice.

Sept. 1 — Owens plays 19 snaps over two series in the preseason finale, catching a 6-yard pass from Tony Romo on the first ball thrown his way and missing a wide pass from Romo in the end zone.

Sept. 10 — Owens catches six passes for 80 yards and a touchdown in the opener, a 24-17 loss to the Jacksonville Jaguars.

Sept. 17 — Owens breaks his right ring finger while blocking on one of the first plays of a 27-10 victory over the Washington Redskins, but doesn't leave for X-rays until the middle of the fourth quarter. His play reflects the injury: three catches for 19 yards, all in the first 11 minutes; several drops, including one in the end zone, and two penalties totaling 20 yards.

Sept. 18 — Owens has a plate screwed into the bone attached to his right ring finger. Recovery time estimated at two to four weeks.

Sept. 26 — Owens taken via ambulance to Baylor University Medical Center for what his publicist calls an allergic reaction to medicine he's taking for his broken hand.

Sept. 27 — A police document obtained by media outlets before being formally released by authorities says Owens was depressed and attempted suicide, which Owens later denied. He said he became groggy after mixing painkillers with supplements. Publicist Kim Etheredge, who made the 911 call, denied she removed pills from Owens' mouth, as described in the police document, and said it was unfair for anyone to think Owens would kill himself.

—Associated Press

La Russa remains optimistic

By R.B. Fallstrom
Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Tony La Russa always has been a sore loser, quick to lash out at the slightest provocation during postgame news conferences.

But the St. Louis Cardinals' manager has been taking a decidedly different, positive-thinking tack during a September swoon that is threatening to become one of baseball's most spectacular collapses. St. Louis (80-76), which led the NL Central by seven games with 13 to play, lost its seventh straight Tuesday night and was just 1 1/2 games ahead of second-place Houston (79-78) heading into Wednesday's games.

La Russa wants players to know there's still time to pull out of the nosedive and avoid a place in history alongside the 1964 Philadelphia Phillies, who wasted a 6 1/2 -game lead with 12 to go.

"We have a chance to play in October," La Russa said Tuesday night after ace Chris Carpenter failed to hold a three-run lead in a 7-5 loss to the San Diego Padres.

"Take the alternative where you're out the race. That's what you look at, and we're not out of the race."

Not long ago, there was no race. But St. Louis went 1-6 last week on a trip that ended with a four-game sweep at the Astros.

If St. Louis and Houston are within a half-game of each other after Sunday, when the regular season is scheduled to end, San Francisco must return to St. Louis for a makeup of a Sept. 17 rainout. If the Cardinals and Astros have identical records after that, St. Louis would travel to Houston for a one-game tiebreaker playoff Tuesday.

St. Louis could match the record for the largest September lead held by a team that failed to win, shared by the 1934 New York Giants and 1938 Pittsburgh Pirates, according to the Elias Sports Bureau.

"We're just finding ways to lose," Jim Edmonds said. "We've just got to keep fighting. We've still got a lot of time."

La Russa's calm also may reflect a realization that the Cardinals, given season-long injury woes combined with payroll issues that created holes in the rotation, outfield and second base much of the season, might deserve their unimpressive record.

Mark Mulder, a 16-game winner last year, went 6-7 with an ERA above 7.00 before undergoing shoulder surgery last month. Closer Jason Isringhausen is also out following hip surgery earlier this month. Edmonds went a month between starts due to post-concussion syndrome before returning to the lineup on Tuesday. MVP candidate Albert Pujols and leadoff hitter David Eckstein both missed significant time with pulled side muscles.

Jeff Weaver is the second reclamation project the Cardinals have used as their fifth starter, after Sidney Ponson was released. An assortment of players got shots in left field before the mid-season emergence of rookie Chris Duncan, and there was no regular at second base until Ronnie Belliard was acquired near the trade deadline.

Those trials prepared La Russa to lower his expectations.

Lately, he's had to exhibit patience with his ace Carpenter, who wasted a 5-2 lead on Tuesday, has lost twice during the slump while allowing 12 runs in 14 innings, but instead of criticism from his manager there was only praise for trying to put the team on his shoulders.

"He's just trying too hard at those key times, and he gets out of his rhythm a little bit and he's making mistakes," La Russa said. "That's the kind of mistakes you respect because a guy cares and he's trying to do more than he has to."

Carpenter, not surprisingly, would hear none of that.

"If I start thinking about what type of game it is, that's when you get away from what makes you successful, and that's concentrating on making pitches," Carpenter said. "Unfortunately, I let it get away."

The optimistic view of the slide is at least the Cardinals have been competitive, with four one-run losses. That was not the case in the team's two earlier eight-game losing streaks, neither of which knocked them out of first place.

Their first eight-game skid in June had four losses in which the Cardinals gave up 10 runs, including consecutive blowouts of 20-6 and 13-5 to the White Sox. The Phillies outscored them 24-9 in consecutive July games in the second slump.

A well-timed hit here, a crucial pitch there, and the Cardinals already would have celebrated their third consecutive NL Central championship.

"The club knows how close we are to winning these games," La Russa said. "There's worse ways to lose. The no-chance losses, they're the ones that you don't feel any optimism about."

St. Louis manager Tony La Russa is keeping an optimistic view on his team's late-season skid. The Cardinals lost their seventh straight game Tuesday.

Nelson will never be forgotten

NELSON from page 8

when he was struggling.

"He set records that are pretty much untouchable, and that's rare in any sport," said Verplank, wearing a cap that had "BN" written on the side in black ink. "But I'll remember him for who he was. He was the ultimate gentleman. He was nice to every person he was around."

Nelson met another junior prodigy at a clinic in Los Angeles, where Jack Nicklaus was the main event. The warm-up act was 16-year-old Tiger Woods.

"I had to leave and play a nine-hole high school match," Woods said. "Mr. Nelson stopped by and said he wanted to say a couple of things to me. And 20 minutes later, I didn't say a word. He was doing all the talking."

Nelson asked Woods about his plans, and told him he was on the right track. The next year, he offered Woods a sponsor's exemption to play in the Byron Nelson Classic.

Nelson wrote with his own aging hands letters to players, sometimes inviting them to his tournament. Ernie Els showed up one year and took part in a clinic with D.A. Weibring as Nelson looked on.

"He said to me, 'I think you're going to win.' I'm sure he said that to a lot of guys," Els said Wednesday. "So I said, 'Why is that?' He said, 'Your club head is in perfect position, and you're swinging with ease.' And I won. He has always been a great person, and his memory is unbelievable. He just had a great way about him."

The last shot Nelson hit before an audience was the ceremonial drive to start the 2001 Masters. He was 89, just as nervous as when he won his first major championship at Augusta National in 1937.

"OK, little ball," he said quietly. "One more time."

He didn't split the middle, but no one cared. The ovation sounded like it belonged on the back nine Sunday.

Seattle running back has broken left foot

ALEXANDER from page 8

the protective boot the Seahawks medical staff had given him.

Holmgren said Alexander in the team headquarters Wednesday morning without the boot and was beginning to "jump all over him." Alexander then surprised his coach by telling him that he was ready to play against the Bears.

"Shaun Alexander came in today feeling very, very good. Kind of frisky, as a matter of fact. Told me he could play in the game," Holmgren said earlier Wednesday, before Alexander's latest tests.

"I said, 'Wait a second. Let's take a deep breath here.' But he really believes that he is feeling good enough to play."

He still does, even after his retest. When asked if he felt healed, Alexander said, "In a sense, yeah." "I still got inside of me a little bit of wishful thinking, like I might heal up [for Sunday]," he said, chuckling.

Alexander initially bruised the foot in the season opener at Detroit, in which he gained just 51 yards on 19 carries. Last Sunday, he had 4" yards on 20 rushes while wearing new shoes with special inserts before sitting out the fourth quarter, which began with Seattle leading the Giants 42-3.

"It felt like there was a fire in my foot," he said of that game.

Alexander missed practices last Wednesday and Thursday because of the bone bruise from the Detroit game, which led to the small crack, Holmgren said.

Alexander has started 69 of the last 70 games. His only absence in that span was a 2003 start he missed to help with the birth of his first daughter. He entered that game in the second quarter.

Last season, Alexander rushed for 1,880 yards and scored a league-record 28 touchdowns. He has just 187 yards, an average of 2.9 yards per carry, and two touchdowns through three games. His career average is 4.5 yards per rush, and it was 5.1 last season.

Bengals' linebacker suspended for season

By Teddy Kinney
Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Bengals linebacker Odell Thurman, already banned for the first four games of 2006 for violating the NFL's substance abuse policy, was suspended Wednesday for the rest of the season following his arrest on a charge of drunken driving.

Thurman was arrested about 3 a.m. Monday, hours after the Bengals beat division rival Pittsburgh 28-20.

Police said Thurman's blood alcohol was 0.18 percent when he was arrested, more than twice the legal limit of 0.08 percent in Ohio. Thurman is due in court Oct. 2, the day his initial suspension for missing a drug test was to end.

The Bengals were on the practice field when the suspension was announced, and coach Marvin Lewis was not immediately available for comment. Earlier, quarterback Carson Palmer noted that he saw Thurman cleaning out his locker at Paul Brown Stadium.

"I think everybody saw that and realized at some point you're not going to get a second chance, a third chance, a fourth chance," Palmer said.

"It comes down to decision-making. Coach Lewis is fed up with harping on Odell about doing the right thing at the right time and not being at the wrong place at the wrong time," Palmer said. "At some point, I think Marvin's done with it."

But Palmer said the actions of his teammates — six Bengals players have faced various charges since December — have had no effect on the play of the 3-0 team.

"I think we've got a couple guys who've gotten mixed up and made bad decisions," Palmer said. "In no way will that affect the rest of this team or any other individual players."

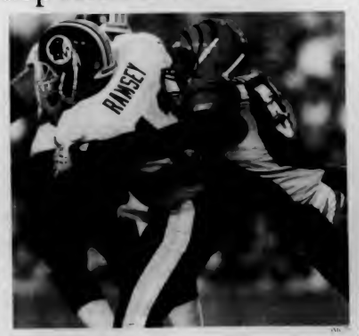
At a news conference Monday, Lewis was critical of Thurman's behavior.

"I am not pleased," Lewis said then. "It's not right, it's not what we stand for, it's not what the National Football League should represent."

Thurman, a second-round draft pick from Georgia last year, started all but one game in 2005. His arrest came less than a week after commissioner Roger Goodell visited Cincinnati and reminded players of their responsibility to stay out of trouble and represent the league honorably.

"He just obviously doesn't understand the privilege and the right to play in the National Football League," Lewis said. "This will probably be dealt with very severely."

Rookie Reggie McNeal and Chris Henry, both Bengals wide receivers, were in the vehicle when Thurman was arrested, but they were not charged.



Cincinnati Bengals linebacker Odell Thurman was suspended for the remainder of the season after he was arrested for drunken driving Monday morning.

RUSSELL'S LIQUORS
18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441
Giant Wine Sale!
Frontera Conha y Toro (all flavors) $7.99 1.5L
Luna Di Luna (Chardonnay/Pinot Grigio) $7.99 750mL
Gabbiano Chianti D.O.C.G. $7.99 750mL
Rothschild Mouton Cadet Bordeaux $6.99 750 mL
Big Mamma's Pinot Grigio (2 bottles) $6.99 750 mL
Buy any 6 bottles of wine in store and get additional 10% OFF!!
Heineken ... $11.99 12/pk bots.
Red Hook (mixed) ... $10.99 12 pk bots.
Harpoon (all flavors) ... $5.99 6/pk
Natural Ice & Light ... $13.99 30/pk

Amherst Hairstylists
Caren's Place
Mon-Fri 10-6
Sat 10-4
253-1200
40 Main St.
Downtown Amherst
New in Town?
Come in and get the attention you want!
• Students Always $22 shampoo & cut
• Hair Services for both men & women
• We specialize in Multi-Color Highlights using three to four complementing and blending colors
• Free Haircolor consultation
• Facial and Body waxing available
• Walk-ins Welcome
$2 off Haircut or 1/2 price facial waxing
With this coupon only
www.carensplace.com

Write for sports!
Contact us at: Sports@DailyCollegian.com OR visit us in the Campus Center basement and fill out an application today!

SKINNY JEANS
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Nelson's legacy will live on

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

CHANDLER'S CROSS, England—Jim Furyk has the reputation of being a rock, so it was strange to see his eyes suddenly glass over with tears and his answers become short and direct.

All because he was asked about Byron Nelson.

Furyk rarely skips the Byron Nelson Championship, and even though he missed the cut this year, it might have been his favorite. He and Ryder Cup captain Tom Lehman had dinner with Lord Byron at his ranch in Roanoke, Texas, where they shared stories and marveled at the memory of a 94-year-old man whose career spanned hickory shafts to titanium heads.

"He's so special because he went out of his way to do the very most he could to help other people," Furyk said. "That's why we should all learn so much from him. He'd be a really tough role model to follow because he was so wonderful."

Nelson died Tuesday of natural causes. His wife, Peggy, went to Bible study in the morning, and she returned to find him on the back porch facing the woodworking shop, where he spent hours crafting everything from clocks to cabinets.

A few months ago, Nelson made 12 slivers of wood, smooth and stained, for the U.S. Ryder Cup team. His signature stamp — "Made by Byron Nelson" — was branded in black on one side, and on the other side was the player's first name and Psalms 18:29: "With your help I can advance against a troop. With my God I can scale a wall."

J.J. Henry reached into his golf bag and held the keepsake, the least expensive gift amid the extravagance of the Ryder Cup, and perhaps the most valuable considering who made it.

"No question, it will be in my bag this week," Henry said. "Byron was everything golf stands for."

Ted Purdy won Nelson's tournament last year for his first PGA Tour victory, and when he returned for a charity meeting later that year, he began asking where he could buy some of the woodwork Nelson made. Peggy Nelson told him it was only a hobby and nothing was for sale. A few months later, Purdy received in the mail a wooden clock.

Byron Nelson passed away on Tuesday at the age of 94 from natural causes. He won five Grand Slam titles and had 52 PGA Tour wins.

"Made by Byron Nelson."

"He put it on the bottom of the clock," Purdy said. "I wish he had just stamped it right on the face."

Nelson was known as a gentle spirit with a pure swing. He won all three of the U.S. majors, and took his place in golf history — probably forever — by winning 11 straight tournaments in 1945, the year he won 18 times.

Even more astounding was that he retired at age 34 when he had enough money to buy his ranch.

"If he had kept playing like guys do now, more than likely he would have won more tournaments than anyone," Tiger Woods said.

Nelson was unlike any other.

His legacy stretches beyond trophies to the way he lived his life. His gentle style and courtly manner reached one generation after another, and stood as an example for them to follow.

"I'm not sure I've ever met a person like him," Scott Verplank said. "If he never did anything in golf, he'd be loved universally."

Verplank was among those fortunate to know him well, and how they met speaks to how much Nelson cared for others, and how he never thought of himself as larger than the game.

Verplank grew up in Dallas and was one of the best players in the junior circuits. He was 17 when Nelson called him for the first time, telling him that he had been seeing his name in the newspaper that he must be playing very well.

"Would you like me to come watch you hit balls?" Nelson asked.

Once his heart started beating again, Verplank accepted. They met at Preston Trail in Dallas, an exclusive club restricted to men 21 and older, and Verplank found himself on the range with one of golf's greatest players.

"The head pro walks over, and he knew who I was," Verplank recalled Wednesday. "So he says, 'How old are you, Scott?' And I told him I was 17. He says, 'Byron, he can't be out here.' Byron had no idea, but I mean, c'mon. This is Byron Nelson. We just got in the car and drove over to Northwood."

Verplank says he played six times with Nelson during the 1980s. Just as meaningful were the letters he wrote, about a dozen a year, either congratulating him for his success or encouraging him

See NELSON on page 7

"Lord Byron" won 11 straight tournament victories in 1945. Tiger Woods' (right) six straight in 1999-2000 is the closest any player has come.

Alexander's broken ankle confirmed

By Gregg Bell
Associated Press

KIRKLAND, Wash.—The power of cross-continental prayer among family members on the telephone. An ultrasound machine working overtime. And optimism so rampant, it led him to jump up and down on a broken bone.

Two days of that still couldn't fill the crack in Shaun Alexander's foot.

The league MVP asked for and got another round of CT scans Wednesday on the previously diagnosed cracked bone in his left foot. Alexander said those tests showed the same break in the fourth metatarsal that was there on Monday.

So despite feeling "great" following two days of praying and "a bone machine" feverishly working at Alexander's house, he says he is out indefinitely — including for Sunday's game at Chicago.

"Unless it's the Super Bowl, I don't think that Mike would even let me think about playing," an upbeat Alexander said of coach Mike Holmgren.

"A lot of swelling is gone, a lot of blood from the bone [is gone], but there is still a crack."

Alexander still was listed as doubtful on Seattle's injury report late Wednesday. But the Seahawks are assuming he is out. Maurice Morris took all of Alexander's practice repetitions Wednesday and is primed to make his fourth career start in Sunday night's showdown with the Bears, who are also 3-0.

"This is a big deal. This is not a little deal," Holmgren said. "I mean, the MVP, you don't want him to hurt himself any more.

"Do I want him to play? Certainly, I want him to play. But we'll do the right thing."

Alexander has not missed any of his 99 NFL regular-season games since Seattle drafted him 19th overall in 2000.

Upon his return from the latest tests, Alexander was wearing blue jeans over running shoes — and not

See ALEXANDER on page 7

More tests on Wednesday confirmed that Seattle Seahawks running back Shaun Alexander has a broken bone in his left foot.

Athletics clinch first division title since 2003

By Tim Booth
Associated Press

SEATTLE—Nick Swisher bounced from players, to coaches, to front office personnel, making sure every member of the Oakland Athletics' organization was soaked in champagne.

After three days of waiting, the A's popped the bubbly, beer and anything else they could get their hands on as newly-crowned AL West champions Tuesday night.

"It's everything you could hope for, these guys in here are awesome," catcher Jason Kendall said after the A's 12-3 win over Seattle. "Just to have this experience right now is unbelievable."

Oakland's victory and the Los Angeles Angels' 5-2 loss to Texas gave the A's their first AL West crown since 2003 and the 14th in franchise history, setting off a raucous celebration that lived up to the A's frat house reputation.

Swisher was the instigator and no one was immune, from manager Ken Macha, to managing partner Lewis Wolff, to some of the players' wives who ventured into the clubhouse.

Now the A's look ahead to the postseason and trying to erase the memories of 2000-03 when they were bounced in the first round in four consecutive seasons.

"It goes fast. The five games in the first round go like a blink of time," Macha said. "You've got to enjoy it, and they'll leave everything on the field."

Rich Harden pitched five shutout innings Tuesday night and made a strong bid to be a significant factor for Oakland in the postseason.

Harden (4-0) was making just his second start since June, sidelined for most of the summer with a right elbow injury. He overpowered Seattle, striking out five and allowing only two hits.

He was backed by early homers from Swisher and Milton Bradley that gave Oakland a 5-0 lead after two innings. The A's added four runs in the seventh and two more in the eighth, sending Mariners fans to the exits and igniting the A's fans' chants of "Let's go Oakland."

"I didn't really have my best stuff," said Harden, who threw just 76 pitches. "The guys putting up runs early really helped me out."

The small-budget A's are back in the playoffs thanks to a sensational second half — a hallmark for this club in recent years.

Oakland could have wrapped up the championship at home last weekend, but it dropped two straight games to the Angels. Los Angeles then beat Texas on Monday night, while the A's blew a 9-3 lead and lost to Seattle, keeping their magic number at two for the third day in a row.

Only Eric Chavez and Barry Zito remain from the 2000 A's team that reached the playoffs to begin a stretch of four straight postseason trips, and Chavez asked to stay on the field for the final out Tuesday night.

This year, the A's won the AL West despite injuries to a number of regulars, including Harden, who only returned last week to make his first start since June 4.

Bradley also spent two stints on the disabled list and shortstop Bobby Crosby is still out with a back injury. Kotsay has been dealing with back spasms and added a strained groin to the list of ailments on Monday night. Chavez played through forearm problems and other nagging injuries.

Zito stayed put at the trade deadline despite rumors all season he might be swapped.

Then, there was the addition of Frank Thomas, who signed a one-year $500,000 incentive-laden contract in the offseason. He's thrived in Oakland, hitting 38 homers and picking up his 109th RBI when he singled home Kendall in the first against Seattle.

Thomas was injured and missed the White Sox's run to the World Series last year, followed by a bitter departure last winter after 16 seasons on Chicago's South Side. Now he's back in the postseason, while the White Sox are home.

"I have no grudges with anybody. I'm just happy to be playing the game," Thomas said. "I thank God I've had a great year and helped this team get to the finish line."

Frank Thomas and the Oakland Athletics clinched the AL West title on Tuesday night for the 14th time in franchise history.

LIQUORS 44

SMIRNOFF 80° 1.75 liter $20.49	SMIRNOFF 1.75 liter $21.99	PAYOT BAY 1.75 liter $24.99	Captain Morgan SPICED RUM 1.75 liter $24.99
TATTOO 750 mls $13.99	Jose Cuervo FLAVORS 750 mls $17.99	Tanqueray GIN 1.75 liter $28.99	Crown Royal 750 mls $20.99
BACARDI Light & Dark 1.75 liter $20.99	BAILEYS ORIGINAL CHOCOLATE MINT CARAMEL 750 mls $18.99	MAGIC HAT All Flavors 12PACKS $11.99 + DEP	12PACKS $12.49 + DEP

DOMESTIC KEGS	1/2 Bbls	1/4 Bbls
Bud	$63.99	$43.99
Bud Light	$63.99	$43.99
Bud Select	$63.99	$43.99
Coors Light	$63.99
Miller Lite	$63.99
Keystone Light	$47.99
Pabst Blue Ribbon	$48.99
Natural Light/Ice	$48.99
Busch Light	$47.99

AT THE HADLEY LOCATION
458 Russell St. #9 • Campus Plaza
413-253-9344
Visit us at our other locations:
NORTHAMPTON • 238 King St.
HOLYOKE • 44 Lincoln St.
FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS
NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS
DON'T DRINK & DRIVE

Submit A Comic
S'IL VOUS PLAIT
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

		3		7	2
5	6		8
4		7	5				1
	8				1
7	3						8	6
			2				3
	9				3	4		1
					8		6	5
			1	4		8

Find today's sudoku solutions at:
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"By words the mind is winged."

—Aristophanes

READ IT & WEEP By Travis Dandro

PLEASE RECYCLE By Anna Lee

FUNCTIONAL DYSTOPIA By Zeyd Rusan

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

You know, if it came down to it, I could not construct a sun dial
Why does that worry you?
I'm generally upset whenever I realize my ignorance of something
Do You live in a State of constant upset?
Watch it, I heard

ACROSS
1 Mil. branch
4 Of richer consumers
11 Type of sch.
14 Bandleader Winding
15 Tobyhanna's mountains
16 Approx.
17 Bus. ltr. abbr.
18 Dodge model
19 "___ Miami"
20 Half!
22 Delhi dresses
23 Colorado resort
24 First of billions
26 E. Lansing sch.
27 Having paddles
28 Sports venues
30 Make a see
32 "Picket Fences" star
34 Frequently, poetically
37 Columbus sch.
38 Mathematician Byron
39 Seller's $
40 Can. province
41 Pals' mates
42 Fruity dessert
46 Of an arm bone
48 Itty-bitty
47 Figure out
50 Natl. network
52 Floating ride
53 Bird's crop
54 Bread bit
56 Arp's art
58 Shortened tie
59 Knitted shoes
61 Tax
62 Bridge action
63 La Guni and Andrea
64 Needle hole
65 Religious figs.
66 Boastful people
67 Hrs. of summer

DOWN
1 Hawaiian guitars, briefly
2 Island off Pensacola
3 National Historic Site in Kansas
4 Field's rival
5 Planters
6 Get lost!
7 Morris vulgar
8 Pro-management
9 Grijalva and Brooks
10 Snaky shape
11 Episcopal cleric
12 Actor Davis
13 Youngster
21 Kitchen utensils
23 Dyeing container
25 Like an easy shot
27 Supreme Court opening month
28 Small bit
29 Car type
31 Ready for the pitch
33 Stumbled upon
34 Like some sandwiches
35 Saintly celebrations
36 Word with sum or up
43 Strawberry tree
44 Enjoy a book
45 T.V. connection
47 Wound covers
48 Planet's path
49 Covers with fat
51 Funt's request
54 Mrs. Dithers of "Blondie"
55 Yogi or Smokey
57 Act in wrongdoing
58 Pewter
60 Draft org.

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Moan and Dove stop wasting your time at other bars themoananddove.com
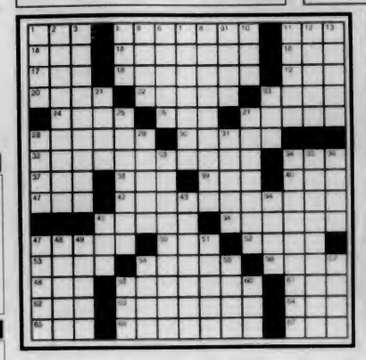
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day



Your Room Smells Like ASS!
Fast odor eliminator... Just plug it in!
A Division of The Vac Shop
1-87-ROOM-AIR-9

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
High fives are great and all, but they do transport germs. And we all know about germs.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
If you ever thought you'd be famous you should figure out why anyone would care.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
A spoon full of sugar helps the medicine goes down. And Mary Poppins too.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Blink-182 might be lame but they're still awesome.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Just because you cannot have it doesn't mean you have to want it.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Make use of the library—they have pictoral dictionaries now.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
The sooner you die the sooner you will reincarnate as an oestridge or whatever.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You will date a business major. They will dump you when you're really high.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Autumn is upon us. That's why your leg is asleep.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Rethink your halloween costume if the packaging reads "Sexy _____".

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Virginia ain't for losers.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Successful wit comes without hesitation. Or maybe just a little practice.

Chicago Pizzaria Yes, We Deliver!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
HOURS
Sun-Wed 3pm-2am
Thurs-Sat 3pm-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Minor in Leadership and get paid for it! Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly. Be an Army Officer full time/part time after college www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Play Women's Ice Hockey! Tryouts for the UMass Women's Club Ice Hockey team are Sept. 29th 10 pm- 11:20 pm umasshockeymail@yahoo.com

AUTO FOR SALE

92 Toyota Camry Station Wagon $850 549-9639

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day. Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

EMPLOYMENT

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties… Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

Scanners Full Time & Part Time Flexible Hours Light Industrial machine Operators needed to Scan Product. Bar-Code Scan various items UPC codes. Group Leaders and Material handlers also needed. Apply at C&S Wholesale Grocers, Exit #21, off Interstate 91, 142 Elm Street, Hatfield, Ma Phone: 413-247-0551. An EEO/M/F/H/V Employer

EMPLOYMENT

Graphic Designer wanted. Undergraduate okay. Only requirements, talent and desire to work 5/10 hours/wk. Interesting Work. Competive pay. Resume and portfolio to bob@buenoysano.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

SERVICES

Have you been ripped off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2007 Celebration 20th anniversary w/ SunSplash Free Trip on 12 before Nov. 1 Free Meals & Parties, Group Discounts 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplash-tours.com

Travel with STS to this year's top 10 Spring Break destinations! Best deals guaranteed! Highest rep commissions, Visit www.ststravel.com or call 1-800-648-4849

HOUSE FOR RENT

To advertise with the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Classifieds:

call (413) 545-3500 to speak to an experienced advertising representative.

Or visit us at www.dailycollegian.com to submit your classefied online, or visit us in our office in the campus center basement!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 2006

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

T.O. denies suicide claim

BY JAIME ARON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — Flamboyant Dallas Cowboys receiver Terrell Owens denied a police report that he attempted suicide, saying he became groggy after mixing painkillers with supplements.

As it to prove he's doing fine, Owens went from the hospital to catching passes from quarterback Drew Bledsoe within two hours, then proclaimed himself "very capable of going out there and playing on Sunday" — despite whatever happened Tuesday night and a broken right hand.

Owens said Wednesday the confusion likely stemmed from an empty bottle of pain medication found by his publicist, who was with him at the time and called 911. He said the rest of the pills were in a drawer.

"I was non-responsive when she made that call," Owens said. "She made the call out of her judgment for my well-being."

Appearing in a news conference at team headquarters a few hours after leaving a hospital for what a police report described as "a drug overdose," Owens wore workout gear and no bandage on his right hand. The star receiver smiled and seemed more amused than peeved at the latest ruckus surrounding him.

Owens, 32, blamed a combination of hydrocodone, a generic form of Vicodin, with all-natural supplements for making him ill.

"It's very unfortunate for it to go from an allergic reaction to a suicide attempt," he said.

Rescue workers arrived at Owens' home around 8 p.m. Tuesday and took him to an emergency room. When word spread, publicist Kim Etheredge said it was an allergic reaction.

But the story shifted Wednesday morning when several media outlets received a police report — that had yet to be released by the authorities — saying Owens had attempted suicide by overdosing on the painkillers, even putting two more pills into his mouth after an unidentified friend, later identified as Etheredge, intervened.

The police document, first reported by WFAA-TV, said Owens was asked by rescue workers "If he was attempting to harm himself, at which time [he] stated 'Yes.'

When officially released by police, about half the document was blacked out, including the phrases "attempting suicide by prescription pain medication" and "a drug overdose," as well as the details of Owens having two pills pried from his mouth and Owens saying "Yes" when asked if he intended to harm himself.

"I was kind of out of it," Owens said. "I can barely even remember the doctors, much less the police officers asking me questions."

Owens also said that he's "not depressed about anything" and that he should practice Thursday.

Owens broke the bone leading to his right ring finger during a game a week ago Sunday. The next day, doctors screwed in a plate so the bone could heal without fear of further damage — leaving a 2-inch scar on top of his hand.

If he doesn't play this Sunday, Owens might still return for the following game — Oct. 8, in Philadelphia, against the team that dumped him midway through last season only months after helping them nearly win the Super Bowl.

Etheredge also appeared at Owens' news conference, saying she "did not take anything out of his mouth" and that it was unfair for anyone to think Owens would kill himself.

"Terrell has 25 million reasons why he should be alive," she said, referring to the $25 million, three-year contract he signed in March with the Cowboys.

"I'm just upset," Etheredge added. "I feel they take advantage of Terrell. Had this been someone else, this may not have happened."

Dallas police officials declined to comment on Etheredge's denials. "We can't discuss the police report because of privacy laws," said a spokesman, Sgt. Gil Cerda.

Teammates and friends throughout the league rallied to support Owens even before he spoke, with many saying they thought the suicide report might be wrong.

"As soon as I got the news this morning, I had to make my call to make sure everything was OK. You know what? It was," said Cincinnati receiver Chad Johnson, a close friend through their rivalry over the best end-zone celebrations.

Former Cowboys star Deion Sanders was with Owens at his home before he went to team headquarters.

"From my understanding, looking at him in the eye as a man and as a big brother, I said 'Be straight up with me.' He seems to be OK," Sanders told the NFL Network, where he works as an analyst.

After getting almost strictly Owens-related questions, coach Bill Parcells cut off his usual 25-30 minute session after only nine minutes. He ended it by getting up from his chair and saying, "When I find out what the hell is going on, you will know. Until then, I'm not getting interrogated for no reason."

Police Lt. Rick Watson said during his brief news conference that he could only confirm paramedics called police to say they were taking Owens to the hospital. He said no more details would come from the police because no laws were broken.

"We looked into it, and we determined it is not a criminal offense," Watson said. "This a medical type of situation that occurred."

Watson released the version of the police narrative with certain sections blacked out. The full report was obtained by several news outlets and reported first by WFAA. The Associated Press received the full version from WFAA.

The tape of the 911 call could help clear things up. The AP filed a request under the Texas Public Information Act to get its contents, but fire department officials said it would not be available before late Wednesday.

Owens, one of the league's top receivers during his 11-year NFL career, is best known for wild stunts on the field and other publicity-seeking antics off it.

When the Cowboys signed him, they said their background checks indicated no red flags. In fact, team consultant Calvin Hill — who mostly deals with troubled players — said during training camp that his department was not involved with Owens because he didn't have a history of those kinds of problems.

He missed most of training camp, and three of four preseason games, because of a hamstring injury. He was late for work during his recovery and was fined for it, but Owens laughed it off, saying he overslept. He said it had happened before, though not with Dallas, and would probably happen again.

Owens has played two games for the Cowboys, catching nine passes for 99 yards and a touchdown.

Owens, already a top receiver with the San Francisco 49ers, burst to prominence in 2000 for his celebration of two touchdowns on the star logo at midfield of Texas Stadium in a game against the Cowboys. A Dallas player blind-sided him after the second one.

The legend of T.O. grew when he celebrated another touchdown by pulling a Sharpie from his sock and autographing the ball in a 49ers game at qe promotional stunt with one of ABC's "Desperate Housewives" that later prompted an apology from the network.

Owens was heavily praised while with the Eagles for playing well in the February 2005 Super Bowl, seven weeks after ankle surgery. However, his relationship with quarterback Donovan McNabb deteriorated soon after and the organization suspended him in midseason and later got rid of him amid contract complaints and other personality squabbles. Team owner Jeffrey Lurie said later that, even with the Super Bowl trip, he regretted having ever signed Owens.

Dallas Cowboys wide receiver Terrell Owens denied the report yesterday that he attempted suicide by ingesting painkillers.

Terrell Owens listens to his publicist speak during yesterday's press conference held at Valley Ranch in Irving, Texas.

Owens' timeline says it all

IRVING, Texas (AP) — The timeline of Terrell Owens since signing with the Dallas Cowboys:

March 18 — Four days after being cut by the Eagles, Owens signs a three-year, $25 million deal with the Dallas Cowboys that includes a $5 million bonus and a $5 million salary in 2006. "I'm a star among stars now," Owens says at a news conference.

May 5 — Forty-eight days after Owens signed, Bill Parcells speaks about him for the first time. "I don't view it as a gamble. It's in my best interest that he's successful." When he speaks again two days later, Parcells puts the subject of Owens off limits until training camp.

June 2 — Owens goes through his first day of minicamp, catching every pass thrown his way but one in a nearly two-hour practice. "I'm looking forward to the opportunity that I can make to help this team win," he says. "That's why they brought me in here."

June 8 — Owens arrives after 5 p.m. for a scheduled 3 p.m. visit with the roughly 60 campers attending the Terrell Owens Youth Football Camp. "I'm sorry I'm late. I've been playing for the Dallas Cowboys," he tells the kids.

July 5 — "I'll be the second setting-the-record-straight autobiography Owens has written in 22 months, is released five days ahead of schedule. The biggest revelation: His relationship with Philadelphia quarterback Donovan McNabb soured for good when Owens was told "Shut the [expletive] up" in a huddle. McNabb later calls the autobiography a "children's book."

July 13 — At his first book signing, Owens claims he didn't say his return in time for the February 2005 Super Bowl was "heroic," even though that's what he wrote. He called it one of the words chosen by his co-author.

July 27 — Owens goes to Point Mogu naval base to greet teammates when they fly in to Oxnard, Calif., for the start of training camp. Owens has driven up from Los Angeles.

July 29 — A record crowd of 5,500 attends Owens' first training camp practice. After being the last player out of the locker room, he makes the best play of the session, beating Aaron Glenn for a long touchdown, drawing loud cries of "T-O" from fans.

Aug. 3 — Owens misses practice because of a hamstring problem. "I wouldn't say I'm injured, just a little sore," he says. Says team owner Jerry Jones: "For a guy who is renowned for playing

See T.O. on page 7

Did the media go too far in Owens frenzy?

Rob Greenfield

Now Green Day's "One nation controlled by the media" lyric makes a lot more sense.

It can be applied to all aspects of professional journalism — print, television, radio, internet — and no one is innocent.

Yesterday, at around 10:30 in the morning, I walked into the Worcester Dining Commons and saw Terrell Owens splattered across the flat-screen TVs that are tucked into the corners of the hall.

Owens making headlines was nothing new, but I read the subheadline and it told a chilling story: Owens had tried to commit suicide.

I checked the source to make sure that it was legitimate and not a tahloid looking for publicity.

There it was — a report by the Dallas police department, aired on Fox News and CNN, saying that Terrell Owens had in fact tried to kill himself by overdosing on painkillers.

For the next several hours, that's all anyone could talk about. Mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters and people that don't know anything about sports were up to speed on the plight of the Cowboys' famous wide receiver.

Every time I turned a corner, it was "Did you hear about T.O.?"

And I found myself asking other people the same question.

Then the theories started rolling in. Did he do it on purpose? Did Owens, starved for attention, stage a suicide to grab national headlines?

We all thought it. While far-fetched, the theory seemed to have some bounce.

Sports radio personality Jim Rome spent his entire three-hour show on the Owens saga. Callers chimed in with outlandish ideas and conspiracies. Rome, at one point, pondered the vision of Owens laughing at the media mess that he had created and reveling in the attention, knowing that a suicide attempt would conjure such a frenzy.

Cowboys coach Bill Parcells had a press conference around 2:30 p.m. in front of groveling reporters with thousands of questions, and just one answer they wanted to hear.

Parcells flattened the interrogation with a flurry of "I don't knows" and sounded (typical Tuna) aggravated that he had to talk about something other than this weekend's matchup with Tennessee.

The initial report from the Dallas police department said that Owens — found incoherent on his bed last night after a 911 call by a female alerted police — answered "yes" when asked if he had tried to harm himself.

When the police made an official statement to the media, they denied that the suicide story was true and stated that they weren't answering any questions.

They didn't confirm or deny anything, and that let the story linger.

However, Owens called a press conference yesterday afternoon to squash any floating rumors and set everyone straight.

He didn't try to commit suicide. The empty bottle of painkillers that Owens' female companion had found in the room was the reason she called the police. But Owens did not take those pills and explained that they were somewhere else in his apartment.

In response to the initial report (that he had confirmed that he had tried to harm himself) Owens told reporters that he had a bad reaction to the painkillers he was taking for his broken finger and didn't remember any of the questions that the police asked him.

There's your story.

It took about six hours to find the truth, but the darlings in the media finally stumbled upon it. From 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. yesterday, the truth didn't matter. All that mattered was the buzz.

Those reports about an Owens suicide created more ruffles in six hours than last year's Super Bowl did in a week.

So who is to blame for this? We are — the media that would rather rush a juicy story to the front page than double check the sources to make sure of the truth.

It's no wonder that athletes don't trust us. Relationships between sportswriters and players have soured over the years — in part because of money, in part because of egos, but mostly because of the nature of contemporary news.

These are scary times for professional athletes. And Terrell Owens (I never thought I'd say this) is the victim here. He took one too many painkillers and all of the sudden he was national news.

I didn't think that the story was true. Owens loves himself too much to do something like that. But the reason that I took a second look at the television was the reputation of the sources that broke the story.

Fox News, CNN, and ESPN all had Owens attempting suicide. Two renowned news stations, and one prestigious sports news station, were all wrong, and are all guilty of violating the golden rules of journalism and moving one step closer to the tabloids.

We swung and missed on this one. And it doesn't make me feel good about being a reporter.

— Rob Greenfield is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com

Terrell Owens speaks to the media during yesterday's press conference in which Owens denied the report that he attempted suicide on Tuesday night.

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

New York Mets ace Pedro Martinez has a 16.97 earned-run average over his last four starts. He has given up 22 hits and 20 earned runs in his last 11 2/3 innings. Martinez gave up eight hits and seven runs in 2 2/3 innings in last night's 13-1 loss to the Atlanta Braves.

UMASS BACK TO THE COLLEGE BOWL PAGE 8

ATHLETIC FIRE ROCKED OUT AT PEARL STREET PAGE 5

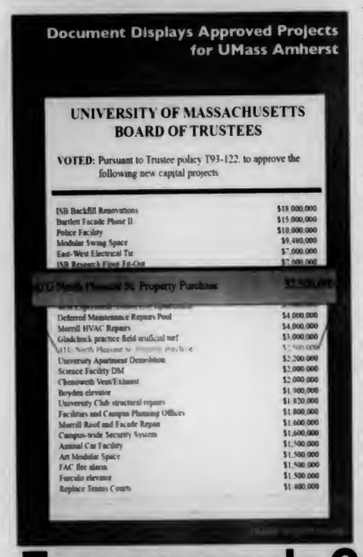
THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 62 LO: 40 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 2006

Frat Row could be purchased for $2.5 million



Document Displays Approved Projects for UMass Amherst
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOARD OF TRUSTEES
VOTED: Pursuant to Trustee policy T93-122, to approve the following new capital projects
ISB Backfill Renovations $18,000,000
Bartlett Facade Phase II $15,000,000
Police Facility $10,000,000
Modular Swing Space $9,400,000
East-West Electrical Tie $7,000,000
ISB Research First Fit-Out $7,000,000
Deferred Maintenance Repairs Pool $4,000,000
Morrill HVAC Repairs $4,000,000
Gladchuk practice field artificial turf $3,000,000
University Apartment Demolition $2,200,000
Science Facility DM $2,000,000
Chenoweth Vent/Exhaust $2,000,000
Boyden elevator $1,900,000
University Club structural repairs $1,850,000
Facilities and Campus Planning Offices $1,800,000
Morrill Roof and Facade Repair $1,600,000
Campus-wide Security System $1,600,000
Animal Car Facility $1,500,000
Art Modular Space $1,500,000
FAC fire alarm $1,500,000
Fuculo elevator $1,500,000
Replace Tennis Courts $1,400,000

BY ERIC ATHAS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

An official document of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees, as well as a source involved in the UMass-Alpha Tau Gamma, Inc. Frat Row deal, say that the five parcels on North Pleasant St. will be sold for about $2.5 million.

The document, dated Aug. 23, 2006, lists the approved projects for the fiscal years 2007-11 University Capital Plan. The document also states the total projected cost of each approved project.

The fourteenth item listed is the "ATG North Pleasant St. Property Purchase," which pertains to the five pieces of land located at 375, 387, 389, 395 and 401 North Pleasant St. It states that the "Total Project Cost Est.," for those pieces of property is $2,500,000.

"That's a reasonable estimate provided to the board, but I don't know if that's the final figure, I expect it's close to it," said Ed Blaguszewski, Director of News and Information at UMass. "My understanding is they haven't signed the final agreement, and thus, the final figure isn't in stone."

Blaguszewski said each year UMass officials go before the Board of Trustees to get the Capital Plan approved. He said without board approval, the University cannot pursue the projects.

"Whether that is the construction of a new building, the renovation of a current building, or the purchase of property, it ties into the capital needs of the University," said Blaguszewski. "If we didn't have the trustee's authority in advance to do that, then we couldn't close the deal, for instance, on the properties."

A source close to the Frat Row deal, however, said the $2.5 million is "an accurate figure," and it is in fact the amount that UMass plans to pay for the properties.

The five houses currently sitting on the land have been vacant since the conclusion of last semester. Negotiations between UMass and ATG have been ongoing since 2003.

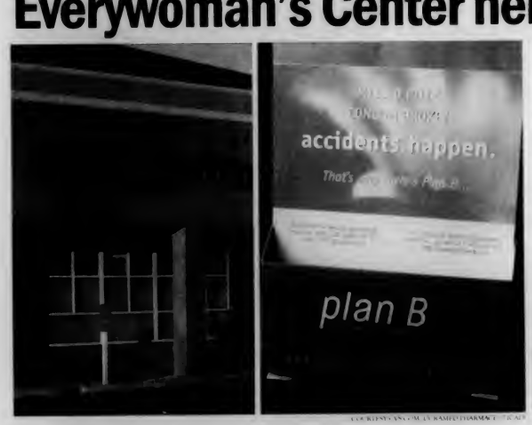
ATG submitted a demolition permit to have the five houses razed, but a start time has not been confirmed, said Benita Weeks, the Town of Amherst Inspection Services Building Commissioner.

Gary Shepherd, a representative from ATG said in a telephone interview on Monday that he hopes to have the buildings destroyed within the next month, but that "we're having issues with trespassing and destruction of property."

Last Sunday morning at 4 a.m., Amherst Fire Dept. officials say that the five vacant houses were broken into, and an old couch in the 375 North Pleasant St. house was set on fire. No one was arrested following the fire.

An official document (left) states houses on Frat Row (above, with ΣΨΖ) will be sold for $2.5 million.

Everywoman's Center held discussion on Plan B



CVS pharmacy (left) and other pharmacies in Massachusetts will offer Plan B (right), emergency contraception without a prescription by the end of the year.

BY MELISSA D'AMICO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Everywoman's Center, a local women's rights activist organization, held a discussion on Tuesday about the use and availability of emergency contraception. The panel focused on increasing the knowledge of emergency contraception, why the United States has taken so long to make this contraception readily available for women, as well as locations that provide the pill.

"There has been a very long political struggle in having emergency contraception (EC) available in the U.S., and many people are still unaware of what EC really is," said Sandy Mandel of the Everywoman's Center. "So we believed that we should provide an opportunity for people with expertise to come and discuss it."

The United States Food and Drug Administration approved the emergency contraception pill, Plan B, for sale without a prescription to women and men 18 years of age and older, on August 24. Plan B won't officially be available over-the-counter in Massachusetts until the end of the year.

Local pharmacies still offer the pill to patients with a prescription for up to $40. Tapestry Health Clinic provides it for $18 to $20, and University Health Services has the contraceptive available for $17 to $22 per dose.

Women, who are unaware of how Plan B works, associate this emergency contraception with the Morning-After pill or RU-486.

"Many people confuse EC with RU-486," said Lucy Hartry, Director of Administrative Services for Tapestry Health Clinic. "RU-486 is different from EC because it is a non-surgical form of abortion," she said.

RU-486 is a chemical compound that is taken in pill form and can induce abortion in women who are up to nine weeks pregnant. Unlike RU-486, Plan B must be taken up to five days or 120 hours after unprotected sexual intercourse, explained Amanda Collings-Vann, the Director of the Women's Health Project at University Health Services. The earlier the pill is taken, the more effective it is, according to Vann.

The use of EC is similar to that of birth control pills, in that EC inhibits ovulation, changes the consistency of cervical mucous, and can impede fertilized eggs from implanting into the lining of the uterus.

"Before EC was approved for use, many doctors prescribed birth control pills to be taken as EC. Since the 1970's UMass had been doing this," said Vann. "Ten years before the Federal Drug Administration approved Prevent, the first approved form of EC, in 1997, UHS was packaging Overall, a brand of Birth Control pills, and prescribing them as EC," she added. Tapestry Health Clinic has been providing EC in the form of birth control pills for over 20 years.

"Last year, we [at Tapestry Health] gave over 3,000 doses of EC. Some people even got extra doses just so they could have some on hand in case anything were to happen again," said Hartry.

See PLAN B on page 2

Chairman appointed

BY MATT BELLIVEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees held a special meeting in Boston, yesterday, to elect Stephen P. Tocco as the new chairman of a 22-member governing panel.

Tocco was handpicked as a candidate by Massachusetts Gov., Mitt Romney and was appointed to the Board of Trustees four weeks ago.

The new chairman was one of six new trustees appointed by Romney on Sept. 18th and has chaired the Board of Higher Education for the past six years. He will continue to serve as chairman of the Board of Higher Education until a successor is appointed.

Tocco was to succeed Karl E. White, the former vice chairman, but was promoted to the chairmanship when incumbent chairman, James J. Karam, was not reappointed by the governor.

"Steve Tocco has been serving the Commonwealth for more than a decade and a half in a variety of capacities, most recently as the chairman of the Board of Higher Education," said UMass President Jack M. Wilson. "Steve's inexhaustible supply of ideas, his boundless energy and his immense capacity for hard work are recognized far and wide."

UMass trustees oversee a budget of $2.1 billion.

Tocco earned a Bachelor of Science in Pharmacy and Chemistry from the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy in 1969. The native of Malden, Mass. became involved in public policy in 1976 when he campaigned for U.S. Rep. Edward J. Markey, as he sought his first term in Congress.

In 1980, Tocco led the Associated Builders and Contractors, a trade association. Eleven years later, he returned to politics as a senior aide to Governor William F. Weld, who, a year later, named Tocco Secretary of Economic Affairs. Tocco headed the Massachusetts Port Authority in 1993, a position he held for four year.

After heading the MPA, he joined an international trade unit of the law firm, Mintz Levin Cohn Ferris Glovsky and Popeo. Two years later, he became head of the firm's lobbying arm, ML Strategies (after its merger with the trade unit). That same year he was tapped to head the state Board of Higher Education.

UMass improv show raises sexual awareness

BY ANNA DOLIANITIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Residence Life at the University of Massachusetts hosted "Sex Signals," a sex education improvisational performance, in the Campus Center Auditorium on Wednesday night.

The performance addressed such issues as dating, sex, and acquaintance rape on college campuses. It consisted of four improvised scenes performed by a two person acting team, and demanded audience participation.

The two actors who performed on Wednesday night were Courtney Abbott and John Mallory. Abbott is an actress, singer, dancer, and a certified volunteer at the Rape Crisis Hotline at the YWCA of Chicago, IL. Mallory participated in a tour that traveled across the country making presentations at forty-three different schools and ten regional and/or national conferences (according to the Sex Signals/Catharsis Productions website).

The group's ultimate goal is to create "the kind of critical dialogue necessary to dissolve enduring rape myths and encourage thoughtful, accountable, intimate behavior. The program reaches out to students who have mislabeled coercion as consent, with the hope that once they realize the brutal impact of rape, that they will change their behavior," the program's website states.

"Unfortunately, many rape awareness programs lose students by being dry, somber, patronizing, or pedantic," said Erin Kelley, the event coordinator for Residence Life. "In addition, few young adults have ever been given a safe space to have a candid, positive conversation about the confusion and realities of dating, sex, and on stranger rape."

The duo's first skit mimicked a typical party situation, in which Mallory approached Abbott and used only pickup lines provided by the audience, including, "Can you hold something for me?" followed by "my hand?" The audience was asked to tell the actors what they should do and say, and how they should react to different situations.

The audience was asked to find cards taped beneath their seats which read, "YOP," and, during another skit, they were instructed to hold their cards in the air when they felt that the situation was becoming awkward. While the cards were raised at different times, several students raised their cards, realized that the skit was continuing regardless, and put their cards down and allowed the performance to continue.

"It is definitely an effective way to educate students on acquaintance rape and dating because it mixes both serious and comedic elements," said sophomore Dennis Scott, "as an audience member you become invested in the performers and cannot help but listen the whole time."

One skit ended in silence from the crowd. Abbott had portrayed a talk show host, while Mallory played the role of a guest who was accused of raping a woman with whom he believed he had participated in consensual sex. The skit began with the line, "I really didn't rape that girl," and by the end of the skit, which Mallory ended early because of his own comfort level, it had become clear that his character had, in fact, raped the woman he was with.

This particular skit stirred serious conversation in the auditorium. The conversation considered various factors that would determine whether the character was guilty or whether he had been wronged.

The audience discussed the amount of alcohol that the woman had ingested, as well as who initiated the sexual activity,

See SEX SIGNALS on page 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 19

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jamison Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Virginia Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Sean Durham
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Rob Greenfield
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Prentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Theresa Barbo
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna DeIuisiis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT SPORTS Danny Picard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jon Pelland
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick
WEB-EDITOR James Hale

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGRICULTURE, AND WAS THE COLLEGE SCRIBE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1916 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN MICROSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matthew O'Rourke

COPY EDITOR
Matreya Hughes

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Ginny Nielsen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Tiffany Van Langen, Colin Nelson

GOP pushes detainee bill forward

President Bush (center) accompanied by Senate Majority Leader, Bill Frist of Tenn. (left), and Sen. Mitch McConnell speak to reporters on Capitol Hill in Washington, Sept. 28.

BY ANNE PLUMMER FLAHERTY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Senate Republicans fought off opposition Thursday to President Bush's plan to prosecute and interrogate terror suspects, pushing toward passage of a bill the GOP hopes to use as a campaign spotlight for its tough stance against terrorists.

GOP leaders eased past attempts by Democrats and a lone Republican to change the bill, all but ensuring final passage by day's end.

The House passed nearly identical legislation Wednesday by a 253-168 vote and was expected to endorse the Senate bill on Friday so it could be sent to the president to sign.

The bill would create military commissions to prosecute terrorism suspects. It also describes — at times vaguely — ways that CIA interrogators cannot treat detainees, in effect granting the president wide leeway to decide what is legally permissible.

Approving the bill before lawmakers leave for the Nov. 7 elections has been a top priority for Bush.

With control of both chambers of Congress in play, the legislation could let the president begin prosecuting terrorists connected to the Sept. 11 attacks just as voters head to the polls. Republicans are also hoping to use opposition by Democrats as fodder for criticizing them during the campaign.

With the political stakes high, GOP senators contended that Democrats' opposition to the bill could lead to another major terrorist attack.

"Some want to tie the hands of our terror fighters," said Sen. Christopher Bond (news, bio, voting record), R-Mo., alluding to opponents of the bill. "They want to take away the tools we use to fight terror, to handcuff us, to hamper us in our fight to protect our families."

Democrats fired back, focusing on portions of the bill that they said denied detainees basic rights. They noted language barring detainees from going to federal court to protest their detention and treatment — a right referred to as "habeas corpus."

"The habeas corpus language in this bill is as legally abusive of rights guaranteed in the Constitution as the actions at Abu Ghraib, Guantanamo and secret prisons that were physically abusive of detainees," said Sen. Carl Levin (news, bio, voting record), top Democrat on the Armed Services panel.

Bush went to Capitol Hill Thursday morning, urging senators to follow the House lead and approve the plan.

"The American people need to know we're working together to win the war on terror," he said as he left.

That didn't stop Sen. Arlen Specter (news, bio, voting record), R-Pa., from offering an amendment that would have restored suspects' habeas corpus rights. It was rejected by 51-48, with Democrats and three other Republicans supporting Specter.

Democrats contended the Bush plan would open the door to abuse of terror suspects and set a dangerous precedent that might invite other countries to mistreat captured Americans.

Three Democrats also had opportunities to offer amendments Thursday, but all were expected to be rejected along party lines. Democrats have said the legislation would give the president too much latitude when deciding whether which interrogation techniques can be used.

The bill prohibits war crimes and defines such widely accepted atrocities as rape and torture, but otherwise allows the president to interpret the Geneva Conventions, the treaty that sets standards for the treatment of war prisoners.

The legislation was in response to a Supreme Court ruling in June that Bush's plan to hold and prosecute terrorists was illegal.

Bush had determined prior to the ruling that his executive powers gave him the right to detain and prosecute enemy combatants.

He declared these detainees, being held at Guantanamo Bay prison in Cuba and in secret CIA prisons elsewhere in the world, should not be afforded Geneva Convention protections. Members of al-Quida are unlike past prisoners of war, ignoring the laws of war and not fighting on behalf of sovereign states, said White House lawyers.

U.S. officials said the Supreme Court ruling threw cold water on the CIA's interrogation program, which they said had been helpful in obtaining valuable intelligence from detainees.

Students discuss morning-after pill

PLAN B from page 1

Leading medical and public health organizations in the U.S. have supported emergency contraception since it came into existence more than 30 years ago. Other countries have already allowed women to access Plan B without a prescription.

"Most people are okay with monthly birth control, so why are they not okay with EC?" said Sarah Stern-O'Connor, a UMass senior. "I don't think that people know that in 38 other countries, it has been sold over the counter for a while. In France they give it out in their high schools because they are trying to curb teen pregnancy, which has so far been a success. You can pick up EC with the newspaper in an airport kiosk," she said.

Although EC has been approved for over-the-counter availability, it is still not as accessible as one may expect.

"You can only get it if you are at least 18 years old, and it can't just be placed next to the Advil because then people would have to card buyers," said Harry, "some wrinkles in the system still have to be worked out."

"I was told by Princeton Professor Dr. James Trussel, who sat on the board of scientists at the FDA which makes the decisions as to whether or not a drug is safe, that EC is safer than Advil," Stern-O'Connor said. "Now, Advil is over-the-counter, and everyone knows that if you take too much of it, you can get very sick. I think people need to understand that it is the same with EC, and at $30-40 for one dose, I don't think that people are going to overuse it as much as people are saying," she added. "I can get my monthly birth control for less than that, so why would I use it all the time? But if I had an emergency, I would want to know that it is available for me to get if I needed it," she said.

Pharmacists are now being trained to work with EC and learn the necessary information needed to know about the contraceptive, according to Massachusetts State guidelines.

"Some pharmacists at UHS have gone through these training programs, and hopefully, by the end of the semester, EC will be available directly through UHS pharmacy," said Vann.

Other than EC pills, other forms of contraception include Inter Uterus Devices (IUD's), which are T-shaped rods that are inserted into the uterus and used to irritate the uterus lining in such a way to make egg implantation difficult.

"This is not, however, a popular form of EC, and is not recommended for young women who plan to have children in the future," said Vann. "IUD's can cause scarring and the connected cord can be a catalyst for the spread of sexually transmitted diseases."

The reason why the availability of EC has been such a big political struggle is because of its connection to the issue of abortion, says Marlene Gerber Fried, Director of the Civil Liberties and Public Policy Program at Hampshire College.

"The battle is against sex," said Fried. "Some people believe that if you have EC, then you'll have more sex, leading to more unwanted pregnancies, and more abortions."

With Catholic Bishops calling on pharmacies to refuse to stock EC, many pharmacists have refused to sell customers EC because it is against their moral and religious principles, even if their store does carry the pill.

"Nobody is saying that EC is bad for you or that it will harm you. It's really just all about politics and morality," said Fried "There is a lot of moral censorship in pharmacies."

"I am both personally and professionally upset by the idea of a moral obligation to prescribing medications. Now it is birth control and EC," said Amanda Collings Vann.

"What happens when people start saying 'I don't like how you have contracted AIDS', or other diseases, or even refuse to sell diet pills? It is not about moral objections. You need to look out for the well being of the people."

UDRIVE
Anytime.
YOUR FILES
Anywhere.

Upload your files to UDrive, then access them from wherever you have an Internet connection, on-campus or off. No need to save your files to disk, CD-ROM or USB Drive. Use your 250 MB of UDrive space instead.

STORE any type of file from papers to photos.

SHARE files with individuals or groups.

COLLABORATE on group projects.

Office of Information Technologies oit
http://udrive.oit.umass.edu

WHERE IMAGINATION MEETS
INNOVATION
UMass Amherst Fine Arts Center Series 2006-2007 Season

Mombasa Party and the Royal Drummers of Burundi
Friday, Sept 29 at 8pm

A get-together of some of East Africa's most well-known taarah artists joined by one of the greatest percussion ensembles in the world- the Royal Drummers of Burundi. Their live performances are the ultimate African drum experience.

Sponsored by

SITI Company
Midsummer Night's Dream
Tuesday & Wednesday, October 3&4 at 7:30 pm

This production is born in the land of John Steinbeck's Grapes of Wrath. The enchantment appears as if hy magic via the imagination of people who have nothing to share but their hopes and dreams.

Bowker Auditorium
Sponsored by

Funded in part by the Expeditions program of the New England Foundation for the Arts

Sean Jones
Thursday, October 19 at 7:30 pm

Jones is steeped heavily in 21st century modern bop. He is joined by his quartet for this performance. Dont miss this hot, new trumpet sensation.

Bowker Auditorium
Sponsored by YALE GENTON, Fathers & Sons

Part of the Ninth Annual Billy Taylor Jazz Residency

TICKETS ARE ON SALE NOW! TICKETS ARE ONLY $57, $10, $15 FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS

UMass Amherst FINE ARTS CENTER

CALL 545-2511 OR 1-800-999-UMAS WWW.FINEARTSCENTER.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

THE CAMPUS SCENE

A WEEKLY LOOK AT THE UNIVERSITY LIFESTYLE

A Too Sexy UMass?

Sex predators look to the UMass campus for young faces

BY SUSAN KING
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

It is 3:07 p.m. A University of Massachusetts police detective is searching a popular website featuring "personal ads." Some users are innocently looking for companionship, but there are those who are soliciting sexual acts and preying on young, naive respondents.

One such post catches the detective's eye. The person behind the lascivious suggestions has clearly implied there will be monetary "benefits" for the "right girl," based on experience. Dozens of other posts insinuate such a financial exchange and there is very little discrimination – every age, race, sexual orientation, gender, body type and marital status is made the target of one or more of these propositions.

After reading through the posts written by businessmen traveling, attorneys in unhappy marriages, professors and people new to the area looking to make "friends," the detective chooses an advertisement that requests a college student, or perhaps someone posing as a college student.

At the arranged time and place, the offender is met with a surprise: a police officer and an arrest for violating Massachusetts General Law Chapter 272 section 53A, "engaging in sexual conduct for a fee." The law states that it is unlawful to "engage, agree to engage or offer to engage in sexual conduct for a fee" and it is also illegal to "pay, agree to pay or offer to pay another person to engage in sexual conduct." The maximum punishment is one year in prison and/or a $500 fine.

This occurrence has been especially prevalent on the UMass campus since February 2006, with over 15 arrests occurring in the past seven months, the most recent being Friday, September 22, the UMass Police Department has been cracking down on online sex solicitors.

On Sept. 22, Thomas Sirois, from Great Barrington, was arrested for attempting to solicit a college age student. Accused St. Sirois was charged with sexual conduct for a fee.

Solicitation is still a new issue, UMass Police Chief Barbara O'Connor said. Before the internet, there were problems with people writing things on walls and doors in certain buildings, like the Student Union. The growth of the internet, and websites such as craigslist.com and MySpace, has made the process easier and has enabled potential offenders to reach a larger, more responsive audience.

The UMPD has, in recent months, been very active in monitoring websites notorious for having forums, such as "casual encounters" on craigslist.com, which are not moderated by administrators, but are only investigated if someone "reports" a

The internet investigation first began by the UMPD when officers were monitoring EBay in an effort to stop the selling of stolen items from UMass. Detectives found that solicitation was a rising problem that required attention. Chief O'Connor began the investigation in order to protect the students of UMass and because college students are a large target for solicitation. Chief O'Connor wanted to make sure students "didn't engage in behaviour they would later regret."

Since UMPD began cracking down on solicitation, the number of cases has risen sharply because it was "one of those things that didn't get reported", the chief said. "It is also a problem that will never go away. It will simply be pushed to other regions of the state and country and even with the heavier watch, many people are still getting away with these actions.

Many of the people caught have been men who hold good jobs and community standing, and even have families. According to the Republican, two men, James Angell of Hartford, CT, and William Conley of Springfield, MA, were arrested over the summer. Angell worked at Parmus & Quinn, a Hartford law firm; he was also a small claims court magistrate and motor vehicles magistrate for Connecticut.

Conley was an active lobbyist for the Massachusetts Gay & Lesbian Political Caucus before his arrest on July 8th, 2006.

Many students agree that while this behavior is intolerable, the UMPD is doing all they can to prevent it from happening. Katy Kourian, a UMass senior, said, "What else can they do? There are only so many ways to monitor these websites."

The UMass Police will continue to work to eradicate the solicitation of students, Chief O'Connor said, "we want to prevent students from being victims."

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

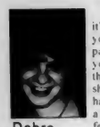
FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

CASUAL FRIDAY

Guidelines for weekend debauchery



Debra Capellari

All right, it's time to pull your sweatpants up to your knees, throw on a t-shirt, wrap your hands around a cup of coffee and listen up. It's Friday morning, maybe afternoon to some of you lucky ones who don't have to get up and brave class like the rest of us, and before the start of another infamous weekend at this prestigious University, so lovingly referred to as a zoo, let's get a few things straight. There are some rules of engagement, so to speak, that need defining before weekend festivities ensue.

Don't get me wrong; I love the weekend debauchery at this University. I'm usually partaking in some capacity. However, I've learned the rules, and I would love nothing more than to impart them unto the student population. Please, if you've never learned the rules of engagement, here is an opportunity to perhaps learn something you won't hear in your classes. If you already know them, bear with me. I'm fairly certain you've wanted to teach a select few people the rules as well.

We've all done it. Partied all weekend and became legends in our own minds I get it. I've done it, but really, nobody wants to hear about it. Seriously is, "I woke up in a hospital on Saturday morning," the first thing anyone wants to hear on a Monday morning"? I would bet money the amount of beers you had to drink over the weekend is the last thing anyone in your class wants to hear about.

RULE # 1: Please keep your legendary drinking stories to yourself, especially at 9:00 a.m. on a Monday morning. No, little freshman, I don't want to hear you drank two and a half beers and couldn't remember anything the next day. In fact, if you're not offering me a cup of coffee, please don't talk to me until class is at least half over.

Leave the stilettos at home. Yes, they are very fashionable and super cute too, but not a good option for the usually semi-muddy quad. There are other shoe options. Explore them.

As an addendum to rule number one, loud conversations about how people act when they're drunk are highly unnecessary. Really, the phrase, "you're not crazy beyond all recognition, but fun to be drunk with crazy," is what I like to call a bad description of someone's personality. We go to UMass; it's widely known most of the people here like to drink. An animated conversation about people's drunken actions? Not something I need to hear about while I'm having lunch with my friends. It's unimpressive. Try picking something intellectual to talk about next time. You do go to college.

RULE # 2: Don't be a slave to fashion. Don't get me wrong, I think the leggings with the skirts, the long shirts and the flat shoes are really cute. But ladies, if you didn't know, it gets cold on this campus, really cold. The last thing anyone wants is for your ankles to get frostbitten.

Try some jeans, or for the very brave of heart, some sweatpants. That hair you spent an hour straightening this morning? You're going to need a hat anyways. You might as well get the extra sleep. And gentleman; double polo shirts with both collars popped? That's highly unnecessary. At least stick to one, and really, not a pink one; it's been done.

I can't leave out the Townehouse quad parties. A right of passage for some, no doubt. However, please don't use the quad parties as tutorials for how to make out with someone. Really, I'm so thankful for the opportunity to learn, but I would much rather put my pajamas on at 7:00 p.m. on a Friday night than watch two drunken strangers make out in the middle of the quad. I know for a fact there are plenty of dark places at those quad parties. Make use of one of them next time, and leave the rest of us drunks to enjoy our libations with an absence of drunken public displays of affection.

RULE # 3: Learn how to behave at a quad party. Things like trying to tell your friend where you are, screaming into a cell phone "go toward the green light" and then holding up your phone on the off chance that your friend might see it? Probably one habit I'd ditch in a hurry.

Another? Randomly walking into someone's Townehouse. If you don't know the person living there, don't bust into their house to use their facilities or drink their beer. Not kosher, my friends, and definitely not cool.

Here's another tip ladies. Leave the stilettos at home. Yes, they are very fashionable and super cute too, but not a good option for the usually semi-muddy quad. There are other shoe options. Explore them.

There aren't many rules to follow. They're simple and easy to understand. Read them carefully, consider your behavior and then change your behavior as necessary. Keep in mind these rules are for the greater good. Well, maybe not the greater good, but it will sure make it easier on the rest of us to have a good time if you follow them. Learn them, love them and live them. And definitely pass them on.

Debra Capellari is a Collegian columnist.

Guys listen up: How to pursue a lady

Lauren Modisette

I am sending this out to all of the confused and clueless men out there who don't really know how to get the girl.

First, I need to get this off my chest. Not all women are the same; period. That's a no-brainer, I know. Still, most men go through the same steps to get the girl no matter how different they may be.

Our world is full of stereotypes as it is, but here is one more. There is a stereotypical maintenance, which most of you believe is necessary, when it comes to pursuing your lady. In order to show her that you are honestly into her and not just trying to get into her pants, you believe she expects the following.

1.) You call her when you say you will. Now, this is stereotypical but still very important. It is OK to make her wait an extra day or two after exchanging numbers, honestly, I recommend it. This forces her to realize whether or not she's into you.

Often girls don't know how they feel about you until this point. If they find they are mildly upset about it, they realize they have a crush on you. Please note, you will probably never know her reaction unless she tells you. Even then, the mystery is a lot more exciting.

Above all, and most importantly, don't tell her you will call her and completely blow her off. Even if you sincerely forget, pick up your cell and call her (don't forget to say "hey, sorry I didn't call"). Don't let her give you her number if you're not going to use it.

2.) You need to call her everyday. Not true. In fact, resist the temptation as much as possible. A lot of girls I know only expect to hear from their boyfriends two to four days a week, depending on their independence. I can't even tell you how often I hear some girls complain about how often their boyfriend calls.

It makes you come off as overprotective and needy. Have no fear; there are those needy girls out there, just not as many as you think. Here's another little tip, do not be that guy who calls twice in a row (I'm talking seconds between calls) and doesn't leave a message; that screams insecure and desperate.

3.) You need to buy her pretty things to keep her happy. Very not true. If you get one of those girls, well, I'm very sorry. Most girls don't need material items to keep their attention and happiness. Presents are overrated and will only make you seem like you are trying to buy her heart. There are endless ways to show her that you're into her, be creative. You don't necessarily have to give her anything, just you. Watch "Citizen Kane" if you don't believe me.

4.) You need to take her out often. Not true. For a second pretend the dating world doesn't even exist. Not so awkward and nervous, is it? Instead of trying to get together solo, just invite her to hang out with you and your friends. You are most comfortable when you are around your friends and the same is true for her.

So when the weekend comes around have her bring a friend or two over to your place and mingle. She will like the fact that you are willing to accept her into your social group. Some girls won't mind the persistence to take her out, but if you seemingly refuse to invite her to meet your friends, it will make her think you are trying to hide her or just trying to get in her pants.

There is, however, a slight downside to this. There are many people who have completely different personalities when they are by themselves and around their friends. Unfortunately, this is usually most relevant among men. So, take a deep breath and just be you.

Now, I have touched upon the maintenance myths society has pounded into your heads over the years. Here is a little last second advice: don't smother her, give her space. If you get too clingy she's going to feel like the man in the relationship. While some girls go for that, a lot of girls are most comfortable being the woman. Everyone needs their space and alone time.

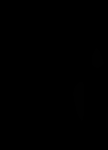
Don't over apologize. Stand by everything you say and do. Constantly stating "sorry" makes the word worthless. If you throw it around a lot, she will stop believing you.

Don't say anything unless you mean it, especially if you're going to tell her "I love you." This can be very dangerous, especially if you're expecting her to say it back. Don't say it until you truly feel it, this is a phrase that is thrown around way too much for what it's supposed to mean. Remember, she might not feel the same, and that could just be painful. There are a number of women who are not in love with their current partners.

Good luck.

Lauren Modisette is a Collegian columnist.

Try a happy face once in a while



Caroline Moss

Sometimes drunk girls like to be easy. Sometimes drunk guys like to be sketchy. And most of the time, drunk people like to be awkward.

It's a way of college life, the identity you subconsciously agree to take on as your own when you take that first shot. You agree to saying stupid things, calling people you shouldn't and forfeiting your ability to say three syllable words correctly. What I didn't realize was that sometimes, drunken people make sense.

While this is not an invitation to prep for your finals with a game of Beirut (yeah, I call it Beirut), it is an anecdote of a drunken twenty-something attempting to change the world with his slurred words.

"Hey, you should smile more." This was yelled in my face as I stood with my floormates at a BBQ, quite possibly the BBQ of the year (dare I say, millennium?), by an obviously inebriated UMass student.

Before I had the chance to respond, he stumbled back into the night. It was not until the next morning that I fully acknowledged the importance of his demand.

I, just like most of you, tend to mind my own business while navigating the UMass campus on a daily basis. Whether I'm walking to class, going to eat, trudging up the hill to my dorm room or sitting on the bus, you'll usually see me on my cell phone or listening to my iPod if I'm not with my friends.

Back in high school, people used to tell me if I wasn't smiling, I unintentionally looked like I wanted to kill someone. I'm aware this is probably something I shouldn't be bragging about. A lot of you can relate, because as I've noticed this past week, UMass students have perfected the art of the blank stare.

Standing at the bus stops, forming lines at the Dining Commons, sitting in class for those few minutes before it starts, everyone just stares. No one talks, smiles or laughs. Everyone just stares, and usually at nothing in particular.

I couldn't figure it out. Until it was pointed out to me, it was a characteristic of the majority of our campus I simply accepted without questioning. This was obviously a problem I was contributing to, or else "Drunkface McGee" wouldn't have pointed out my inability to look happy at parties.

A lot of you can relate, because as I've noticed this past week, UMass students have perfected the art of the blank stare.

I pondered the many reasons as to why I find it difficult to look amiable in front of complete strangers, fellow students here at UMass Amherst. Why, when we pass someone we don't know on campus, in Berkshire or in town, do we look straight through them instead of smiling, nodding or waving?

I finally came to the only valid conclusion I could think of — smiling causes unwanted pregnancy. Some may confuse a smile with a marriage proposal, so in order to avoid all the aforementioned, and more, just look down, or if you're feeling theatrical, make a fake phone call. Just make sure the ringer's turned down while you're chatting away with ... nobody. Freak.

Sure, being friendly to strangers invites awkward moments, like when someone you don't know is waving to you, except actually, they're waving at someone they do know, and you just end up waving. Or when you smile at someone you kind of know, and they don't acknowledge you. Who could forget those instances when you are continuously trying to say hi to someone who obviously can't hear you? It would make a person go stone-face in a New York minute.

But the benefits of smiling far outweigh the humiliation experienced during those shaky moments between classes. According to The British Dental Health Foundation, "a smile gives the same level of stimulation as eating 2,000 chocolate bars. The results were found after researchers measured brain and heart activity in volunteers as they were shown pictures of smiling people and given money and chocolate." Well then, who could argue with that? The student body, maybe, but far be it from us to deny anything having to do with money and chocolate.

After all, here at UMass Amherst, we are one in thousands of 18 to 22-year-olds trying to swerve in and out of traffic on our ways to 9:05a.m. classes on Monday mornings. We are living our lives, chatting away on our cell phones and listening to our music. We are seemingly in our own little worlds, unaware the person standing next to us could be our new best friend or our soul mate.

So, the next time you find yourself waiting for a chicken Caesar salad at the deece, try smiling at the person next to you. It may be awkward, they may back away from you slightly, they may even get pregnant, but at least you took a break from the blank stare we've all become so fond of. Oh, and, always, always, listen to that drunken guy at the BBQ.

Caroline Moss is a Collegian columnist.

DO YOU WANT TO WRITE FOR THE NEXT CASUAL FRIDAY?

ANY FUNNY WEEKEND STORIES TO SHARE?

VOICE YOUR OPINIONS ON NIGHT OR WEEKEND LIFE IN AMHERST!

SEND SUBMISSIONS TO:

editorial@dailycollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Architecture builds a solid performance

By Corey Charron
Collegian Correspondent

There is a thin line of separation between good bands and great bands. Good bands have an unusual, original, or interesting sound, but don't really change much over their careers. Great bands are able to push the limits of their musical abilities, growing with each album, while still keeping the original qualities that made them special. Australia's Architecture in Helsinki certainly fit the mold of a great band Wednesday night at Northampton's Pearl Street Nightclub.

Opener FDR started off strong, playing the opening monologue from the Coen Brother's "The Big Lebowski" off of his Apple laptop. Unfortunately, this was the peak of his short performance, as the set quickly tumbled downhill. FDR is one man on electric guitar who looks eerily similar to Steve Carell's character in "Forty Year-Old Virgin." His backing band, so to speak, was his laptop computer. Apparently he had these tracks downloaded on Apple's iTunes. On the one hand, FDR was innovative by solving the problem of not being able to find a band to tour with. On the other, it was hard to get into his music without actually seeing a backing band present. If there had been people helping enliven his music, his flaws in songwriting and singing would've been less obvious. The six songs he played were mediocre at best. He sounded like most singers out there: a mix of Neil Young and Wilco's Jeff Tweedy. There was some respect given back to FDR when he declared to the audience that he had written fifty songs in fifty days and decided to tour with them. But it was hard not to think that some of those days should've been spent revising some of his lyrics or finding a competent band.

The Blow took the stage twenty minutes after FDR to a nearly full, mostly female crowd. The Blow usually consists of two musicians, Jona Bechtolt and Khaela Maricich. Jona Bechtel "was busy doing other things," according to Khaela Maricich, who took the stage with only a microphone to protect her from the typical stingy indie rock crowd. Khaela took the opportunity in stride, dancing along to her electronica music while singing confidently.

Wearing Architecture in Helsinki apparel, Khaela started the set with a-cappella versions of a couple of her songs. She then jumped into tracks from her upcoming album, "Paper Television," which is being released October 24 on K Records. She whipped through at least a dozen songs in about half an hour. The herky-jerky dance moves, much like a new age robot, were impressive, considering the lack of dance moves usually found at any indie rock show. As her half hour set went on, her confidence level grew. Although her set was solid, it would've been even better if her partner, Jona Bechtolt, had been present to create the quirky electronic pop that was instead played through the speakers.

Cameron Bird of Architecture in Helsinki roars out during Wednesday's performance.

Announcing to the crowd that most of the set will be mostly new, unreleased songs at the beginning of a show is sometimes a risky move, usually resulting in apathetic and bored crowds. Architecture in Helsinki, the six-piece band from Australia, knew that their new songs would be able to carry a show. They succeeded in doing just that.

The stage was strewn with an assortment of musical devices, including a trombone, bongos, keyboards, a synthesizer, guitars, and triangles. Small, festive multi-colored flags hung from the ceiling, causing the band members to duck when they ran around switching instruments.

The set started off with a new song that surprised many as being very danceable and fun. Popular track "It's 5" was next on the list, much to the delight of the crowd. Lead singer Cameron Bird announced each song by screaming five into the microphone as loud as he could. The rest of the set consisted of the aforementioned brilliant new songs. The Talking Heads can be pointed to as an obvious influence. The few songs played from their last album "In Case We Die" were solid ("The Cemetery," "Do the Whirlwind," "Wishbone"). Amazingly, the new songs may have even surpassed the ones from "In Case We Die." These new tracks will be released early next year on their upcoming third album.

Technical difficulties stopped the show midway through because one of the keyboards wasn't working properly. Bird confessed his stand-up comedy routine was lackluster and invited fans onstage to tell jokes. After a ten minute delay the band got right back into the groove, jumping into another addictive new song. They finished the set with the first song off of "In Case We Die," "Nevereverevердid." More technical issues caused the band to skip the encore because of faulty playback speakers. Most of the band stuck around after for pictures and autographs, to make up for the lost time.

Mars Volta and Chili Peppers promise a jewel at the Garden

By William Benker
Collegian Correspondent

You can only imagine a musical heaven shining down when a show such as this pops up. For the past several months, The Red Hot Chili Peppers and The Mars Volta have been touring the country and spawning more abstract thinking for the American youth. Each band known for their epic performances and lust for destruction of order, the show should prove to be a riveting experience. With the Mars Volta's growing fame for their psychedelic prog-rock elements and un-earthly on stage trips put next to the Chili Peppers free living funkadelic sounds, one can only imagine them together in the same venue.

Both bands recently released new albums, the Chili Peppers with the double disk "Stadium Arcardium" and Mars Volta's "Amputechture." The groups continue to collaborate with each other as they have done in the past. Chili Pepper's bassist Flea fills plays for most of Mars Volta's explosive full length debut "Deloused In The Comatorium" and the bands own beating heart, guitarist Omar Rodrieguez Lopez also guest appears on "Stadium Arcadium." Chili Pepper's guitarist and solo artist extraordinaire John Frusciante, whose solo music divulges beautifully insane depths of drug addiction, also makes a guest appearance on "Amputechture" alongside Flea.

Hailing from El Paso, Texas, The Mars Volta is the next stage in evolution since their former eclectic punk band "At The Drive-In" broke up. Leaving their limited hardcore genre, singer Cedrix Bixler-Zavala and Omar took the reigns to form Mars Volta, and were free to experiment and explore new genres. Following influences of jazz and salsa, they fused their progressive roots with sound rises above the limitations of any single label to form their own sound only belonging to them. With their erratic improvisational skills and sound that has spiked the alternative masses interest, the Mars Volta have broken a barrier and started a new psychedelic mutation in the alternative rock world. Lyrically surreal, the eerie words paint a Dali portrait in your imagination while the twisted Radiohead-esque ambience leaves you at a loss for words. Meditation for the 21st century digital minds, the Mars Volta should be a mind-expanding experience to say the least.

The Red Hot Chili Pepper's mix of funk and blues shine with their California roots, giving them one of the leading titles in the obscure genre of surfer-ish rock since Sublime. Along with their powerful messages imbedded in the waves, their old school funk sounds still flow through the radio, with their record for "Most Number One" modern rock hits. Chili Pepper's long-time and new coming fans continue to flourish around the music world. Their new album already has two hit singles out to back them up ("Dani California" and "Tell Me Baby.") Both can be heard easily with a simple search through the tuning scroll.

Not only on the bright side, the Chili Peppers strong melodic rock speaks of drug addictions and political topics that run deep through singer Anthony Kiedis's sometimes despair-ridden voice. Ranked in the top thirty on VH1's "100 Greatest Artists of Hard Rock," it's easy to see the power and ingenuity the Chili Peppers hold. You can find them in many video games, and you may even catch a few of the members in some of your favorite films including "The Big Lebowski."

The Red Hot Chili Peppers and Mars Volta are playing at the Banknorth Garden in Boston on October 2 and again October 20. Doors open at 7:30 P.M. Tickets range from $60.00 to $135.00.

Duo's music ignites

By Jaeqwon Jackson
Collegian Correspondent

On Tuesday, the general public was given a musical jewel. A concert, brought to us by our dear friends on the Concert Committee, featured the Jacob Fred Jazz Odyssey Project, the Slip, and the headliner, the Benevento-Russo Duo. It was an evening to sit back, relax, and enjoy the jazz instrumental stylings to follow.

The Jacob Fred Jazz Odyssey, a classic trio consisting of keyboard, drums and bass, opened the night's activities. They cut loose with spacious grooves and tight instrumental improvisations, weaving soundscapes at times abstract and other times, just plain smooth. While lacking in a prominent stage presence and rather unfulfilling to the eyes, they provided a rich treatment for the ears. This was not music for the impatient listener.

The crowd, sedate and probably stoned, seemed to enjoy the band's musical style, despite their venture into the strange and dissonant. Precision is beauty. While delving into the unknown, the trio kept it together. This was, in part, thanks to the superb drummer (Jason Smart) who cut it up harder than a Chuck Norris roundhouse kick to the face.

Local beau the Slip would then be set to take the stage. Clearly a homecrowd favorite, they featured songs from their upcoming album, "Even Rats," in addition to their usual lineup. They hit the audience hard with anthem-like rock progressions, displaying their talents in the musical realm. The bass and drums provided a tight lock for the guitar and vocal stylings of Marc Friedman while fills and hooks mixed in maintained intrigue. Their initial energy was enough to bring some to their feet, including the people in front of me. However, their energy was unable to maintain a close crowd interest, as those same hopeful fans would eventually fall back into their seats.

Perhaps it was the Tuesday, perhaps it was the lighting, or perhaps it was the set, but regardless, they seemed unable to maintain interest and crowd energy as they have been so able to do in the past. Nevertheless, it was still a solid performance from a solid group, proving far more the stage presence than their predecessors. In keeping with the tradition of instrumental stylings, they used infrequent but choice vocal melodies. Their performance much appreciated, they left the stage to make way for the highly anticipated headliner, the Duo.

It was the Duo, veterans of such huge festivals as Bonnaroo and the like, who would mark the peak of the performance. They came in hard and slick like Wesley Snipes, letting nothing stop them, like Joan Rivers, with an inescapable wall of lush organ with rhythmic precision like no other. The Duo, which consists of the two hunched eccentrics, sat inside a small sea of equipment. For such a physically small presence on stage, they created a huge sound. It was atmospheric, yet sensible with regards to a direction that naturally unfolded. It was completely cohesive and inseparable, unified and harmonious.

One could sense the performance chemistry between the two, who were so completely together that they ceased to be separate, only the one sound of the Duo. The crowd, re-energized by their wonderful sounds, was brought to their feet again, completely absorbed and engaged by these two creatures.

Against a gentle backdrop, they brought the listener into their constantly evolving musical landscape, shaping waves and colors out of their hands and minds. Hardly taking pause, they pressed tirelessly into their musical exploration (much to the delight of the audience) until all were forced to retire. Though tired, the masses seemed pleased and content to leave with memories intact and minds at ease, ready to expire to the night. And so they did.

Schooling Todd Phillips

By Ryan Gibbons
Collegian Correspondent

"Frat Pack" writer/director Todd Phillips ("Old School", "Starsky and Hutch") returns to the big screen this week with "School for Scoundrels," a romantic comedy pitting the Sling Blade against the Dynamite for the affections of the resident sweetheart, Jacinda Barrett.

"Napoleon Dynamite's" Jon Heder stars as Roger, a nervous meter maid that suffers from both panic attacks and a crush on his seemingly unattainable neighbor, Amanda, played by former "Real World" cast member Jacinda Barrett. Unable to play it cool, Roger enrolls in a secretive class taught by the mysterious Dr. P (Billy Bob Thornton), who hopes to instill in Roger and the rest of his misfit classmates a great sense of predatory manhood. However, conflict ensues when Dr. P falls for Amanda and must duke it out with Roger for her love. The following is an interview with writer/director Todd Phillips, who provided insight on the film and working with the Weinstein brothers (producers of "The Aviator," "Sin City") and what it's like being part of the "Frat Pack."

Todd Phillips, seen here sandwiched between Owen Wilson and Ben Stiller, highly anticipates his next cinematic venture, "School for Scoundrels," which opens today.

Daily Collegian: There is a film from 1960 with the same name and similar plot. To what extent would you call your film a remake?

Todd Phillips: It kind of is in that there was a film before it called "School for Scoundrels." But other than that it's pretty much a departure. If you had seen the other film you'd know that it's just loosely based on a one-line concept that, you know, if there was a night class that gave hope to the hopeless. Even in the story the teacher character in the original film doesn't go after the girl.

DC: While writing the script, did you have Heder and Thornton in mind specifically for their parts?

Phillips: The whole reason that I wrote the script and wanted to do the film was because I really wanted to work with Billy. And the original had resonated with me and I thought that that would be a good role to do with Billy. That was really the impetus for the whole film. It wasn't like I was dying to remake the original. That's the same reason why I wanted to do "Starsky and Hutch." It wasn't that I was looking to remake the original, I just really wanted to work with Ben [Stiller] and Owen [Wilson]. That was a part written specifically for Billy Bob. Jon Heder was cast after the script was written. But then, like any other writer/director, you tend to rewrite as the characters come onboard. A script doesn't really come alive until actors start getting attached.

DC: What kind of audience do you hope to attract to this film?

Phillips: This movie's a weird one because, with a movie like "Old School," it was mostly for guys. And ["School for Scoundrels"], while it works for guys, test screenings have shown that it works for more of a mixed crowd. When "Old School" first came out, girls really did not like it. It has since become a more popular movie and people have embraced it. But when it first came out and we did test scores, we were getting the worst scores with women and the best scores with men. "School for Scoundrels" oddly tested very well with both men and women. Everything the male characters do in this film is for a woman, whereas in a film like "Old School" everything [the male characters] are doing they do for themselves.

DC: Given their mixed reputation, what was it like working with [Executive Producers and former owners of Miramax Films] Bob and Harvey Weinstein?

Phillips: The good thing about Bob and Harvey is also the bad thing, which is that they are owners. When you work for big studios like Warner Brothers or Universal, you are not dealing directly with the owners because there are no owners, just stockholders. When you work with [Bob and Harvey] it's their money. If they give you $20 million it's their $20 million. That is both good and bad. It's bad because it can be very personal. But it is good because it means a lot and they are going to try harder. For me it was a thrill.

DC: The press has referred to you and a group of other actors and directors (Ben Stiller, Owen Wilson, Vince Vaughn, Judd Apatow) as the "Frat Pack", what are your thoughts on the label?

Phillips: [Laughs] Well, it's kind of a silly thing, really. I think that when they refer to the "Frat Pack", they aren't referring to writers and directors, just a group of friends that show up in each other's movies. It's not really as pre-meditated or as thought-out as people think. Even Ben [Stiller] showing up in my movie, I gave him a call and asked him if he wanted to come and shoot for two days. He didn't say, "Ooh, I have to find another 'Frat Pack' member to come with me." I always thought that "Frat Pack" had something to do with "Old School."

DC: What work did you do for the film, "Borat?"

Phillips: On "Borat" I collaborated on the story. I worked with Sacha Baron Cohen on the script and came up with a very general idea for the story. I have a story-by credit on the screenplay. I was also going to direct the film, but I wound up leaving the project. Not for any cool reason, really, it's just that it took about a year and a half for the project to get off the ground.

DC: I read that it had something to do with an incident in Salem, Virginia in which Cohen, in character as "Borat", butchered the National Anthem.

Phillips: It doesn't, though. That's disappointing. It didn't have to do with any incident. It was because of the project starting and stalling a couple of times. But, the movie's great, [Cohen] is great, and it was a great experience just to collaborate on the story. I was there for a few shoots, but there was no "incident". Well, everything he does is an incident, but that's just how it is.

Students receive 'Signals' well but the answer became clear after one issue was considered; the woman said "no," but Mallory continued. She then continued to make advances toward him, and then said "no," again. The next time that this happened, Mallory's character continued regardless, satisfied with the fact that the woman didn't protest.

SEX SIGNALS from page 1

In the scene's conclusion, Mallory addressed the audience not as characters, but as educators and peers. They referred the audience back to the activity which they had participated in earlier, raising their cards when they felt that the situation had taken an uncomfortable turn.

Mallory completed the metaphor, which he had set up earlier, saying that just as the audience raised their cards in the air for the situation to end, the girl had said "no." But when the activity was reinitiated, she eventually gave up her protesting–just as the audience stopped raising their signs, because they realized that their efforts had become ineffectual.

"Rape is sex without consent," said Abbott.

"Someone gets selfish and doesn't care what the other person wants anymore," added Mallory.

"Contrary to the common myth that rape is committed by strangers jumping out of dark alleys, the reality is that rape is usually committed by someone the victim knows. Also, any discussion about sexual assault can make men feel implicated simply because they are men and women feel uncomfortable when they recognize their own potential victimization," said Kelley.

"84 percent of rape is between two people who know each other," said Abbot, "People who are trying to have a good time until one person takes it too far."

"I was very happy with the student turnout for this event," said Kelley, "Residence Life is going to look at feedback from students who attended the event to assist in making the decision to bring this performance back next year."

Students who feel that they may have been victims of sexual violence are urged to consult the Everywoman's Center, by calling (413) 545-0800, visiting University Health Services, or by calling the National Rape Crisis Hotline, at 1-800-656-HOPE.

UM forwards at full strength

M. SOCCER from page 8

We just didn't finish that well. New Hampshire [was an] end-to-end [game], and those are the kind of games we're going to be in [the rest of the year]."

The biggest struggles for the Minutemen this year have been on the offensive side of the ball. While goalkeeper Zack Simmons and the defense have allowed just three goals this season, the offense has put up more than one score in a game just once, a 2-0 victory at Navy.

"We just have to put everything that we've been working on together," forward Bryan Hogan said. "Passing, making our runs and working hard ... if we do all those things and we do them well, it will all come together and we'll score some goals."

"We've got to continue what we're doing well," defender and team captain Kenny Cook said. "We still haven't been giving up goals. We've got to start creating opportunities. We've got to start putting the ball in the back of the net and taking advantage of our opportunities. If we can score, I'm confident we can get wins."

Koch had the team working on a lot of set pieces this week in preparation for the weekend. With his 6-foot-5 frame, Cook plays as a forward in free kicks and corner kicks, trying to get headers.

"Coach Koch works a lot on set pieces," Cook said. "Last year we were able to capitalize on a lot of set pieces. [Koch] always says games are won and lost on set pieces so we're trying to focus on those and take advantage of them as much as possible."

Michael Jejna has been cleared to play, returning form a knee injury he suffered two weeks ago. Now with Jejna, Hogan, freshman Mark DeSantis, and sophomore Prince Ofosu healthy and making the trip, the Minutemen finally have all four of their forwards available at once.

"The ball is going to go in the back of the net, I just don't know when," Koch said. "I think we've created a lot of chances. The bottom line is you've got to score goals to win games."

Goals have been hard to come by for Prince Ofosu and the rest of UMass. They have scored twice in a game just one time this season.

Rudy pleased to have Patry on the field

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

For several years in a row, UMass coach Jim Rudy got more and more impressed with a particular young lady that attended his Advanced Girls Soccer Club. Sophomore Vanessa Patry was then an unknown name with the Capital United Soccer Club, but Rudy liked the talent he saw.

"I could not wait for Sept. 1 of her junior year so I could contact her about coming to UMass," Rudy said "I was just waiting for the day that we could recruit her because I saw good qualities in my camp."

Since then, the 5-foot-9 forward from Delmar, N.Y. has become an important weapon in the Maroon and White's arsenal.

Patry has racked up three goals and two assists in eight games this season, including the assist on the game-winning goal against Albany on Sept. 10.

But Rudy says that Patry's contributions can't be measured in statistics alone.

"Her value is much more than goals and assists," Rudy said. "Her value is also her field vision and decision making. She reads the game very well...she's a smart player."

Rudy says Patry has played a big part in the Minutewomen's 6-2 record, but she is quick to comment that it is a whole team effort.

"It's very helpful when you play with certain girls for 90 minutes," Patry said. "Each time they're going to get better and better."

She went on to describe how she and her teammates felt after dropping their first game of season, a disappointing 2-0 loss to New Hampshire.

"We all stepped back and said, 'alright, this is not the way we wanted it to go,'" Patry said. "We just went back and practiced hard and came back with a six-game winning-streak."

That streak lasted over three weeks. During which time the women outscored their opponents 12-4 and reminded them why they wanted to play the sport they love at UMass in the first place.

"Everybody was having a great time playing soccer," Patry commented. "That's when you play at your best, when you're having fun and you're not really thinking about it. We weren't thinking, 'wow, we got another win'...we expected to be winning."

The string of consecutive victories ended last week in Vermont with a heartbreaking 1-0 defeat in double overtime.

"[After losing] we had about a three hour bus ride home and pretty much nobody talked," Patry recalled. "It hit us hard. But once we got back to practice we were picking each other up. I mean, the game's over – there's nothing else we can do. All we can do now is look ahead."

What lies ahead for Patry and the other Minutewomen is a home game against George Washington University (7-3-1) on Friday. Patry has been somewhat quiet the past few games, but the star forward is not worried.

"Every game you feel a little bit more confident in your team and everyone gains a little more respect for everyone," Patry explained. "Each game we have a different star on our team, someone's going to step up. If it's not me, it will be someone else."

Spiess, Pozar lead Minutewomen again

The Massachusetts women's tennis team won its first official match of the fall Wednesday, 4-3, on the road against Connecticut.

The Minutewomen (1-0) took the doubles point by winning two of the three matches and won three out of the six singles matches to take home the victory. UMass coach Judy Dixon said she was "particularly pleased" by her team's performance.

Anchored by the strong play of senior Michele Spiess and junior Martha Pozar, the Minutewomen have the tools to play competitively against any opponent they face. The co-captains have a doubles record of 20-6. If they keep winning, there will be less pressure on the rest of the young squad as they gain valuable playing experience.

Dixon described her co-captains as a "force to be reckoned with" in No. 1 doubles and noted that she saw "great energy" at the No. 2 doubles spot.

True to form once again, Spiess defeated Christine Burek 6-1, 6-0 at No. 1 singles and Pozar won No. 2 6-2, 6-0. Perhaps the key victory in Wednesday's match was at No. 6 singles where Stephanie Gimenez walked away with a 6-1, 6-2 win. If Gimenez can continue to play well at No. 6, teams will have a tough time keeping up with the Maroon and White.

Dixon noted that it is always hard to play the first match of the season and that she was impressed with how well her team played. The UMass team is already good, but with practice and leadership from their co-captains, it a chance to be something really special.

—Mike Walsh

UMass hosts GW and La Salle at Rudd

W. SOCCER from page 8

on the artificial turf.

Rudy said he hopes that a change of scenery against the Colonials will change the outcome this time around. He also said he hopes the home crowd can provide a lift for the team.

"We'd like to think so," he said of the having the crowd's support. "We love to play at Rudd Field but we are 3-1 both at home and on the road."

"We all love playing at home," added Rochrig. "With all our fans there, and the support they give us is great."

The lone goal in that game last season was kicked in by sophomore Kerry Philbin, who is tied for second on the team in goals scored this season, with three. Kelly Paolucci, the goalie who shutout UMass a season ago, graduated and it will be up to redshirt sophomore Amie Kern to build on the shutout in 2005.

The A-10 conference schedule continues on Sunday when UMass takes on the La Salle Explorers. The last few seasons for La Salle (3-6) have been a bit of a struggle for head coach Paul Royal. In 2005 the Explorers finished 5-12-2 and lost a tough battle against the Minutewomen in double overtime, falling 2-1. The Maroon and White have had La Salle's number, winning six of nine career matchups.

The defeat for La Salle was a heartbreaker as they were so close to winning and it came on their home turf. Just 15 seconds away from the 1-0 win, Explorers goalie Amy Grant allowed in a goal by Stephanie Barrett. The current senior captain for UMass also played a huge role in the game-winning kick in overtime, with her assist to Britt Canfield, who leads the team this season in goals with four.

Rudy used the week off from game-action to take advantage of all the practice time he could get.

"Fitness was our number one priority," he said. "Technique was priority number two. We have to get ready for the most physical weekend of the A-10 season. Both teams play very hard."

Despite the recent success of the team and the past performances against the upcoming opponents, Rudy felt it is important to not take any team lightly, especially in the case of conference teams.

"You have to treat every opponent with respect," he said.

Gillespie and team ready to move on

By Kevin Dooley
Collegian Correspondent

After a 0-1 road trip out west to begin the 2006 campaign, it appeared as if the Massachusetts field hockey team was digging itself out of an early hole. Upon returning to the East Coast when it picked up two wins against Harvard and Fairfield.

The latter victory witnessed the emergence of sophomore forward Lauren Gillespie as a serious scoring threat. In that game, she scored her first-career hat trick to solidify the win and UMass coach Patty Shea's 100th career victory.

As a freshman last season, Gillespie had two goals and one assist for five points total on the year. This season has been a whole different story. She has eclipsed that mark just 10 games into the season, firing home eight of the Minutewomen's 21 goals to lead the Maroon and White's offensive attack.

"I've learned to relax more and I'm seeing my teammate's movement on the field better," Gillespie said on the difference from this year to last year. "The way I see the game and my composure on the field is a lot different from last year."

"Her game sense has improved dramatically from last year," Shea said about her emerging star.

Gillespie's eight goals are more impressive considering she does not start for the Minutewomen. This is something Shea believes has been beneficial in helping to improve her game this year.

"Some athletes are better when they see the game first," Shea said. "Sometimes it's better if you remove yourself from the game first and then throw yourself into the storm. We like to set up our defense at the beginning of games, so when she comes in she can have an impact right away."

Then came the off-the-field news that caught everyone off guard.

Five Minutewomen were suspended before Saturday's home opener against the nationally ranked Connecticut Huskies for a violation of team rules.

One of those suspended was UMass' leading scorer and one of its bright spots in a tumultuous season, Gillespie.

In the blink of an eye, the Minutewomen were 2-7, after being on the verge of hitting the .500 mark following the win over Fairfield. At that time, all the memories of that historic come-from-behind victory against Fairfield had all but been erased.

But UMass has moved on as the team, and welcomed back the five suspended players, who were sidelined on Saturday.

In Tuesday night's 4-0 shutout win against Siena, junior backfielder Erin O'Brien let Gillespie know she wasn't the only one capable of pulling off the trifecta in goals. She tallied her first-career hat trick and the second hat trick by the Maroon and White this year. Freshman goalkeeper Sarah Williams made the victory even sweeter, recording her first career shutout.

For Gillespie and her suspended teammates, Tuesday's win over Siena was a far cry from watching their team get dominated at Garber Field on Saturday.

"We all felt disappointed," Gillespie said of the suspension. "We did all we could [from the pressbox] to help out because we knew it was a struggle for them. "To know we can come through obstacles like that and come out with a win the other day I think is going to make the team stronger."

And after the one-game suspension, Gillespie is no longer taking any playing time for granted.

"I have found a new appreciation for the game," Gillespie said "I used to hold back a little, but you never know the next time you'll be playing."

The Maroon and White will need Gillespie's consistent production if its going to steer the ship in the right direction. Last night's win over Siena was a step in that direction, but one must keep in mind the Minutewomen's three wins have come against opponents with a combined record of just 2-20 this year.

Healthy Careers Begin Here
Part-Time

Universal Hospital Services, Inc., the nation's leading provider of medical equipment and outsourcing services, offers vacation time, a schedule that doesn't conflict with your school day, and other great benefits. We're looking for a conscientious individual to work the second or third shift a couple of days a week/weekends at a local hospital. In heading up our capital equipment management program, you'll serve as a liaison between the hospital client and our company. Previous hospital work is a plus. Please apply on-line to our website: www.uhs.com or fax resume to 952-893-3213, Attn: Recruiter. EOE

UHS
Universal|Hospital|Services
Service you can count on.

Be A Local Hero
Pick Your Own Apples
Apex Orchards
153 Peckville Rd.
Shelburne, MA 01370
Open Daily 9 - 5
Phone (413) 625 - 2744
I-91 to exit 26, Rt. 2 west 3.5 miles
follow the signs to Apex Orchards

Panda East
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
Menu...
Sushi:
California Maki $3.95
Salmon Skin $4.25
Alaska $4.95
Salmon Maki $5.95
Chef Specialties:
Mandarin Chicken $12.95
Vegetarian Chicken $10.95
Amazing Chicken $11.50
Panda's Gourmet Shrimp $15.95
Ask about our special sushi rolls, vegetarian options, "light and healthy" entrees, and gluten free entrees.
We Bring Chinatown To You!
Monday-Thursday: 11:30am-11:00pm
Friday & Saturday: 11:00am-11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00pm-10:00pm
103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002 Delivery: (413) 549-0077
www.pandaamherst.com

Women's clothing, shoes and accessories downtown Amherst www.zanna.com

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
367 Russell St. 413-58-4221
Schedule for Fri 9/29/06 thru Thurs 10/05/06
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
cinemark.com

D.P. Dough = Great Calzones + Low Prices + Fast Delivery
OPEN UNTIL 4 A.M. Thursday, Friday, and Saturday
256-1616 * WWW.DPDOUGH.COM

2		3	8	7	9
				5		9
1			4	2			7
		1				6	8
				1
	2	4				1
4				9	2		6
	9			8
			6	3	1	5	9

Find today's sudoku solutions at:
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Peak on Crete
4 Not up yet
8 "Tracey Takes On" star
14 Prohibit
15 Sign away
16 Used-car deal
17 Voting age
18 Out-of-body projection
20 Turf
21 AWOL student
23 Part of RSVP
24 Mag gift
26 "She Wore a Yellow Ribbon" co-star Joanne
27 Undersized
28 Country club requirement
32 Tam-o'-shanter, e.g.
35 Stinker
36 Resident immigrant
39 Ammunition
41 Property holding
43 Length of yarn
44 Wash thoroughly
46 Fate
47 Cosmetician's mop
50 End of grace
52 What the weasel goes
53 Inflatable floaters
57 Chou En-__
58 Fish hawk
61 Dry: pref.
62 Biblical prophet
64 San Francisco newspaper
66 Tuna relative
67 Missile shelter
68 Cold cluds
69 Maintain firmly
70 Lamb dish
71 LAX info

DOWN
1 Letter-shaped girder
2 Cow collective
3 Enrage
4 Play part
5 Sugar source
6 German river
7 Steps
8 Seventh planet
9 For fear that
10 WWII landing craft
11 Kangaroo or wombat
12 Actor Denzel
13 Top dapper
18 No. done
22 Overdue debts
25 Capital north of Baffin
27 Head
29 Bon (witticism)
30 William Inge play
31 Safe haven
32 Eye network
33 Alkaline shoreland
34 Coarse cloud
37 Self-esteem
38 Earn as profit
40 Legal claim
42 Precipe amount
45 Coniferous evergreen
48 Result
49 Yellow cap
50 Defense focus
51 Bricklayer
54 Enclosing structure
55 Pick up the tab
56 Kinda
58 Horse feed
59 Egress
60 Ivy League member
63 Rumor
Treesume
65 Do the laundry

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"People want riches; they need fulfillment."
—Robert Conklin

READ IT & WEEP By Travis Dandro

mama boyfriend had his buddies over last night that must've been a real meeting of the minds
it was more like a meeting of the mullets

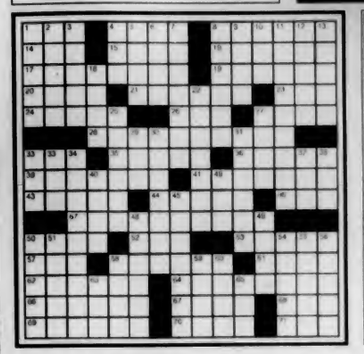
TWO MUFFINS By Anna Lee

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

It kind of bothers me that there aren't any bars in this park
There aren't bars in any National Park, Fem
I really should have looked more thoroughly at those retirement communities

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner

WELL, THIS CONCLUDES YOUR ORIENTATION TOUR. I HOPE I WAS ABLE TO HELP YOU FAMILIARIZE YOURSELF WITH THE CAMPUS.
JUST REMEMBER, IF YOU EVER GET LOST, OR DON'T KNOW WHERE SOMETHING IS, YOU CAN ALWAYS LOOK FOR A CAMPUS DIRECTORY.
IT'S AT THE MAIN ENTRANCE, AND IF YOU WALK THAT FAR YOU PROBABLY WILL HAVE FOUND WHERE YOU NEEDED TO GO.



BEST BAR AROUND
Seven O's
KARAOKE EVERY WEDNESDAY
Live Band
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-8786
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
Next To Cliffside Apts

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You are ever so lovely.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Stay away from the new 'Hair' diet.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You will create a race of robots that will someday destroy all humans.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You have no chance at becoming the Prime Minister of China

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
It is no coincidence that there is the word "gem" in Gemini.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You should probably dress as a centaur for halloween.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't be a centaur be a wad-o-meat.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Blah, blah, blah, blah. It doesn't make a difference either way.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Everytime you fart a flower dies.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It's better to have made a bad joke than no joke at all.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't sleep in the bath, you might have dreams about drowning, or actually drown.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
It is no coincidence that the letters "pric" are in your astrological sign.

THANK YOU FOR READING
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

All money going to school and none for the weekend? Let us pay you to be a student and learn leadership with Army ROTC www.umass.edu/armyrotc

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Play Women's Ice Hockey! Tryouts for the UMass Women's Club Ice Hockey team are Sept. Sept. 29th 10pm- 11:20pm umasshockeymail@yahoo.com for more information All skill levels encouraged to try out

AUTO FOR SALE

92 Toyota Camry Station Wagon $850 549-9639

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day. Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

EMPLOYMENT

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

SERVICES

Publish or perish! Need to be writing but aren't? I can help with motivation, discipline, and support. Dr Ange DiBenedetto 549-4145

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Did you know your legal rights? Contact the student Legal Services Office 922 Campus Center 545-1995

HOUSE FOR RENT

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2007 Celebration 20th anniversary w/ SunSplash Free Trip on 12 before Nov. 1 Free Meals & Parties, Group Discounts 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 2006

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Scoring drought has UM sliding

After beginning the year 6-0-1, UMass is 0-2-1 in its last three games. Sophomores Chris Brown (No. 5) and Tony Bassett (No. 19) hope to end the team's winless streak this weekend when the Minutemen open up conference play against George Washington and La Salle.

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Today in Washington D.C., the intensity is sure to be kicked up a notch.

The Massachusetts men's soccer team (6-2-2) visits George Washington (3-4-1) today to kick off the Atlantic 10 schedule and the home stretch of the 2007 season. On Sunday, UMass travels to Philadelphia to take on La Salle (4-4-1).

"We're playing at their place. It's going to be a hard-fought game," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "It's going to be an end-to-end type of battle. It always is when we play them. They're aggressive, and they're going to go after it. We have to be prepared for that, and we have to do the same. The game will be won in the midfield. The team that wins the most 50-50 balls will be the team that wins the game."

As far as playing La Salle on Sunday, Koch said it was out of his mind.

"I don't even know who they are," he joked. "We've got GW on Friday and that's all I can think about. [La Salle] is similar to GW, but probably a little more skillful."

La Salle's field is one of the smaller fields the Minutemen will play on this year, so despite not looking ahead, Koch admitted he was aware of that fact.

"It's a poly-turf field, which is new, so it will be a lot easier to play there than it has been in the past as far as the surface," Koch said. "It's going to be a tougher game because it's a smaller field to play on, so there's going to be a lot more physical contact."

The Minutemen have been held scoreless in their last three games, a span in which they have gone 0-2-1. That is certainly not the type of streak Koch likes to be on coming into the heart of the team's schedule, but he is confident in his team right now.

"I don't look at the last three games and say 'we didn't play well,'" Koch said. "I look at the last three games as showing some of the areas we need to work on, but I'm not as concerned about those results now if we have two losses and a tie in the next three games, yeah I'll be concerned, because these games count."

Against both Vermont and New Hampshire, the defense for the Minutemen had a late collapse that forfeited one goal.

Neither game was out of reach as the Minutemen had a number of near misses in the offensive end. The team struggled to finish plays and the lack of offensive firepower was exposed when it fell behind.

"We made one mistake [against Vermont] and they capitalized on it," Koch said. "That might have been one of our better games, the way we played

See M. SOCCER on page 6

Minutemen begin Atlantic 10 play on the road this weekend

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

You've heard all the clichés for conference play: new season, second season, starting over. The Massachusetts men's soccer team doesn't feel like it should have a different mindset heading into its Atlantic 10 opener against George Washington this afternoon.

"The most important thing right now is that everyone is 0-0 going into Friday, and these games count," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "This is what we've been working towards, and now the time has come for us to show what we can do."

The Minutemen play nine conference games, starting with the Colonials today. Only two of the nine matches are against teams with an above .500 record going into the weekend. Saint Louis (4-3-1) and Duquesne (5-3-1) close out UMass' regular season at Rudd Field at the end of October.

"We've got to get off to a good start," freshman Bryan Hogan said about conference play. "If we don't get off to a good start, we're going to be in the hole and the end of our schedule is tough. We have Duquesne and Saint Louis at the end, so we know we have to get wins now, starting Friday. We're really motivated and we're trying our best, so we'll see what happens."

UMass gets an early Christmas present by not having to face No. 12 Fordham. The Rams (6-0-2) are the only undefeated team in the A-10, but will not see the Minutemen unless they rendezvous in the postseason.

The Minutemen begin conference play on the road, but that should not be a factor. UMass is unbeaten on the road with a 2-0-2 record away from Rudd Field this season.

"It's always tougher to pick up wins on the road," junior captain Kenny Cook said. "These games in the beginning of the conference schedule are games we've got to win. We've got to be focused and we've got to be ready to play. Hopefully we'll come out with these wins on the road."

"Getting on the plane, and getting off the plane, and all that stuff, it's kind of a pain," Hogan said. "But once it's game time, all that goes out the window. If you feel like you're ready to play, then you're ready to play."

UMass has been held scoreless in its last three games, going 0-2-1 while allowing two goals. Before that, the Minutemen were riding a five-game winning streak, dating back to Sept. 2.

But regardless of what has happened in the past, there's no looking back now. Koch says he preaches to his team that what's past is past. The Minutemen have to look ahead of them and not behind.

"Everything we've done up to this point really doesn't count for anything," Cook said. "It's the A-10 that matters. We've got to make the A-10 tournament, and then hopefully come out of the A-10 tournament so we can go to the NCAA tournament. We've got to keep looking forward."

Rudd Field hosts A-10 opener

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's soccer team (6-2) turns its focus to Atlantic 10 conference games this weekend in an effort to bounce back from a tough 1-0 double-overtime loss to Vermont last Friday.

The action kicks off at Rudd Field at 4 p.m. against George Washington (7-3), followed by another home game against La Salle Sunday at 1 p.m.

UMass coach Jim Rudy was upbeat and positive following the loss to Vermont.

"We played hard," Rudy said. "We were not as sharp, but understandably so after our big games against Yale and Connecticut. I told the team that the second half of the season begins against George Washington. Be ready."

Rudy wasn't at all concerned that the game against Vermont might linger in his players' heads. They have had an entire week without another game.

"I don't think they will dwell on that game," he said. "I believe they will be highly motivated. We rested on the weekend and will hit it hard in practice leading up to Friday's game."

"We're not going to let that game get in the way," added junior midfielder Jenny Roehrig. "That game is behind us now. We had an awesome non-conference season, but now it's time to look forward to the A-10 conference games. It's a whole new season."

The Maroon and White will tangle with an improved George Washington Colonials team that already has more wins this season than they had in all of 2005, which they finished at 5-12.

UMass holds the advantage over GW in all-time head-to-head meetings 15-5-2. But it was the Colonials who won their only encounter last season, by a score of 1-0. That game was played in Washington, D.C. and the Maroon and White struggled

See W. SOCCER on page 6

Sophomore Vanessa Patry leads the Minutewomen into Atlantic 10 play this weekend. She's tallied three goals and two assists on the season.

Meet of Champions up next for UMass

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts cross country teams will travel to New York City for the Meet of Champions on Saturday. Last week the men's team defeated Boston College and Maine while the women's team finished third behind the Eagles and Black Bears.

Iona College hosts the meet in Van Cortlandt Park in the Bronx. It will feature 22 teams including Massachusetts teams: BC, Boston University, UMass Lowell, and Harvard. Atlantic 10 rival Saint Joseph's and University of California San Diego will also be in the meet.

UMass junior Christina Derosa was named the A-10 Performer of the Week. Last week in the home meet, Derosa finished second out of 35 runners from UMass, Boston College, and Maine. She has been the top finisher for the Minutewomen in the last 16 meets.

"Christina DeRosa will be challenged to run with the front pack, with the extra 1,000 meters playing to her strengths," UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said.

The Minutewomen will run a 6K race instead of the 5K races they have ran in the previous two meets.

The A-10 Rookie of the Week award also came from the UMass team. Freshman Lauren Liuzzo finished 10th overall and second for the team last weekend.

Junior Amber Sayer finished 18th last week after battling the flu.

"Amber Sayer should be recovered and back to form," LaFreniere noted. "I hope to see Sayer along with Lauren Liuzzo, [senior] Cuisle Kierans, [sophomore] Eilis Kierans, and [junior] Taryn Trapp running in a tight pack and not too far from Derosa.

"I expect to see [freshmen] Stephanie Mattar, [senior] Erin O'Donnell and [junior] Ashley Davidson step it up and be in contact with the UMass pack and fight for that seventh position."

This is the first race in which the team is running at full strength. With the addition of junior Amanda Bodette – who battled painful knee tendonitis the past month – the Minutewomen will have all their runners for the weekend.

"Saturday is the first time we'll have all top ten runners together in the same race," LaFreniere said. "This is the first race of the season for Amanda Bodette who will test herself on this course. I'm very pleased with the impact the new additions have brought to this year's team."

Liuzzo has placed in the top-three on the team in her first two races. Trapp – who transferred from Yavapai Community College – and Eilis Kierans placed in the top-five in their only race last week.

"I'm looking forward to watching them compete as a team on Saturday," LaFreniere said.

The Minutemen are coming off an impressive victory last week, with three of the team's runners finishing in the top-five. Sophomore Jessie Regnier placed first overall earning his first collegiate win. Regnier was named the UMass/Dinn Bros. Athlete of the Week.

Freshman Nicolai Naranjo was named the A-10 Rookie of the Week with a fifth-place finish out of 39 runners.

Junior Nils Fischer also ran well for the Minutemen. He finished fourth overall at the home meet and seventh overall at the Dartmouth Invitational on Sept. 9. Junior Ryan Durkin looks to improve in only his second meet after finishing 11th overall last week. With few upperclassmen on the team, UMass coach Ken O'Brien says these two juniors lead the Minutemen.

"Ryan Durkin has shown some leadership qualities," O'Brien said after last week's meet.

Freshmen Andrew McCann also ran strong for the Minutemen, finishing in 10th overall and placed fourth on the team.

Minutewomen host tough Big East foe

BY J.M. FRIEDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts field hockey team (3-7) will try and capture its second win in as many games today, facing off at 3 p.m. against the Syracuse Orange at Garber Field.

Last season, the Minutewomen lost a 2-0 decision to Syracuse on the road. The Orange owns a 9-5-1 mark against UMass, and have won their last seven contests. The last victory for the Minutewomen against Syracuse came in 1998.

Coming off an impressive 4-0 dismantling of the Siena Saints, the Minutewomen look to establish a winning atmosphere at home. Garber Field has not been a safe haven for the Maroon and White over the past four seasons. Over that time they've compiled a 13-26 record.

The Orange will be a strong challenge for the Minutewomen. The Big East conference, home to the Orange, boasts four nationally ranked field hockey teams by the National Field Hockey Coaches Association poll.

Syracuse and Connecticut are the only Big East opponents on the slate for the Minutewomen this season. Last weekend, the No. 9 Huskies handed an undermanned UMass squad a 6-0 drubbing.

If the Minutewomen want a better showing against the Orange, they need to shore up play in the defensive zone.

Against an overmatched Siena team on Tuesday, the Minutewomen carried play for the majority of the game. However, the few moments the Saints penetrated into the offensive zone, they showed defensive lapses that resulted in scoring chances.

UMass coach Patsy Shea knows what happens when there are defensive breakdowns in front of the goalkeeper against tough opponents. Mistakes end up in the net.

"We have to setup [in the defensive zone] better," Shea said. "We need earlier communication and organization within our defense."

Part of the predicament for the Minutewomen is combining an aggressive philosophy with a patient and team-oriented defensive approach.

"We're trying to run at the player and get the ball right away instead of coming to engage the player and set up our tackles," Shea said. "We have to be more patient. We can still be as aggressive but still be patient to get the ball in a less dangerous area."

For the better part of this season, the Minutewomen have had success on the offensive side of the ball.

Tied on the stat sheet by sophomore forward Lauren Gillespie at goals, tied for first in the Atlantic 10 conference – and junior back Erin O'Brien who had a hat trick Tuesday against Siena, the Maroon and White is most effective when playing as a unit.

"We play our best when we play a passing game," O'Brien said. "We'll be successful [against Syracuse] if everybody is aware and we utilize everybody on the field."

Shea agrees with team captain O'Brien.

When we receive the ball in an area where our next step is to pass, and we have people moving into those spaces, that's when we become a very good team," Shea said. "It's just a matter of trusting within a system, and trusting your teammates."

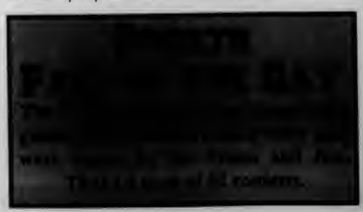
When that trust breaks down, and players start acting as individuals, the resulting one-on-one situations can lead to turnovers, and turnovers lead to goals.

"When we start to dribble into one-on-one situations," Shea said. "That's when we struggle and become frantic."

The frustrating losses this season for the Minutewomen have been a result of turnovers and mental mistakes. In practice on Thursday, Shea stressed taking care of the ball.

"You can accept as a coach, teams beating you, but you can't accept you beating yourself," Shea said. "We have to do a better job of valuing possession, and that's something you work on every day."

If the Minutewomen take care of the ball, and work as a team, they should be in a position to compete against the Orange.



OCTOBER

MINUTEMEN GET SHUT OUT TWICE PG. 10

THE UMASS SOCIAL REFORMIST MANIFESTO PG. 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 68 LO: 46 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, OCTOBER 2, 2006

UMass Media Services wins two awards for DVDs

UMASS ITV

Former UMass biology professors Edward Klekowski (left) and Willy Bemis (right) co-wrote the award-winning film.

Academic Instructional Media Services (AIMS) at the University of Massachusetts Amherst has received two Telly Awards for DVDs produced and edited by the department.

The Telly Awards honor outstanding local, regional and cable television commercials and programs, as well as, the finest video and film productions. The awards are sponsored by The Creative Group, a division of Robert Half International Inc., which focuses on placing freelance professionals in the creative, advertising, marketing, Web and public relations fields. The 26th annual Telly Awards received over 12,000 entries from all 50 states and five continents.

"Sea Vampires in the Connecticut" won a Silver Telly Award in the educational film category. The film was produced and edited by Tom Zimnowski, and written by biologist Edward Klekowski and ichthyologist Willy Bemis. The Springfield Science Museum features this film as part of an interactive educational display. Klekowski is a retired biology professor at UMass Amherst, and Bemis is a former professor of biology at UMass Amherst who is now director of the Shoals Marine Laboratory off the coast of New Hampshire.

"Dynamite, Whiskey and Wood: Connecticut River Log Drives 1870-1915" received a Bronze Telly Award in the documentary film category. Elizabeth Wilda, AIMS producer/director, edited and co-produced this film with Edward and Libby Klekowski. The program airs nationally with American Public Television and was the highest-rated prime time show for American Public Television in mid-August.

Both programs are available for purchase on the AIMS video services.

Courtesy of the UMass News Office

TOOL PLAYS AT THE TWEETER CENTER

After a five year hiatus, Tool has returned to the stage to promote their new album, "10,000 Days." On Friday the band shook the Tweeter Center with a stellar performance.

Mass. to require healthcare

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON – When William McIntyre gets sick, he's faced with two choices: show up at the nearest hospital emergency room or become his own doctor, nurse and pharmacist.

"I take a lot of aspirin," said the uninsured 54-year-old former Swansea resident. "And if I get real sick I guess I would have to go to a hospital and worry about it later."

That's all about to change for McIntyre, who worked 15 years as an electronic service technician fixing money handling equipment before leaving work and losing his health care.

On Monday, Massachusetts crosses a major threshold in its ambitious health care initiative as it begins enrolling its poorest residents, those individuals like McIntyre earning less than the federal poverty level of about $9,800 a year, in a new state-administered insurance program called CommonWealth Care.

It's a first step toward Massachusetts' ultimate goal of becoming the first state in the nation to require all its citizens have health insurance.

And while the landmark initiative, approved by state lawmakers and signed by Gov. Mitt Romney in April, has found supporters and critics across the country, it has remained largely in the planning stages, until now.

The law gets its first real road test when Massachusetts begins signing up an estimated 62,000 poor individuals for health insurance. The lower cost health care plans will be offered by four private providers but overseen by the state.

Those 62,000 residents are currently part of Massachusetts' "free care pool," where the state reimburses hospitals for the bulk of the cost of their hospital visits.

A goal of the new law is to replace that pool by giving those same individuals health insurance which will improve their medical care and, ideally, hold down health care costs in the long run.

Romney and other state leaders plan to mark

See HEALTHCARE on page 3

TV ads for high-fat foods target toddlers

By Carla K. Johnson
Associated Press

CHICAGO – When Susan Connor's 3-year-old son started humming the McDonald's jingle, a research project was born.

Connor knew where he'd heard the fast food giant's catchy tune – on the Disney Channel during "The Wiggles," a show for preschoolers.

"He had absorbed that from watching TV," said Connor, whose study on food ads aimed at toddlers appears in the October issue of Pediatrics. "It would be a marketer's dream to know they were that successful."

Messages for high-fat, high-sugar foods permeate programming for preschoolers on Nickelodeon, the study found. On the Disney Channel's shows for the youngest children and even on Public Broadcasting Service shows such as "Sesame Street," companies woo tots' loyalty by linking logos, licensed characters and slogans with fun and happiness.

Disney and PBS promote themselves as ad-free, but fast food companies dominated sponsor messages during programming for toddlers, Connor found, making up 82 percent of sponsor messages on PBS preschool programming and 36 percent of messages on Disney's toddler block of shows.

The clown character Ronald McDonald appears with shows for toddlers on Disney and PBS. And the cartoon mouse Chuck E. Cheese pops up alongside preschool programming on PBS.

Connor, research manager of Cleveland's Rainbow Babies & Children's Hospital, said adults who haven't seen children's programs lately will be surprised by the findings.

Advocates said the study adds to mounting evidence that food marketers are trying to hook the youngest children as lifelong customers. Promotions go both ways with TV characters from children's shows used on the packaging of sugary cereals, fruit-flavored snacks and other foods.

Last week, the Federal Communications Commission announced plans to study links between the ads, viewing habits and the rise of childhood obesity. For now, marketing of food to children is unregulated.

Previous studies have found that kids as young as 3 who see TV ads are more likely to request and eat advertised foods high in fat, sodium and sugar. American children from infancy to age 6 watch an average of one hour of TV daily, and 8- to-18-year-olds watch an average of three hours daily. They see roughly 40,000 TV ads a year.

"It's very concerning when childhood obesity is a major public health problem that preschool programs are still being sponsored by fast food restaurants and food that's not healthy for children," said Susan Linn of Harvard Medical School and a co-founder of the Campaign for a Commercial-Free Childhood. She was not involved in the study.

See TODDLERS on page 3

18-year-old dies in police car chase

BOSTON—A 15-year-old Boston boy died early Sunday when the car he was in crashed just minutes after police broke off pursuit of the vehicle.

The driver of the vehicle, identified by police as Daniel Rodriguez, 17, of the city's Roslindale neighborhood, is facing multiple charges, including vehicular homicide, following the crash at about 2 a.m.

Also, an 18-year-old female passenger suffered serious injuries and a 14-year-old male passenger sustained non life-threatening injuries.

An officer spotted the vehicle with a broken windshield at about 1:45, police said. After discovering that its license plate was reported stolen, the officer pulled over the car. As the officer approached the vehicle, it sped off, resulting in a pursuit, police said.

The officer broke off pursuit when his cruiser got a flat tire.

Just minutes later, the suspect's car crashed on Hyde Park Avenue.

Backseat passenger, Jeffrey Martinez, 15, of Roslindale died of injuries sustained in the crash.

Associated Press

Detainees held indefinitely in Afghanistan

By Matthew Pennington
Associated Press

Afghan prisoners are received by relatives after their release from the U.S.-run Bagram airbase.

KABUL, Afghanistan – Capt. Amanullah, a former mujahedeen commander, smoothes his black beard with his palm and gives a deep and ironic laugh as he recounts his 14 miserable months in Bagram, the U.S. prison for terror suspects in Afghanistan.

"There were lots of stupid questions and accusations with no proof," said the 56-year-old veteran of combat against the Soviet occupation. He insists he was there only because Afghan rivals lied about him to the U.S. Army.

He's far from alone in his assertion of innocence – or his inability to make that heard for so long. Like many who have passed through the secretive jail set up after the fall of the Taliban regime, Amanullah found himself entangled in a system where he had no protection and no rights, and not even the pressure of public scrutiny that helped inmates at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, or Abu Ghraib, Iraq.

"There's been a silence about Bagram, and much less political discussion about it," said Richard Bennett, the chief U.N. human rights officer in Afghanistan.

Originally intended as a short-term holding pen for al-Qaida and Taliban suspects later shipped to Guantanamo, Bagram has expanded and acquired its own notoriety over abuse allegations though attracting much less international attention than the U.S. detention facility in Cuba.

The United States plans to turn over the Afghan nationals in its custody to the Afghan government by next summer. They will be sent to a new high-security wing at the Afghan government's main Policharki prison in Kabul – scene of repeated deadly riots and escapes in recent years. But non-Afghans currently held at Bagram will stay in U.S. custody, officials say.

Bagram's estimated 500 inmates are mostly Afghans, but also are believed to include Arabs, Pakistanis and some Central Asians. They wear the same orange jump suits and shaven heads as the "enemy combatants" at Guantanamo, but lack even the scant legal rights granted to the inmates at that facility, such as the right to appear at military hearings that assess whether they pose a security threat. In some cases, they have been held without charge for three to four years, rights workers say.

New legislation would extend anti-torture protections to all prisoners in U.S. custody. But only those hand-picked by the president or the military would get rights to legal representation and a hearing. So far, that has been accorded to only a handful of men at Guantanamo, and none held at Bagram or in Iraq, where more than 13,000 are in U.S. custody without charge.

At least two of the eight people reported to have died in U.S. custody since the invasion of Afghanistan in late 2001 were at Bagram. At least 15 American servicemen have been charged with prison abuse following the December 2002 deaths of those two Afghan nationals, Dilawar and Habibullah. The heaviest punishment handed down has been five months in jail.

Based on interviews with freed Bagram detainees, rights workers say conditions have gradually improved for the inmates who are housed in communal cages inside a cavernous Soviet-era machine workshop, at what is the main American base in Afghanistan.

Amanullah was arrested at home in Wardak province in a night-time raid in early 2004, apparently because of his suspected ties with a renegade warlord. He spent 11 months in solitary confinement, then was shifted to a cage shared by 16 other Afghans who were forbidden to talk to one another, let alone talk.

He said inmates staged an 11-day protest toward the end of his stint at Bagram, demanding to be allowed to pray together and to have water to clean themselves before praying, as demanded by Islam. Before that they used dust instead. Their request was eventually granted.

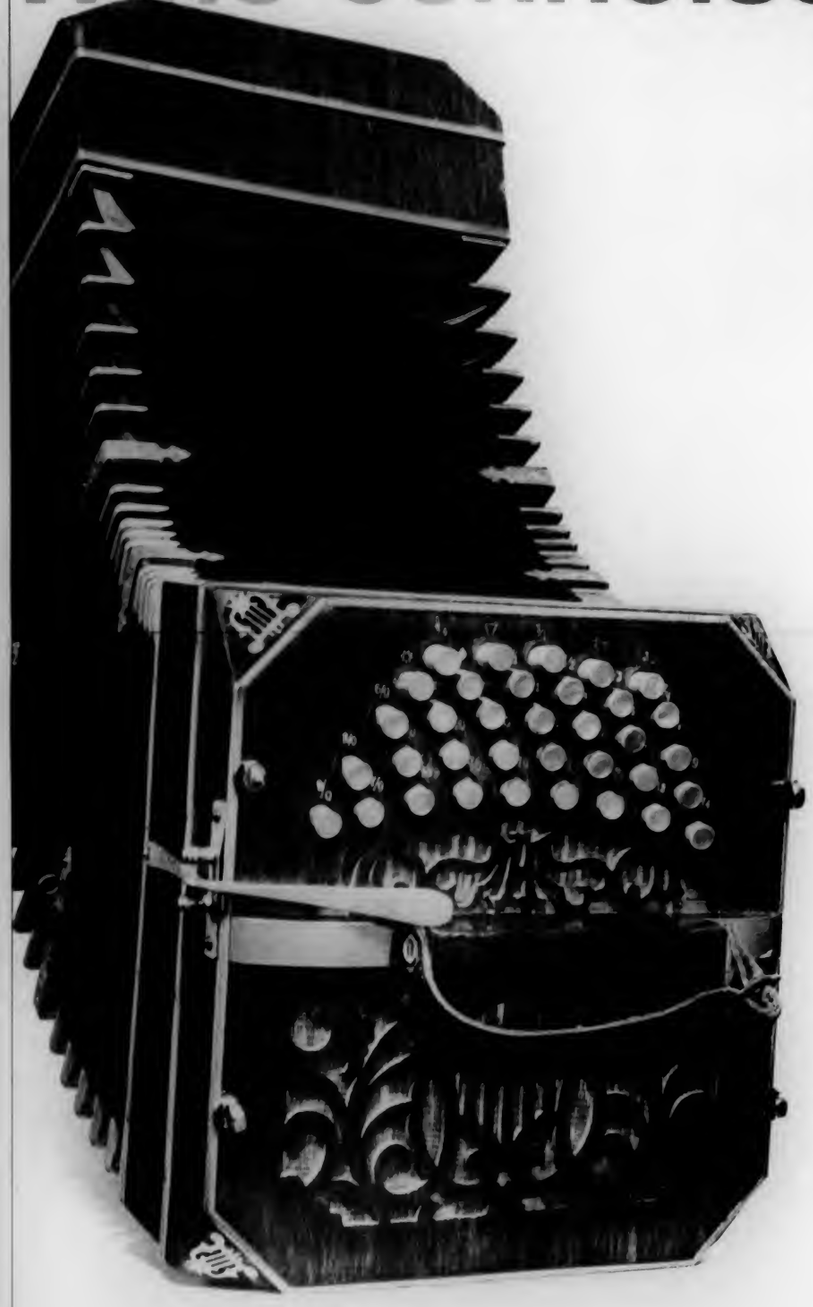
The U.S. military points to other improvements. Spokesman Lt. Col. Paul Fitzpatrick said that chamber pots have been replaced with internal plumbing and privacy screens for personal hygiene. There are now opportunities for education – reading, writing, math – and voluntary work-for-pay.

But the most enduring concern is not prison conditions but the legal limbo of detainees – and concerns over how many ended up there in the first place.

A Western official, who requested anonymity because of diplomatic sensitivities, recounted as an example how earlier this year, three armed, plainclothes police were rounded up and dispatched to Bagram after they were stopped at a roadblock in an eastern province

See DETAINEES on page 3

Gastronomist
Tango dancer*
Wine connoisseur



Learn more about Xavier Flores and tell us more about you. Visit pwc.com/bringit.

Your life. You can bring it with you.

*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate legal entity. PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer

State will pay insurance premiums

HEALTHCARE from page 1

the moment on Monday with a press conference at a neighborhood health center in the city's Dorchester neighborhood during which the first person to sign up for the new health care program will be enrolled.

The state has set up a new Web site and staffed a phone bank to answer questions. Most of those in the first batch of 62,000 are already known to the state and will be automatically enrolled. Others who match the criteria can sign up at community centers or hospitals.

Even with all the hoopla, the plan has had its share of critics.

While the poorest residents will essentially receive free health care – the state will pay the full cost of their premiums and they will be required to pay only a nominal co-pay – those earning up to three times the federal poverty level won't get off free.

Beginning in January, they will be required to pay a portion of their monthly premiums, from $18 to $106 per month depending on their income, with the state picking up the balance of the full premiums, which range from $280 to $387 a month.

Sandra Cesar is one of those earning between one and three times the federal poverty level. The 30-year-old Lynn mother takes home about $26,000 a year from a day care service she runs.

Cesar, who is uninsured, estimates that under the new law she'll be required to pay between $80 and $100 a month for insurance. She said she welcomes the chance to get insurance, but doesn't like threat of penalties if she runs short one month.

"I was excited the first time I heard about it, then I realized it was the same old thing," she said. "If they are going to mandate someone to do something, they have to look at the person as an individual."

Finally in July 2007, all Massachusetts residents earning more than three times the federal poverty level will be required to have health insurance – on their own or through work – or face tax penalties.

Cesar isn't alone in her criticism.

The Rev. Hurmon Hamilton, Jr., pastor of Roxbury Presbyterian Church in Boston, called the state's decision to insure its poorest residents "a great victory" but said he's worried that some of those making up to three times the poverty line won't be able to afford their share of monthly premiums.

Hamilton said the state should require businesses to contribute more instead.

Under the new law companies with 11 or more full-time workers must offer health insurance to their employees or pay an annual $295 per-worker fee.

Companies can avoid the fee if at least a quarter of their workers are enrolled in the business' group health plan and the company is making a contribution toward it, or by offering to pay at least 33 percent of a worker's health insurance premium.

Some small business owners said the fee is too burdensome and will make it harder for them to keep and hire workers, but critics like Hamilton said businesses are getting off easy.

"How do you let a corporation off for just paying $285 year?" He said. "They pay more than that for a dinner on Saturday night."

But for folks like McIntyre who live day to day crossing their fingers and hoping for good health, the new law is a blessing.

"It would take a lot of stress off me because now even if I get something migor I shrug it off cause I can't afford to go see a doctor," he said. "I'm not a kid anymore."

Detainees cases to be assessed

DETAINEES from page 1

during a U.S. military operation.

He estimated that as many as half those incarcerated at the American base, located an hour's drive north of Kabul, shouldn't be there. "Once you're in, the process of getting out is very long and difficult," the official said.

Mubibbullah Khan, 38, at the time a respected district chief in southern Zabul province, was held at Bagram 8 1/2 months after his September 2005 arrest on suspicion he was a Taliban informant – although he'd spent most of the hard-line regime's rule in exile in Pakistan. He believes he was framed by a rival within the provincial government.

Amanullah, who in the 1980s commanded thousands of anti-Soviet mujahedeen, funded by the United States, claims he was set up by former communists in Afghan intelligence. He said that a sequence of American interrogators in Bagram questioned him, accusing him among other things of concealing a cache of weapons under a cemetery where they alleged his militia had once massacred 1,800 ethnic Hazara tribes people – which he maintains is nonsense.

"I have enemies from during the civil war and during the communist time. All these people are giving false information," he said.

Sayed Sharif Yousofy, spokesman for the Afghan reconciliation commission that has assisted the release of about 400 detainees from Bagram and Guantanamo, including Amanullah and Mubibbullah, also said many had been arrested on "wrong information."

But the Western official said tor all its legal shortcomings, Bagram offers much better security than grisly Afghan prisons, where conditions – while improving – are very poor and Taliban militants have "a well-organized operation for springing people out of jail" through bribery.

NATO nations fighting in Afghanistan are investing in Afghan prisons and now handing over detained insurgents directly to its authorities. Meanwhile Afghan detainees in U.S. custody at Guantanamo and Bagram are to be shifted to Afghan custody at Policharki prison when a new high-security wing and staff training is complete Fitzpatrick says by summer 2007.

Afghan Justice Minister Mohammed Sarwar Danish said each detainee's case would then be assessed by the Afghan attorney general, and they will either be freed or put on trial Fitzpatrick said some Afghans held for "acts of terrorism against the U.S." could still be held at Bagram.

Associated Press writer Amir Shah contributed to this report.

Ad execs defend programming

TODDLERS from page 1

Diane Levin, of Wheelock College who is also a co-founder of the Campaign for a Commercial-Free Childhood, criticized Disney and PBS for breaching viewers' trust. She supports limits on marketing of junk food to children too young to make critical judgment about advertising.

"PBS has a special responsibility, said Levin, who was not involved in the study. With federal funding threatened, Levin said, PBS has searched for new revenue, including from sponsors who want to reach children.

PBS spokeswoman Lois Sloan said sponsors' messages don't interrupt programs and don't go longer than two minutes. 17 seconds per hour. PBS doesn't allow price information, product comparisons, depictions of children's products or superlative claims, Sloan said.

"The content of these messages is either in support of public television's overall learning, education and social development," Sloan said in an e-mail.

"Licensed characters or mascots often reinforce a positive educational message and their appearance is limited to five seconds."

Nickelodeon spokesman Dan Mathisen said the channel has reduced food ads during its "Nick Jr." block of programs for preschoolers by 20 percent in the last two years.

Disney Channel spokeswoman Patti McTeague said sponsor messages are accepted "only when they are connected to a pro-social message."

Chuck E. Cheese spokeswoman Brenda Holloway said the pizza restaurant chain's play areas promote physical activity, as do its ads.

"Realistically, our research shows most children come to Chuck E. Cheese's to play and have fun," Holloway wrote in an e-mail. "We think that our PBS sponsorship announcements do promote physical activity and social interaction through play and learning, which we believe are appropriate messages for preschool-age children."

McDonald's did not respond to requests for comment in time for publication.

Astronaut's famous phrase questioned

Apollo 11 astronauts Neil Armstrong and Edwin E. "Buzz" Aldrin, the first men to land on the moon.

That's one small step for astronaut Neil Armstrong, one giant mystery for grammar sticklers everywhere.

An Australian computer programmer says he found the missing "a" from Armstrong's famous first words from the moon in 1969, when the world heard the phrase, "That's one small step for man, one giant leap for mankind."

The story was reported in Saturday's edition of the Houston Chronicle.

Some historians and critics have dogged Armstrong for not saying the more dramatic and grammatically correct, "One small step for a man ..." in the version he transmitted to NASA's Mission Control. Without the missing "a," Armstrong essentially said, "One small step for mankind, one giant leap for mankind."

The famous astronaut has maintained he intended to say it properly and believes he did. Thanks to some high-tech sound-editing software, computer programmer Peter Sharin Ford might have proved Armstrong right.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
issue 20

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Eric Athas
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sheryl Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jamison Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Editorial Production Virginia Nurhen
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Sean Durham
Editorial Editor Kristen LaCasse
News Editor Matt Bellisseau
Sports Editor Rob Greenfield
Circulation Manager Jeff Pratt
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Theresa Barba
Assistant Business Phil Sneither
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Alex Butler
Assistant News Anna Dolianitis
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Sports Danny Picard
Assistant Sports Jon Pelland
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick
Web-Editor James Hale

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts Amherst semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life. Before the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Daily Collegian in 1956. Published Daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadcast since 1988 and 1994. For news tips, rates and information, call between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik

COPY EDITOR
Kristen LaCasse

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Nick Belanger, Sarah Belanger

the morning...

IF YOU'RE AN EARLY RISER...
BEEP BEEP
10:30 AM
AND YOU NEED TO KNOW WHAT'S UP ON CAMPUS,
TEAM
HAVE THE LATEST NEWS WAITING FOR YOU...
RIGHT IN YOUR INBOX.

http://www.dailycollegian.com//register

Worcester C-Store Grand Opening

Wednesday, October 4

Celebrate our Grand Opening Specials at all 4 locations!

Doritos all varieties 13 ounce bag 2 for $5.00

Large White Eggs $.99 per dozen

Coke, Diet Coke, or Sprite 12 pack cans 2 for $7.00 (plus deposit)

Allegra Cut Ziti or Spaghetti 16 ounce box $.79 each

California Seedless Grapes red or green $1.79 per pound

Angy's Premium Cheese Lasagna 20 ounce portion $2.99

Glaceau Vitamin Water 20 ounce bottles buy 2 get one free

Dasani Water liter bottles 2 for $2.00

Medium New England Fair Trade Coffee and a Muffin $1.59

STORE HOURS
Mini Store
Monday – Thursday 8:00am – 6:00pm
Friday 8:00am – 2:00pm
Worcester C-Store
Monday – Friday 8:00am – 12:00am
Weekends and Holidays 11:00am – 12:00am
Franklin C-Store
Monday – Friday 7:00am – 9:00pm
Weekends and Holidays 11:00am – 11:00pm
Hampden C-Store
Monday – Friday 7:00am – 12:00am
Weekends and Holidays 11:00am – 12:00am

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst

Prices valid through Friday, October 13

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, OCTOBER 2, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The UMass Social Reformist Manifesto

Matt Janko

What did you do Saturday night? I spent six hours fighting off hypothermia as I was imprisoned in an icy cold jail cell, clothed in nothing but my boxers. Like many political prisoners, my experiences have induced thought. Though I will say, I now have a better understanding of the environment in Russian gulags, this discourse is not simply a condemnation of the treatment of students at the hands of the Amherst Police, but rather, a call for a re-evaluation of the social opportunities offered to the student population by the University.

First, we must consider the fascist dictatorship of the Amherst Police and the detainment-camp environment of their holding cells. Before my arrest, and subsequent imprisonment, I was unaware that SOP (standard operating procedure) for an arrest on charges of a noise violation was to be stripped to fig leaf covering and locked all night in an arctic chamber of desolation. Granted I was in little more than a bedsheet, but was this deserved?

I cannot confirm my recent development of piles was caused by sitting on an ass-chappingly-cold cement block in the Amherst Police Station, but I can verify that it helped.

Yet, more importantly than this, I question our collective understanding of the handling of hundreds of arrests every year in the Pioneer Valley. Not for burglary, not for assault, not even for drunk driving, but for petty abuses: alcohol consumption and excessive noise created by students at this University. Know that these arrests and subsequent court appointments happening every weekend perpetuate a crippling system of physical and economic dominance by the law enforcement system over the student population.

These unnecessary arrests and proxy wars serve only to create friction between student and public servant, along with siphoning even more time and money from the average Joe or Jane, who already wince after seeing their school tuition bill (now ~$18K). No person can be in favor of this system, for it fails at the problems it seeks to solve; only creating spite and the desire for widespread circumvention and retaliation.

The act of making alcohol illegal for minors transforms it from an accessory into a main attraction. America is scared of the general population. Police will break any social gathering, regardless of complaints real or fictionalized. A social gathering of even a few dozen inspires fear in the hearts of authority and precipitates the exertion of police discretion.

These unnecessary arrests and proxy wars serve only to create friction between student and public servant, along with siphoning even more time and money from the average Joe or Jane, who already wince after seeing their school tuition bill.

Yet, we students do not intentionally set out to cause disturbances. Social gatherings of the students must be considered within the context of this Bunyan-esque University, Sweet Muses. Our burgeoning undergraduate population of approximately 19,000 has nothing to do on a Friday night. What have we got? Face it my little tronduids, we've got the iconic UMass fraternity influence dwindling and a University-sponsored nightlife essentially nonexistent. Now you're interested. But what can you do?

Evaluate the situation. Thousands of otherwise law-abiding, well-rounded students seeking to relieve the pressure of the discipline required for the school week. What we lack is the sublime medium to facilitate our objective. So we need the perfect setting. But Where? How?

To paraphrase Karl Marx, workers of the University, Unite. I am no communist, but I will throw down this gauntlet for the University to answer: Let the students and the University work together to create a synergistic incestuous android.

Let us socialize on campus, whether in the dorms or on the campus lawn, without the fear of persecution at the hands of our oppressors. Communism wasn't halted by tyranny of the common man, and this binge drinking plague will not be cured in this way either. Ignoring the problem, and tightening the proverbial leash has not worked; and will not work. May we volunteer a fresh, useful idea?

There is nothing I pleasure more than filling my nostrils first thing in the morning with the manure-reeking valley air. For eight months a year I am the University, the Five Colleges, every wide-eyed student, every glasses-polishing professor and every good-hearted member of the Pioneer Valley.

We love our surrogate home, and we mean no harm. Organize. Tell the Amherst Board of Selectmen, tell Chancellor Lombardi, tell your professors, neighbors, tell the Amherst Chief of Police. Help us bring University social life back onto the University campus with a motion supported by all.

Let the students socialize normally. Like communism, you cannot route alcohol consumption, and you cannot vanquish it with aggressive foreign policy. This Kennan-esque method will only manifest the problem and make it grow. How about Detente? How about shaking hands with the trouble to subvert instead of aggravate? It worked against the socialist threat, give it a chance, and perhaps it will work in this way as well.

Matt Janko is a UMass student.

OPPOSING VIEWPOINTS

Who is preying on our fears?

It's the Democrats!

Ben Duffy

The Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee (DSCC) advertisement displayed pictures of President Bush and leading Republican senators interspersed with pictures of world trouble spots. Titled "Secure" the ad attempts to persuade voters that President Bush's foreign policy has made the nation less safe.

The ad sounds like a laundry list of tired old Democratic complaints. "Security under Bush and GOP? Not enough troops, body armor, or armed Humvees in Iraq. Four times as many terror attacks in 2005. Two billion cut from law enforcement. Iran developing nuclear weapons. Just 6% of containers inspected. Millions more illegal immigrants. North Korea has quadrupled its nuclear arsenal. Feel Safer? Vote for change."

I won't rebut each asinine point in the ad, but I will say that the non-partisan Factcheck.org does a decent job of debunking almost every one of their assertions.

I thought Democrats were above using "fear-mongering" to win elections. Guess not. Make no doubt about it: this ad is intended to scare voters into voting Democratic this November. Actually, the Democrats are well practiced in the art of fear; when they accuse Republicans of doing it, they are actually engaging in Freudian projection.

What I've always found puzzling is the fact that Republicans are accused of employing "fear tactics" when talking about issues that both parties supposedly agree upon. Democrats will tell you they are just as dedicated to eradicating terrorism as Republicans, if not more so. So if we both agree we face a grave threat, why does it constitute fear-mongering for the words "terrorism" or "9/11" to even cross the lips of a Republican?

Simply talking about the reality of terrorism is not fear-mongering. Looking at a globe, it is easy to see there are violent conflicts at almost every point where the Muslim world and the non-Muslim world intersect. From Israel to Kashmir to Sudan, the Jihad is on the march.

So they aren't just mad because they're poor, and they aren't just mad because of some legacy of colonialism; they're continuing a religious conquest that has continued unabated since the time of Mohammed. They're using new weapons and new tactics, but it's the same old Jihad. Those who deny this reality are the proverbial ostriches with their heads in the sand.

Focusing on the words "Feel safer? Vote for change," it's clear that they think continued Republican dominance in Washington is a menace to national security. Well, they're entitled to their opinion, no matter how much I disagree. But why is it Republicans are not allowed to suggest that a return of old, failed Democratic policies is a threat to national security? Clearly, fear-mongering is not fear-mongering when Democrats are doing it.

We don't have to look far back in time to see shining examples of Democratic Party fear-mongering. Remember that phony draft scare the Democrats dragged out in 2004? They said if Bush got re-elected, he would issue a midnight executive order to draft women and college students.

A protest sign I saw said "Bush's draft begins November 3, Start preparing your daughters, too."

The only people actually proposing a draft were all "anti-war" Democrats, and "the administration" was completely against it. In any case, Bush won re-election almost two years ago, and no one has come to drag my college student sister off to Parris Island yet. It was bogus from the beginning, but if it could scare young people and their parents to the polls, then that's all that mattered.

Then there's Al Gore's little pet cause, global warming, a theory which still has some kinks to be worked out. Despite holes in the theory, Liberals continue making silly movies, like "The Day After Tomorrow," that show a grossly exaggerated picture of what global warming might look like. Al Gore jumped right on the opportunity to blame the fictitious events of this fictitious film on the Bush administration. Note to Gore: "TDAT" was from the same director as "Independence Day" and was about as realistic.

We don't have to look far back in time to see shining examples of Democratic Party fear-mongering. Remember that phony draft scare the Democrats dragged out in 2004?

Incidentally, the film was based partially on a book by Art Bell and Whitley Strieber, two men who are known for their radio show which regularly covers conspiracy theories, poltergeists and UFOs. Mr. Strieber has written a "true story" in which he claims he may have been abducted by aliens, although he believes he may have imagined it.

Within the last four years, the Democrats' hysteria has manifested itself in the type of message that America has never been a worse place to live, and if Republicans continue to wield power in Washington, it will inevitably get worse. The message is clear – vote for Republicans and your daughter will get drafted and your house will be wiped away by a global-warming induced flash flood or blizzard.

If that's not fear-mongering, I don't know what is. Chicken Little could have been a Democrat – the sky is always falling.

Ben Duffy is a Collegian columnist

No, it's the Republicans!

Katy Bruck

Politics is a sticky business. Interactions between individuals are complicated enough, without throwing power into the equation. What's more, in American politics, not only do those with interest in ruling have to throw themselves into the fray, but the citizens they wish to rule over must somehow find a way to insert their own interests into an often seemingly arbitrary casting of stones. From the outside, it's easy to feel as though we are just tossing a pebble in among the rock gardens of established bureaucratic opinion.

Our options, in terms of how we can influence the workings of American politics, have particularly recently, been narrowed down to about one and a half venues. We have the overly vocal Republican right, or a scatterbrained, indecisive, ineffective Democratic Party, that can't seem to tie its shoes in the morning, let alone make any definitive decisions regarding the future of this country.

In an article in last May's New York Times, Robin Toner spoke of the recent attempts made to redefine the platform of the Democratic Party, looking towards the now imminent November Congressional elections, and ultimately, to the 2008 Presidential election. The article is quoted as describing the new aim of the Democratic Party to return to its "New Deal, New Frontier, and Great Society roots." The whole article revolved around how the Democratic Party is finally ready to approach an election with cohesion and optimism, and is willing to respond to the attacks that have effectively turned them into a laughing stock for nearly a decade.

The throw back to Depression-Era politics is an appropriate one. That era marked a historic change in America. Roosevelt was the first real example of a courageous and innovative ruler who wasn't afraid to completely re-center the aim of the legislation at that time. America is again in the throes of a second depression. A depression characterized by political polarization, crisis rhetoric and a chaotic (to say the least) domestic and foreign economy.

We are certainly not facing the kinds of challenges our grandparents' generation suffered; there's no rationing of food, no widespread feeling that we all have to scramble just to get by. It's safe to say we're past that point as a nation, simply as a function of our position as a world power. It would take a disaster almost beyond reckoning to bring the United States to its knees domestically, whatever the state of our foreign relations might be.

Despite this, it's becoming increasingly clear that the aim of this country's ideologies is ready to be redefined. The American people are ready for another option. Much like the administration prior to Roosevelt's, this current administration is not giving us the options we need to change the future of this country.

Beyond a doubt, America has faced crises during the Bush administration, but being ruled under a pretense of fear has exhausted the American public.

Democrats have long been demonized by their opponents as being indistinguishable, indecisive and ineffectual. They are called "wafflers," scoundrels and inappropriately secular while no attempts have been made that have effectively retorted to these allegations. Instead of responding directly to these accusations, Democrats have only been willing to side step them and turn the conversation to something different.

And instead of coming off as maturity or focus, it seems as if they simply do not have a rebuttal. Particularly in the last six years, since September 11th especially, the indecisiveness associated with the left hand of our political system has been crippling. It seems that finally, the Democratic Party is ready to present the American people with a definitive choice, which will enable the direction of this country to be steered away from the conservatism that has been dominating the rhetoric of American politics for so long now.

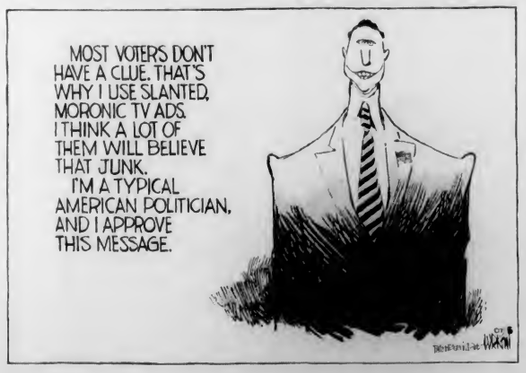
In all honesty, the likelihood of a Democrat winning the next presidential election is probably about as likely as Alaska's caribou rising up to drive oil prospectors out of the tundra. That kind of intense, abrupt shift is next to impossible, given the complexity of our decision-making process. But the Republican right has truly become a characterization of itself, with all the soap-box preaching about gay marriage, flag burning and immigration.

Dick Armey, a former House Majority leader is actually quoted as saying "They're [the Republicans] not doing real work. They're making political statements." This is definitely true of both parties when it comes to elections, but in terms of when they're in office, it's definitely not the most flattering portrayal.

Beyond a doubt, America has faced crises during the Bush administration, but being ruled under a pretense of fear has exhausted the American public. We are a country of 300 million people, all with different opinions, perspectives and needs. This alone lends itself to polarization, and makes remaining socially stable a challenge.

We need a new predominating political ideology – one that will unify and reassure, not one that functions by manipulating our differences and our fears. It seems that those in power have forgotten that through out history, the fearful have been the most prone to discontent.

Katy Bruck is a Collegian columnist



MOST VOTERS DON'T HAVE A CLUE. THAT'S WHY I USE SLANTED, MORONIC TV ADS. I THINK A LOT OF THEM WILL BELIEVE THAT JUNK. I'M A TYPICAL AMERICAN POLITICIAN, AND I APPROVE THIS MESSAGE.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, OCTOBER 2, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Tool shakes the stage

The Tweeter Center comes alive with a darker art

By Morgan-Ann Rousseau
Collegian Staff

Their live performance is an emotional experience that channels our anger, excitement, inspiration and fear. And still, after a five year hiatus, Tool is still known for the exceptional quality of their live performance. On Friday the Tweeter Center in Mansfield welcomed Tool, along with thousands of their patient fans.

Most of the audience went wild with ferocity at the first instance of the band's presence on stage. They started the show with "Stinkfist," one of their comparatively better known songs from the album "Ænema."

The stage wasn't embellished with décor, and neither was the band. Vocalist Maynard James Keenan, who has sported over the top costuming in past shows, replaced black body paint and leather briefs with an orange windbreaker and jeans. Regardless of the simple scenery, Tool still managed to engage the audience in an intense experience fueled by stellar music.

Shortly into "Ænema," aesthetics found their way into the show. Although many venues offer large screens behind the stage, The Tweeter Center offers no such thing – so visual stimulation wasn't too prevalent. But there were a few things to liven up the visual aspect of the show.

Thanks to two tiny screens on each side of the stage, the crowd watched the uniquely unsettling "claymation" film-art done by Tool's guitarist, Adam Jones. Above the crowd tufts of smoke interrupted blue and green laser beams.

Although the band opened with one of their older songs, most of their set consisted of new songs from their album, "10,000 Days."

After "Ænema," they took it down a notch with "The Pot," only to spike everyone's adrenaline again by playing "Forty-Six & 2," followed by "Jambi."

The audience's reaction showed a clear distinction between their old and new songs. Although their new songs were well enjoyed – their old ones were celebrated in the crowd. It was then that hair went flying in chaotic directions, and fists boxed the air.

The middle of their set consisted of the songs, "Schism," "10000 Days," "Rosetta Stone," "Wings for Marie" and "Lost Keys." But the highlight was yet to come.

A good performance knows how to simulate the ultimate performance sex. Tool's set had a deliberate arrangement designed to bring the audience higher and higher with excitement; but just before reaching the peak of satisfaction, they lowered us down to catch our breath. In between longer energetic songs the band soothed their crowd with their usual instrumental breaks, which are similar to what they do on their albums.

"Lateralus" delivered the climax. Anyone who is a fan of any solid musician or band knows what this means – complete satisfaction. A complete release shared by everyone within the radius of the performance.

Next, they played "Vicarious," their first single from "10000 Days." After that Keenan gave the words, "Peace the f*ck out." But as confused fans wanted in angst for something more than the band's departure, the venue filled with the unmistakable grunting chants of "Ænema."

Tool has always done a good job of keeping their music as the center point, and separating themselves from the spotlight. This show was no different as the four band members maintained their exact places on stage, allowing only their music to move.

Their set lasted a mere two hours, which seemed short, but also understandable considering the Tweeter Centers' 11 p.m. curfew.

After the show, like any other Tool performance, there is a feeling of relief and relaxation. Their musical delivery is an emotional and interactive release of many ferocious feelings.

While their music isn't as aggressive as it used to be, it's almost as stimulating. Their new songs are more political, whereas their earlier songs were more emotional, sexually aggressive and philosophical. Though still dark and heavy, their sound is not as hard or "thrashy."

The band has often praised their fans for listening and respecting Tool as artists and listening with their hearts. The fact that the band can take a lengthy break, and still have thousands waiting for them when they come back to the stage says a lot about their fan base's dedication.

The band has withheld the test of time since their first release, "Opiate" (EP) in 1992. Since then the band has released five more albums: "Undertow" (1993), "Ænima" (1996), "Salival" (2000), "Lateralus" (2001), and most recently "10000 Days" (2006).

All four members of the band gave remarkable performances: drummer Danny Carey produces hypnotic percussions, Adam Jones is mesmerizing on electric guitar, while Justin Chancellor delivers magnetic bass lines. And Maynard is a musical poet of exception. If you haven't witnessed him stomping his leather bound boots in the dark corner of a morbidly lit stage, you should.

Some upcoming venues around MA are: Manchester, NH on Oct. 3, Hartford, CT on Oct. 5, East Rutherford, NJ on Oct. 6 and Uniondale, NY on Oct. 7. That will wrap up their U.S. tour, so do your best to check out Tool's show in Hartford, CT this Thursday – only 45 minutes away.

The band has gone on to make four more records since they first released "Opiate" (EP) in 1992. Their present tour is to promote their most recent album, "10,000 Days."

Tool's drummer Danny Carey brings a frenzy of hypnotic percussions to the stage during the band's live performances.

Tool's vocalist and lyricist Maynard James Keenan delivered an astounding performance at Tridas's shows, which featured a mix of old and new songs.

New existential film 'Science of Sleep' proves not so tired

Gael García Bernal plays the role of "Stéphane," a man who tries to take control of his own imagination after the characters of his dreams hold him captive.

"La Science des Rêves," which is the film's Spanish title, is a comedy about fantasy and romance as the main character falls in love with his neighbor and lives most of his life in a dream world.

By Peter Fresman
Collegian Staff

Michel Gondry, together with Jeunet and Caro, represent the French Newer Wave, taking the ideals of their predecessors further by plunging their youthful protagonists deeper into childlike fantasy worlds, either literal or internal. Gondry's "The Science of Sleep," his first narrative feature film sans surrealist screenwriter Charlie Kaufman, feels more like one of his colorful music videos stretched to feature length than his previous works, and more time seems to be devoted to spectacle than plot. It's rife in cinematic cotton candy, and can be best appreciated less than as a film itself than an experiment in the limits of dreamy filmmaking.

Gael García Bernal ("Y tu Mamá También") plays Stéphane, a young and younger-at-heart artist lacking in social skills but eager to learn. His mother lures him back to his childhood home in France, batting him with an offer of a job – which soon proves to be nothing but busywork under the direction of a lecherous boss (Alain Chabat), and not an opportunity for Stéphane to exercise his many artistic talents.

The only upside of Stéphane's return is his meeting Stéphanie (Charlotte Gainsbourg), quite literally the girl next door, who demonstrates to a painfully obvious degree that she is his soulmate, sharing his whimsical tastes and fertile imagination. Realizing this, Stéphane devotes all his time to securing a romantic relationship with her. It's far from an easy task, as he is crippled by shyness and a glaring lack of knowledge of social mores. But the idealistic Stéphane is determined to win her at any cost, even if it means spontaneously proposing marriage or breaking into her apartment to surprise her.

Throughout the film, Stéphane is subjected to interruptions in his everyday life by fantasies of his own design. He dreams of starring in his own television show, filmed by cameras constructed out of cardboard tubes that a elementary school student might build for art class. While awake, he demonstrates a working time machine he invented and is able to suspend giant wads of cotton in the air by playing a note on the piano.

The point at which reality ends and Stéphane's imagination takes over is left ambiguous, and is only made abundantly clear when the fantasy images change into their real-life counterparts as it is made observable by an outsider, in a technique hereby dubbed the Hobbes Principle. Stéphane occasionally lets his imagination get the better of him, such as when he dreams he writes a garbled letter to Stéphanie and shoves it under her door, only to realize later he wasn't dreaming at all.

Gondry is given ample opportunity to show off his flair for visual creativity in "The Science of Sleep." Detailed props and sets are crafted out of materials easily acquired from an arts and crafts shop, with no apparent digital effects. Gondry seems to have challenged himself to realize a believable fantasy world entirely out of props that were ripped out of shoebox dioramas. In an era when even Aardman Animations is turning to the sophisticated offerings of computer software, it's refreshing to see a film made entirely out of toothpicks. "The Science of Sleep" demonstrates that, in this era of cinema, it's the simple effects that stand out.

SCIENCE OF SLEEP

DIRECTED BY MICHAEL GONDRY

WARNER INDEPENDENT PICTURES AND GUAMONT

B+

Up until recently, the dream movie has exclusively been the territory of Davids Lynch and Cronenberg and the like, whose films incorporating the inand subconscious of their protagonists were slightly darker than the fare of Michel Gondry. Gondry takes the plot device and created scenes that mimic the nature and logic of common dreams as Lynch's "Eraserhead" had done with the most morose of nightmares. And like those of "Eraserhead," the dreams in "Science" present the anxieties of the dreamer through a warped, surreal filter. The Hobbes Principle separates reality from fantasy to the approximate extent that the hallucinators identified themselves as such in Cronenberg's "Videodrome." Again, Gondry demonstrates his inventiveness by taking the route paved by his more depravity-inclined predecessors and arriving at a lighter take on the genre.

But this film's contrast to darker sniff of times past is made all the more intriguing due to the similarity of the concrete plots of such previous films to that of "Science." The main character of "The Science of Sleep" is troubled by what could be described as hallucinations, which occasionally hamper his ability to lead a normal life. He is what a psychiatrist would diagnose as psychotic – not a topic easily welcomed in a film which could bill itself as a romantic comedy. Had the screenplay been excised of all its excessive whimsy, and given to David Lynch, he could probably create a film with a tone in keeping with his oeuvre. In one scene Stéphane presents a calendar filled with illustrations of tragedies that occurred in each of the 12 months, such as the TWA flight 800 crash, intended to be a joke, in a summary of the attitude the film takes to subjects usually considered to be anything but comic. And Gondry is certainly not the first French Newer Wave filmmaker to incorporate a serious subject in a lighthearted film: Jeunet's "Amelie" made light of depression and suicide. Watching "The Science of Sleep," it's difficult to take Stéphane's problems as the film intends us to, and not be somewhat disturbed by their less-than-whimsical actual implications.

JBB brings delight to Pearl Street

The band John Brown's Body hit Pearl Street Night Club on Thursday with their jazzy reggae beats.

By Lauren Morisette
Collegian Staff

John Brown's Body rocked Pearl Street Night Club on Thursday. After jamming with Fear Nuttin Band, the fans finally got what they came for.

The small venue filled up quickly as the hours passed by and JBB's entrance grew near. By the time they got on stage the venue was nearly packed.

They finally made their entrance around 10 p.m. and didn't stop until after midnight. Fans got a good two hours of JBB's unique style, and there wasn't a disappointed seat in the house.

Once they started playing the energy level increased dramatically. If fatigue began to catch you during the break between bands, the life of the audience picked you right back up.

As the show flew by, it was hard not to notice there was something different about the band. Even though the sound and songs they played were familiar, except for some new ones they tossed at the audience, there was still something missing.

The current lead vocalist, Elliot Martin, announced that JBB is doing things a little differently these days. Their old-time lead vocalist, Kevin Kinsella, was MIA during their presence in Northampton. Martin explained that he is off doing his own thing at the moment, but that isn't discouraging the band from pressing on.

Martin went on to introduce some new faces for JBB, including the talented horn trio that gives their band the jazzy/blues sound.

Even though they were missing their main man, the band carried themselves wonderfully and put on a great show. Everyone who was able to inch near the stage was bobbing and dancing to their reggae beats. This is a band that knows what their fans want and does everything to give it to them.

At one point a guest entered the stage and stole the spotlight for a hot minute. He seemed to trip over his lyrics, and it was impossible to understand what he was singing about; not to mention he was completely off-beat from the rest of the band. Yet, despite his mediocre cameo, his enthusiasm reached into the crowd and kept them dancing at his fingertips.

If you missed them on Thursday, have no fear because they will be performing another final show on the east coast before heading out to Colorado to continue their tour. They will be playing in Rhode Island this Friday, October 6, at the Tazza October Harvest Festival in Providence at 8 p.m.

If you want to learn more about JBB surf through their Web site at www.johnbrownsbody.com and check them out. You can find out where they're heading, and browse through their personalized merchandise.

Even though Pearl Street Night Club is small, they are hosting a variety of bands and performers that dip into all different kinds of music preferences. To learn about upcoming events at several local venues check out www.ibeg.com; you will find at least one band or artist that fits your style. A typical night at Pearl Street promises a two band line-up and muste until midnight. Check them out, and see what you're missing.

On Thursday the band announced that they're adding new musicians to their group, a horn trio that adds a unique blues edge to their already eclectic sound.

Everyone set to orchestrate Noho

The Everyone Orchestra's show is a spectacle of live delight as their conductor Matt Butler guides the musical ensemble.

By Lauren Morisette
Collegian Staff

On Tuesday, October 3 The Everyone Orchestra is coming to Northampton's Pearl Street Night Club.

The band is what Pearl Street describes as "a revolving cast of stellar musicians whose performances are designed to create space for each performer's musical personality to shine, engage the audience as participants in the jam and to facilitate a massive celebratory coming together."

The band's conductor, Matt Butler, will be leading his cast of "stellar musicians," which include Jon Fishman, Jamie Masefield, Peter Apfelbaum, Asher Fulero, Jamie Janover, Scott Law, Reed Mathis, Julee Avallone plus live painting and special guests.

EVERYONE ORCHESTRA
PEARL STREET
NORTHAMPTON
OCTOBER 3
8:30 P.M.
$14/$17

As most of you know, Jon Fishman is a Phish veteran and is continuing his legacy in this spectacular composition of a band, while Trey Anastasio is finishing up a tour with Phil Lesh and Mike Gordan.

The Rex Foundation speaks highly of the band stating "this collective of ever-changing musicians thrives upon the collaborative and improvisational spirit that is so rich in the jam band scene. Matt Butler, the founder and conductor of Everyone Orchestra, has a passion for the music and a clear vision of his future possibilities. The Everyone Orchestra relies upon creative improvisation and audience participation to make every show as unique and inspirational as possible. For each show, Butler creates a different lineup and conducts a complete concert experience before your eyes, an experience unlike anything you've ever seen."

Old-time idol Ken Kesey states "everyone just wants to be part of the band," while Glide Magazine tells us that "[The Everyone Orchestra] left me feeling both spiritually cleansed and musically fulfilled. These shows were the complete package, and I hope the beauty of these unique events will have the opportunity to grow and spread across the nation."

The performance consists of sound reinforcements, painters, activists, the impact of female persuasion and the audience. The performanee should be quite the spectacle, and participation is highly recommended.

Jambase provides us with an interesting interpretation of their experience by telling us "if there was one defining moment in the 2005 Festival Season for me, it was when (conductor) Janover got his mob of music All-Stars to play stop-and-start-on-a-dime mind games while directing the crowd to assault the stage with random noise. (The band) looked equal parts poised jaguar and kid in a candy store. I've never seen a musician's eyes so riddled with both joy and precision."

Rescue movie tells story of everyday heroes

'The Guardian' a heart gripping film, Costner and Kutcher shine

By Monica Gleberman
Collegian Staff

There are many kinds of heroes in this world. There are the well-known lifesavers we encounter every day: firefighters, policemen, and doctors. Then there are those who work mainly in the shadows, who will risk everything and anything to save total strangers under the most extreme and rare of circumstances. In this category are the Coast Guard's extraordinary, but little-known, Rescue Swimmers.

These are a set of brave men and woman who risk their lives on an every day basis. They possess some inhuman ability to jump out of a helicopter directly into the raging seas and massive storms to rescue those in harms way, no matter what the costs are. These every day heroes have finally found a place on the big screen.

Ashton Kutcher plays the arrogant Coast Guard recruit in Andrew Davis' new film "The Guardian."

Kevin Costner stars in the new action thriller, "The Guardian." The film is directed by Andrew Davis, and written by Ron L. Brinkerhoff. As the leading man, Costner does a great job of bringing the power of the sea to life. He plays Ben Randall, a well-known legend in the U.S. Coast Guard. Costner's character has a sixth sense about rescuing strangers. He is the main man who is always on the frontline of all the missions. However, he faces a terrible tragedy that causes him to fall in a downward spiral, leading him to take a leave of absence from rescuing.

THE GUARDIAN
DIRECTED BY ANDREW DAVIS
TOUCHSTONE
PICTURES
A+

Costner's character heads to a training program that turns young, arrogant recruits into the best and brightest rescue swimmers. In doing so, he fills the program with unconventional techniques and out-of-the-box training methods.

Ashton Kutcher plays an arrogant young wannabe rescuer, Jake Fischer, who is constantly at odds with Costner's character. The two create sparks together, constantly in friction.

"How do you decide who lives or dies?" This seems to be the general theme throughout the movie. Both main characters face this dilemma. Most of the conflict is based on the animosity between Costner's character and Kutcher's, which only exists because of the faith one has in the other. In other respects, it feels as though their conflict has the theme of "old versus young." This movie deals with the younger generations of students that are coming in to take over the older, legendary positions.

"The Guardian" was exceptionally engaging. The film was sold-out opening night facing appalling reviews from various film critics. The chemistry between Costner and Kutcher is hard to overlook. Within minutes of watching some of the action-packed scenes you are cheering for the heroes, hoping they will save the victims. Throughout the movie there were constant jokes to lighten up the mood. Both Kutcher and Costner received many laughs during the movie, as well as, applause from many audience members.

The film is 138 minutes; however, the time seems to fly by. This is one of those movies when it ends you are still shocked and want to sit down and watch more. Once the credits hit the screen, clapping filled the air. Many audience members stayed in their seats after the movie was over, still reeling from this film. I even found myself biting my nails in anticipation of what was going to happen next.

Kevin Costner plays Andrew Davis, a seasoned Coast Guard rescuer turned trainer in the action thriller.

Costner and Kutcher would not have been able to make this film without the supporting actors who make appearances. Melissa Sagemiller, Bonnie Bramlett, Clancy Brown, Sela Ward, Neal McDonough, John Heard, Brian Geraghty, Dale Hill and Shelby Fenner are among the stars who add emotion, team work and partnership to this film. They help to create a real atmosphere that tears into your heart.

To give a few more details; Sagemiller plays Kutcher's better half. Bramlett adds history to the film and shows her long time friendship with Randall, as well as, becoming a support system for him in the movie, and Ward plays Costner's unhappy wife who wants him to quit the rescue team, among the other characters.

This movie is defiantly floating at the top of my list as one of the best movies I have seen so far this year. Kutcher has really stepped up and out of his comfort zone with this movie. He shows his true acting ability and a maturity that is only displayed in true Hollywood stars.

Again, the chemistry between Kutcher and Costner is unmistakable and defiantly makes it worth it for you to see it. It is also nice to see the return of Costner as the hero and loveable character, Randall, which Costner plays so well.

This movie lives by one quote repeatedly said in the film. "When storms shut down entire ports, we go out. When hurricanes ground the U.S. Navy, we go out. When the Holy Lord himself reaches down from heaven and decides to destroy His Good Work with winds that'll rip houses off the ground, we go out. ... If by some miracle, you actually have what it takes to become one of us, you get to look forward to a life of meager pay and the distinct possibility of dying slow, cold, and alone somewhere in the vast sea. You will however, get the chance to save lives."

This is what rescue swimming is all about, and what "The Guardian" conveys. Everyone should go out and see this movie, if for nothing else but to support the U.S. Coast Guard and all the lives they save on a daily basis every single year.

"Results you can feel
... without the side effects."
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Participating provider for HMO's student insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, car insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
Most insurance accepted.
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Minutemen drop two on road

M. SOCCER from page 10

much harder, and that opens you up defensively. We're just not good enough to be able to play that way right now."

Stuber put the Colonials up 1-0 on a penalty kick just two minutes into the game, not making it any easier on a UMass offense that has struggled to score goals as of late. The Minutemen are in a four-way tie for sixth in the conference in goals with only nine on the season.

UMass has now been held scoreless for five consecutive games, but that shouldn't be as much a surprise as its eight goals allowed in two games.

Sophomore goalkeeper Zack Simmons had allowed only one goal in its first seven games. Since then, the Minutemen have gone 0-4-1 with 10 goals allowed and zero goals for.

"We just didn't do some of the things that we've been doing very well," Koch said on both losses over the weekend. "As far as closing down opponents, and making sure that we didn't give them a lot of space and time to play.

"If we don't play well and get results next weekend then it's a huge setback," he added. "If we turn it around and get the job done next weekend then it's just a bump in the road, and we're back in the hunt and in good shape. Now it just puts a lot of pressure on us to get results next weekend."

UMass finishes its five-game road trip next weekend against Dayton and Xavier as it tries to dig itself out of an early A-10 hole.

"I think they're definitely down," Koch said on his team's morale at this point. "You don't like going on the road and losing two games and giving up as many goals as we did. Nobody enjoys that."

Redshirt sophomore defender Chris Brown is second on UMass in minutes played with 1,118. He has started in all 12 games this season.

Minutewomen get roughed up

Junior midfielder Jenny Roehrig has one goal and one assist this season. She has taken the most shots on the team with 29.

INJURIES from page 10

were getting," Rudy said. "This was very physical and it wasn't pleasant. The official apologized after the game for giving out the yellow cards a little late. They play hard, physical, and in your face. No apologies. It was a hard game that was just under violent."

Despite the difficult loss, Rudy believes his team will battle back and be able to use this game as a rallying point for the rest of the A-10 contests.

"You certainly hope so," Rudy said, when asked if the loss could spark a turnaround performance in the upcoming league games.

"These games really define who you are. It's a tough loss since we were at home and playing against a team with a losing record. We'll bounce back."

Rudy wasn't the only one who believed that a game like that could rally the team.

"We definitely should have won that game," Roehrig said. "But we just have to put it behind us. We still have eight games left in the A-10's. If we play like we did against Connecticut, we can beat anyone."

Senior co-captain Nadia Villarroel was positive that this game could be used to motivate the team against conference foe Dayton.

"I absolutely think that will be the case," Villarroel said. "We'll look at the video and see what went wrong and what we were doing right. I don't like making excuses for losing. I hate losing. I think it's the worst feeling in the world. You have to learn from why you lose and make things better. We'll have a day off to rest because we got banged up but we'll get right back to work."

Recent history also shows that the Minutewomen are adept at rebounding from a hard-fought defeat. They lost the season opener against New Hampshire and then managed to rip off six consecutive wins. Following their second loss of the season to Vermont, they were able to take out their frustrations on George Washington.

The Maroon and White will look forward to Friday for its home game against the Flyers. Rudy will be hoping his team responds just as it has the first two times.

UMass splits weekend games at Rudd Field

W. SOCCER from page 10

Patry's fourth goal of the season.

"I thought after that we were going to come out and play a little harder, but it just didn't happen," Patry said.

The score remained tied at one-all until the second half. In the 64th minute, freshman Becky McGuigan served a free kick 50 yards down the field to junior forward Kristin Hextall. She booted it off her shin guard on the fly and punched it into the UMass net.

The Explorers would add an insurance goal with less than 10 minutes remaining in the game. At 80:51 Giordano registered her second tally of the game when she took a pass from Hextall and shot it past the dive of an outstretched Walker.

It was UMass' first conference defeat of the season.

The only thing more painful than the first A-10 loss was the physical play of La Salle – even though UMass coach Jim Rudy and his Minutewomen knew what they were in for. Whether it's from the "cynical" style of play from the Explorers or the mania exhibited by the La Salle parents, meetings between these two squads always makes for a high-emotion doglight.

"It [was] a hard game that's just below violent," Rudy commented. "It's a familiar feeling. It's amplified when you lose to them."

Three yellow cards were distributed to members of the visiting team – Giordano, junior midfielder Kim Lusin and head coach Paul Royal.

The most solemn part of the game was in the 29th minute when junior Tina Rodriguez went down with an injury. While fighting for possession of a ball, I-Rod, as she's known to her teammates, fell to the grass holding her knee. Rudy fears that it may be an ACL injury, but he said he'll wait to hear the results of the MRI test before he jumps to any conclusions.

The MRI is scheduled for today or tomorrow.

The Minutewomen managed to goose-egg the Colonials on Friday. Junior forward Britt Canfield scored the game's only goal in the 14th minute on a breakaway up the middle, ultimately locking away the win.

Canfield expressed relief that she made the goal. Though Rudy says Canfield is the best angles shooter he has ever coached at UMass, she seems to struggle on the seemingly simple one-on-ones up the middle of the field.

UMass outshot George Washington 17-4, taking a lot of the pressure off Walker. While that pleased Rudy, he stressed that if shots are going to be made, then more goals have to be scored.

Freshman forward Sidney Stoll has played in all 10 games for the Minutewomen this year. Her only goal came against BU in August.

Maroon and White places sixth and ninth in Meet of Champions

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts cross country teams ran in New York on Saturday for the 2006 Iona Meet of Champions. The men's team placed sixth out of 22 teams, and the women placed ninth in the 18-team race. Iona College, who hosted the meet, won both the men and women's race.

The Minutemen ran a strong race, placing sixth overall with a team score of 188 points. They arrived with a thin group, traveling to the meet with only 10 runners. Missing from the team were freshmen standouts Ryan DiOrio, Nicolas Naranjo, Daniel Barry. Also out of action was sophomore Kevin Quadrozzi.

"We ran only about half our team," UMass junior Ryan Durkin said. "We were missing a few of the top guys, but we still ended up doing pretty well, we came in 6th out of 22 teams. It wasn't a bad showing. I think we all raced pretty strong but I definitely think there is room for improvement.

"We look at it as a really good stepping stone for this coming week when we race at the New England's," Durkin added.

Next week, the men and women will race in Boston at Franklin Park for the New England Championships.

"This is the first time we all did pretty well," junior Nils Fischer said. "Everyone was relatively in the race."

Fischer led all UMass runners with a 19th place finish (25:28.8). sophomore Jesse Regnier finished 32nd overall (25:42.7). Durkin finished 57th with a time of 26:22.9 and freshman Andrew McCann placed 70th (26:45.2).

"We looked at this weekend as a good chance to go over the course and get a good feel for what is going on, so that later when we get back to the course we will be ready," Durkin said.

Iona College finished first overall with 26 points. The No. 5 Gaels placed four runners in the top six. This is the Gaels' fourth first-place finish in five years at the Meet of Champions. Behind Iona, Brown University finished second with 66 points, Boston College finished third place with 93, and in fourth place was Harvard University (108).

The Minutewomen had a tough time against the top seeded teams, placing ninth with 258 points. Iona placed first with 45 points, followed by Boston College (58), Cornell University (61) and Brown (124) respectively.

Junior Christina Derosa was the first UMass runner to cross the finish line, placing 43rd (22:49.3). Rounding out the UMass runners two through five respectively, Senior Caisle Kierans placed 72nd (23:47.2), freshman Lauren Liuzzo finished 74th (23:47.4), junior Taryn Trapp placed 78th (23:54.7), and junior Amber Sayer finished at 24:05.9.

UMass Coach Julie LaFreniere wanted her two through five runners to stay in a tight pack. The gap between the team's number two runner, Kierans, and the number five runner, Sayer, was 18 seconds.

Junior Amanda Bodette ran her first race of the year after recovering from knee tendonitis. She placed seventh on the team and 105th overall (24:49.4).

Iona crossed the finish line taking places one, two and three. This gave Iona its first ever Meet of Champions victory.

Buckeyes retain No. 1 spot

By Ralph D. Russo
Associated Press

NEW YORK – Ohio State tightened its hold on No. 1.

Coming off another decisive victory over a ranked opponent, the Buckeyes received a season-high 62 first-place votes in The Associated Press Top 25 on Sunday.

Ohio State, No. 1 since the preseason, had 1,622 points in the media poll after beating Iowa 38-17 on Saturday.

With none of the teams in the top 10 losing last week, the first 10 spots in the poll were unchanged. No. 2 was Auburn followed by Southern California, West Virginia, Florida and Michigan at No. 6.

Auburn received one first-place, down one from last week, and West Virginia got two first place votes. USC, which had two first-place votes in last week's Top 25, had none in the latest poll.

Auburn, which escaped with a 24-17 win at South Carolina last Thursday, increased its lead on USC by six points to 28. The Trojans also had a close call on the road, beating Washington State 28-22. Auburn beat Washington State at home 40-14 to open the season.

Texas, LSU, Louisville and Georgia rounded out the top 10.

Two of the Southeastern Conference's four top 10 teams will meet Saturday, when No. 5 Florida hosts No. 9 LSU.

In the USA Today coaches' poll, No. 1 Ohio State was followed by USC at No. 2 and Auburn at No. 3. West Virginia was fourth and Florida fifth.

In the Harris poll, Ohio State, USC and Auburn took the top three spots. Michigan followed at No. 4 and West Virginia and Florida are tied for fifth.

The Harris and coaches' polls are used in the Bowl Championship Series standings, along with computer rankings. The first BCS standings of the season will be released Oct. 15.

Iowa and Virginia Tech were the only ranked teams that lost on Saturday. Their first setbacks of the season sent the Hawkeyes and Hokies tumbling in the poll.

Virginia Tech took the biggest plunge, falling 10 spots to No. 21 after a 38-27 loss at home to Georgia Tech. The victory helped the Yellow Jackets move up six spots to No. 18, their highest ranking since early in the 2005 season.

Iowa dropped six spots to No. 19 after losing at home to the Buckeyes.

Previously unbeaten TCU, which was No. 17 last week and riding a 13-game winning streak that was the nation's longest, fell out of the latest rankings. The Horned Frogs were beaten 31-17 at home by BYU last Thursday night.

The Real Spring Break
Europe
Party abroad with MTV cast this spring break
London & Paris 8 days from $995
Amsterdam & Paris 7 days from $925
Book by October 15 and save $100!
Price includes airfare, hotels, transportation, and much more!
Call 1.800.766.2645 or visit efcollegebreak.com today
BRING A FRIEND, GO FREE college BREAK
efcollegebreak.com
800.766.2645

Williams shines as UM loses in OT easier than she did in the first half, registering no shots.

FIELD HOCKEY from page 10

"I think Sarah Williams played great," Shea said. "She kept us in the game and realistically it should have never got into overtime. She made some big saves up to the last second. She's poised back there and she makes the game simple."

The Orange had a flurry of shots on goal near the end of regulation, including one with just seconds remaining on the clock, but Williams was able to make an impressive sliding kick-save, forcing the game into overtime.

"Syracuse changed to a man-defense in the second half," Shea said. "It took a long time for us to recognize that. We also didn't take the opportunities to penetrate and move the ball forward when we had them. You're never going to create any offense unless you're willing to take the chance to penetrate. We were moving backwards instead of forwards."

Shea doesn't plan on letting her dejected team sulk about this loss.

"It's over and you have to move forward," Shea said. "You have to learn from it and grow from it and be willing to make changes. You can't change what just happened."

Players respond to allegations

Baltimore Orioles shortstop Miguel Tejada is among the players that Jason Grimsley accused of using performance-enhancing drugs.

Roger Clemens calls the report "dangerous and malicious and reckless." Andy Pettitte insists he never took banned drugs. Miguel Tejada says he is being smeared again by scandal.

Some of baseball's biggest stars responded with denials and denunciations Sunday following a Los Angeles Times report in which former pitcher Jason Grimsley accused five players of using performance-enhancing drugs, according to a federal agent's affidavit. The other players cited were Baltimore teammates Brian Roberts and Jay Gibbons.

Grimsley once played with Clemens and Pettitte on the New York Yankees and is now out of baseball. The reliever has admitted using a variety of banned substances and was suspended for 50 games by Major League Baseball.

Clemens and Pettitte, now teammates on the Houston Astros, denied the allegations Sunday.

"I just think it's incredibly dangerous to sit out there and just throw names out there," Clemens said Sunday before the Astros played in Atlanta on the final day of the regular season. "I haven't seen (the report), nor do I need to see it."

"For the people involved it is very dangerous and malicious and reckless on the part of somebody ... to put something out there with somebody else's writing on it," he added.

Clemens said he has been tested "plenty of times" and passed every test.

Pettitte was "stunned" by the report.

"I played with Grimsley for a couple of years in New York and had a great relationship with him," the pitcher said before the Astros' game.

"I've never used any drugs to enhance my performance in baseball. I don't know what else to say except to say it's embarrassing my name would be out there."

In June, federal agents searched Grimsley's home in Arizona after the pitcher admitted using human growth hormone, steroids and amphetamines. Grimsley later was released by the Arizona Diamondbacks.

In a search warrant affidavit signed by IRS Special Agent Jeff Novitzky, the Times reported, he said Grimsley identified other players who had used drugs. Those names were blacked out when the document was released.

"As for Jason Grimsley's affidavit, we have no information regarding how it was obtained or its accuracy," MLB spokesman Richard Levin said Sunday.

All major league players are tested at least twice a year for banned drugs. There is no test for HGH, but it is banned by the sport. Former Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell was hired by MLB to investigate steroids in baseball.

The Times said an unidentified source with access to the document – minus the cross-outs – allowed the newspaper to see it but kept the copy. The Times said a second source, who had identified the other players, provided additional details about the document.

According to the affidavit, the Times said, Grimsley told investigators Clemens and Pettitte "used athletic performance-enhancing drugs."

Houston teammate Lance Berkman said he would be startled to find either of the two pitchers involved, calling the matter "irresponsible" and "unfortunate."

"You just have to be very, very careful when you make accusations like that," he said. "You better be right about it."

The affidavit also alleged Grimsley told federal agents that Roberts, Gibbons and Tejada, all with the Orioles, "took anabolic steroids."

"What can I do? I spent one morning last year with Grimsley," Tejada said Sunday from Boston. "I mean, I already got thrown under the bus with Palmeiro. No, I don't worry about that."

Rafael Palmeiro was suspended last season for using steroids and suggested the positive test may have been the result of a vitamin B-12 shot Tejada gave him. Tejada insisted he did nothing wrong.

Gibbons has said he has passed every test administered by baseball.

"I'm as shocked as anybody else," he said.

Roberts derided the accusations as "ridiculous."

"We've had steroid testing, and I've taken all the tests," he told The (Baltimore) Sun. "There is no point in getting into verbal wars."

Novitzky also was the lead investigator in the Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative probe. Two BALCO officials and Barry Bonds' personal trainer, Greg Anderson, served jail time after guilty pleas in that investigation.

Grimsley has complained to friends, the Times said, that federal agents attributed statements to him that he did not make.

Randy Hendricks, who represents Clemens and Pettitte, told The Associated Press he questions the conduct of the federal agents.

"I've grown weary of having to defend (Clemens) from innuendo and conjecture about every six months for the last several years when he's complied with all of the rules and regulations," Hendricks said. "Andy is just surprised and stunned, and has no knowledge of any such activity."

Atlanta Braves star Chipper Jones called Clemens and Pettitte "iconic figures" and is convinced of their innocence.

Giants manager Felipe Alou was asked how he thinks Clemens will be treated compared to Bonds.

"I've got to say, Rockets are hard to catch," he said. "I was shocked to see those names on television this morning. Some big names. I said, 'Here we go again.'"

—Associated Press

Full speed ahead.
We remove the barriers, so you can accelerate your career. We've created an environment that's conducive to personal and professional growth and success. At Ernst & Young, we're recognized for our inclusive culture that expects everyone to contribute and everyone to grow. Stop just long enough to visit us on campus, or at ey.com/us/careers.
FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2006
NO SPEED LIMIT
Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services
ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

Write for Sports!
CONTACT US AT SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

			3			8	1
	9					7
2	8	4				3
8	4		9			5	2
				3
	3	9			5		6	7
		8				6	7	9
		7					3
	6	3			7

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Speaker's platform
5 La Scala cheer
10 Viguda and Burrows
14 Minuscule
15 Take it easy
16 Take it easy
17 Headliner
18 No later than
19 Bear dad
20 Actress Sara
21 Candidate for cement boots
23 Coffee server
24 Major aluminum producer
26 Chartered
28 Final
33 Faulty
34 Holiday harmonizer
36 Cancun cash
37 Honours or tedors
40 Discontinuity
42 Male offspring
43 Actor Aida
45 Eared seal
47 Mobile
49 Foundry
53 Group of seven
55 Cline of genres
58 Actress Bello
61 Thumbs down on both
62 Black goo
63 Actor Diggs
65 Angler's basket
66 H.H. Munro
67 Shoelaces
68 Damages
69 Grp. with energy
70 Saucy and spirited
71 Shoot from shelter
72 Camp shelter

DOWN
1 Dreary
2 5th-century leader
3 Newton and Asimov
4 Ike neighbor
5 Champagne designation
6 Virgil's rival
7 Choral voice
8 Colorado resort
9 Eurasian primrose
10 Avant-garde French sculptor
11 Pretty ones
12 Coffee choice
13 Insists upon observance of 21 Anwar of Egypt
22 Period
25 Pharmacy abbr.
27 Stereo part: brefly
29 Gaston dandy
30 Actress Mariela
31 Brighten up
32 Conversation starter
35 April forecast
37 Overacts
38 Disaffect
39 John Q. Public, e.g.
41 One of the Champions
44 Loon
46 11th month
48 Female swan
50 Seal for reshipping
51 Norse sea monster
52 Rigorous
54 Support-line employees
56 Land of lefaner
59 Actress Polo
60 Coarse fiber
61 Different
64 NYC hrs.
66 Drunkard

DELANO'S
TRIVIA! TRIVIA! TRIVIA!
TONIGHT TEAM TRIVIA
WIN $$$ & PRIZES
ALSO $2,000 PRIZE POOL!
8PM
PINOCCHIO'S FOOD SPECIALS DURING TRIVIA, MUNCHIES, PIZZA, AND MORE...
"The Heart of downtown Amherst"

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Christ, seven years of college, down the drain."

—John Belushi

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe
SO HOW ARE YOU?
WELL HEAR THIS—
NOT WITH THAT LOOK. YOU'RE PRACTICALLY UNDRESSING ME WITH YOUR EYES!
OH ROMMMM YOU WANNA KNOW HOW I AM NOW THAT YOU DUMPED THAT JERK OF A BOYFRIEND. YOU'VE COME CRAWLING BACK TO OL' PAUL.
SHUT UP. I ASK YOU HOW YOU ARE EVERY TIME I SEE YOU.
RELAX. I'M JUST COMING UP WITH THEORIES AS TO WHY THERE'S A BIG GLOB OF JELLY ON THE SIDE OF YOUR HEAD.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek
I began smoking my first year as a teacher
It gave me something to do at breaktime and I found it relaxing
Now I've retired, but I can't put the habit
Are you asking me to help you quit? Because I'd be thrilled to help
No. I'm asking you to be my smoking buddy. I won't feel guilty for smoking alone

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Check your horoscope tomorrow.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Vegetarians can eat fish today.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Maybe sleeping-in should be stricken from your future.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Take a gamble, skip your pill today.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
The gods want you to make sock puppets.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Plan a roadtrip today with one other person.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
The roar of the lion lives deep in your heart. Go kill something.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You need attention, have a personal pep talk, take a walk.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Stop buying designer goods, you're driving a few people nuts.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Stay away from Leos. Altogether.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Plan your Halloween costume.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Your mom is a Capricorn.

Chicago Pizzaria Yes, We Deliver!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
HOURS
Sun Wed 3pm 2am
Thurs Sat 1pm 3am
(413) 549-6073

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Try out Army ROTC's Minuteman Battalion and join the wave of the new greatest generation. No strings attached! Call 413-545-2321 or www.umass.edu/armyrotc

AUTO FOR SALE

92 Toyota Camry Station Wagon $850 549-9639

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day. Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

EMPLOYMENT

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

Graphic Designer wanted. Undergraduate okay. Only requirements, talent and desire to work 5/10 hours/wk. Interesting Work. Competive pay. Resume and portfolio to bob@buenoysano.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Publish or perish! Need to be writing but aren't? I can help with motivation, discipline, and support. Dr Ange DiBenedetto 549-4145

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2007 Celebration 20th anniversary w/ SunSplash Free Trip on 12 before Nov. 1 Free Meals & Parties, Group Discounts 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

Travel with STS to this year's top 10 Spring Break destinations! Best deals guaranteed! Highest rep commissions, Visit www.ststravel.com or call 1-800-648-4849

ADVERTISE WITH US!

(413) 545-3500 www.dailycollegian.com

ADVERTISE WITH US!

3 WAYS TO ADVERTISE!

TO ADVERTISE WITH THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS:

1.) Call (413) 545-3500 to speak to an experienced advertising representative,

2.) Or visit us at www.dailycollegian.com to submit your classefied online,

3.) Or visit our office in the Campus Center basement!

CONTACT US TODAY AND REACH 15,000 READERS TOMORROW!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS MONDAY

MONDAY, OCTOBER 2, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass gets rocked in A-10 play

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

So much for new beginnings.

The Massachusetts men's soccer team is wishing that the 10 games leading up to conference play actually meant something. After allowing eight goals in their first two Atlantic 10 games over the weekend, the Minutemen now find themselves 0-2 in the much anticipated "second season."

UMass	0
GW	3
UMass	0
La Salle	5

UMass (6-4-2, 0-2 A-10) was shutout by George Washington, 3-0, and La Salle, 5-0, this past weekend, opening A-10 play on a sour note.

"We came down here and needed to get at least a couple of ties, if not a win," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "But we came up with two losses. So I'm not pleased with the results, but we've got to move forward. That's all we can do."

UMass trailed La Salle 1-0 at halftime yesterday, only to let up four more goals in the second half.

"We had a lot of opportunities in the first half [against La Salle]," Koch said. "They were hitting the crossbar and their goalkeeper was making good saves. We're snake bitten right now. We just can't seem to buy one.

"We just have to keep at it, and it's going to come," he added. "If we play like we played in the first half [on Sunday] for 90 minutes in the next two games, I'm sure we'll have a different conversation."

La Salle (5-5-1, 1-1) entered the weekend second in the conference in total points, and is now tied for first in the A-10 in goals with 16.

UMass opened A-10 play against George Washington (4-5-1, 1-1 A-10) on Friday, but was unable to make an early statement to its first conference rival. Thomas Stuber's pair of goals lifted his team to a 3-0 victory.

"We got behind early in the first game on a penalty kick that was unfortunate," Koch said. "And when you're chasing a game, you open up. When you're a goal down, you're trying to score that

See M. SOCCER on page 7

Senior Jason Scudamore has started in five of UMass' 12 games this season. He has taken seven shots (three on goal) in 549 minutes played in 2006.

Minutewomen win, and lose over weekend

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

UMass	1
GW	0
UMass	1
La Salle	3

It was a split weekend for the Massachusetts women's soccer team. In the first two games of a four-game homestand, the Minutewomen (7-4, 1-1 A-10) lost a heartbreaker to the La Salle Explorers (4-7, 1-1 A-10) yesterday by a score of 3-1, despite blanking the George Washington Colonials (7-5, 0-2 A-10) 1-0 on Friday.

Neither rain, nor snow would have prevented UMass from playing its A-10 archrival in near-torrential downpour yesterday.

"[The rainy conditions make it] difficult because the ball is going to skip a little bit more," sophomore forward Vanessa Patry said. "Everything's going to be a little different. It's a little harder to pivot. The entire game changes."

La Salle drew first blood in the 35th minute when sophomore Dana Giordano took a pass from teammate Jenna Guagenti and deposited it into the back of the net.

The Maroon and White, however, only had to wait just over a minute before it issued a counterpunch. After a corner kick by senior Nadia Villarroel, the ball pinballed just feet away from the goal. When a La Salle defender attempted to clear the ball out, Patry threw her body in front of the play in order to disrupt it. The ricochet sailed past La Salle goalkeeper Amy Grant into the top right corner of the net for an unassisted goal. It was

See W. SOCCER on page 7

Syracuse defeats UM in overtime

BY KEVIN DOOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A stunned and silent crowd at Garber Field spoke volumes about the Massachusetts field hockey team's performance on Friday.

For the second time in four games, UMass (3-8) lost in overtime, this time to the Syracuse Orange, 1-0.

The Minutewomen failed to register a shot on goal throughout regulation against the Orange (6-6, 2-1 Big East) and were outshot 15-5 for the game.

In the last three games UMass has scored only four times.

The Minutewomen will have a week to rebound and find their offense as they set to embark on the Atlantic 10 Conference portion of their schedule when the Temple Owls land at Garber Field this Friday.

The Maroon and White were able to sustain more pressure on the Orange in the four minutes of overtime than it did the entire 70 minutes of regulation. The Minutewomen were the aggressors early in overtime, forcing two penalty corners.

UMass	0
Syracuse	1

The crowd almost had a chance to get out of their seats for the first time Friday, but a deflection off the stick of sophomore forward Mary Shea trickled just wide of the net and landed harmlessly out of bounds.

Syracuse senior forward Meg Ryan finally broke the stalemate four minutes into overtime after the Orange picked up a turnover deep in their own zone and advanced the ball down the left side of the field. A short pass from sophomore forward Alison Babbitt went through the top of the striking circle and was unable to be intercepted by any UMass defender. Ryan took the ball and fired a shot past freshman goalkeeper Sarah Williams, securing heartbreak for the Minutewomen.

"I think the defense probably broke down," junior backfielder Paula Verma said. "Overtime is really tough and everyone is really tired. People just stop communicating."

Needless to say, UMass coach Patty Shea has seen better performances from her team.

"I'm disappointed and upset we can't come out and play a game," Shea said. "We can't come out and give our best effort. I think that's unacceptable. We need to be able to make changes throughout the game and if we don't have key people willing to make those changes we won't be successful."

Fans watching from the endlines must have been scratching their heads wondering if they had shown up to a field hockey game in the first half.

The first 35 minutes resembled more of a chess match than a field hockey game, as much of the play was concentrated at midfield in an attempt to set up anything remotely close to a scoring opportunity.

Syracuse had their only scoring chance of the first half when Babbitt stole the ball deep in the UMass zone, but Williams came out of the net to make a sliding save.

UMass outshot the Orange 3-1 going into halftime.

It was more of the same in the second half as UMass was even more lost as to where the goal cage was than it was in the first half.

Syracuse had eight shots on net in the second half, all handled by Williams, while the Minutewomen allowed Syracuse's goalie to have it even

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 8

Junior Erin O'Brien ranks third on UMass in points with six. Her three goals on the year is second amongst Minutewomen.

Physical play from La Salle causes injuries

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This weekend's pair of games for the Massachusetts women's soccer team brought mixed results and emotions, as well as a few bumps and bruises.

The Minutewomen began their Atlantic 10 schedule on the right foot with their 1-0 victory over George Washington at Rudd Field on Friday afternoon. Despite having numerous scoring opportunities, UMass was only able to break through once. However, the fifth goal of the season for junior forward and leading scorer Britt Canfield was all that it needed to beat the Colonials.

"It felt great to get the game-winner against George Washington," Canfield said. "They were all over my back the entire game, pushing me down. They claimed they weren't but it's nice to get the win."

The physical play that Canfield had to deal with against George Washington was nothing compared to what La Salle brought to Rudd Field on Sunday. The rough, physical style of play exhibited by the Explorers led to a possible season-ending knee injury, a few stitches, three yellow cards and a 3-1 La Salle victory.

Early on in the first half, UMass junior defender Tina Rodriguez went down hard after making a cut. The hard rain never let up during the entire contest, and the conditions were conducive to slipping. The severity of her injury is not yet known, but UMass coach Jim Rudy was visibly concerned.

"I missed it," Rudy said. "But I could hear the yell. Anytime you see someone go down and nobody else is around it's usually the knee. [Losing Rodriguez] is emotionally a big loss. I thought we dealt with it fairly well but it did loosen up the back."

Rodriguez wasn't the only player to get banged up for the Maroon and White. Junior defender Christina Nunes got elbowed in the face, and blood was visible on her jersey. She will need a few stitches.

Junior midfielder Jenny Roehrig, freshman forward Sydney Stoll and Canfield were also all victims to the physical play.

"We knew coming in what we

See INJURIES on page 7

Sophomore forward Vanessa Patry is second on UMass in points with 10. She has four goals and two assists this season.

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

23-year-old Joe Mauer became the first catcher to win the American League batting title on Sunday night. His .347 batting average also made him the youngest batting champ since Alex Rodriguez won the award with a .358 average in 1996 at the age of 21.

Williams' future bright in Maroon and White

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts field hockey team fell to the Syracuse Orange in overtime Friday afternoon by a score of 1-0. The Minutewomen were simply dominated by a stronger, more prepared Syracuse team.

The fact the game even needed an extra session to be decided is a testament to the stellar play of freshman goalkeeper Sarah Williams, who was making just her third career start.

"She [Williams] kept us in the game," UMass coach Patty Shea said. "Realistically, it probably never should have even gone to overtime."

The Minutewomen defense was great in the game's first period, holding a talented Syracuse bunch to one shot. However, as the game moved on and the Syracuse offense made adjustments, the Minutewomen slowed and looked lazy at times, allowing Syracuse players to walk in for open shots.

Sophomore forward Katelyn Orlando has four points on one goal and two assists. She has started in all 11 games for the Minutewomen.

The Orange's best opportunity came as Syracuse forward Alison Babbitt broke in alone on Williams who, in a very bold move, slid at Babbitt, forcing a bad shot and an easy save.

Shea praised Williams' field hockey I.Q. after the game.

"She's not the quickest out there," Shea said. "But she makes the game simple and she knows what she needs to do to keep the ball out of the net."

The defensive lapses brought out the best in Williams as she brushed each attempt on goal aside and did all she could to prevent second chances, corralling any and every rebound near the cage. The freshman made 13 saves in the second half.

With time winding down, the Minutewomen yielded two late corners to Syracuse. The Orange made great attempts on goal both times, but once again, Williams kept the game scoreless.

The second of these corners came with just 45 seconds remaining in the game. The pressure was nothing for Williams, who has rarely displayed her inexperience since arriving in Amherst.

"She's [Williams] poised back there and she was calm during some situations that probably could have cost us the game a little sooner," Shea said. "She has a great presence within the goal."

The goal, scored four minutes into overtime, can be blamed almost entirely on the UMass backfield. A miscommunication led to a turnover and Orange forward Meg Ryan walked in alone and lifted the ball over Williams for the score.

Of course the loss is hard to swallow for Williams after such a remarkable individual performance. However, after the game there was anything but a sense of frustration on the mind of the young netminder who isn't growing complacent and hopes to mature as a player.

"I think I played fairly well today," Williams said. "But there's always something that I can keep learning. I come to practice everyday asking questions wanting to learn more. That's why I'm here, I want to play."

And if Williams continues to perform as she has, she will certainly be seeing plenty of playing time. However, she wanted to make it clear that junior goalkeeper Becky Letourneau has remained supportive and will continue to act as a mentor to the talented rookie.

"Becky, of course, is always supportive and always will be," Williams said. "We're both supportive of each other and we want to each get better to make the other person better."

The mutual respect and support the two share for one another will only work to the overall betterment of the team.

The experience gained by Williams this season is invaluable to such a young player. And if she is playing this well so early in her developmental process, one can only wonder what the pinnacle of her career will bring.

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SCATTERED T-STORMS : HI: 77 LO: 56 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 2006

UNH PUT TO THE TEST PAGE 10

Beat Streuli
STREULI EXHIBIT COMES TO UMASS PAGE 5

UMass professor wins Nobel Prize

Nobel Prize recipient Craig C. Mello holds his daughter, Victoria, 6, beside wife Edith following a press conference in Boston, Massachusetts.

Nobel Prize recipient Craig C. Mello waits on a congratulatory call from U.S. Senator Edward M. Kennedy in Boston, Massachusetts.

BY MATT BELLIVEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Nobel Assembly at Karolinska Institutet awarded the Nobel Prize for medicine to two U.S. researchers, including a medical professor from the University of Massachusetts, for their work towards finding a mechanism that regulates the flow of genetic information in plants, animals, and humans.

Andrew Fire and Craig Mello, who were given the award Monday, "have discovered a fundamental mechanism," the Stockholm-based Nobel Foundation said in a statement on its Web site yesterday. The discovery, called RNA interference, "is already being widely used in basic science as a method to study the function of genes and it may lead to novel therapies."

The duo was awarded the prize eight years after the researchers' work was published in the scientific journal "Nature."

Mello is a professor at the University of Massachusetts Medical School in Worcester, Massachusetts.

Fire, born in 1959, is a professor of pathology and genetics at Stanford University's School of Medicine.

Fire and Mello will share this year's $1.37 million award. Annual prizes for achievements in physics, chemistry, medicine, peace, and literature were established in the will of Alfred Nobel, the Swedish inventor of dynamite, who died in 1896.

The scientists studied worms to find out more about what researchers often regard as DNA's little sister, a substance called RNA. Organisms use information encoded by DNA to build substances called proteins, which are central to processes such as digesting food or helping the body defend itself against bacteria. RNA is a copy of DNA used to transport this data.

The researchers found that a certain kind of RNA will block the formation of a given protein. In recent research, for example, RNA was used to block a gene that was responsible for high cholesterol levels in animals' blood.

The Nobel Foundation was created in 1900 and the prizes were first handed out the following year. The economics prize was created in 1969 in memory of Nobel by the Swedish central bank. Only the peace prize is awarded outside Sweden, by the five-member Norwegian Nobel Committee in Oslo.

Massachusetts Sen. Edward M. Kennedy publicly congratulated Mello in a press conference held in Worcester yesterday.

"Dr. Mello's brilliant work has opened up extraordinary opportunities for the discovery of new therapies for cancer, infectious disease, heart disease, and many other serious illnesses," said Kennedy. "I also commend UMass President Jack Wilson and Dean Aaron Lazare of the medical school for their leadership. Massachusetts is leading the way in this new century of the life sciences, and today's announcement is recognition of our leadership."

Mello joins UMass astronomy professor Joseph Taylor Jr. and alumnus Russell Hulse, who both won a Nobel Prize in 1993 for finding evidence of

See NOBEL on page 2

Gunman kills three girls in Amish schoolhouse shooting

Members of an Amish community gather near the scene of a schoolhouse shooting in rural Lancaster, Penn., where a man opened fire on a dozen girls, leaving three dead Oct. 2, 2006.

BY MARK SCOLFORO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NICKEL MINES, Pa. — A milk-truck driver carrying two guns and some kind of grudge stormed a one-room Amish schoolhouse Monday, sent the boys and adults outside, barricaded the doors with two-by-fours, and then opened fire on a dozen girls, killing three of them before committing suicide.

It was the nation's third deadly school shooting in less than a week, and it sent shock waves through Lancaster County's bucolic Amish country, a picturesque landscape of horse-drawn buggies, green pastures, and neat-as-a-pin farms, where violent crime is virtually nonexistent.

Seven other victims were taken to hospitals. Most were badly wounded; most had been shot, execution-style, at point-blank range, after being lined up along the chalkboard, their feet bound with wire and plastic ties, authorities said.

The attack bore similarities to a deadly school shooting last week in Bailey, Colo., and authorities there raised the possibility that the Pennsylvania attack was a copycat crime.

The gunman, Charles Carl Roberts IV, a 31-year-old truck driver from the nearby town of Bart, was bent on killing young girls as a way of "acting out in revenge for something that happened 20 years ago," State Police Commissioner Jeffrey B. Miller said. Miller gave no details on what the grudge was.

Roberts was not Amish and apparently had no particular grudge against the Amish community, Miller said. Instead, Miller said, he apparently picked the school because it was close by, there were girls there, and it had little or no security.

Roberts had left several rambling notes to his wife and three children that Miller said were "along the lines of suicide notes." He also called his wife during the siege by cell phone to tell her he was getting even for a long-ago offense, according to Miller.

As rescue workers and investigators tromped over the surrounding farmland, looking for evidence around this tiny village about 55 miles west of Philadelphia, dozens of people in traditional plain Amish clothing watched — the men in light-colored shirts, dark pants, and broad-brimmed straw farmer's hats, the women in bonnets and long dark dresses.

The victims were members of the Old Order Amish. Lancaster County is home to some 20,000 Old Order Amish, who eschew automobiles, electricity, computers, fancy clothes and most other modern conveniences, live among their own people, and typically speak a German dialect known as Pennsylvania Dutch.

The shooting took place at the one-room West Nickel Mines Amish School, a neat white building set amid green fields, with a square white horse fence around the schoolyard. The school had about 25 to 30 students, ages 6 to 13.

According to investigators, Roberts dropped his children off at the school bus stop, then pulled up at the Amish school in his truck and walked in around 10 a.m. with a shotgun, an automatic handgun, and several pieces of lumber. He released about 15 boys, a pregnant woman and three women with babies, Miller said.

He barred the doors with two-by-fours and two-by-sixes, made the remaining girls line up along a blackboard, and tied their feet together with wire ties and flexible plastic ties, Miller said.

A teacher called police around 10:30 a.m. and reported that a gunman was holding students hostage.

Roberts apparently called his wife around 11 a.m., saying he was taking revenge for an old grudge, Miller said. Moments later, Roberts told a dispatcher he would open fire on the children if police didn't back away from the building. Within seconds, troopers heard gunfire. When they got inside, they found his body.

The names and ages of the dead were not immediately released.

Three girls — 13, 8, and 6 — were in critical condition at the Penn State Children's Hospital in Hershey. The rest of the wounded were taken to other hospitals in Pennsylvania and Delaware; their condition was not immediately disclosed.

No one answered the door at

See AMISH on page 2

UMass generates $4 billion in economic activity annually

BY ANNA DOLIANITIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts, in collaboration with its satellite campuses in Boston, Lowell, Dartmouth, and the medical school in Worcester, generates $4 billion in economic activity annually, making it one of Massachusetts' strongest economic promoters, according to a report released Wednesday.

The report, entitled, "UMass: A Strategic Investment: A Critical Asset for the Commonwealth's Economic Future," was released by the UMass Donahue Institute, one of the leading research facilities in Massachusetts.

The study, conducted by Michael Goodman, the director of economic policy and analysis at the institute, aimed to measure the University's impact on the state economy, according to Paul Jean of the UMass President's office.

Each dollar of state support the University receives allows the University to generate more than eight dollars in economic activity, according to a press release from the UMass News Office.

"When you spend money, that creates other economic impacts," Jean said. "If I spend money, that puts money in other people's pockets and it generates economic activity throughout the economy."

UMass spends approximately $2 billion each year, and receives a quarter of that money from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. The rest of the funding comes from tuition and fees, research grants, and various other sources that account for the rest of the $2 billion total, according to Jean.

The funding from the state totals $524 million of the university system's total operating budget, and stimulates $4.3 billion in economic activity.

Translated into employment terms, 90 private sector jobs are generated for every 100 UMass jobs.

"If UMass were a private or commercial company, it would not only be a globally competitive firm but one of the state's largest drivers of economic growth," reads the report.

UMass is a $2 billion enterprise with 15,000 employees, generating $377 million in research and development investments.

"UMass is the only higher education institution that touches every corner of the state," said Jack Wilson, president of UMass. "Our initiatives are driving the innovation, educating the talent, and creating the jobs the Commonwealth needs for a bright and successful economic future."

In the last three years, UMass "has leveraged state matching grants to win national competitions to locate three national research centers, including a cutting-edge $40 million atmospheric sensing center at Amherst, a $16 million nanotechnology center at Amherst, and a $12 million nanotechnology center in Lowell," according to the press release.

"What the University is trying to do is to measure their impact on the Massachusetts economy," said Jean. "And that's why this report was done. And it's really the first time they've captured all of the ways in which they impact the economy directly."

New Facebook feature creates controversy among students

BY ALEKS CHERESNICHENKO
ONE DAILY BAROMETER (OREGON STATE U.)

CORVALLIS, Ore. — On Sept. 5, founder and CEO of Facebook.com, Mark Zuckerberg, announced the launch of a new feature for the popular networking Web site dubbed the "news feed."

The "news feed" or "mini feed" features present information about members on the site's front page that users previously would have had to search for on their own.

An array of information makes it to the feed: profile comments, relationship status, which groups members have just joined and upcoming events, to name a few.

The new feature upset many members of Facebook.

At one point in the heat of the controversy, there were 745,000 members in the "Students against Facebook newsfeed" (the official student petition) group, a report on Time.com noted.

The group's founder, Ben Parr, drafted a petition stating what he called the malice which the "news feed" has sparked, in addition to directly asking Facebook's creator Zuckerberg to remove the feature.

Keith Blair, an Oregon State University student in civil engineering, was stunned by the amount of information that the feed provides.

"I don't want my friends to have access to all of my information," Blair said.

Since the initial wave of criticism, Facebook has changed what information the feed provides and who can access it.

As stated in the official Facebook blog posted by Carolyn Abram, students may now edit the privacy level of the feed, allowing the owner to control information being shared.

The feed does not provide any information that is not accessible by viewing a student's profile. But the controversy over the feature arose because personal information was pre-packaged and readily available for viewing.

Adrienne Stroubb, a Bliss Hall RA, was bothered by the fact that she could "see everything her friends were doing online."

As of Sept. 7, Facebook has cranked up its privacy settings, but the company has no plans to permanently pull the feature off its site.

After noting the creation of many groups and many Facebook messages, Zuckerberg wrote a blog on Sept. 8 admitting having made a mistake.

"We really messed this one up. When we launched News Feed and Mini-Feed we were trying to provide you with a stream of information about your social world," wrote Zuckerberg. "Instead, we did a bad job of explaining what the new features were and an even worse job of giving you control of them. I'd like to try to correct those errors now."

Zuckerberg admits to not properly controlling the privacy settings. He said he believes in helping people share information with the people they want to through the Internet.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 21

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherri Wilbur
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jamieson Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Virginia Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Sean Duram
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaLiane
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellveau
SPORTS EDITOR Rob Greenfield
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Theresa Barba
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Sneiker
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna DeBiasitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boomgaaksaal
ASSISTANT SPORTS Danny Picard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jon Pelland
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Tom Trunk

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC YEARS, EXCEPTION DURING FINALS. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED AND OPERATED BY STUDENTS. FOUNDED AS THE MASSACHUSETTS AGGIE LIFE IN 1890, THE COLLEGIAN CHANGED ITS NAME TO THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN IN 1934 AND TO THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED SINCE 1890, THE COLLEGIAN IS NOW ENTIRELY STUDENT-RUN AND OPERATED. ALL ARTICLES WITHIN BOTH ARE COPYRIGHTED.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Ginny Nielsen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sean Duram, Matt Bellveau

Iraqi prime minister announces plan to end sectarian violence

Iraqi women look at the U.S. soldiers from Alfa company 1-17 battalion of the 172th Stryker brigade combat team in eastern Baghdad, Oct. 2, 2006.

By Qassim Abdul-Zahra
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Iraq's prime minister on Monday announced a new plan aimed at uniting the sharply divided Shiite and Sunni parties in his government behind efforts to stop rampant sectarian violence.

Tensions were heightened Monday when gunmen seized 14 employees from computer stores in downtown Baghdad in the second mass kidnapping in as many days. Parliament also extended Iraq's state of emergency for a month.

Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki emerged with the four-point plan after talks with the top Sunni and Shiite leaders in his government, trying to prevent a crisis over rising tensions between the two Islamic sects.

Under the plan, local commissions will be formed in each district of Baghdad, made up of representatives of each party, to oversee security forces' efforts against violence, al-Maliki said. A central committee comprising all the parties will coordinate with the armed forces, he said.

A media committee also will be formed, and the progress of the plan will be reviewed monthly, al-Maliki said.

"We have taken the decision to end sectarian hatred once and for all," al-Maliki told reporters. "We have vowed before almighty God to stop the bloodshed."

Al-Maliki announced a 24-point reconciliation plan when he took office in May, which laid down ways to tackle violence on the ground — including an amnesty for militants who put down their weapons as well as security crackdowns. So far, the plan has done little to stem the bloodshed, with thousands killed in the months since.

Monday's plan, in contrast, was aimed at reassuring both Sunnis and Shiites in his government that their concerns were being addressed in the push against sectarian violence by keeping an eye on security forces at a local level.

The deepening mistrust between the two sides is threatening efforts to stop the bloodshed and the stability of al-Maliki's government.

Sunnis accuse the Shiite-led security forces of turning a blind eye to killing of Sunnis by Shiite militias — some of which are lined to parties in the government.

Shiite politicians, meanwhile, accused Sunni parties of links to terrorists after a bodyguard of a top Sunni party leader, Adnan al-Dulaimi, was arrested by U.S. forces on Friday and accused of plotting al-Qaida bombings.

Tensions were raised by the arrest and by two mass kidnappings in as many days in the Iraqi capital, which Sunni politicians blamed on Shiite militias.

At midday Monday, gunmen in military-style uniforms pulled up to computer shops outside the

See IRAQ on page 3

Pennsylvania community rebuilds after school shooting

AMISH from page 1

Roberts' small, one-story home on Tuesday afternoon. Children's toys were strewn on the porch and in the yard.

The shootings were disturbingly similar to an attack last week at Platte Canyon High School in Bailey, Colo., where a man singled out several girls as hostages in a school classroom and then killed one of them before killing himself. Authorities said the man in Colorado sexually molested the girls.

"If this is some kind of a copycat, it's horrible and of concern to everybody, all law enforcement," said Monte Gore, undersheriff of Park County, Colo. "On behalf of Park County and our citizens and our sheriff's office, our hearts go out to that school and the community."

On Friday, a school principal was shot to death in Cazenovia, Wis.

A 15-year-old student, described as upset over a reprimand, was charged with murder.

The Pennsylvania attack was the deadliest school shooting since a teenager went on a rampage last year on an Indian reservation in Red Lake, Minn., killing 10 people in all, including five students, a teacher, a security guard and himself.

Nationwide, the 1999 Columbine High School massacre in Littleton, Colo., remains the deadliest school shooting, with 15 dead, including the two teenage gunmen.

In Pennsylvania's insular Amish country, the outer world has intruded on occasion. In 1999, two Amish men were sent to jail for buying cocaine from a motorcycle gang and selling it to young people in their community.

There were four murders in Lancaster County in 2005, including the killings of a non-Amish couple, who were shot to death in their Lititz home in November by their daughter's 18-year-old boyfriend.

Kenneth Trump, president of the National School Safety and Security Services consulting firm in Cleveland, said the Colorado and Pennsylvania crimes underscore the lesson that no school is automatically safe from an attack.

"These incidents can happen to a one-classroom schoolhouse to a large urban school," he said. "The only thing that scares me more than an armed intruder in a school is school and safety officials who believe it can't happen here."

He said that belief is often stronger in rural, suburban, and private schools.

"When you go to rural and private schools, the first obstacle you run into is the 'It can't happen here' mentality," he said. "People have the perception of we're not like whatever big city they're near."

Russia sanctions Georgia

Russia imposed sanctions on Georgia yesterday, even after Georgia released four Russian officers arrested on spying charges, aiming to hinder Georgia's economic stability.

By Misha Dzhindzhikashvili
Associated Press

TBILISI, Georgia — Georgia released four Russian officers whose arrest on spying charges has angered its giant northern neighbor, but a vengeful Russia pushed ahead Monday with punitive sanctions aimed at dealing a painful blow to the economically struggling Caucasus nation.

The tension reflected Moscow's difficult relations with Georgia, which has defied President Vladimir Putin with a pro-Western stance, hosts unwanted Russian troops on its soil, and is facing two Russian-backed separatist movements that could flare up in new violence.

Georgia's agreement to release the men — even as it reaffirmed the spying allegations against them — appeared to be a capitulation that underscored its vulnerability. To many Russians, however, the very fact that the former Soviet republic dared detain the men was an affront to Moscow's prestige and its ability to project power and influence across an area many Russians still call "the near abroad."

The questions now on the table are how long the sanctions will last, whether Russia will go ahead with plans to withdraw its military presence in Georgia by 2008, and whether the crisis can be ended without new violence in the separatist regions of South Ossetia and Abkhazia. The two regions have run their own affairs without international recognition since the early 1990s.

Russia has granted its citizenship to many residents of the rebel provinces, which have enjoyed de facto independence since breaking away from Georgia in bloody wars the early 1990s. Separatist leaders have regularly traveled to Russia for meetings with top officials.

The Kremlin's willingness and ability to provide strong backing for Georgia's breakaway regions is watched closely elsewhere in the former Soviet Union. The Soviet collapse left a kaleidoscope of ethnic groups clamoring for autonomy, independence, or greater links to Russia.

"We won't forgive those who spit at us," Russian parliament's upper house speaker Sergei Mironov said.

Infuriated by Wednesday's arrests, Russia has put its troops in Georgia on high alert, recalled its ambassador and evacuated its citizens. And even though Georgian officials announced early Monday that the officers would be handed over to the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe and sent home, Russia's transport and communications ministries declared that all air, road, rail sea, and postal links with Georgia would be suspended starting Tuesday.

Visiting Belgian foreign Minister Karel De Gucht, who holds the rotating OSCE chairmanship, urged Russia to respond to the officers' release by restoring transport and postal links.

But in a potentially even more crippling blow, Russian lawmakers scheduled debate this week on a bill that could bar Georgians living in Russia from cabling money home. Russian officials say about 300,000 Georgians live in Russia; some estimates put the number far higher — at about 1 million of Georgia's 4.4 million population.

Russia's lower house speaker, Boris Gryzlov, said Monday that Georgians living in Russia send home an estimated $1 billion a year. In June, Putin put the amount at $1.5 billion to $2 billion annually — an amount comparable to Georgia's state budget.

Monday's sanctions follow a government session at which Putin denounced the arrests as "state terrorism involving hostage-taking" and ordered top Cabinet members to draw up retaliatory measures. "These people think that under the roof of their foreign sponsors they can feel comfortable and secure. Is it really so?" Putin questioned ominously.

Russia's chilly relations with Georgia have worsened steadily since President Mikhail Saakashvili came to power following Georgia's 2003 Rose Revolution, vowing to take the country out of Russia's orbit, bring breakaway provinces back into fold, and join NATO in 2008.

Saakashvili's course angered Moscow, which has warily watched the U.S. expansion into what it considered its home turf.

President Bush telephoned Putin on Monday and the two leaders spoke for 17 minutes about the situations in both Georgia and Iran, the White House said.

The Kremlin said Putin underlined "the unacceptability and danger of any actions by third nations that could be interpreted by the Georgian leadership as an encouragement of its destructive policy" — an apparent reference to U.S. support for Saakashvili's government.

Russia last week tried to exert international pressure on Georgia by proposing a U.N. Security Council statement expressing grave concern at Tbilisi's actions. But the United States balked — adding to Russian suspicions that it was behind the latest tensions.

Despite the tensions, Putin said Russia would stick to a deal signed last year to withdraw its troops from Georgia by the end of 2008. Along with some 2,500 peacekeepers in Abkhazia and South Ossetia, Russia has 3,000-4,000 troops at two military bases in Georgia.

Saakashvili said Monday that his nation was handing over the four detained Russians to the OSCE to be flown home even though Georgia has a strong case against them. "It's a very solid case of espionage, subversion and trying to destabilize my country," he told reporters.

Mass. leads world-class research

NOBEL from page 1

the elusive waves in the pulsing of two circling neutron stars, as current prize holders at the University.

Monday morning's announcement opened this year's series of prize announcements. It will be followed by Nobel prizes for physics, chemistry, literature, peace, and economics.

"It's vital that we keep our investment in medical research strong. It is leading not only to breakthroughs in basic sciences, but to a dynamic biotechnology sector as well," said Kennedy.

"Today's announcement is eminently well-deserved recognition of the extraordinary role of UMass in medicine and research," he said. "People across the nation and around the world will now know what we have long realized that world-class research doesn't stop when you leave Cambridge or Boston. Our entire Commonwealth is leading the way."

Dr. Andrew Fire from Stanford University School of Medicine won the Nobel Prize along with Craig C. Mello, Oct. 2, 2006.

The Real Spring Break

Europe

Party abroad with MTV cast this spring break

London & Paris 8 days from $995
Amsterdam & Paris 7 days from $925

Book by October 15 and save $100!
Price includes airfare, hotels, transportation, and much more!

Call 1.800.766.2645 or visit efcollegebreak.com today

BRING 8 FRIENDS, GO FREE

college BREAK
efcollegebreak.com
800.766.2645

Bodies of seven factory workers found in Sunni neighborhood

U.S. Army Gen. Bantz J. Craddock, Commander of the U.S. Southern Command, listens during the VII Conference of Defense Ministers of the Americas, Monday, Oct. 2, 2006.

IRAQ from page 2

Technical University in central Baghdad, forced 14 employees into their sport utility vehicles and drove off, police said.

Gunmen also kidnapped 24 workers Sunday evening at a frozen food factory in Baghdad, shooting two others who refused to climb into a refrigerated truck with their fellow captives.

Seven bodies were later found in the predominantly Sunni neighborhood of Dora and identified as workers from the factory, police said. The fate of the remaining captives was not known. In similar mass kidnappings in the past, militants have sorted their captives by sect to kill members of the opposing faith.

Lawmakers from the Iraqi Islamic Party, a major Sunni political group, said the kidnapped workers were all members of the minority sect and called on the government to take action.

"It is the time that the government takes serious and urgent steps to disband these criminal organizations and to save the people from their harm," they said in a statement.

The lawmakers suggested security forces' collusion in the abduction, asking how the kidnappers moved the bodies and their captives from the factory in western Baghdad to Dora "passing large number of checkpoints and intensified patrols by Iraqi and American forces."

The joint local committees announced by al-Maliki aim to resolve such disputes by giving every party a chance to observe how security forces are acting on a neighborhood by neighborhood level. A Sunni representative, for example, could raise a complaint if he feels police are not pursuing a Shiite militia after an attack.

"We will spare no efforts to succeed in this great initiative which we agreed on today to stop the violence and killings in Baghdad and in all Iraq," al-Dulaimi said at the press conference with the Shiite prime minister. The two of them signed an agreement with other Sunni and Shiite politicians on the plan.

At least 20 other people were killed in attacks around the country, including a noontime bomb blast in Baghdad's downtown Al-Nasir Square that killed four and wounded 13, and mortar barrages against two Sunni neighborhoods that killed two people and wounded dozens.

The U.S. command said three U.S. Marines died in Iraq's western Anbar province on Saturday — two in combat and the third in a vehicle accident. With their deaths, at least 73 American service members died in Iraq in September — making it the second deadliest month this year, after April when at least 76 died.

One British soldier was killed and another injured in a mortar attack on their headquarters in the southern city of Basra. One shell hit a nearby house, killing two children.

The political divisions were on display in parliament Monday when lawmakers renewed for another month the state of emergency that has been in effect since November 2004. The measure grants the government wide powers to impose curfews and carry out arrests without warrants.

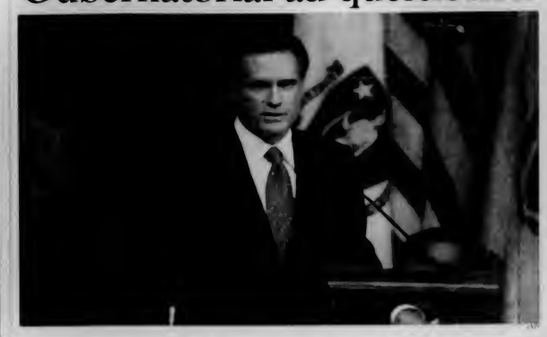
But Sunni lawmakers accused the Shiite-led security forces of abusing the powers. "The security forces contain corrupted elements who mistake the law," Saleem Abdullah, of the Sunni Accordance Front, argued. "Many security systems are not eligible now to apply such exceptional laws."

A curfew slapped on Baghdad on Saturday in the wake of the arrest of al-Dulaimi's bodyguard brought a day of calm.

But as soon as it was lifted, violence exploded again. More than 50 bodies — most bound and many of them showing signs of torture — were found in Baghdad alone on Sunday, apparent victims of sectarian killings, police said.

The bodies of two more people were found later Monday in eastern Baghdad, police said. They had been shot, their arms and legs bound, and showed signs of torture.

Gubernatorial ad questioned



A recent political advertisement, showing Romney working with Healey by his side, has raised questions about whether the ad is designed to aid Healey or to promote Romney's potential 2008 presidential campaign.

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON — The latest political ad to pop this campaign season features the smiling face of a politician who isn't even running for office — Gov. Mitt Romney.

The ad, paid for by the Romney-led Republican Governor's Association, shows him crafting balanced budgets, producing billion-dollar surpluses, and signing the state's landmark health care bill into law — all with Lt. Gov. Kerry Healey at his side.

It's also raising questions about whom the ad is designed to help more — Healey, the Republican candidate for governor, or Romney, who is weighing a run for president.

The ad refers to the "Romney-Healey administration." Healey is seen at Romney's side during much of the ad, except for a few seconds at the end where she is shown smiling and talking with students.

It began airing a day after a Boston Globe poll was released showing that about 48 percent of voters said Healey's role as Romney's lieutenant governor would make them less likely to vote for her while only 25 percent said it would make them more likely to back her.

"What is problematic for Kerry Healey is the poor numbers of Romney in the commonwealth and hitching your candidacy to someone who doesn't have good numbers," said Tobe Berkovitz, a Massachusetts political observer and associate dean of the Boston University College of Communications. "This ad reinforces that."

Tim O'Brien, Healey's campaign manager, said the ad wasn't coordinated with the Healey campaign and that he hadn't seen it until it began running on Monday.

"We didn't have anything to do with the production of the ad," he said.

O'Brien said he hoped the ad would remind voters how Healey helped pull the state out of its fiscal crisis and would counter some of the millions spent during the Democratic gubernatorial primary criticizing the administration.

Phil Musser, executive director of the Republican Governors Association, said the purpose of that ad is to talk about the accomplishments of the Romney-Healey administration and "all the good work Kerry Healey has been doing on the important issues of the day."

"We believe that this is a race that had the ability to take shape for us," he said. "We thought it was important to make sure that voters in Massachusetts understand the facts."

At a press conference called to highlight what she described as the runaway spending plans of Patrick, Healey said she was eager to make a fresh start if elected.

"I will be a new governor. I will be a different kind of governor than we've had in the past," Healey said. "The rest of this election, these next coming weeks, are going to be defining who I am and helping people understand what kind of governor I would be."

Asked after an unrelated press conference Monday about whether his poll numbers might hurt Healey, Romney said was confident of his popularity in Massachusetts despite the poll numbers, which he attributed in part to the fact that he hasn't had his own ads responding to the attacks.

"I'd have no problem being reelected," he said. "But that's not relevant because I'm not running."

During her press conference, Healey stood next to a giant "spend-o-meter" emblazoned with a sign dubbing her opponent "Spend It All Deval" — intended to show how much Patrick would spend if elected.

Healey said Patrick's proposals would cost $8 billion dollars. Healey said the number estimated how much it would cost if the state tried to send enough money back to cities and towns so they wouldn't have to raise property taxes. Patrick has said the kind of income tax cuts pushed by Healey are a "shell game" that force hikes in property taxes.

"He hasn't given us any details about how he would actually attempt to lower property taxes," she said. "What are the details of this plan? How on earth do you think this would possibly work?"

Patrick had no public appearances as he prepared for Tuesday's gubernatorial debate in Springfield.

AP Political Writer Glen Johnson contributed to this report.

Discrimination suit filed against Natick-based wholesale retailer

The U.S. Equal Opportunity Commission filed lawsuits yesterday, claiming racial discrimination by Atlantic Bread Co., BJ's Wholesale Club Inc., and AutoZone Inc.

By Laura Wides-Munoz
Associated Press

MIAMI — The U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission announced Monday that it has filed employment discrimination suits against the Atlanta Bread Co. restaurant chain, BJ's Wholesale Club Inc., and auto parts retailer AutoZone Inc.

In separate lawsuits filed Thursday in federal court, the EEOC claimed that BJ's and Smyrna (based in Natick, Mass.), and Georgia-based Atlanta Bread International Inc. allowed racial discrimination of black and Hispanic employees. The complaint against Memphis, Tenn.-based AutoZone, filed Monday, accused the company of permitting sexual harassment of several female workers.

The EEOC also filed suit against ARO Enterprises, which owns the Atlanta Bread store in Pembroke Pines, about 20 miles north of downtown Miami.

In each of the cases, the EEOC said it tried first to settle with the companies. The EEOC is asking a judge to prevent future acts of discrimination and order the companies to pay back wages and damages.

AutoZone spokesman Ray Pohlman said the company does not generally discuss ongoing litigation, but he said that "we are confident that AutoZone's employment practices and policies will be upheld in court."

BJ's released a statement saying it could not address the specifics of the lawsuit but that the company "takes any allegation of discrimination very seriously and does not tolerate discriminatory behavior of any kind." The statement said BJ's would work with the EEOC to resolve the matter.

The Atlanta Bread Company said in a statement it was committed to ensuring its franchised bakery cafes are equal opportunity workplaces, but that it had not seen any court filings and was unable to comment on the specific allegations.

ARO Enterprises attorney Patrick DeBlasio declined to comment on the case Monday.

Write for News!
Come down to the campus center basement and apply now!

NOW HIRING at PETE'S
NEW BURGERS
NEW MEAL DEALS
FAMOUS FOR 2 BURGS FOR $2.22
HAMBURGERS · HOT DOGS · GRINDERS
CHICKEN SEAFOOD FRIES
PHILLY CHEESE STEAKS
SHAKES · SMOOTHIES · FLOATS
HAND DIPPED & SOFT SERVE DELIVERY EXPRESS
Route 9 - Hadley - 585-0241 - petesdriven.com

Worcester C-Store Grand Opening
Wednesday, October 4

Celebrate our Grand Opening Specials at all 4 locations!

Doritos all varieties 13 ounce bag 2 for $5.00
Large White Eggs $.99 per dozen
Coke, Diet Coke, or Sprite 12 pack cans 2 for $7.00 (plus deposit)
Allegra Cut Ziti or Spaghetti 16 ounce box $.79 each
California Seedless Grapes red or green $1.79 per pound
Angy's Premium Cheese Lasagna 20 ounce portion $2.99
Glaceau Vitamin Water 20 ounce bottles buy 2 get one free
Dasani Water liter bottles 2 for $2.00
Medium New England Fair Trade Coffee and a Muffin $1.59

STORE HOURS
Mini Store
Monday Thursday 8:00am 6:00pm
Friday 8:00am 5:00pm
Worcester C-Store
Monday Friday 8:00am 12:00am
Weekends and Holidays 11:00am 12:00am
Franklin C-Store
Monday Friday 7:00am 9:00pm
Weekends and Holidays 11:00am 11:00pm
Hampden C-Store
Monday Friday 7:00am 12:00am
Weekends and Holidays 11:00am 12:00am

DINING SERVICES UMass Amherst

Prices valid through Friday, October 13

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No excuse not to vote

Domenic Poli

I will be participating in the upcoming 2006 Massachusetts gubernatorial election set to take place on Nov. 7. However, I probably won't be going home to Quincy, Mass., until Thanksgiving break.

"But Dom," you ask. "How is that possible?"

Well, I'm glad you asked, and I'm going to tell you. I will be receiving an absentee ballot in the mail.

For anyone who doesn't know, an absentee ballot is one sent to voters if they will, for any reason, be incapacitated on Election Day. Reasons may include a voter's temporary/permanent physical disability or being out of town when it comes time to cast the ballot.

That last part applies to all of you who may be living on campus.

Voting is American democracy at its purest. Some of America's earliest settlers came to these shores from England in the 17th century in order to escape religious and political persecution. They grew tired of the royal monarchy of England and longed for a more democratic government.

Ever since the pilgrims crash-landed on Plymouth Rock, democracy and liberty have been sought after by people who have red, white, and blue in their hearts.

(Though it's kind of ironic it's the same country that stole land from the native inhabitants and has such a bloodstained history when it comes to minority rights.)

But no matter what any pseudo-American bigots have done in the past, "equal rights for all and special opportunity for none" has always been the backbone of America. And that is the America of which I am proud to be a citizen. Unfortunately, the right to vote is a privilege taken for granted these days.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau News, only 64 percent of U.S. citizens voted in the 2004 Presidential election, and while that number is up from 60 percent in 2000, it is still shamefully low — and we need to do something about it.

For all of you Massachusetts voters out there who will not be able to go home for the Nov. 7 election, I encourage you to get absentee ballots for yourselves. And here's how you go about doing it:

First, go to your hometown's City Hall and

For those of you who would like to request an absentee ballot, but don't think you can make it home in the next couple of weeks, all hope is not lost.

visit the Voter Registration office/window. Tell them you will not be able to make it to the polls on the 7th and you would like an absentee ballot.

Once you have explained why you are in need of a ballot, you will be handed a form to fill out. It's a pretty routine application: it asks your name, date of birth, address, why you will be absent on Election Day, where you would like the ballot to be mailed to (if you choose not to vote on the spot), etc. As soon as they receive the ballots they will mail them out.

For those of you who would like to request an absentee ballot, but don't think you can make it home in the next couple of weeks, all hope is not lost. A family member can go to City Hall for you and he/she can fill out all the necessary paperwork.

However, that family member will not be able to receive the ballot and give it to you personally. As required by law, the ballot must be sent legally through the mail, in order to avoid any tampering with.

For anyone who chooses to receive it at their dorm/apartment, simply fill out all of the relevant contents and put it back into the mail, postmarked to your City Hall. Once it returns, it will be placed in a sealed envelope and locked away until the day of the election, when it will be counted with the rest of votes. (FYI, the last day you can get an absentee ballot is noon the day before the election.)

The main event in this particular election is for Massachusetts governor. You'll have four candidates to choose from: Kerry Healey (Republican Party), Deval Patrick (Democratic Party), Christy Mihos (Independent Party), and Grace Ross (Green-Rainbow Party). The second most important is that of lieutenant governor, the governor's second-in-command. I won't say who I'm voting for, and I don't care who you vote for, but as long as you vote, I'll be one happy American.

If you're is wondering why you should even bother, just think about this: Since the beginning of the Revolutionary War in 1775, more than 1.2 million men and women have died trying to preserve this precious component of the American dream. Not to mention the more than 2,200 who have been killed in Iraq since 2003.

They all selflessly put their lives on hold in order to put their lives on the line. If you ask me, I say it's time we honored all of our fallen patriots by practicing a little democracy in action. That way, these brave human beings will not have died in vain.

Domenic Poli is a Collegian columnist

Deterring our financial success

Joshua H. Wilder

Money: the root of all evil? Well, that's what some people will tell you. Like it or not, money is a big deal in this country. In most cases, when we are old and gray, sitting in rocking chairs and looking back on our lives, for many people the deciding factor for whether they have become a success or not will be their wallet size. Rolling in the dough? Well then, Sonny Jim, you finally made it.

This columnist learned the value of money in the states at an early age, and so I have been able to accept it and move on. However, a few events this week have made me seriously question the use of money by the government and our supposedly valued institutions.

Going to college is one of the ways to get ahead and become successful financially, however, recently the Bush administration has been slashing away at funding for state universities. Just in case you didn't know, we all attend such a university here in Amherst, and the government isn't supporting our studious ways.

Our current governor, Mitt Romney, has been especially stingy with UMass, as the recent tax rollbacks have taken more and more money away from our university. Justifiably, many people support these tax cuts, and with good reason: residents don't want to be taken to the cleaners by the government in the form of taxes and fees.

The lack of funding recently has been quite obvious around this campus in the last few years, as tuition seems to be rising like mercury in a heat wave.

However, deep cuts in local aid have created a larger emphasis on the property tax. The bottom line here for your Average Joe (or Jane, for that matter) is they will be paying more in fees and taxes overall but getting less in services.

The lack of funding recently has been quite obvious around this campus in the last few years, as tuition seems to be rising like mercury in a heat wave. With college costing enough as it is, the last thing any middle-class family needs is to borrow an extra $4,000 a year so UMass can build a roller-coaster behind Franklin Dining Commons.

Having an affordable, reputable, and well-funded state university available to residents is key to advancing higher education in this country without putting students into financial ruin. Unfortunately for students like you and me, the days of the reasonably priced university are fading fast. This isn't just a problem in Massachusetts, but all across the country.

State universities aren't the only areas to take a hit; school systems in both suburbs and inner cities are also being stretched to the limit when it comes to funding. If desperately needed money for books, teachers, and curriculums continues to go missing, the end result won't be pretty. The younger generations are going to be the ones who miss out on a quality education, and presumably will be stuck with a lower standard of living than Americans of the past. An all time low.

Money needed for certain necessities — such as education and social programs — is nowhere to be found, which logically raises the question, "Where is the money going?" Well, the answer came Saturday in what must be the most mind blowing factoid of the week.

Senators in Washington unanimously approved a $70 billion increase in funding for the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq, adding to the record spending already. For those of you keeping track at home, overall the government has spent $379 billion in Iraq and $97 billion in Afghanistan. The grand total before it's all said and done will be even higher, and it gets to the point where keeping track just makes you sick in the stomach.

Whether or not you support what is quickly becoming an unfavorable war in Iraq, there is something to be said for the way Americans are able to spend money when they want to. They wasted no time in approving the Pentagon budget, as it was something they clearly felt strongly about. Granted the troops should be fully equipped for battle, or so we assume, although that has also been questioned recently, but at what point does the spending become excessive?

Some high school teacher needs to dip into his already lame paycheck to buy some supplies at Staples because the school is getting the shaft from the government, yet the billions keep rolling in to fight. If education is such a high priority to government officials and policy makers, then why are they giving the cold shoulder? Surely they have no problem dishing out the bills for other ventures, some that have had extremely negative consequences for Americans, Afghanis and Iraqis, but education? Has education become marginalized? It looks to be the case.

There are many instances in which money can be spent for charity, or to support positive projects. In that way, we can't cast it off as being the root of all evil inherently. However, recent U.S. spending sprees, or lack there of, are starting to look pretty wicked. Money isn't the root of the problems we have these days, but it sure is doing damage. Hopefully, things will start to change and move in a positive direction, but until that day, hide your piggy banks.

Joshua H. Wilder is a Collegian columnist.

NEWS: SHORTAGE OF FAMILY DOCTORS PREDICTED BY 2020
NO MORE APPOINTMENTS TODAY, DOCTOR...BUT STARTING IN 2020 YOU'RE BOOKED SOLID THROUGH 2022!
DOCTOR IS IN
STAYCKAL TRIBUNE MEDIA SERVICES 2006

Our awful reputation

Debbie Friedman

"UMASS Chaos: Two Weekends of Arrests and Now a House Set Ablaze."

"A UMass student is treated for stab wounds following a fight at a party held on the Amherst campus."

"On the UMass campus, bon fires were lit, and one student even broke both his legs as he jumped off of a building."

"Police make a second round of arrests at off-campus UMass parties, further cementing their dubious distinction as America's top seven party school."

These are just a sampling of headlines and story excerpts that have been published about our school. It only takes reading or hearing one of them for someone to make their first, and often lasting, impressions of this campus, and of us. From there, those quick judgments turn to stereotypes faster than you can blink — stereotypes that have the potential to hold us back after graduation. While many students here may not give a damn about our bad reputation, I sure do.

As a freshman, the term "party school" was amusing, and being ranked among the elite top 10 was certainly something to brag about. As a senior, these terms and rankings are anything but amusing. I now cringe after hearing people brag about how we are the alleged most violent campus in the country. And I shudder at the thought of potential employers referring to my pricey, out-of-state undergraduate education as "Zoomass." With all the positive traits that can be attributed to our school, it's irritating that our public persona remains so skewed to this day.

Our Office of News and Information has a Web site jam-packed with positive stories, packaged and ready for any media outlet to pick up, yet negative publicity is what continues to flood the mainstream. So, why is this the case?

I asked the director of the Office of News and Information, Ed Blaguszewski. He responded by saying, "The News Office at UMass Amherst works with local, regional, and national media to tell our story, and we receive many positive pieces in addition to items such as student arrests and disturbances. In fact, the majority of coverage is positive, although people tend to remember violence and bad behavior."

Truthfully, there are many stories counteracting our party animal persona, but unfortunately, they will never be covered to the same extent as the negative ones.

A former Chicago journalist and author, William Braden, once wrote, "If a man rises in the morning and does not murder his wife, that is not news. If people live in harmony and do good works, that also is not news." Likewise, if UMass students do well in their studies and act responsibly on the weekend, that is not news, but when we torch each other on fire, boy is that news.

As consumers of media, we are the ones reinforcing this concept of what is newsworthy by tuning in for the extraordinary stories of chaos, death and destruction and out for any positive, feel good fluff. Therefore, we cannot blame a system in which we have a hand, no matter how corrupt or backwards that system may be.

As a freshman, the "term party" school was amusing, and being ranked among the elite top 10 was certainly something to brag about. As a senior, these terms and rankings are anything but amusing.

Since it is unlikely the media will ever change its ways, the responsibility of fixing this problem lies on us. If we want to change our image, we've got to change our behavior, because while mayhem at UMass may make exceptional news, it makes us look anything but exceptional.

The majority of us seem to be able to have a good time on the weekend without ending the night in arrest, assault, or defacement of public property, yet the reckless behavior engaged in by the few continue to box us all into an awful stereotype.

In order to break out, we've got to set a standard for one another. No matter how funny or entertaining the kid standing on top of the building may be, you can't entice him to jump. No matter how invigorating a New England victory may be, we can't flip over cars in celebration or cheer on the people who do, because in the morning, once the drunken haze of invincibility wears off, there are consequences that do not go away.

When I hang my diploma on the wall, I will of course want to remember the crazy nights, but I do not want our party reputation to de-validate all the hard work I spent the majority of my time here doing. And I think it's safe to say you won't either when it comes time to leave. So let's not give anyone a reason to question us.

Debbie Friedman is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

CARDS NOT THE ENEMY

I completely agree with Andrew Freeman's editorial "Student credit" on responsibility being heavy on the shoulders of college students. But the article omitted one type of responsibility it is important to mention: journalistic responsibility. The information on managing credit cards presented was both misleading and wrong.

The responsible way to manage credit cards is to only buy what you can afford. That way you can pay off your balance at the end of every month. If you do this, you are not charged any finance charges (See: Grace Period for purchases).

If you can't, try some transfers. You can't walk across campus without being hit in the head with a card offer, but most students don't know what those offers could mean to them. To say "paying in cash... is always less expensive" is wildly incorrect, and I don't see how this can make it to press unchallenged. It does cost the merchant a percentage of the purchase, but that's not our problem as the consumer.

Many cards offer excellent bonus programs or points made for purchases, including 1 percent cash back. This equates to a 1 percent discount on everything you purchase. Over a weekend this may be less than a dollar, over a month a couple bucks, over a year or lifetime of disciplined purchasing you can really make a difference. I make all my purchases on credit, but I only purchase what I have cash for.

So to say it is "unwise to pay any substantial amount with a credit card" is wrong. When I had a car accident and got $3,000 back from the insurance to fix it up, I put the repairs on my card so I got $30 extra (in REI bucks). While holding a balance on a credit card is a bad (horrible) idea, if you can pay off your balance every month, there are some really good opportunities.

Also, a tip about zero percent APR offers could help some students out.

You should think about having somebody in the know write a piece, or even a regular column doing some Q&A on this very important subject. But not this Freeman guy (light-hearted joke, please don't hunt me down). Really.

Eric Marshall
UMass GIS specialist and alumnus

INCLINE IN LITERARY SKILLS

The concern over the perceived writing ability of college students is nothing new. In 1885, the requirement of freshman English first appeared at Harvard University. This course replaced those that the department of rhetoric and oratory had previously offered.

A study of English Composition from The Carnegie Series in American Education in 1961 found 53 percent of freshmen entering a basic writing class produced "C" level work. Recommendations from this report included a recommendation to focus on rhetoric, that mysterious department paved to make way for English.

Helen Vendler a well-known critic of poetry and professor of English at Harvard University, recommends that the freshman composition class should spend at least half of its time reading myths, legends, and parables to "understand themselves as individuals and as social beings."

Vendler is correct. The best writers are readers first. Last week, the English department invited Salman Rushdie to give a lecture. He spent almost his entire lecture reviewing the literature he has read and loved.

Concerns over student writing are not new, but what students read and how they are taught has changed. What constitutes pedagogy in English departments today is almost entirely politics.

A connection with the individual prevents understanding of the social role. Walt Whitman once wrote, "A man only is interested in anything when he identifies himself with it."

The inclusion of modern popular culture would be the easy way to produce identification, but the talented teacher should be able to tease out identification with almost any work of art.

James E. Dobson
UMass student

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR! RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT! (550 WORD LIMIT)

Send letters to: editorial@dailycollegian.com, or go to: dailycollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW MUSIC TUESDAY

Meloy, inspired by Japanese folk tales, releases 'The Crane Wife'

Colin Meloy, the Decemberists' front man, is a great storyteller. With release of "The Crane Wife," Meloy and company continue to travel the path paved by previous albums, "Castaways and Cutouts," "Her Majesty, The Decemberists," and the most recent "Picturesque," to create albums with literary edge and sharp design aesthetics.

The title of this release is based on Japanese folk tale. In the story, an injured crane appears at the door of a poor man. The man nurses this crane back to health before releasing it back into the wild. As soon as the crane regains its strength and leaves the man, a woman comes to the poor man's door and two instantly fall in love and are soon married.

Their financial situation is bleak, however. The wife agrees to create silk robes on one condition: he can never watch her create these garments. He agrees. The selling of these robes is incredibly successful and they live a comfortable life.

As time passes, the husband becomes exceedingly greedy and orders the wife to make more and more robes, despite her obviously diminishing health. His greed causes him to ignore his wife's wishes for privacy; he peers into her work room to find that the injured crane's feathers are the source of the beautiful silk. The crane becomes terrified and flies away. The husband is ashamed of his actions and, more importantly, of his greed.

Meloy was inspired by this story of the risks of greed and wrote songs to comment directly on its plot line: "Crane Wife 3" and "Crane Wife 1 and 2."

The lyrics are constructed in such an incredibly enchanting way as to grant adequate justice to this Japanese folktale. It's epic, but does not bore or drag on. Anyone can relate to the lyrics, "And all the stars were crashing 'round/ as I laid eyes on what I'd found," even if they do not have a crane wife.

The second track on the album reflects a separate plot line. Called "The Island: Come and See/ The Landlords Daughter/ You'll Not Feel the Drowning," it is a 12-minute song with three different storylines. During these 12 minutes, it is easy to lose interest as the song continues on and on. The heart and soul of the song would have been better received if the single musical monstrosity was broken up into three shorter tunes.

"Yankee Bayonet (I'll Be Home Then)" is a duet between Meloy and Seattle singer-songwriter Laura Veirs, who appear to play the roles of lovers separated by mitigating circumstances, like death or distance.

It goes, "But oh my love, though our bodies may be parted/ Though our skin may not touch skin / Look for me with the sun-bright sparrow/ I will come on the last track, "Sons and Daughters." The arrangement is what makes the song memorable and dangerously catchy.

It is presented in a musical-round form and all the vocalists blend together as they sing each verse at staggering rates. The simple repeating lyrics allow the listener to focus on the genius arrangements. The ability for the Decemberists to construct with such cleverness and wit is just another reason why they are terrific.

This album is a superb display of how to string focused lyrics and story lines together into one musical masterpiece. This has not been done since Sufjan Steven's "Come on! Feel the Illinoise."

Meloy's literary and historical allusions just make you feel smarter. Leave it to the Decemberists to increase our brain potential by creating one brilliant album at a time.

By Alex Roth
Collegian Staff

'Pet Sounds' turns 40

It's been celebrated, discussed, and re-released to death, but 40 years later, The Beach Boys' seminal album "Pet Sounds" is still, well, a masterpiece.

What Brian Wilson led The Beach Boys into in 1966 was practically unheard of, and "Pet Sounds" changed the course of pop music forever.

Meticulously and perfectly pieced together, "Pet Sounds" is closer to a symphony then the beat-driven, sunshine rock, and pop that came before. It is true that classic albums are often overrated, but after 40 years "Pet Sounds" still sounds revolutionary and the songs haven't lost their shine at all.

From the opening, "Wouldn't It Be Nice," all the way through the gorgeous closer "Caroline, No," every moment sparkles with the type of musical and artistic clarity that is stunning coming from anyone, let alone the then-23-year-old California pop singer who constructed it.

Every single song fits as a piece in a grand picture, while standing on their own as impeccable pieces of masterful pop. From tracks like "Let's Go Away For A While," which Wilson writes is the "most satisfying piece of music" he has ever written, to "God Only Knows" which is often regarded as the best pop song of all time, "Pet Sounds" is the definition of a classic album.

Essays and novels have been written about "Pet Sounds", but the music will speak for itself. On the DVD accompaniment to the released 40th anniversary edition of the album, Wilson simply states, "When you listen to "Pet Sounds," use earphones in the dark, and you can hear everything."

The creator certainly has a point, but the 40th anniversary edition knowingly offers enticing bonus material, making it the definitive version.

The double-disc set features a CD and a DVD. The CD is a duplicate of the previous edition, featuring mono and stereo versions of the album, with "Hang On To Your Ego," an alternate version of "I Know There's An Answer," attached.

Wilson is famously deaf in one ear, due to his father hitting him in the head with a 2x4, and his mono mix is still the definitive version. However, the stereo mix does offer some slight, interesting alternative interpretations of the tracks. The extensive liner notes, which cover session and track details, are also replicated from the previous release and help to shed some more light on the legend that is "Pet Sounds."

What the 40th anniversary offers is all on the DVD, with just over 50 minutes of footage, mostly found in two retrospective documentaries that discuss the album in great detail.

These documentaries contain little new footage, but help to make for a more complete "Pet Sounds" package. There is also a previously unreleased bit with famed Beatles producer George Martin and Wilson talking to each other and dissecting songs at the mixing board, three promotional clips — including an unreleased video for "Good Vibrations" — and a photo gallery.

While there could be a multi-disc set of discussion and discourse on "Pet Sounds," the lean running time works as a benefit to the set — those that fall towards the obsessive side can busy themselves with the previously released "Pet Sounds Sessions" box set, an exhaustive listen to the recording of the album.

For those who haven't spent enough time with "Pet Sounds," this set is a necessity. It is by far the best way to experience the album, with a straight-forward presentation that emphasizes the album and then appropriately supplements it.

For those that have taken the album in hundreds, even thousands, of times, this set is a simple question of interest. None of the bonus features are must-haves, and when dealing with a classic work such as "Pet Sounds" everything else is secondary.

However, for those with an interest in getting some first-hand perspective on the record, the 40th anniversary certainly will not disappoint. Whichever edition appeals the most, now is as good a time as any — and it is always a good time — to experience "Pet Sounds" again. It is a necessary album for music lovers of all ages and forms. Even for people who have been experiencing this record for 40 years, this set provides a great excuse to delve even deeper into the record. Just because calling "Pet Sounds" one of the greatest albums ever is a cliche doesn't mean it's not true.

By Alex Roth
Collegian Staff

Streuli exhibit comes to UMass

By Michael Hardman
Collegian Correspondent

Art comes in all sizes, shapes, and forms, but Beat Streuli's "Cities 2001-2005" exhibit shows another spectrum of the art form known as human life.

To showcase this art form, Streuli set out with a video camera to capture the chaotic bustle of city life and whittle it down to just a series of moments.

The exhibit, located in University of Massachusetts art gallery, takes up four separate galleries and will open the mind to the nuances that every person performs when they are sure that nobody is watching.

The occurrence of couples talking, people eating or drinking, shifting glances, and the way a person smokes their cigarette, all take on a new, indefinable meaning in the slow motion environment.

The Main Gallery was shot on a Manhattan sidewalk. The camera's lens occasionally gets blocked by delivery trucks and cars. This positioning places a spotlight effect on the individuals who walk in and out of the camera's frame.

The North Gallery, Porte de l'Iandre, showcases mostly solo shots of the predominantly Muslim immigrants at a bus stop in Brussels on three flat-screen televisions across the room.

The West Gallery shows people walking along Venice Beach. Unlike the rest of the galleries, this one seemed to lack in the quest to un-lock human mysteries.

The most impact-filled gallery belonged to the East Gallery. The footage in this gallery took place on a sidewalk in Birmingham, England; the cameras lens this time offered a dead center view of rush hour traffic, showing the feelings that the people portrayed while in their cars. Their emotion appeared to change frequently.

The camera vibrated constantly. One minute, the entire crowd seemed to be on a solemn march into the wastelands. Then a person telling a joke or laughing would burst into the forefront, saving the entire crowd from doom. Then, that person is gone. Agnostic dimensions once again encapsulate the faces of the crowd.

The most extraordinary facet of the East Gallery was this particular woman walking down the street. She could be seen in the distance, wearing a bright red shirt, radiating confidence all around her. The slow motion effect leaves her on the screen for an eternity.

Streuli's exhibit is based on images and videos of every day life, but is slowed down to emphasize detail and emotion.

The people seemed to give her space so that she had her own little solo act among the sea of people. Her eyes never glanced nervously, and she kept a wry smile on her face, as if she had just done something shocking. The woman created a very strong, lasting image — so much so that she stays in viewers' minds while they visit the other galleries.

Beat Streuli was born in 1957 in Switzerland. He currently resides in both Brussels and Dusseldorf. His works are exhibited all over the world, including the Palais de Tokyo in Paris, the Museum of Contemporary Art in Chicago and the ICP in New York.

The University Gallery is located in the downstairs of the Fine Arts Center. The gallery hours are Tuesday through Friday, 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.; Saturday to Sunday, 2 p.m.-5 p.m.; it is closed Mondays. The video loops are between 20 and 45 minutes long apiece.

Friday Night Lights has staying power

By Maureen Ryan
Chicago Tribune

If you're not on the edge of your seat during the last 10 minutes of "Friday Night Lights," you simply don't have a pulse.

The final sequence in the premiere depicts the first game of the season for the Dillon Panthers, a Texas team that's a perennial contender for the state championship.

The coach is new, the Panthers fall behind, and anyone who has ever attended a closely contested football game will recognize the sense of enraptured attention shared by the crowd and the players that "Friday Night Lights" so masterfully conveys in the closing minutes of the game.

This drama has a deep bench; it's not only "inspired by" H.G. "Buzz" Bissinger's enthralling 1990 book of the same name, but it also was directed by Peter Berg, an actor/director who helmed a 2004 feature film based on the book.

Berg's feel for cinematic narrative is sure and subtle; he knows that the look on a tortured fan's face says more than pages of dialogue and one long shot of a Hail Mary pass is more effective in silence than accompanied by a blaring soundtrack.

Few shows convey a sense of place more convincingly than "Friday Night Lights," which is shot in Texas. Dillon is a town with one burger place for the high school kids, a strip mall with Applebee's and the like, and not much else.

Berg deftly portrays the wide-open spaces of this dusty, working-class town and the sense of claustrophobia that comes from not being able to escape your friends, neighbors, or co-workers.

The cast of football players in "Lights" mostly looks too old to be high schoolers, but that small flaw is not hard to overlook when the characters are etched so memorably right out of the gate.

There's the cocky runny back, "Smash," who's full of bravado and NFL dreams; the clean-cut, All American quarterback, who knows the entire town's hopes rest on him but endures the pressure with gentlemanly grace; the outsider, a nervous second-string quarterback who lamely hits on a girl by telling her he's gotten to hold the ball a few times during extra points.

The most compelling character is running back Tim Riggins, who is, on the surface, a wild man uninterested in anything but drinking beer and hurting other guys on the field. Without much in the way of dialogue, actor Taylor Kitsch conveys the anguish of a young man who has never been given the words to understand what he feels when things go badly.

The entire town of Dillon is populated by recognizable types that fall just short of stereotype; there's the paunchy car dealer who unofficially runs the town, the local team boosters, for whom football is a religion, and a sassy high schooler, Tyra, who is as risk-prone as her sometime boyfriend, Riggins.

Caught fooling around with another player, Tyra's marched outside by the player's no-nonsense mother. "I work at Planned Parenthood — you haven't seen the last of me yet," the mother snaps.

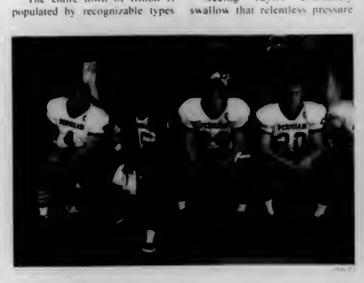
There are two problems with the mostly promising "Friday Night Lights": The first has to do with the by-now overused conceit of the jiggly camera. A sense of motion and tension in camera movement is fine, but the series goes overboard in the use of jagged, jumping camera movement, to the point that it distracts from the fine acting and overall top-notch production values on display.

The other rests in "Lights'" depiction of life in Dillon. It may be too accurate to be enjoyable in the long run. In several scenes, we see the new Dillon coach, Eric Taylor (Kyle Chandler), bite his tongue as locals give him a never-ending stream of advice about the how to run the team, and the background noise of the show is the constant throb of talk-radio types ranting about this or that aspect of the Panthers.

Seeing Taylor constantly swallow that relentless pressure is realistic yet often uncomfortable to watch. A tightly wound man under a microscope is a fine subject for a film, but perhaps not for a TV show, unless there's a chance for all that pressure to be released in some meaningful way.

Still, the show's creators display many smart moves. They resist the temptation to make the show's second episode conclude with yet another "big game" sequence, and they appear to know that the show rises or falls on what the players and coaches do off the field as well as on it.

It'd be giving too much away to reveal what happens to some key characters in the first two episodes, but the dramatic tension of the first two hours makes it clear the producers of "Friday Night Lights" have no need for a Hail Mary pass yet. This is one show that could, with the right kind of leadership, make it to the playoffs.



'Friday Night Lights' has the potential to be one of the biggest hits this TV season with it's creativity and original camera work.

Snicket series comes to end this month

By Patrick T. Reardon
Chicago Tribune

All bad things must come to an end — including the really, really unlucky run of accidents, crises, and tragedies that have been befalling the three Baudelaire siblings in the witty Lemony Snicket children's books.

Next month, on Friday the 13th, (of course) 2.5 million copies of "The End," the 13th and final "Series of Unfortunate Events" book, will go on sale at 12:01 a.m. More than 50 million copies of the initial dozen have already been sold.

In a recent conversation from his San Francisco home, Daniel Handler, Snicket's 36-year-old real-life alter-ego, talked of the tendency of many of his young readers to tell him about unfortunate events in their own lives and ruminated on the role his books played in helping children cope with Sept. 11. He also commented, sort of, on reports that at least two characters die in the final book.

Here's an edited transcript:

Question: Is this the absolute final book in this series?

Answer: It is, indeed.

Q: No "Return of the Baudelaires" or "Baudelaires: Part 2"?

A: Not as far as I'm aware. And I think I would know.

Q: Seven years ago, when the series started, Violet Baudelaire was 14, her brother Klaus was 12, and Sunny was an infant. In "The End," they seem about the same age although Sunny is a little less of a baby. Has Count Olaf stolen their ability to grow up?

A: Some of the books only take place over a couple of days. I'm afraid it took longer to write them than it took the Baudelaires to live them. They've all had a birthday so it's been just over a year, I would guess. So it's been a pretty eventful time.

Q: Following Sept. 11, there was a lot of talk that books such as yours, dealing with scary stuff, were helping children cope with the fear that was generated by the terrorist attacks. Looking back, do you think there was much to that theory?

A: For some children, reading such books helped them overcome or think about their fears in a concrete and maybe easier-to-handle way.

Q: Did you have a sense that your books were helping with the healing?

A: I'm reluctant to take on that mantle of responsibility or pat myself on the back for being such a devout psychological aid. (He laughs.) But I was told by parents and educators and even by children themselves that, in those days, they found the books very comforting. As I wrote in an op-ed piece directly after 9/11, I found myself reading books that had scary things in them, but scary things that were packaged neatly. I read just about everything by Raymond Chandler in the weeks after 9/11. There are horrible things that happen in those books, and yet, because of their genre, it's containable.

Author Daniel Handler plans to discontinue the Lemony Snicket series after the release of 'The End' on Friday, October 13.

Q: You've mentioned in interviews that kids, even before 9/11, tell you about the real-life "unfortunate events" they've suffered. That must be a heavy burden for you. What do you do?

A: I listen with interest. It's not that heavy a burden to hear about it. It strikes me as a very heavy burden for some of them to live through. I'm surprised that they would think to tell me these things, but I don't find it difficult to listen to.

Q: What sort of things do they tell you?

A: Absolutely anything that you can imagine. But I certainly hear from a lot of children who've lost one or more parent under literally anything you could dream up ... from disease to violent crime to all sorts of horrible accidents. Yeah, it's a tough world.

Q: When kids tell you things, what do you say to them?

A: I say I'm sorry to hear that. I say the same thing that I would say to an adult who has lost somebody. The children are usually not in the raw stage of grief. I'm often told that I'm good at talking with children. I think it's just because I don't talk to them any different than I do to adults.

Q: Do you have children yourself?

A: I have a son who's almost three. His name is Otto. Handler was a difficult (fast) name to match. Otto seemed pretty good. Of course, as soon as we announced it, one of my cousins said, 'He's a car mechanic. Auto Handler.' By then, it was too late.

Q: As Daniel Handler, you've published three adult novels. Is there a different way you approach the planning or execution of a Lemony Snicket book and one of your adult novels?

A: Not really. I always tell people that I listen to gloomy Russian music while I'm writing the Snicket books, which is true. But the sad truth is that I'm listening to that all day long anyway. Shostakovich, Scriabin, Borodin.

Q: So, even when you write your adult novels, you're listening to that music?

A: Even when I'm making pancakes.

Q: Who dies in "The End"?

A: All of us die in the end. Surely, the Chicago Tribune knows that.

Q: In your book, "The End," who dies?

A: The point of life is that both villains and heroes alike end up buried.

University Health Services
Mental Health Groups, Fall 2006

Groups are led by Mental Health Services; participation requires an initial screening. Call 545-2337 or come to 125 Hills North, Monday – Friday, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m.

KEEPING IT REAL
Mondays, 3:30 – 5 p.m.
This co-ed therapy group for undergraduates focuses on self-exploration and skill-building for positive relationships.

COLLEGE LIFE AFTER REAL LIFE
Mondays, 1:30 – 3 p.m.
As a nontraditional-aged undergraduate, the transition to college life from 'real' life can be difficult. Come meet others who share your experiences!

BETWEEN CULTURES
Tuesdays, 3:30 – 5 p.m.
For those straddling multiple nationalities, religions or ethnicities, this group aims to dispel confusion and address common stresses and anxieties. Become fully aware of your own complexity and discover how to articulate that identity to others.

SPANISH-SPEAKING ABOUT OUR UMASS EXPERIENCES
Hablemos En Español De Nuestras Experiencias en UMass
Tuesdays, 3 – 4:30 p.m., beginning Oct. 17
Let's get together and talk about our UMass experience. Vamos a reunirnos a conversar sobre nuestras experiencias en UMass. Group will meet for eight sessions. For information and referrals, contact Lynette Bloise, LICSW.

RELATIONSHIP GROUP FOR GRADUATE STUDENTS
Thursdays, 3:45 – 5 p.m.
Explore personal relationships, work, studies and other concerns in this group for graduate men and women having difficulties with, or concerns about, interpersonal connections.

MINDFULNESS-BASED STRESS REDUCTION (MBSR)
Day & time to be announced
Mindfulness is a way of paying attention with intention, in the moment and without judgment. With regular practice, MBSR has the potential to lower stress, anxiety and depression, promote relaxation, improve concentration, raise self-awareness and enhance the immune system. For information and referrals, contact Kathryn Proulx.

Fees for all groups are deducted from the Student Health Fee, Student Health Insurance Plan, GIC or Health New England plan, subject to plan limitations and co-pays.

Nelly's style of music inspires as it becomes mainstream

By Kevin C. Johnson
St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Rapper Nelly takes credit for taking Saint Louis sound to the mainstream, resulting in success for other musicians such as Chingy.

ST. LOUIS — Billboard magazine's former rap editor, Rashaun Hall, remembers the day in 2000 when he received an advance copy of "Country Grammar," a CD by a St. Louis rapper he'd never heard of, Nelly.

"I said I couldn't stand this album. I thought it was terrible. I just didn't get it," said Hall, now content editor at hip-hop website www.sohh.com.

Now, Hall said, he's a Nelly fan. "I've watched Nelly grow and seen his movement. He's hungry, and he respects the art form.

"When I think about being wrong about anything, that's the one story I tell," Hall said of the rapper who has sold more than 20 million records.

Since Nelly's breakthrough six years ago, St. Louis rappers have staked their claim on the industry, with no sign of letting up.

Jibbs, whose "Chain Hang Low" is one of the nation's biggest new hits, said, "People didn't used to pay attention to St. Louis. But now people are hearing our perspective from the middle of the map."

Certainly, they're hearing newcomer Jibbs. "Chain Hang Low" is outpacing songs by some bigger artists, including Jessica Simpson, John Mayer and the Killers.

Chingy is on top of several Billboard charts with "Pullin' Me Back," his smooth ballad with Tyrese. His accompanying CD, "Hoodstar," promises impressive first-week sales when figures are released Wednesday.

And Nelly remains at the forefront, pairing with Janet Jackson for chart-topper "Call On Me."

But there are many others. Penelope Jones, Huey, Potzee, Da Hanggaz, Shorty, and Pretty Willie are among St. Louisans scoring major label deals and awaiting CD releases. Murphy Lee, Ebony Eyez, and J-Kwon are working on their sophomore CDs. Ali, with Atlanta rapper Big Gipp, is gearing up for joint CD "Kinfolk."

Nelly's stable of Derrty Entertainment rappers, such as Chocolate Tai, Taylor Made, and King Jacob, are awaiting their turns, and local names like Spade R.I.P.P.E.R., Gena and Joka are hot on the block.

"At this point, all people know about St. Louis is for [its] having 'kick-it' music, feel-good music," said Potzee, whose songs include "Dat Girl" and "Good Evening," featuring Murphy Lee. "That's the vibe we got now, and that's what made Nelly."

Chingy said the sound has "always been hot [in St. Louis], but people still tended to overlook us. Now, artists are really getting on the grind, trying to get out there, working harder, and taking it more seriously looking at my success and Nelly's success. They're seeing it can be done."

As a result, Chingy said, "We're hearing more stuff on the radio and getting in more executives' eyes."

Recording executives like Mickey "MeMpHiTz" Wright, vice president of artist and repertoire, or A&R, at Jive Records, who signed J-Kwon a few years ago. This summer, he signed another St. Louis rapper, Huey, of "Pop, Lock and Drop It" fame.

"St. Louis has a national sound, a broad sound that crosses a lot of boundaries. So when an artist comes out of St. Louis, they go big. They go further," said Wright, who made Huey the first artist on his HiTz Committee imprint. He said he immediately recognized Huey's star potential. "I said, 'We can go the distance.'"

Still, it took a long time for the music to want to go the distance with a St. Louis rapper. Rap music originated in New York City in the 1970s (Sugarhill Gang, Kool Here, followed later by Jay-Z, 50 Cent, Notorious B.I.G.). And it sprouted huge scenes in Los Angeles (Dr. Dre, Ice Cube, Snoop Dogg), Atlanta (OutKast, Lil Jon, Ludacris), and New Orleans (Lil Wayne, Juvenile).

But until Nelly, St. Louis was a nonentity, except for a few footnotes.

Sylk Smoov was the first rapper from St. Louis with a major deal; he signed with Mercury Records in 1991. His hits included "Klientele" and "Trick Wit a Good Rap." Domino followed in 1993 with a deal with Sony and even bigger songs: "Ghetto Jam" and "Sweet Potato Pie." But Domino's fame came at a time he claimed he was from Long Beach, Calif.

Neither artist raised St. Louis' profile nationally the way Nelly finally did.

"In the beginning, with any new sound, people naturally don't want to embrace it," said Leah Rose, music editor at hip-hop magazine XXL. "Then Nelly came out with a sound that was totally new. After he went multi-platinum, everyone obviously embraced it." She said she hears the same melodic, sing-songy vibe from Nelly, Chingy and Jibbs, a sound that has become the St. Louis trademark.

"That's a good thing. It's definitely interesting the way a region develops a sound," Rose said. "It's also nice when someone comes out and sounds different from the sound they're known for."

A rap world, once puzzled and nonaccepting of rappers hailing from the Show-Me State, is clamoring for The Next Big Thing from the Lou.

In nearly every pocket of the St. Louis region, it seems, A&R representatives from New York, Los Angeles and elsewhere have descended in hopes of snatching up the next special find.

"If they don't milk it immediately, they'll keep an eye on the region for what's to come," sohh.com's Hall said. "Once a market starts to pop, research looks for that next thing, sees if there's something they can use."

Hall said it's great when a city can lock down its own segment of the hip-hop culture. Houston is doing that now with names such as Paul Wall and Mike Jones, and before them, Scarface and Geto Boys. What's going on in Houston is on par with what's happening in St. Louis.

One reason: Artists from those cities remain true to themselves, Hall said, rather than conform to what's hot in the industry.

"It's always been a matter of, 'This is who we are, and you come to us. I have this hot record called 'Country Grammar' come and sign me. I'm not gonna come knocking on your door,'" Hall said.

Nelly and his St. Lunatics drew the attention of Universal, which signed both to deals in the late '90s. The label was impressed with the hip buzz the St. Lunatics generated in St. Louis, building relationships with radio, retail, the clubs, and especially the streets.

"Be the hottest thing in your back yard," Hall said, "and let the music speak for itself."

St. Louis rappers bring a fun element that other regions lack, Hall said. "There's a real lack of party rappers. L.A. and New York rappers are more straightforward and hardcore," he said. "St. Louis guys have a good time with their music."

Still, some have criticized St. Louis rap music as being too light and insubstantial. But XXL's Rose said, "There's room for everything in this genre. We need everything to balance it out. It's not bad to have music that's fun."

Nelly has shown that the songs don't all have to be party anthems. Although he has done well with club bangers, such as "Hot in Herre" and "Grillz," he also scored with ballads, including "Dilemma" and "Over and Over," which was a country smash with Tim McGraw.

Chingy can claim a similar contrast with the thumping "Right Thurr" and comparatively quiet "One Call Away."

Chingy and Nelly remain St. Louis' hip-hop royalty; their songs currently are No. 1 and No. 2, respectively, on Billboard's Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs chart. But some say the time between 2000's "Country Grammar" and the new "Chain Hang Low" hasn't produced enough hit rappers, or that they're coming too slowly.

They point to promising names, such as Ebony Eyez, the first female rapper from St. Louis with a nationally released CD. Her "7 Day Cycle" last year didn't meet expectations. They look at The All Stars, whose "All City" CD last year didn't hit big nationally, despite its Universal Records affiliation. Or Da Hol' 9 of "Nina Pop" fame a few years ago, which didn't fully realize its potential.

But the current crop of St. Louis hip-hop makes now the most significant time for the music since 2000. Why the sudden onslaught?

Potzee, new to Atlantic, said: "Every label has either got somebody signed from St. Louis or is looking for somebody to sign from St. Louis. We are the next thing."

Potzee, who is working on his "Hongree" CD, added: "The flood will be in the next two years. There are still a lot of people to come."

Chingy, famed rap producer (above), and Nelly both have songs on the current Billboard Hot R&B/Hip Hop top 10.

Kucharova wins Miss World

By Monika Scislowska
Associated Press

Tatana Kucharova, an 18-year-old student from the Czech Republic, won the Miss World 2006 beauty contest on Saturday.

Kucharova defeated 103 other women in voting by a panel of judges and television viewers around the world during a two-hour finals ceremony in the Polish capital.

First runner-up in the 56th edition of the annual beauty pageant was Joana Valentina Boitor, a 17-year-old from Romania. Australia's Sabrina Houssami, 20, was third.

Wearing a long white dress, a teary Kucharova blew kisses to the 2,500 audience members in Warsaw's Congress Hall after she received her diamond crown from Miss World 2005, Unnur Birna Vilhjalmsdottir of Iceland.

Kucharova, a tall high school student with long blond hair, was born in Trnava and grew up in the town of Opocno. She told the judges she wants to attend university and then become a model. She likes tennis and horse riding and her personal motto is: "Always be an optimist."

A few white-red-and-blue Czech national flags floated in the cheering audience after the verdict was announced.

The organizers of the pageant said this year's finals offered the widest-ever participation of voters around the world via the Internet. Votes were also submitted in text messages sent from mobile phones. Warsaw is only the second European capital after London to host the Miss World contest, organizers say. The 104 finalists spent the past month touring the Eastern European country's cities, beaches, and countryside.

Last month, a white scarf was added to an artist's depiction of a mermaid with an exposed breast on a poster advertising the contest after officials in Warsaw's conservative administration deemed it too suggestive.

Nicholson stars in new mobster movie

By Rene Rodriguez
Mc Clatchy Newspapers

The rumors emanating from the set of "The Departed," Martin Scorsese's remake of the 2002 Hong Kong crime thriller "Infernal Affairs," had Jack Nicholson doing everything from rewriting script pages on a daily basis to eating bugs on camera and springing sex toys on his co-stars.

The finished film, which opens Friday, proves them all to be true — sort of.

Playing Boston mob boss Frank Costello, Nicholson does, in fact, chomp on an insect, surprise one of his henchmen (played by Matt Damon) with a prosthetic penis, and clearly improvises his way through certain scenes.

But it all serves to strengthen Nicholson's performance, adding madness and moral rot to his portrayal of a career criminal who, having amassed all the power and wealth anyone could possibly want, remains in the game for the sheer, sick thrill of it.

The role of Costello is what Nicholson describes as a "short part": He was on the set of "The Departed" for only 25 of its 99 shooting days. But his presence in the film is felt in every frame, serving as a demonic father figure to both Damon and Leonardo DiCaprio, cast as an undercover cop who infiltrates Costello's ranks.

And Nicholson's unpredictability — like suddenly setting fire to a table during a scene in which he is trying to intimidate DiCaprio's cop — forced his two younger co-stars to stay constantly on guard.

"As far as Jack was concerned, we kind of expected the unexpected," DiCaprio recently said at a press junket in New York to promote "The Departed." "For me, there were a number of different scenes where I had no idea what was going to happen. We all knew that he would have to grab the reins with this character and let him be free form, and we all were completely ready for that every day that we walked up on the set.

"He had a short run," DiCaprio added. "He filmed his scenes and then he left, but those were some of the most intense moments of the film for me, certainly, and as a human being, there were some memories that I will never forget."

Nicholson, 69, was unable to attend the junket due to a salivary gland infection ("I'm in good shape now," he says). But he offered to speak to The Miami Herald via telephone from his home in Los Angeles about "The Departed," his unorthodox approach to his character, his affinity for playing villains and, of course, his beloved Lakers.

Q: Part of the appeal of "The Departed" is watching you act in a Martin Scorsese movie for the first time. Why hadn't you guys worked together before?

A: Marty and I have known each other for 30 years. By now, he's a film buff. I'm a film buff, we both love movies like crazy and we had always talked about working together. This is just the first occasion that came along where we finally had a chance to do so and we were both extremely enthusiastic about doing it.

Q: When he first sent you the script, though, you turned it down.

A: I don't even know if it was Martin who sent me the script. I apparently had some contact with it even before that, because I had done a lot of comedies in a row and I was looking around for a nice juicy bad guy to play. But yes, when I first read it, there was no part there. Or at least no part I was interested in. And if I'm not going to do something, I always try to give a fast "no" so I don't hold people back or string them along or anything like that.

Q: What do you mean by "there was no part there"?

A: I could tell that they wanted me to play it because I would create some impression, even if there wasn't a part there. But that's not why I ever play what I call a short part: It has to be something that I'm really interested in doing. Then Leo DiCaprio, who is also an old friend of mine, said "I'd love for this to work out. Would you take a meeting with Martin and the writer William Monahan and I and see if there's anything we can do?" So we did that, we talked, and happened here as being definitive in that area, but it's certainly not that much different. Let's just say there was more graphic monstrous sexuality in the rough cut than there is in the final movie. But you know, that always happens. That's fine with me. You got the sexual element, didn't you?

Nicholson plays Boston mobster Frank Costello in Martin Scorsese's latest movie 'The Departed,' which is based on the 2002 Hong Kong film 'Internal Affairs.'

Q: Yeah, it comes through.

A: All right, as long as it's in there. I'm just an actor. I may want more, I may want less but like everyone else who makes movies, I serve the director. If Martin is happy, we're happy. (laughs)

Q: Both Damon and DiCaprio said that you kept them on their toes by doing unexpected things in your scenes with them, almost as if you were menacing them.

A: That's what they wanted me to help create with this character. A lot of the talk in this movie can be amusing, but basically there's murder at the bottom of all of it. And the overall theme of the picture is about power and not knowing who to trust. That's what gives it some resonance.

Q: Some people are going to say, you're just doing your Jack thing, playing another over-the-top villain.

A: That is partially a criticism, partially a compliment. I've had some amount of success playing different kinds of characters, but it would be crazy for me to think people wouldn't know it was "me" playing the part. (laughs) For instance, the other night I saw a little piece of "The Postman Always Rings Twice." They would have said the same thing about that, but those are two very different performances and two very different types of murderers. I always try to consider what is the character's position within the movie is. In "The Departed," I sort of played Costello as a king gone mad you know, absolute power corrupts absolutely.

Q: Was it simply a matter of expanding the role?

A: Yes, it was expanded I always feel uncomfortable asking somebody to expand the part but it also got more detailed and became more entertaining, for lack of a better word. We added to it and we also took away. It was a great creative experience. I just had a ball doing it.

Q: I've read that the sex toy Costello wears in the movie was also your idea.

A: Yes. (laughs) I felt that bringing a kind of monstrous sexuality to this particular monster would give him a freshness that you don't always see.

Q: A lot of that stuff appears to have been cut out of the final version, though.

A: I've long felt that people are more frightened about seeing sexuality in movies than they are about seeing death and violence in movies. That is true of filmmakers as well as audiences. I don't see what things progressed from there.

Kutcher has two movies in top 10 this past weekend

By David German
Associated Press

A cartoon bear and deer talked their way to the top of the box office as Martin Lawrence and Ashton Kutcher's animated comedy "Open Season" debuted with $23 million.

Kutcher also finished in second place with Disney's "The Guardian," in which he co-stars with Kevin Costner as Coast Guard rescue swimmers. The action drama opened with $17.7 million, according to studio estimates Sunday.

The previous weekend's leading flick, Paramount's "Jackass Number Two," fell to third place with $14 million, raising its 10-day total to $51.5 million.

The weekend's other new wide release, the MGM-Weinstein Co. comedy "School for Scoundrels," opened at No. 4 with $9.1 million. The movie stars Jon Heder ("Napoleon Dynamite") as a wimpy meter maid caught up in a war of wills with a con man (Billy Bob Thornton) who teaches an extreme confidence-building class.

Hollywood snapped out of a box-office lull that had persisted most of September. The top-12 movies took in $85.1 million, up 13 percent from the same weekend last year.

"It sort of broke the little mini-fall slump we were in," said Paul Dergarabedian, president of box-office tracker Exhibitor Relations.

Sony scored a record 11th movie debuting at No. 1 this year with "Open Season," featuring the voice of Lawrence as a domesticated bear uprooted from his cozy home and hurled into the wild, where he's befriended by a slick-talking deer (Kutcher).

"Open Season" was the debut release from Sony Pictures Animation, a unit the studio hopes to establish as a regular producer of digital cartoons alongside such industry pioneers as Pixar Animation and DreamWorks Animation.

"It's a great first step," said Yair Landau, president of Sony Pictures Digital. "It takes years and multiple films to build a brand, and certainly we'd like audiences to think of us in the pantheon."

Two Academy Award contenders about real-world leaders, Fox Searchlight's "The Last King of Scotland" and Miramax's "The Queen," opened strongly in limited release.

"The Last King of Scotland," with best-actor prospect Forest Whitaker as Ugandan dictator Idi Amin, took in $143,252 in four theaters over the weekend in New York City and Los Angeles. The film has grossed $172,389 since opening Wednesday.

Featuring James McAvoy as a Scottish doctor drawn into a dangerous relationship as Amin's personal physician, the film expands to more cities this week.

Opening Saturday, Stephen Frears' "The Queen," starring Helen Mirren as Queen Elizabeth II, took in a whopping $123,000 in just two days at three New York City theaters.

Costarring Michael Sheen as British Prime Minister Tony Blair, the film examines the furor over the royal family's aloofness in the wake of Princess Diana's death in 1997. "The Queen" expands to more theaters this Friday.

Estimated ticket sales for Friday through Sunday at U.S. and Canadian theaters, according to Exhibitor Relations Co. Inc. Final figures will be released Monday.

WRITE FOR ARTS
ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Radio personality to appear in documentary

By Stephen Becker
The Dallas Morning News

Al Franken has gone from impersonating Henry Kissinger on "Saturday Night Live" to hobnobbing with him at high-powered social events. But even as he bends the former secretary of state's ear, he can't help dusting off a little of his old impression.

That scene and many others in the documentary "Al Franken: God Spoke," capture the comedian-turned-political-commentator's ongoing reconciliation between his former career and his current calling. As he sings during the film a silly little ditty while rolling around on the floor at Air America's New York office: "I'm a little bit showbiz, I'm a little bit journalism."

"I think that obviously when people tune in to the radio show, they don't always want to be entertained. But it helps," Franken said during a phone conversation last week. "I'm a satirist. If you look at 'The Daily Show' and 'The Colbert Report' and Bill Maher — people like to ingest their politics with a little sense of humor."

"God Spoke" follows Franken during a frenzied period in his life. He had just been sued by Bill O'Reilly for putting the Fox News host's picture on his book "Lies and the Lying Liars Who Tell Them." Meanwhile, he was working to get Air America, the liberal radio network on which he hosts a daily talk show, off the ground in time for the 2004 presidential election.

Amid that busy-ness, he was approached by documentary makers Chris Hegedus and Nick Doob, who asked if they could film him. As it turns out, his other duties allowed him not to worry so much about the cameras being around.

"I was thinking the film wouldn't be effective if they could only film when great things were happening," Franken, 55, said. "I instinctively felt that they just needed to be filming when they were able to film."

As the cameras roll, Franken covers the Republican and Democratic national conventions, stumps for candidates, debates his nemesis, Ann Coulter, and hopes that President Bush's unseating by Sen. John Kerry is on the horizon. That final plotline didn't turn out the way Franken had hoped, but it did spark him to consider yet another career move: from political commentator to politician.

Al Franken, who originally got his start on Saturday Night Live, turned into a progressive radio DJ and will star in his own documentary.

Franken was a close friend of the late Minnesota Sen. Paul Wellstone, who died in a plane crash in 2002. At the time, he was locked in a re-election bid with then-St. Paul Mayor Norm Coleman. Coleman, a Republican, went on to win the election against former Vice President Walter Mondale, who replaced Wellstone on the ballot as the Democratic nominee at the last minute.

As "God Spoke" nears its conclusion, Franken is left considering a run for the Senate against Coleman when his seat comes up in 2008. It's a run that Franken says he is still contemplating, though he admits the jump from the peanut gallery to the stage is a potential minefield that would need to be navigated through careful self-reflection.

During a speech filmed for "God Spoke," Franken tells what he says was his father's favorite Buddy Hackett joke. It's hardly any bluer than what might be told in a junior high cafeteria, but it's not the type of humor a politician throws out while shaking hands and kissing babies.

"You know how sometimes you say a sentence that's never been said before?" Franken rhetorically asks. "I think this is a set of considerations that has never come to the fore before for a politician: Can I tell the Buddy Hackett joke?"

Judging from his response to his own question, the answer is no. In this battle between the internal comedian and the external public figure, the outside is winning.

"I think that there's something about letting people know that you're willing to not be self-indulgent and that you respect that there are people who don't want to hear [the anatomical punch line to Hackett's joke]. So that you're restraining yourself enough on something that really doesn't matter in order to signal that you know what does matter."

Despite that change in public appearance, the comedian in him doesn't sound like it is going away entirely. Franken says if he does decide to run for office, at the least he could find material for another book.

"I know if I ran for office I'd have plenty of spare time to write."

More men and women on the front lines are surviving life threatening injuries than ever before for one reason. We have the most elite nurses in the world. As a U.S. Air Force nurse, you receive the most advanced training and have access to the best medical technology on the planet. And whether you're treating Airmen on foreign soil or their families on bases here in the U.S., you can put all of that training to use. If you're interested in learning more about a better place to practice medicine, call or visit us online.
1-800-588-5260 • AIRFORCE.COM/HEALTHCARE

Delaware gives UNH a scare

A-10 FOOTBALL from page 10

Madison (3-1, 1-0 A-10) needed to take care of Virginia Military. He rushed for three first-half touchdowns in the 45-7 blowout.

In out-of-conference action, Maine (2-2 1-0 A-10) came up well short on the road against 1-A opponent Boston College, 22-0, and Rhode Island (2-2, 0-1 A-10) beat Brown, 28-21.

Rhode Island senior defensive back Raquan Pride collected six tackles and two interceptions earning him the rights to Defensive Player of the Week. Pride's second pick occurred on his team's own one-yard line late in the fourth quarter and was the key play in the contest.

All-Conference All the Time

The A-10 has six head-to-head matchups this coming Saturday, which should prove to be a very competitive day on the gridiron.

In a battle of conference heavyweights, No. 7 Richmond will travel to No.1 New Hampshire. Both teams are still undefeated for the time being.

In other conference play, No. 9 Massachusetts (3-1, 1-0 A-10), fresh off of a bye week, will take on William & Mary at home.

The rest of the A-10's ranked teams will also be in action as No. 15 James Madison will host Rhode Island (2-2, 0-1 A-10), No. 17 Delaware will travel to Northeastern (1-4, 0-2 A-10), and No. 19 Towson (4-0, 1-0 A-10) will host Maine.

Rounding out the pack, Villanova (1-3, 0-1 A-10) will take on Hofstra (2-2, 1-1 A-10)

David Ball remains tied with Jerry Rice on the career-touchdown list after failing to score on Saturday. He grabbed seven passes for 126 yards.

Road to the World Series begins today

Justin Morneau has gained MVP consideration while leading the Minnesota Twins to their fourth AL Central championship in five years. He's made a case for the league's top award by hitting .321 this season with 34 home runs and 130 RBIs.

PLAYOFFS from page 10

three years, but he gave up the go-ahead runs.

Detroit's loss coupled with Minnesota's 5-1 victory over the Chicago White Sox gave the Twins their fourth AL Central championship in five years. Playing at the earsplitting Metrodome, Minnesota will send rested ace Johan Santana (19-6) to the mound in Game 1 against Oakland curveballer Barry Zito (16-10).

"We match up well — great pitching, great defense. They're grinders, we're grinders," Athletics slugger Frank Thomas said. "I tell people, they have the ultimate home-field advantage. When you get 50,000 people in there, it's very noisy."

Nate Robertson (13-13) will pitch Detroit's opener against Yankees right-hander Chien-Ming Wang (19-6).

"Once we get to New York, we'll be ready to go," Tigers first baseman Sean Casey said. "It's a new season come Tuesday night."

The Cardinals held on to win the NL Central when Houston lost in Atlanta, so St. Louis and San Diego will meet in a rematch of their first-round series last year. The Cardinals cruised to a three-game sweep in that one, but they nearly collapsed down the stretch this season.

"All right, we'll be the underdogs all day long," said Carpenter, who will pitch Game 1 against the Padres' Jake Peavy. "In this situation anything can happen."

The NL East champion Mets tied the crosstown Yankees for the best record in the majors at 97-65, but their rotation looks shaky.

The Dodgers have Derek Lowe and Greg Maddux lined up to pitch the first two games in New York. Los Angeles ended the season on a seven-game winning streak, while the Mets won their final four.

"We have to come out and match their intensity," Mets outfielder Jeff Floyd said. "They've been playing to the wire with a lot of enthusiasm and a lot of heart the last couple of weeks. We shouldn't have a problem with that."

GW and Charlotte golfers earn accolades

A-10 GOLF from page 10

Finally, two subjectively judged factors — climate and coaches facilities — make up 12 and 14.5 percent of the score, respectively. Climate refers to the number of playable days between September and June — schools that suffer from long winters do not fare well in this category.

This recognition is not the first that the school has received in recent memory. Last season, Charlotte golfers won a slew of A-10 academic and performance honors. The list includes Ray Sheedy, who was named the 2005-06 A-10 Men's Golf Scholar-Athlete of the Year.

The team, led by fourth-year head coach and 2005-06 Atlantic 10 Golf Coach of the Year Jamie Green, also enjoyed success in 2003-04 and 2004-05 in Conference USA before joining the A-10 last year.

"With [the players'] hard work has come improvement and that improvement has produced results. Bottom line, these guys work extremely hard to improve and it shows," Green said on the A-10 Web site.

Golfer of the Week

Junior Trevor Murphy of Charlotte was named Atlantic 10 Golfer of the Week for his success in the VCU/Mattaponi Springs Shootout. Murphy led the 49ers to a third-place finish in the 54-hole tournament, placing sixth individually.

The Vermont native shot a seven-under-par 209 (69-72-68), including an eagle, and back-to-back birdies on the finishing holes. The 68 he shot in the final round is his best effort of the season thus far.

Rookie of the Week

The A-10 chose freshman Tyler Wendelken of George Washington as its Rookie of the Week. On Sept. 25, Wendelken shot an even-par 142 (72-70) to finish second at the Rehoboth Beach Fall Invitational among a field of 65 golfers. Charlotte is ranked No. 20 nationally in the rankings produced by Golf Week magazine. Rival Xavier is the only A-10 team close to Charlotte. The Musketeers sit at No.53. Clemson, Eastern Kentucky, Alabama, and USC are the top four teams in the nation.

Haynesworth given five-game suspension

By Teresa M. Walker
Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Tennessee Titans defensive tackle Albert Haynesworth was given a five-game suspension — the longest for on-field behavior in NFL history — for stomping on Dallas Cowboys center Andre Gurode's head and kicking him in the face Sunday.

The NFL said Monday that Haynesworth was suspended for flagrant unnecessary roughness. The suspension, which is without pay, is effective immediately. Haynesworth will be eligible to return Nov. 19 for the Titans' game at Philadelphia.

"There is absolutely no place in the game, or anywhere else, for the inexcusable action that occurred in yesterday's Titans-Cowboys game," NFL commissioner Roger Goodell said.

Haynesworth was penalized and ejected from the game early in the third quarter after stomped on Gurode's head, causing his helmet to pop off, then kicking him again following a 5-yard touchdown run by Julius Jones of the Cowboys.

Gurode received stitches above his forehead and beneath his eye.

"What I did out there was disgusting," Haynesworth said Sunday. "It doesn't matter what the league does to me. The way I feel right now, you just can't describe it."

Titans coach Jeff Fisher said Haynesworth's actions were unacceptable.

"I felt there needed to be some serious action taken from a discipline standpoint, and I believe that what the league has done right now is adequate," Fisher said.

Jones had just scored on a 5-yard run, putting Dallas up 20-6 in what wound up as a 45-14 victory. Gurode said they hadn't been talking nor having any exchanges that led to Haynesworth kicking him twice.

"In all my years of football, this has never happened to me. I've never been kicked in the face like this, and I've never seen anybody kick nobody else in the face," Gurode said.

Before Monday, the longest suspension for on-field behavior was two games for Green Bay defensive lineman Charles Martin for throwing Chicago quarterback Jim McMahon to the ground during a game on Nov. 23, 1986. McMahon landed on his shoulder.

It's the first suspension since 2002 when Rodney Harrison, then with San Diego, was suspended one game for hitting Oakland's Jerry Rice with his helmet. Earlier that season, Denver's Kenny Kennedy was suspended for a game for a helmet-to-helmet hit on Chris Chambers of Miami.

Epstein reflects on disappointing moves

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON — Boston Red Sox general manager Theo Epstein has a message for the fans who dissect every move he makes. This time, you're right.

"This is one of those years when I tend to agree with our critics more often than usual," he said after the Red Sox missed the playoffs for the first time in his tenure. "We have elements of a very, very good baseball club here but there is no doubt in the world that we need to do better ... I need to do a better job."

The Red Sox wrapped up their second season since their 2004 World Series title with an 86-76 record that left them 11 games behind the rival New York Yankees in the AL East and — more disturbingly — a game behind the Toronto Blue Jays.

Boston had finished second in the previous eight years. But it went 9-21 in August, including the Yankees' five-game sweep at Fenway Park that essentially ended any hopes of a fourth consecutive playoff appearance.

"We had some weaknesses. It was an imperfect team, to be sure," Epstein said. "Those weaknesses were not revealed in the first half when we were fresh and playing well ... But they were exposed in the second half and that's our fault."

Among the weaknesses were depth in the starting pitching and bullpen, where Jonathan Papelbon (35 saves, 0.92 ERA) was the biggest highlight. Curt Schilling (15-7, 3.97) and Josh Beckett (16-11, 5.01) were solid, but not the co-aces the team needed to make up for its shortcomings elsewhere in the rotation.

Those problems were exacerbated when Tim Wakefield, David Wells, Matt Clement and Jon Lester were injured. But it also didn't help that Epstein traded away Bronson Arroyo (14-11, 3.29 for Cincinnati) — who would have provided important pitching depth — in the spring.

Although David Ortiz continued to drive the offense, leading the AL with 137 RBIs and a franchise-record 54 homers, Manny Ramirez (.321, 35, 102) could be on the trading block again this offseason. Catcher Jason Varitek (.238, 12, 55) was ineffective and injured and backup Doug Mirabelli (.193, 6, 25) — ransomed back from San Diego just to catch Wakefield's knuckleball — offered little, even less when Wakefield was injured.

"Jason's had a tough year," Francona said in his office on Monday, a quiet clubhouse beyond his door. "He said, 'I've got a lot of work ahead of me.' That's good news, because he's a good worker."

Varitek's injury was devastating because it happened hours after the trading deadline, and he couldn't be effectively replaced. But neither Epstein nor Francona was ready to blame injuries for the team's disappointing finish.

"You can either handle it or you can't. At times, we weren't able to," the manager said. "I think it's too easy to say it was just injuries. We have to look further than that if we want to get better. The American League is so strong this year that if you have flaws it gets exposed pretty quick — like if your bullpen's a little beat up."

The Red Sox have already decided that Papelbon will be a starter in 2007. Epstein said pitching on a regular schedule will cause less strain on Papelbon's shoulder.

But still unresolved are:

Second base, where Mark Loretta is a free agent and prospect Dustin Pedroia is waiting. Shortstop, where Alex Gonzalez is a free agent after providing stellar defense all season.

Centerfield, where Coco Crisp (.264, 8, 36) didn't perform up to expectations or his predecessor, Johnny Damon. Crisp had surgery last month on a broken left index finger that is expected to be healed by the spring.

Left field, where Ramirez will be shopped — again. Finding a team to take on Ramirez's quirky persona and the last two years of what started as an eight-year, $160 million contract will be the tough part.

Closer, where Keith Foulke has struggled since starring in the championship season.

The overhaul began on Monday when the team decided not to renew the contracts of pitching coach Dave Wallace and hitting coach Ron Jackson. Francona said the team was not trying to blame the two, but merely to bring in a new "voice" that would be more effective.

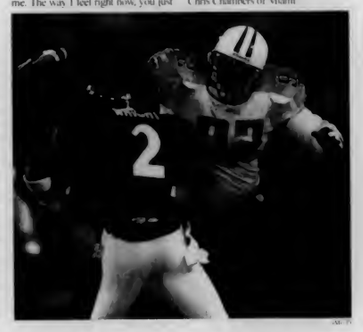
"Please don't write that I think it's their fault," Francona said. "It's not a very fun decision to make."

Al Nipper, who filled in for Wallace while he had hip surgery, will be a candidate for the job full-time. The former Red Sox pitcher was also the pitching coach in Boston and Kansas City in the 1990s.

"I think we have an obligation to see who is available," Epstein said. "Nip is right on that list."

Also Monday, Epstein said Victor Rodriguez had been hired as minor league hitting coordinator. Bench coach Brad Mills and third base coach DeMarlo Hale will be back.

Bill Haselman is deciding whether to return as first base coach or try to manage in the minor leagues.



The NFL suspended Albert Haynesworth (No. 92) for stomping on the face of Dallas Cowboys' center Andre Gurode on Sunday.

Baker out in Chicago

By Rick Gano
Associated Press

CHICAGO, Ill. — Dusty Baker ducked into the small, cave-like interview room underneath Wrigley Field for a final time. As usual, he was reflective and philosophical, even on the day he learned he was out as the Chicago Cubs' manager.

"I wish we could have gotten it done, but we didn't," Baker said. "I guess all things must come to an end and all things come to pass."

Baker's four-year run ended Monday when the team declined to renew his contract, ending a tumultuous span of less than 24 hours for a franchise that hasn't won a World Series since 1908.

One day earlier, team president and CEO Andy MacPhail resigned after 12 years.

Baker figured to be the guy to end the talk of curses and bad luck. After 10 years managing the San Francisco Giants, a trip to the World Series and three Manager of the Year awards, he had the background, the experience, the success, and the respect of players that many thought would finally bring a championship to the team long known as the lovable losers.

"I'm not a miracle man. I don't know if it will take two or three years or whatever, but we're dedicated to winning," Baker said when he was hired nearly four years ago.

He was laid back and often used "Hey man," to kick off his thoughts. His office featured soothing music, pleasing aromas and pictures of his successful career as a player and manager.

But after his first Cubs team collapsed in the 2003 NL championship series, when the World Series was a mere five outs away, he couldn't get them back to the playoffs.

Even though he led the Cubs to their first back-to-back winning seasons in more than three decades, his final two years turned into losers, including an NL-worst 66-96 mark this season.

"Obviously, history was almost changed for good in '03," general manager Jim Hendry said. "It's gone down a slippery slope the last two years and we all deserve a big part of the blame, not just him."

"It just didn't work and you have to make a change and move forward in the best interest of the organization," Hendry said. "He's a very special guy. It's been hard to watch him go through some of the things he had to go through."

Attention First-Year Students:

Have you completed MyStudentBody? It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, October 16th. For instructions, go to the University Health Services website,

www.umass.edu/uhs

Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

a grade dispute?
teacher, roomate or job concerns?
billing problems?
harassment?
...or any other University related problem?

THE OMBUDS CAN HELP

(confidentially, of course!)

students, faculty and staff are all welcome

823 Campus Center

Office hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.

telephone: 413-545-0567
fax: 413-545-9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Submit A Comic And Be Forgiven

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

						3
4			6		1	7
	7	2		4		8
	4	7				2
1			5	6		9
9					7	6
	3		1		2	7
7		8		3		5
2

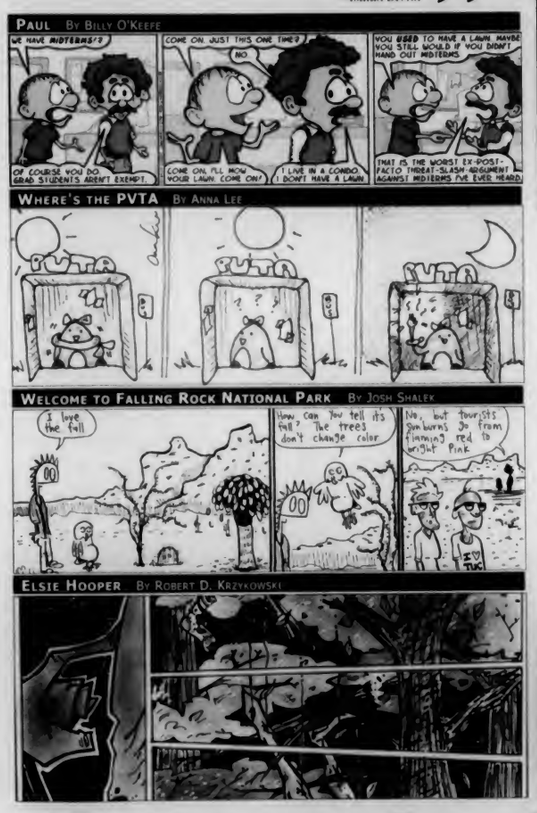
Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

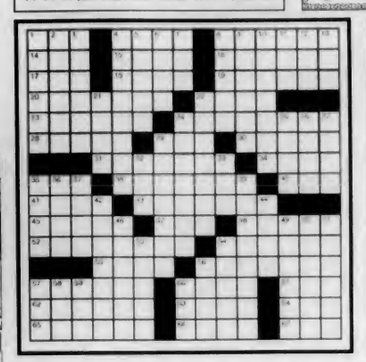
Quote of the Day

"Liberty to wolves is death to the lambs."

—Isaiah Berlin



Paul By Billy O'Keefe
We have midterms!?
Come on, just this one time?
No
You used to have a lawn, maybe you still would if you didn't hand out midterms
Of course you do, grad students aren't exempt.
Come on, I'll mow your lawn, come on!
I live in a condo, I don't have a lawn
That is the worst ex-post-facto threat-slash-argument against midterms I've ever heard.
Where's the PVTA By Anna Lee
Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek
I love the fall
How can you tell it's fall? The trees don't change color
No, but tourists jam barns to paint them red to attract them
Elsie Hooper By Robert D. Krzykowski



Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Keep it up you're doing just fine.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
If your fortune was not allocated from birth, try stealing.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
If you don't get out of your room, then that will be all you'll ever know.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Ask her the heck out already.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Make the best of every situation.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Be careful of those grades or someday you might occupy an alleyway.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't let school work become a burden. Unless of course you're just being lazy.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Quit all the nonsense. What are you thinking.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Take a shower, a predator has caught your scent.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Write a letter to yourself. Hide it so that you will find it five years from now.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Try finding a new hobby. Try also not to drop it.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Buy it up! Capitalist!

THANK YOU FOR READING
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

THE HARP

FALL SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
tonight - Trivia Night
wed - 1/2 price apps.
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the river 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate readers poll
owner & credit cards accepted
161 Sunderland Rd. N. Amherst
just north of the apartments
413-548-0900 www.theharp.net

Best Bar Around
Seven O's
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
Live Band
Oct. 7, 2006
Rock 201
Student Band Wanted!!
Call 413-665-7116
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-4759
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
Next To Cinemark Arts.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Our Nurses deserve Respect as Army Officers and call the shots! Guaranteed 2 to 3 ½ year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Auto for Sale

92 Toyota Camry Station Wagon $850 549-9639

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Employment

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day. Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Graphic Designer wanted. Undergraduate okay. Only requirements, talent and desire to work 5/10 hours/wk. Interesting Work. Competitive pay. Resume and portfolio to bob@buenoysano.com

Employment

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

Entertainment

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

Services

Pregnancy Testing. HIV Testing. Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Travel

Spring Break 2007 Celebration 20th anniversary w/ SunSplash Free Trip on 12 before Nov. 1 Free Meals & Parties. Group Discounts 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

Submit your classifeid online at www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UNH put to the test

By Mike Walsh
Collegian Staff

No. 1 New Hampshire (4-0, 1-0 Atlantic 10) survived its first scare of the season on Saturday to stay undefeated. The Wildcats squeaked by No. 17 Delaware (2-2, 1-1 A-10), 52-49, to pick up the road victory in what was clearly the game of the week.

In the victory, New Hampshire standout senior wide receiver David Ball hauled in seven catches for 126 yards, but failed to catch a touchdown pass. He remains tied with Jerry Rice for most career Division I-AA touchdown receptions.

A-10 Football

In the back-and-forth offensive shootout, the Wildcats' junior quarterback Ricky Santos was, once again, nothing short of fantastic. Santos completed 21 of 30 passes while throwing for 281 yards and three scores – but he did not stop there.

The light-footed junior also ran for over 100 yards and picked up two more touchdowns on the ground. The five-touchdown performance was enough to earn Santos the Offensive Player of the Week.

Not taking Santos' day for granted, the Wildcats' real hero of the day watted to make his impact felt until the fourth quarter. Junior running back Chris Ward caught a 13 yard touchdown pass early in the quarter and then — with only 2:41 to go in the game and his team up by only three points — broke free for a 45-yard touchdown scamper that put the Wildcats up by 10, sealing the win.

In the loss, Delaware senior running back Omar Cuff ran for 109 yards and four touchdowns, and caught eight balls for 79 yards.

The Rest of the Pack

Only two other ranked teams from the A-10 performed on Saturday and both were victorious.

No. 7 Richmond (4-0, 1-0 A-10) held Northeastern (1-4, 0-2 A-10) to a meager 25 rushing yards on 30 carries in a 12-7 triumph. Spiders' freshman Justin Forte blocked a punt and collected a safety on his way to Rookie of the Week honors.

Senior running back Alvin Banks was all No. 15 James

See A-10 FOOTBALL on page 8

UNH remained undefeated behind the performance of quarterback Ricky Santos. He was 21-of-30 for 281 yards and three touchdowns.

Youth no longer an excuse

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP) — For the past few years, the Boston Celtics have been looked upon as a young team that's developing. Now the Celtics say they're ready to grow up.

After missing the playoffs last year, the Celtics held onto their core of young players during the offseason — avoiding the temptation of trading youth for experience — and added a few veterans to the mix of what they hope will be the strong blend of talent.

"With so many young talented players, we have to learn how to mature and learn how to win," star forward Paul Pierce said Monday at the team's annual media day gathering. "I'm excited. I think we've got a lot of young talent — a lot of depth. Some of these guys I don't even look at as young. I look at them as young veterans."

Pierce is entering his ninth NBA season, forward Wally Szczerbiak, his eighth, and center Theo Ratliff, who was acquired during the offseason, is beginning his 12th. Besides that, no player that is likely to start the season playing significant minutes has been in the league more than three seasons.

Coach Doc Rivers is at the helm of a young Boston Celtics team. Only three players on the roster have played for three or more years.

"It's time to make something happen. We should take the challenge and grow up," said guard Delonte West, entering his third year. "We have to show that we're not [young]. Last year, there were too many smiles. We need to have some more frowns. Too many guys were just too happy to be with the Boston Celtics."

Last season proved to be frustrating for both Pierce and the Celtics. Despite Pierce's career highs in scoring (26.8) and shooting percentage (47.1), the team failed miserably down the stretch, losing seven of its last 10 games to fall out of playoff contention. It happened a few weeks after Pierce scored 30 or more points in 13 of 14 games.

At times, the team showed the promise that made coach Doc Rivers excited. But they couldn't put a streak together, never winning more than two consecutive games the entire season and finishing 33-49.

"We have to take this group of young guys and make it into something that'll work," Pierce said. "I want to show these guys what it takes to be a pro. A lot of guys are in their first, second or third year."

Rivers sees a very talented group and expects winning results.

"If you look at other teams like Dallas and San Antonio, I think they have raw and proven talent, and we're not there yet," Rivers said. "But for raw talent, I think we'd have to be right up there."

Boston also acquired point guard Sebastian Telfair from Portland during the offseason — along with Ratliff — to help run the offense and pick up the tempo.

But now they're talking about the need to have that talent turn into a winning record and playoff trip.

"You can only be young for so long," center Kendrick Perkins said. "This is my fourth year, and a couple of young guys' third, it's about time we start making things happen. There's no more room for excuses."

And making something happen means making the playoffs.

"I think we're going to be a better team than last year," said third-year forward Al Jefferson. "I see us in the playoffs."

Notes: Center Michael Olowokandi was in camp as a free agent tryout. After being picked up in a trade with Szczerbiak from Minnesota on Jan. 27, Olowokandi played in 16 games, averaging 2.8 points and 2.6 rebounds and 10.4 minutes a game. ... Pierce expects to see some strong competition for positions in camp with all the young players. "Besides Wally [Szczerbiak] and me, I think we're going to have some good battles."

—Associated Press

Baseball's second season gets underway

By Mike Fitzpatrick
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The San Diego Padres got their wish: a chance to start the playoffs at home. The Los Angeles Dodgers got a cross-country ticket and a meeting with the New York Mets.

Trevor Hoffman and the Padres hung on to win the NL West on Sunday, earning home-field advantage in the first round against Albert Pujols, Chris Carpenter, and the St. Louis Cardinals.

"We don't come out in spring training saying we want to win the wild card," Padres first baseman Adrian Gonzalez said. "We come in saying we want to win the West. We wanted to start off at home. We didn't want to fly across the country and play the Mets in New York. Being able to start out at home is big."

All the other division series matchups were also settled on the final day of the regular season. The playoffs begin Tuesday, when AL West champion Oakland visits Minnesota at 1:09 p.m. The Cardinals-Padres opener is next, and the Detroit Tigers face Derek Jeter and the Yankees in New York that night.

All four first-round series are a best-of-five format.

San Diego's 7-6 victory over Arizona earned the Padres their second consecutive NL West crown and left Los Angeles with the wild card. The Dodgers open Wednesday afternoon at Shea Stadium against a Mets team missing injured pitcher Pedro Martinez.

"One benefit we have is we faced them a short time ago," Los Angeles outfielder J.D. Drew said. "It will be a tough matchup. Their bullpen is pretty much set. I'm sure the loss of Martinez is disheartening to them."

After wasting several chances to wrap up an AL Central title, the slumping Tigers slipped to a wild-card spot. Now, their first postseason game since 1987 will be at Yankee Stadium.

So if the Tigers want to extend their surprising season with a playoff run, they'll have to get past a powerful New York lineup that features Jeter, Johnny Damon, Alex Rodriguez, and Bobby Abreu — among other All-Stars.

"It's a lot easier to beat them three out of five than four out of seven," Detroit manager Jim Leyland said. "We needed our pitchers to give us more than we got in the last five days. If we keep pitching like this, nothing else is going to matter."

The Tigers pulled out all the stops Sunday as they tried to win their division and earn home-field advantage in the first round. But they squandered a six-run lead against last-place Kansas City and lost 10-8 in 12 innings for their fifth consecutive defeat.

Rookie starter Justin Verlander helped the Tigers reach their first postseason appearance since 1987. This season he was 17-9 with a 3.63 ERA.

All-Star starter Kenny Rogers came out of the bullpen for his first regular-season relief appearance in

See PLAYOFFS on page 8

UMass has success in Textile Regatta

By Kevin Collins
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts rowing team suited up for its first races of the season on Sunday at the Textile Regatta in Lowell, Mass.

The fall rowing season marks the beginning of an NCAA record 12th straight Atlantic 10 title defense for the Minutewomen — who are ranked No. 2 in the Mid-Atlantic Region by the NCAA Division I Rowing committee.

When adding together rankings from all boats, only Princeton has a higher team total.

UMass coach Jim Dietz feels that despite 11 straight conference titles, the best has yet to come from his program.

"I think it proves our program is really going in the right direction," Dietz said. "The quality of our depth is really coming up. It is a big step for us moving up to the No. 2 overall ranking in the region."

The Textile Regatta proved to be a testament to the team's tremendous depth. Sarah Marsan and Hannah Brewster won the Open Double with a time of 17:43.04, while Boat B — captained by Ellen Maskrey and Gabrielle Papineau — took second with a time of 18:11.11.

The women's Novice 8 consists of Sara Albert, Jenna Oelschlegel, Chelsea Finnegan, Kelsey Olesburg, Samantha Smith, Allison Donzanti, Julie Pulda and Jessica Romain.

Coxswain Dana Pulda finished first with a time of 19:53.11. Worcester Polytechnic Institute finished second with a time of 20:42, with Simmons College close behind at 21:46.88.

The Open Quad, made up of Jaime Dicke, Haley Fitzgerald, Tarra Guinan and Kristen Boyce, also finished first for the Minutewomen. The boat finished with a time of 20:15.99 followed by two Duxbury Maritime boats.

The UMass Lightweight 4 finished third behind Community Rowing Incorporated (18.38.40) and MIT (18.48.48) with a time of 19:31.70. The boat was made up of Annie Malinkevich, Sarah Potts, Abby Lively and Maria Arcari. The coxswain was Jeannie Le Doux.

The Women's Single was littered with Minutewomen. The Riverside Boat Club's Gretchen Horner Wright won the event with a time of 20:20.54. However, UMass had rowers in second, third, and fourth.

Hannah Brewster finished second with a time of 20:48.300. Sarah Marsan finished third with a time of 22:01.11, and Annie Malinkovich third at 23:06.554.

"It was a great day for the new UMass novice crews as well as Hanna Brewster and Sara Marsan in the women's sculling events," Dietz said.

In the team's sixth and final event of the day, the women's pair, Ellen Maskrey and Gabrielle Papineau, finished second to a boat from MIT. Maskrey and Papineau came in with a time of 20:05.28 while MIT rowed the course in 19:41.71.

The Minutewomen were also scheduled to compete in the Open 8. However, Dietz felt it best to call it a day with the inclement weather.

"By the end of the day it was rainy and cold," Dietz said. "With the dropping temperatures we scratched the Women's Open 8 and went home."

Overall the team is in seemingly great shape heading into next week's Housatonic Regatta in Derby, Conn.

Charlotte golf ranked No. 22 in the nation

By Michael King
Collegian Correspondent

Golf Digest Magazine chose Charlotte as the 22nd best collegiate golf program in the country.

The 49ers are no strangers to success on the golf course. They are the defending Atlantic 10 Tournament champions, and the team also qualified for the NCAA Tournament at the end of last year's season.

A-10 Golf

The rankings are based on a combination of statistics and several subjective determinations. In addition to scores, stroke averages, and victories, the rankings take into consideration other factors that make a successful golf program.

Therefore, winning does not necessarily guarantee a spot in the Top 10, according to the magazine's methodology. This is the reason why defending NCAA Division I national champion Oklahoma State is ranked nine spots behind Charlotte.

But winning is an important criterion, as it comprises 40 percent of a team's score for the rankings.

Next is player growth — the improvement of a player's scores from his freshman to senior year. This statistic makes up 19.5 percent of the overall score.

Each school's academic reputation consists of 14 percent. The magazine uses the overall rating from U.S. News & World Report's 2006 guidebook, America's Best Colleges.

See A-10 GOLF on page 8

Senior Ray Sheedy is one reason Charlotte's golf program has received praise. He was named 2005-06 A-10 Men's Golf Scholar-Athlete of the Year.

Sports Fact of the Day

This year marks just the fourth time in MLB's 134-year history that no pitcher won 20 games. The last time it occurred was in 1995 when Greg Maddux and Mike Mussina led the league with 19 wins apiece.

FOR SIT TO STABILIZE ROCKY PROGRAM PAGE 12

THE 'TRIBE' SLAYS THE STAGE IN WORCESTER PAGE 9

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 78 LO: 50 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 4, 2006

North Apartment contractor under fire

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Correspondent

Wayne J. Griffin Electric Incorporated, a contractor involved with the construction of the North Area Residences at the University of Massachusetts, is under fire from members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (IBEW) Local 7 of Springfield for low quality work on the project and undercutting union bids.

Griffin, a non-union contractor based out of Holliston, Massachusetts, has a record of being a low bidder for projects in Western Massachusetts, routinely bidding 20 percent lower than the next lowest bid, according to Robert Wilson, the Assistant Business Agent for IBEW Local 7.

For the North Area Residences project, Griffin bid $1,447,000 lower than the union contractor, Wilson said.

This is why, in Wilson's mind, Griffin has won "just about every large job in western Massachusetts," including the Federal Courthouse in Springfield, the Chicopee Comprehensive High School and Women's Jail in Chicopee, and the Franklin County Jail.

"You name it and he's getting it," Wilson said. "A lot of these [electrical] jobs are maybe $6 million and he will be a million dollars lower."

Griffin was unavailable for contact on the matter and failed to return phone calls from the Daily Collegian.

Wilson said that as the electrical work on the dorms was becoming delayed, he gave Griffin a list of smaller local union contractors with the manpower to help finish the job on time. Instead, Griffin brought in electrical workers from outside the region, including help from temporary work agencies. It is a practice that, according to Wilson, is detrimental to all electricians in Western Massachusetts, union and non-union.

Wade Garrison, a Journeyman Electrician and member of IBEW Local 7, worked on the project at UMass and recounts seeing a tremendous amount of temporary help towards the end of the project. Many of these electricians, according to Garrison, were non-union contractors.

"They had a deadline to meet," he said of Griffin. "I was teamed up with a guy from Charlton who was basically a contractor in his own right."

See NORTH on page 5

Wayne Griffin, a contractor for the North Apartments (above), is under fire for his unethical work habits.

UMass breaking ground

UMass officials, including Chancellor John Lombardi and UMass President, Jack Wilson, broke ground yesterday for a $25 million Studio Arts Building, which will facilitate painting, printmaking, sculpture, and will include fully-equipped studios.

NIH funds network for medical research

By Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The government gave a dozen top universities about $100 million Tuesday to set up a network to speed scientific discoveries into better health care — and try to transform how medical research is done.

The idea: As medicine becomes increasingly specialized, it is harder than ever for scientists from different fields to share the information needed to turn laboratory discoveries into new treatments, and then get those advances into private doctors' offices. And for universities, scientific research can be as competitive as sports.

So the National Institutes of Health created a national consortium of universities that are supposed to cooperate instead, and remove barriers to turning medical research into health care reality.

Tuesday's announcement was the down payment. By 2012, the NIH plans to have 60 academic health centers on board, and hopes to provide them with a total of $500 million a year.

NIH Director Elias Zerhouni called the network crucial in an era of burgeoning technology, including almost daily discoveries of the genetic underpinnings of disease.

"We need to accelerate the way we ... bring all these discoveries from the bench to the bedside and make sure they reach the people," he said Tuesday.

How can universities cooperating speed research?

Zerhouni noted that it took a 10-year study to overturn the dogma that hormone therapy after menopause was good for women's overall health, when in fact the drugs increase women's risk of breast cancer, strokes and heart attacks. With the new research network, large university hospitals can pool their patients to spot medication side effects — or fill studies of rare diseases or new drugs — far faster than today.

For example, under the new NIH project the University of Pittsburgh aims to create a pool of potential volunteers for such studies by asking virtually everyone who sees a doctor at any of Pitt's 19 affiliated hospitals of 350 outpatient offices to join a registry. Physicians then can check medical records at a glance to find qualified study candidates.

The project will require an overhaul for universities steeped in the tradition of a lone scientist plugging away in a laboratory, said Dr. David Kessler, dean of medicine at the University of California, San Francisco, part of the network.

"We're talking about creating a new breed of scientist," said Kessler, who as former head of the Food and Drug Administration knows the regulatory hurdles to creating new therapies. "Right now there are not enough people who are pursuing research that connects the dots between what is done in our basic science labs and what can directly benefit patients."

The focus isn't just on developing new treatments. Duke University's Dr. Robert Califf said the NIH network will fund much needed research to learn why doctors and patients don't follow proven strategies — such as why the drugs proven to best control blood pressure and cholesterol are vastly underused.

The first 12 network participants will be funded for five years, for a total of about $700 million.

CDC's call for more HIV testing has support

By Nicole Boonsiriseth
Collegian Staff

"We need to have the right resources to make this a reality," says Leslie Laurie, CEO of Tapestry Health Systems Inc. of Western Massachusetts.

Laurie is responding to the recommendation recently announced by the U.S. Center for Disease Control for increased HIV testing in Americans ages 13 to 64 to heighten the prevention of the virus throughout the nation.

"The new guidelines call for routine testing during regular hospital visits, and if fully implemented, 100 to 200 million Americans will be tested," said Ron Spaar, chief financial officer of OraSure Technologies—a company that sells rapid-result HIV tests in the U.S.

Although the new policy may help identify the 25 million people who are infected with HIV but are unaware of it, according to Leslie Laurie, CEO of Tapestry Health Systems, Inc. of Western Massachusetts, prevention is more than just making new guidelines for people to follow.

"People refuse to get tested because they're not psychologically at a place to hear the information that comes along with the procedure," Laurie explains. "Many people feel as if it's a death sentence. When the epidemic first broke out, we didn't have much hope. Today, there are all kinds of excellent medicines to help maintain a healthy lifestyle for an HIV patient," she continues. "Education on the issue needs to spread because many are unaware that there is treatment for this virus—with medicine and counseling."

"This isn't something where we can just simply say, 'we need this,'" says Laurie. "We also need the right resources to help the prevention effort." The founder of Tapestry Health Systems Inc. expresses the importance of counseling resources to encourage people to get tested. She also adds that there needs to be a financial support for those seeking help, since current HIV treatment can cost up to $10,000 a year.

According to the Massachusetts

The CDC recommends an increase in HIV tests to identify the 25 million people who are infected with HIV but don't know it.

Department of Public Health, 28 percent of 2,770 HIV positive people diagnosed between 2002 to 2004, were diagnosed with AIDS within two months, a fact that suggests that they were afflicted for some time without knowing their status.

"One in four people are HIV positive and still don't know it," says Laurie.

"One of the biggest misconceptions is that only gay men could contract the virus but they're not," she continues. "Individuals using dirty needles or people whose partners have shared needles can contract the virus. Today, 40 percent

See HIV on page 5

Testing athletes' hearts may cut deaths

By Carla K. Johnson
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Testing athletes' hearts dramatically lowered the rate of sports-related sudden cardiac deaths in Italy, a study suggests, but experts said it was not clear such an effort would have as big a payoff in the United States.

There are roughly two dozen sports-related deaths of high school and college students from sudden cardiac arrest in the United States each year. Only a handful of schools require electrocardiogram, or EKG, screening.

Since 1982, Italy has required all athletes to get EKGs for hidden heart problems before playing competitive sports, and about 2 percent are disqualified because of heart problems.

Researchers from the University of Padua Medical School analyzed trends in sudden deaths from heart problems before and after the program began. They looked at both athletes and non-athletes, ages 12 to 35, in the Veneto region of northeastern Italy between 1979 and 2004.

They found that, among athletes, the rate of sudden deaths fell by 89 percent over the 25 year-period. The rate among non-athletes did not change.

Dr. Barry Maron, an expert on heart problems in athletes at the Minneapolis Heart Institute Foundation, praised the research, which appears in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association.

"This is an important paper," Maron said. "The findings show for the first time that pre-participation screening of young athletes is effective, not only in recognizing otherwise unsuspected heart disease, but also because that recognition actually reduces the risk of sudden cardiac death during sports."

Maron said it would be difficult and unlikely for the United States to gear up for a similar program to screen what he estimated would be 10 million people a year.

Each year in the United States, there are 20 to 25 sudden cardiac deaths among high school and college athletes, according to data collected by the National Center for Catastrophic Sport Injury Research.

A few U.S. universities now run screening programs that include EKGs, said Ron Courson, director of sports medicine at the University of Georgia, which has done the tests on would-be athletes for the past 12 years.

During that time, only one athlete has been disqualified because of detected heart problems, although about 10 to 12 students are found to have minor problems. They are treated and allowed to play, Courson said. The testing costs about $20,000 a year, he said.

"In the U.S., the leading cause of death in athletic systems is cardiac arrests," he said, applauding the Italian study. "The more data we have on this, the better equipped we are to make a decision."

An accompanying editorial raised questions about the study, noting that the sudden cardiac death rate before Italy's screening program was high compared to rates found in other studies. And the lowest annual death rate achieved after screening was similar to the U.S. rate for high school and college athletes from 1988-03.

The editorial also noted that different heart conditions are the most frequent cause of exercise-related sudden death in the two countries.

"I think we have to be very cautious," said editorial co-author Dr. Paul Thompson of the University of Connecticut. "You can actually cause problems by screening. There are a lot of abnormalities out there that, if left alone, won't actually do harm, and screening could lead to people getting procedures done that aren't necessary."

He added: "There's a large medical-industrial complex willing to embrace screening, and they just happen to sell the tools used for screening."

Drs. Gaetano Thiene and Domenico Corrado, co-authors of the Italian study, said their country's higher mortality rates can be explained by the older age and higher proportion of men compared to the U.S. athletes.

Terror inmates' mail goes unread

BY LARA JAKES JORDAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON—Mail for convicted terrorists and other dangerous federal inmates isn't being fully read by prison authorities and that is a risk to national security, a Justice Department review concluded Tuesday.

The U.S. Bureau of Prisons is supposed to translate and screen all mail to and from the highest-risk inmates — including terrorists, gang members and spies — for evidence of criminal activity. But that target was not being met consistently at 10 federal prisons and detention centers surveyed by the Justice Department's inspector general.

"The threat remains that terrorist and other high-risk inmates can use mail and verbal communications to conduct terrorist or criminal activities while incarcerated," concluded the report by Inspector General Glenn A. Fine. It urged the Bureau of Prisons to correct quickly the security gap, including putting tracking systems in place to ensure all high-risk inmate mail is read and analyzed.

A Bureau of Prisons spokesman said the agency agrees with the review's recommendations in whole or in part. But it is largely too cash-strapped to afford enough staff to sort through the thousands of letters and other pieces of mail federal prisons receive each week.

What Bureau of Prisons Director Harley G. Lappin described to inspectors as searching for "a needle in a haystack."

Experts fear that a new generation of homegrown terrorists is being bred in prison and, after release, they will seek guidance from Islamic extremists still behind bars.

The Justice Department's mail investigation was spurred, in part, after three convicted terrorists at a federal maximum-security prison in Florence, Colo., were found to have written an estimated 90 letters between 2002 and 2004 to Islamic extremists — some with links to the March 11, 2004, attacks on commuter trains in Madrid. Some of the letters later surfaced in the hands of a terror suspect who used them to recruit suicide operatives.

High-risk U.S. inmates have used the prison mail system to promote terrorism and other criminal activity, said the Justice Department.

The Madrid attacks killed 191 people and wounded more than 1,700.

Following that discovery, the Bureau of Prisons took steps to limit high-risk inmates' mail and telephone calls, the inspector general found. It also hired more Arabic translators and sought to better analyze mail.

Hastert dismisses call

BY ANDREW TAYLOR
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON—House Speaker Dennis Hastert brushed aside resignation talk Tuesday, even as the Republicans' No. 2 House leader contradicted him in the page scandal. President Bush gave Hastert a vote of confidence as the party struggled to contain pre-election fallout.

Hastert, an Illinois Republican, said he wouldn't resign as speaker, the top official in Congress and second in the line of succession to the presidency, in the controversy over Rep. Mark Foley's salacious computer exchanges with former pages. Foley resigned last Friday.

"I'm not going to do that," Hastert said when asked by conservative talk show host Rush Limbaugh whether he would resign.

Hastert sought to blame Democrats for leaking sexually explicit computer instant messages between Foley and former pages from 2003.

"We have a story to tell, and the Democrats have — in my view have — put this thing forward to try to block us from telling the story. They're trying to put us on defense," Hastert said.

"It's absolutely not true," said Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., at an event in Sunrise, Florida. Pelosi said it was too early to call for Hastert's resignation pending an Ethics Committee investigation.

ABC News, which first reported the exchanges, says they were provided to it by former pages. It said its initial report last Thursday about e-mails between Foley and a Louisiana teenager prompted other former pages to come forward with more sexually graphic electronic messages.

ABC News said Tuesday it had obtained additional instant messages.

"Can I have a good kiss goodnight," Foley was said to have messaged in one. A boy responded with cyber symbols and "kiss-".

In another message, Foley invited the teenager to his Capitol Hill town house "for a few drinks" even though he knew the boy was under the legal drinking age. "we may need to drink at my house so we dont get busted," Foley messaged.

Foley's attorney, David Roth, said at a news conference in West Palm Beach, Fla., that he had no reason to believe that Foley "ever had teenage boys at his house to have alcohol."

Roth said Foley, 52, had himself been molested between the ages of 13 and 15 by a clergyman but added that Foley had never had sexual contact with a minor. He said Foley, who had kept his sexual orientation private, wanted people now to know that he is gay.

The House ethics committee, meanwhile, scheduled its first meeting on Foley's actions for Thursday, in closed session. The House voted last Friday to direct the ethics panel to inquire into the matter.

Hastert told reporters on Monday that he was not aware of the complaint against Foley until last Friday. He acknowledged his staff was made aware of it last fall, but he said there was "no reason to bump it up to me at that time."

However, both Majority Leader John Boehner and New York Rep Tom Reynolds, who heads the House Republicans' re-election campaign, said they had spoken with Hastert about a complaint concerning a former page from Louisiana last spring after being told about it by Rep. Rodney Alexander, R-La., who had sponsored the teen.

"I believe I talked to the speaker and he told me it had been taken care of," Boehner said in an interview Tuesday on radio station WLW in Cincinnati. "My position is it's in his corner, it's his responsibility."

Reynolds insisted several times in a Monday night news conference in his Buffalo-area district that "I took it to the speaker" this spring when Alexander also mentioned the inappropriate e-mail to him.

Foley, R-Fla., resigned abruptly on Friday after being confronted with the 2003 instant message exchanges. He has since checked into an alcohol rehabilitation program at an undisclosed location.

His departure left behind a trail of questions concerning the e-mails and instant messages he had sent pages over an extended period of time. Beyond the details of his actions, Republican leaders fear the impact on the Nov. 7 elections, and the possible loss of their House majority.

Bush weighed in for the first time Tuesday. Speaking at a Stockton, Calif., elementary school, he said he was disgusted by the Foley revelations and voiced support for Hastert.

"I know that he wants all the facts to come out," the president said.

Meanwhile, The Washington Times, a newspaper with a consistently conservative editorial page, called for Hastert's resignation Tuesday, saying he was either grossly negligent "or he deliberately looked the other way in hopes that a brewing scandal would simply blow away."

Conservative activist Richard A. Viguerie kept up the drumbeat from the right, calling for Hastert to step down. "The fact that they just walked away from this, it sounds like they were trying to protect one of their own members rather than these young boys," Viguerie said on Fox News' "Studio B."

But the Christian Coalition weighed in with a letter saying the organization "stands behind" Hastert.

The Arlington Group, a coalition of 70 conservative groups, said, "We are very concerned that the whole truth concerning this episode be reported, including when House leadership or other members from either party knew of this situation."

Boehner and Reynolds said that while they learned of overly friendly e-mails from Foley to the one Louisiana page this spring, they had no idea that the congressman had sent other, sexually explicit messages, to additional pages.

Neither lawmaker said they read the 2005 message from Foley, described as "sick" by the boy. The message asked for a photograph and mentioned a different teen who was in "great shape."

Foley had been originally confronted in the fall of 2005 about his communications with the one page. According to a weekend statement issued by Hastert's office, Page Board Chairman John Shimkus, R-Ill., and the House clerk met with the Florida lawmaker and told him to "immediately cease any communication" with the page.

We want you to succeed, and all the signs say GO. That's why we've created an environment that's conducive to personal and professional growth and success. At Ernst & Young, we offer award-winning learning tools and a range of experiences, so that you keep moving ahead–from your very first day. So visit us on campus, or at ey.com/us/careers.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2006

Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

Gunman kills five girls

BY MARK SCOLFORO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

QUARRYVILLE, Pa.—The gunman who killed five girls in an Amish schoolroom confided to his wife during the siege that he molested two relatives 20 years ago when he was boy and was tormented by dreams of doing it again, authorities said Tuesday.

Investigators also said that Charles Carl Roberts IV, 32, plotted his takeover of the school for nearly a week and that the items he brought — including flexible plastic ties, eyebolts and lubricating jelly — suggest he may have been planning to sexually assault the Amish girls before police closed in.

"It's very possible that he intended to victimize these children in many ways prior to executing them and killing himself," State Police Commissioner Jeffrey B. Miller said. But Roberts "became disorganized when we arrived," and shot himself in the head.

Holding up a copy of the gunman's suicide note at a packed news conference, Miller also suggested that Roberts was haunted by the death of his prematurely born daughter in 1997. The baby, Elise, died 20 minutes after being delivered, Miller said.

Elise's death "changed my life forever," the milk truck driver and father of three wrote to his wife. "I haven't been the same since it affected me in a way I never felt possible. I am filled with so much hate, hate toward myself hate towards God and unimaginable emptyness it seems like everytime we do something fun I think about how Elise wasn't here to share it with us and I go right back to anger."

The state police commissioner identified the demons in Roberts' head a day after the shooting rampage shattered the sense of calm in Lancaster County's bucolic Pennsylvania Dutch Country, where the Amish live a peaceful, turn-the-other-cheek existence in an 18th-century world with no automobiles and no electrical appliances.

"He certainly was very troubled psychologically deep down and was dealing with things that nobody else knew he was dealing with," Miller said.

The death toll rose to six Tuesday — including the gunman — when two girls died of their wounds.

During the standoff, Roberts told his wife in a cell phone call from the one-room schoolhouse that he molested two female relatives when they were 3 to 5 years old, Miller said. Roberts would have been around 11 or 12 at the time. Also, in a suicide note left for his family, he said he "had dreams about doing what he did 20 years ago again," Miller said.

Police could not immediately confirm Roberts' claim that he molested two relatives. Family members knew nothing of molestation in his past, Miller said. Police located the two relatives and were hoping to interview them.

Roberts had planned the attack for nearly a week, buying plastic ties from a hardware store on Sept. 26 and several other items less than an hour before entering the school, Miller said.

The crime bore some resemblance to an attack on a high school in Bailey, Colo., where a 53-year-old man took six girls hostage and sexually assaulted them before fatally shooting one girl and killing himself. That attack occurred last Wednesday, the day after Roberts began buying materials for his siege.

Using a checklist that was later found in his pickup truck, Roberts brought to the school three guns, a stun gun, two knives, a pile of wood for barricading the doors, and a bag with 600 rounds of ammunition, police said. He also had a change of clothing, indicating he had planned a long siege, police said.

He sent the boys and several adults away and bound the girls together in a line at the blackboard. Miller on Tuesday revealed that one of the girls was able to escape with the boys.

A two-by-four piece of lumber found in the school had 10 large eyebolts spaced about 10 inches apart, suggesting that Roberts may have planned to truss up the girls and sexually assault them, Miller said. "It's important to note that we had 10 victims at that time that were in the school," he said.

The girls left in the room were shot at close range shortly after police arrived, Miller said.

"We're quite certain, based on what we know, that he had no intention of coming out of there alive," Miller said.

At the time Roberts' wife received the phone call, she was attending a meeting of a prayer group she led that prayed for the community's schoolchildren.

The victims were identified as Naomi Rose Ebersole, 7; Anna Mae Stoltzfus, 12; Marian Fisher, 13; Mary Liz Miller, 8; and her sister Lena Miller, 7. Stoltzfus' sister was among the wounded.

Four other girls were in critical condition and one was in serious condition. They ranged in age from 6 to 13.

A group of men talk to a police officer on Mines Road in Nickel Mines, Pa., yesterday, near the Amish schoolroom where a gunman opened fire on a dozen girls.

UMass police log

Sunday Sept24

Three individuals were observed in Lot 43 by a police officer as they proceeded to check door handles of parked vehicles. Sean Martin, one of the individuals in the lot, was seen breaking and entering into a vehicle by police. Martin was arrested and charged with breaking and entering

Monday Sept25

Police were called to Herter Hall after a local alarm sounded in the building. Upon entry into the building, officers noticed a projector hanging by its wires. It is believed an individual broke into the building with the intention of stealing the projector but ran at the sound of alarms. Fingerprinting of the projector is pending.

Tuesday Sept26

Emergency medical assistance was called to Washington Hall when a female resident suffered of acute abdominal pain. She was transferred to CDH and her status is unknown

Wednesday Sept27

A suspicious odor caused police to serve Michael Roger LeFleur with a search warrant in Johnson Hall. An officer along with a canine unit carried out the search and found marijuana. LeFleur was charged with a class D drug charge.

Thursday Sept28

Due to previous suspicions, police served a David OBrien with a search warrant in John Adams Hall. During the search officers found large amounts of marijuana and psilocybin mushrooms. OBrien was charged with possession to distribute and a class C drug charge

After a vandalism incident on the 17th floor of the Coolidge tower, Maurice Saba was arrested and charged with destruction of property and fined $250. Saba was found bleeding profusely from his hands after punching and breaking a mirror in the men's bathroom. No alcohol was involved in this incident

Friday Sept29

A warrant was granted for Chang Kim's dorm room in John Quincy Adams Hall where police found large amounts of marijuana. Kim was charged with possession with intent to distribute and a class D drug offense

—Compiled By Michelle Osorio

Nurse enters plea

BY ANGELA BRUSH
ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT WORTH, Texas—A former hospital nurse pleaded no contest Tuesday to killing 10 patients nearly six years ago by injecting them with a drug used to temporarily halt breathing.

Vickie Dawn Jackson, 40, will be sentenced to life in prison, the same sentence she faced if she had been convicted by a jury in San Angelo.

Authorities have not offered a motive for the slayings.

Defense attorney Bruce Martin said Jackson decided to enter the plea because her adult daughter was on the state's witness list.

"She has never admitted guilt and she was never convicted by a jury," Martin said. "And her daughter never had to testify against her. Those things meant something to her."

Jackson was accused of killing the patients, including her third husband's grandfather, by injecting them with a drug used to stop breathing to allow insertion of a breathing tube.

Prosecutor said the deaths occurred during her night shifts at Nocona General Hospital in 2000 and 2001. More than 20 vials of the drug were missing and a syringe with traces of the drug was found in the nurse's garbage, they said.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 22

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jamison Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Virginia Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPIES EDITOR Sean Durum
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Rob Greenfield
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Vidale
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Theresa Barba
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Bunker
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Doliunitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT SPORTS Danny Picard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jon Pelland
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR YEAR. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIDNEY IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN ON-LINE SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADDITIONAL RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL (413)545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Belliveau

COPY EDITOR
Matreya Hughes

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sean Durum, Colin Nelson

Interested in writing code that will change an entire industry–from the ground up?
We're hiring software developers to help us transform the airline industry by solving some of its toughest computing problems. No airline industry experience necessary, just a love of hacking and a desire to work in a fast moving, knowledge expanding environment created by computer scientists to help you succeed. Visit our website at www.itasoftware.com/joinus.
ita Software
Visit us at the Engineering & Computer Science Career Fair '06
Wednesday October 11, 2006
On-campus interviewing will be held on October 27, 2006
Submit resumes through Umass Amherst Career Services by October 17, 2006

FCC discusses ownership rules

By John Dunbar
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Federal Communications Commission kicks off the first of six planned public hearings Tuesday to discuss a number of broadcast ownership rules, including whether a single company should be able to own both a newspaper and a television station in the same market.

The hearing takes place in Los Angeles, a city where the Tribune Co. owns both the Los Angeles Times and KTLA-TV, Channel 5. Tribune is hoping the FCC will eliminate the ban, but just in case, has asked the agency for a waiver so it can renew its broadcast license and retain ownership of both properties. The station license expires Dec. 1.

The last time the agency revisited the ownership rules was in 2003, when it voted 3-2 to raise the national audience cap for television station owners, lessen restrictions on how many radio and television stations a company may own in the same market and allow for cross-ownership of newspapers and broadcast stations in some instances.

The decision sparked a popular revolt, congressional action and a federal appeals court decision that resulted in most of the rules being sent back to the agency for reconsideration.

The media ownership issue has not reached the same level interest as it did in 2003, when the FCC was besieged with complaints from media consolidation foes on both the right and the left. This time around, the marquee issue — the national broadcast audience cap — is off the table.

After the FCC voted in 2003 to expand the number of American households a single television broadcast company could reach from 35 percent to 45 percent, Congress intervened, setting the limit at 39 percent.

The same percentage of viewers that the nation's two largest television broadcasters, News Corp. and CBS Corp., reached at the time.

Tuesday's meeting will consist of seven hours of comment and public participation and will be conducted in Los Angeles and El Segundo. Several witnesses have been invited, including members of the entertainment and television industries.

Former FCC Chairman Michael Powell was criticized for conducting only one public hearing three years ago before the commission voted on the media ownership rules. Current FCC Chairman Kevin Martin has taken a different approach, promising six meetings in all, with future sites yet to be announced.

In addition to the newspaper-broadcast cross-ownership rule, the FCC is also seeking comment on radio and television station ownership limits in a single market and whether one company should be permitted to own two of the top four networks.

Clear Channel Communications Inc., the nation's largest radio broadcaster with about 1,200 stations, is lobbying the FCC to increase the radio ownership limits in the largest markets, like Los Angeles.

The ownership rules exist because the broadcast airwaves are owned by the public and the law requires that the public interest be considered in how they are regulated. Too much control over the broadcast media in a market is deemed not in the public interest, though limits have been loosened over the years.

The FCC will grant a waiver of its rules on cross-ownership between newspapers and broadcasters when the property to be bought is in financial trouble. In New York City, for example, Rupert Murdoch's News Corp. was granted a permanent waiver to purchase the New York Post, even though he owned a television station at the time.

In the Tribune case, the company bought the Los Angeles Times and the rest of the Times Mirror chain, betting that the FCC would change the cross-ownership rule before the station licenses would come up for renewal.

In Phoenix, Gannett Co. is in the same position. The No. 1 newspaper company owns the Arizona Republic and KPNX-TV, whose license is up for renewal. Gannett has asked for a permanent waiver.

Those in favor of liberalization of the ownership rules say that with cable television and the Internet, citizens have many new outlets to choose from and the rules, most of which are decades old, are no longer relevant. Opponents say there may be new outlets, but they are still owned by the same giant media conglomerates.

As for Tribune, the third-largest newspaper publisher may get smaller rather than larger. As the company's stock price has dropped, it has been under pressure from shareholders to sell off pieces of the company.

AWOL soldier surrenders in Kentucky

By Brett Barrouquere
Associated Press Writer

RADCLIFF, Ky. — An Army soldier who fled to Canada rather than redeploy to Iraq surrendered Tuesday to military officials after asking for leniency.

Spc. Darrell Anderson, 24, said he deserted the Army last year because he could no longer fight in what he believes is an illegal war.

"I feel that by resisting I made up for the things I did in Iraq," Anderson said during a press briefing shortly before he turned himself in at nearby Fort Knox. "I feel I made up for the sins I committed in this war."

Anderson, of Lexington, returned to the United States from Canada on Saturday. He could face a charge of desertion.

Attorney Jim Feinerty of Chicago said Anderson will be interviewed by military investigators, given a uniform and assigned to a barracks while his case is processed. In three to five days, he will be given a discharge of other than honorable. At that point, he should be free from his military commitment and face no other charges, Feinerty said.

"He's not a criminal," Feinerty said.

As Anderson left the news conference, World War II veteran Les Powers confronted him, and shouted: "They should have shot you."

Powers said Anderson abandoned his military commitment and should face a court martial, not receive a deal that lets him out of the Army.

"He's a deserter. He's a coward," Powers said after Anderson was gone. "He should be given a dishonorable discharge."

Gini Sinclair, a spokeswoman for Fort Knox, would not discuss Anderson specifically, but said officers review AWOL soldiers' cases before they are discharged.

"In some cases, you can be here only a few days," Sinclair said.

Anderson joined the Army in January 2003 and went to Iraq a year later with the 1st Armored Division. He was wounded and received a Purple Heart in 2004.

He fled to Canada in early 2005 after receiving orders to return for a second tour of duty in Iraq, becoming a highly visible war critic and spokesman for Canadian peace groups.

Anderson's mother, Anita Dennis, said the military failed in its responsibility to take care of her son after he returned from war.

"They treated his physical wounds, but they left his emotional wounds untreated," Dennis said through tears.

Anderson said he suffered from nightmares and was unable to get the treatment he needed by the time he was ordered to redeploy. He said he was able to get some treatment for emotional distress while in Canada.

Anderson's Canadian wife, Gail Greer, said she supports her husband's decision.

"I'm really anxious and nervous, but he's definitely doing the right thing," Greer said. "I just hope people listen to what he has to say."

THE POWER TO TEXT FREELY
WITH SPRINT.

Get 300 free text messages a month for 12 months.

New ultra-thin Katana™ by Sanyo®
Available in 3 colors
Built-in camera
Bluetooth® technology

Take pictures, listen to music and text, text, text on Sprint's slim new phones.

These new phones start at $79.99 after instant savings and mail-in rebate. Requires activation on a new line of service and two-year subscriber agreement.

Calling plans start at $29.99.

Other monthly charges apply. See below. Requires two-year subscriber agreement.

MP3 Phone Funk™ by LG®
Built-in MP3 Player
Bluetooth® technology
Built-in 1.3 MP camera

CALL 1-800-Sprint-1
CLICK sprint.com
GO to the nearest Sprint or Nextel retailer

Sprint POWER UP
Together with NEXTEL

Sprint stores

RadioShack BUY

FOCUS

Taxes not applicable. Taxes are 11 percent here. Plus a one-time $36 charge of up to 7.60% that varies quarterly and recovery fee up to $2.81 per line, and state/local fees that vary by area. Sprint fees are not taxes or government required charges.

Sprint and the logo are trademarks of Sprint Nextel. All other trademarks are the property of their respective owners. All rights reserved.

Dow soars to new closing high of 11,727

By Ellen Simon
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Dow Jones industrial average finally reached new heights Tuesday, extending Wall Street's seven-year recovery with a record closing level after climbing into uncharted territory in trading earlier in the day.

The index of 30 blue chip stocks ended the session at 11,727.34, wiping out the previous record of 11,722.98.

Earlier, the Dow crossed its old trading high of 11,750.28, rising up to 11,758.95. Both of the previous records were set Jan. 14, 2000.

While investors welcomed the Dow's latest achievement, it comes at a time the stock market is more conservative, even more muted, than the Wall Street of early 2000. Then, investors were still piling exuberantly into high-tech stocks. In 2006, the market's gains come only after investors' careful parsing of economic data and corporate earnings reports.

Tuesday's advance came on the second straight day that oil prices fell sharply, helping to calm fears about inflation and possible interest rate increases. But the market as a whole has been choppy, with traditionally defensive stock sectors such as pharmaceuticals and utilities leading the market higher since its May and June decline, said Doug Johnston, head of U.S. trading at Adams Harkness in Boston.

"I think we break out to the all-time high, then we could get a blow-off correction off of that," Johnston said.

The Dow, whose well-known large-cap stocks include aluminum producer Alcoa Inc., discount retailer Wal-Mart Stores Inc. and the Walt Disney Co., has recovered ahead of the broader Standard & Poor's 500 and the Nasdaq composite index, which also peaked in early 2000. Those indexes were inflated — overinflated in the case of the Nasdaq — by the dot-com bubble.

The S&P 500's high close was 1,527.46, and the index remains more than 12 percent away from that milestone. The Nasdaq is even further off its highs and no one expects it to eclipse its record of 5,048.62 any time soon.

To reach new highs, the Dow had to recover not only from the high-tech collapse, but also recession and the effects of the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks. The stock market was further shaken by corporate scandals at companies including Enron Corp. and WorldCom Inc., and the Dow sank to a five-year closing low of 7,286.27 on Oct. 9, 2002, nearly 38 percent off its record high close.

The market's recovery was helped by more than four years of solid corporate profit growth, and more recently, the Federal Reserve's decision to halt its more than two-year string of interest rate hikes.

The Dow rose 56.99, or 0.49 percent, to close Tuesday at 11,727.34. The Dow had briefly surpassed its closing high on Thursday and Monday before retreating.

The broader stock indicators also closed higher. The S&P 500 index was up 2.79, or 0.21 percent, at 1,334.11, and the Nasdaq rose 6.05, or 0.27 percent, to 2,243.65.

Advancing issues led decliners by more than 8 to 7 on the New York Stock Exchange, where consolidated volume came to 2.68 billion shares, compared with 2.15 billion Monday.

The decline in oil prices was the catalyst of the day. A barrel of light crude settled at $58.68, down $2.35, on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Oil prices have had a stunning fall from their intraday high for the year of $78.40 a barrel, reached in July. Other commodity prices have dropped as well, with gold descending from prices earlier this year that it hadn't seen for three decades.

"When oil and gold start to back off, that's a sign that the economy is slowing and inflation is not a fear," said Joseph Sunderman, vice president of research and development, Schaeffer's Investment Research in Cincinnati.

The entire energy sector was lower, with Exxon Mobil Corp. down $1.59 at $65.41 and Chevron Corp. down $1.57 at $62.94.

Bonds fell, with the yield on the benchmark 10-year Treasury note rising to 4.62 percent from 4.61 percent late Monday. The dollar was mixed against other major currencies, while gold prices fell.

Marvell Technology Group Ltd. fell $2.29, or 12 percent, to $16.80 after it said its third-quarter revenue would drop 10 percent from its second-quarter revenue. Separately, the company also said it plans to restate past financial results after a probe into its historical stock option practices turned up discrepancies.

Quest Diagnostics Inc., which provides diagnostic testing services, dropped $10.90, or 17.90 percent, to $50 after losing a nationwide contract with health insurer UnitedHealthcare Inc. The existing agreement expires at the end of the year.

Kohl's Corp., said its sales at stores open at least a year, a closely watched measure of retail performance, rose 16.3 percent in September. The low-price chain, which also boosted its third-quarter profit forecast, rose $2.04 to $67.53.

Fresh concerns about the upcoming release of Sony Corp.'s much-anticipated PlayStation 3 video game console and reports of erratic performance dragged Sony shares down 63 cents to $39.10.

The Russell 2000 index of smaller companies fell 0.46, or 0.06 percent, to 718.35.

Overseas, Japan's Nikkei stock average closed down 0.08 percent. Britain's FTSE 100 dropped 0.35 percent, Germany's DAX index slid 0.12 percent, and France's CAC-40 fell 0.45 percent.

A screen on the trading floor of the New York Stock Exchange shows the Dow Jones industrial average at a record-closing high yesterday.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:

A grade dispute?

Teacher, roomate or job concerns?

Billing problems?

...or any other University related problems?

THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)

Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community

823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

North wiring suffered 'serious deviations'

NORTH from page 1

Fellow IBEW Local 7 member Marc Riel Senior, a Master Electrician, remembers numerous problems with the electrical work during the construction—problems that he attributed to a lack of quality work and the inexperience of the temporary help.

Riel, who worked on the light poles, recalls that, at least in one case, Griffin used damaged materials to complete the work.

"The top of the pole was cracked; it was damaged. The gentleman from Griffin had to use a sledgehammer to install it," he said. "Water is going to enter that concrete and deteriorate the steel reinforcing rod and that thing is going to break."

In another instance Riel refused to do work on a pole that he had found to be "wobbly." When he reported the problem to his foreman he was told to "do it."

"I would not do it," he said. "Another man did and the pole fell over, because it was not installed correctly."

Electrical equipment that was rated for indoor use was left outside, according to Riel.

"They had telephone wire in boxes just out in the elements," he said. "It's supposed to be protected from the elements."

Riel also asserts that proper wiring color code standards- colors that differentiate between high and low voltage wires- were not maintained throughout the site. There were serious deviations in the standards which, according to Riel, could lead to potential injury during future maintenance on the poles.

"It is just a total breakdown of what the acceptable wiring practices are," he said.

Garrison had a similar experience with the fire alarm system inside the residences, recalling that throughout his time spent inside, the alarms were "constantly going off."

Amherst Fire Chief, Keith Hoyle acknowledged that during the construction there were problems, but were nothing out of the ordinary for a project of that size.

The Fire Department had participated in the acceptance testing of the fire alarm systems before the occupancy of the buildings and each passed, according to Hoyle.

"Not everything works immediately or works the right way," he said. "That's why they go through testing and design."

Paul Choiniere, an electrical inspector for the town of Amherst, signed off on all of the electrical work in the buildings, including the proper installation of the fire alarms and wiring. The problems that were discovered during the various inspections of the buildings were corrected, Choiniere said, none of which were major in nature.

"When you go through a final inspection on a building that size, any electrical inspectors going to go through and find problems with any contractor," he said. "I have never been at UMass and have ever done an inspection on a final that I have not found problems."

Andrew Soles, Senior Facilities Planner for UMass and the project manager for the North Area Residences, completely supported the electrical work done by Griffin.

"As one of the primary sub-contractors on the project, they were a major force in driving the challenging schedule for the project," he said..

Griffin has had a history of problems with Massachusetts unions. According to a Boston Globe article printed in February 1996, in December 1993, Griffin was barred from bidding on federal contracts for three years for failure to pay prevailing wages to employees working on federal construction jobs. Nine months later, despite protest from IBEW Local 103 in Dorchester, Griffin was taken off of the debarment list. In 1998 Griffin reached a settlement with the Attorney General to reimburse employees for paying below the prevailing wage to fund the company vacation, health and holiday plans, according to a 1998 press release from the Massachusetts Office of the Attorney General

"I know for a fact that our biggest contractor that bid on that project figured a lot of overtime into his bid to get that project done on time and done right," Wilson said. "That's all we have to sell, quality."

"[Griffin] went in there and low-balled," Garrison said. "You get what you pay for."

Foley says he was abused by a clergyman

By Brian Skoloff
Associated Press

Rep. Mark Foley, R-Fla (right), addresses the media with Rep. Jerry Weller, R-Ill., at Capitol Hill. Foley said Tuesday that he was sexually abused by a clergyman as a teenager.

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — Disgraced former Rep. Mark Foley (news, bio, voting record) said through his lawyer Tuesday that he was sexually abused by a clergyman as a teenager, but accepts full responsibility for sending salacious computer messages to teenage male pages.

Attorney David Roth said Foley was molested between ages 13 and 15 by a clergyman. He declined to identify the clergyman or the church, but Foley is Roman Catholic.

He also acknowledged for the first time that the former congressman is gay, saying the disclosure was part of his client's "recovery."

"Mark Foley wants you to know he is a gay man," Roth told reporters in Florida as Republicans struggled to avoid election-year fallout from the congressman's behavior and sudden resignation.

Foley represented parts of Palm Beach County for 12 years until he abruptly resigned Friday after being accused of sending lurid Internet messages to teenage boys who served as pages on Capitol Hill. The FBI and Florida law enforcement officials are investigating whether he violated any laws.

The lawyer said Foley, who is now in treatment for alcohol abuse, never had any inappropriate sexual contact with a minor. He said Foley was under the influence of alcohol when he sent the e-mails and instant messages.

Asked why he didn't disclose this information sooner, Roth said, "Shame, shame."

CDC recommends increase in HIV tests

HIV from page 1

of new infections are among African Americans, and women are now greatly affected by this virus. A teenager to a 50-year-old can contract the virus and not know it," she adds. "We need to be as candid as we can about how transmission occurs." The virus can be contracted from any sharing of bodily fluids, getting a tattoo or piercing using dirty instruments—not just from sexual intercourse.

Currently, the cost of standard HIV tests range from $2.50 to $8, and $15 for new, rapid tests. If a patient tests positive for the virus, they must take a confirmatory test which can cost up to $80. These costs don't include the fees for post-counseling or costs of medicine and treatment which cost thousands of dollars a year.

"On a federal level, the government needs to give more funds to organizations like The Ryan White Foundation, which leads in spreading prevention of HIV/AIDS," she continues. "But with this new formula, Massachusetts may lose money. Instead, we need to spend the money domestically."

According to Laurie, the CDC guidelines are nearly impossible without help from the state to accommodate for such guidelines.

"In western Massachusetts, we need to see cooperation from the legislature and the governor to gain a supplemental budget to make these guidelines real," says Laurie.

Currently, AIDS Care of Hampshire County provides case management to HIV patients, while the Tapestry AIDS program provides the same for Franklin County. "As soon as more funds can be given to the cause, we can provide more prevention. As of now, we have restrictions as to what we can do to help, yet is so important for someone to know their status with HIV/AIDS" she adds.

One program in the state, called the Anonymous Counseling and Testing program, provides free testing and counseling for individuals who are at high risk of contracting the virus. Tapestry also has 12 health sites throughout Western Massachusetts that provide rapid HIV tests and counseling for a variable fee. The organization also offers rapid HIV tests which detect the virus with a swab of a person's mouth and have results within twenty minutes, unlike the standard tests where blood is drawn from the individual and results take two weeks.

Also, the CDC guidelines state that HIV tests would be included in standard emergency or urgent care visits or regular physical exams, unless patients specifically decline the test. But Massachusetts law requires a special consent form for an HIV test.

"People are also unsure of their confidentiality," says Laurie. "If people know and learn that these tests are truly confidential, they may feel more comfortable to receive them," she adds. Laurie believes that if people are educated about the virus, the prevention effort can be even stronger.

"HIV patients have access to drugs to keep them as healthy as possible after they've been diagnosed. The bigger issue is in the prevention and education," says Laurie. "The only prevention is talking and educating. It's because of a lack of will and resources that make HIV the health catastrophe of the state, country, and the world. This is a preventable illness."

New cell phone screams if stolen

LONDON — Now if your mobile telephone is stolen, you can scream — and your phone can, too. A new service launched Monday is designed to deter mobile phone theft by equipping telephones with an ear-piercing scream.

The screaming won't stop unless the battery is removed. Even if the thief replaces the phone's SIM card, the handset will not work.

All customers' information is centrally stored, so contacts, ringtones, pictures, texts and other data can be retrieved when a new handset is purchased. The service costs about $18 a month.

The goal of the service is to make mobile phones useless to anyone but the rightful owner, said Mark Whiteman, the managing director of Remote XI.

"We'll see the market for stolen handsets stamped out once and for all," he said.

Associated Press

The Real Spring Break
Europe

Party abroad with MTV cast this spring break

London & Paris 8 days from $995
Amsterdam & Paris 7 days from $925

Book by October 15 and save $100!
Includes airfare, hotel, transportation, and much more!

Call 1.800.766.2645 or visit efcollegebreak.com today

college BREAK
efcollegebreak.com
800.766.2645

Worcester C-Store Grand Opening

Monday, October 2

STORE HOURS
Mini Store
Monday – Thursday
8:00am – 6:00pm
Friday
8:00am – 2:00pm

Worcester C-Store
Monday – Friday
8:00am – 12:00am
Weekends and Holidays
11:00am – 12:00am

Franklin C-Store
Monday – Friday
7:00am – 9:00pm
Weekends and Holidays
11:00am – 11:00pm

Hampden C-Store
Monday – Friday
7:00am – 12:00am
Weekends and Holidays
11:00am – 12:00am

Celebrate with our Grand Opening Sale Prices!

Large White Eggs
$.99 per dozen

Doritos
all varieties 13 ounce bag
2 for $5.00

Coca Cola Products
12 pack cans
2 for $7.00 (plus deposit)

Allegra Cut Ziti or Spaghetti
16 ounce box $.79 each

Grapes
red or green seedless
$1.79 per pound

Dasani Water liter bottles
2 for $2.00

Glaceau Vitamin Water
20 ounce bottles
buy 2 get one free

Medium New England
Fair Trade Coffee and a Muffin
$1.59

(not all items available in all stores)

DINING SERVICES
UMass/Amherst

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

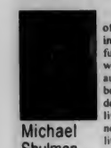
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 4, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Point Counter Point

Electronics run the world



Michael Shulman

Technology is the cornerstone of progress. New devices and inventions continue to shape our future and make life easier in many ways. Technology has given us the automobile, air conditioner, light bulb, X- ray and countless other devices that impact our everyday lives. Some are wary of this technological trend, but I say with a little discipline new technologies can open the world to new ideas and create a functioning global community. Embracing technology has many positive concepts, including its ability to connect millions of people, promote diversity, expand knowledge and improve overall quality of life.

From the first caveman rubbing two sticks together to make fire, mankind has been constantly struggling with the concept of creation and invention.

From the first caveman rubbing two sticks together to make fire, mankind has been constantly struggling with the concept of creation and invention. From simple, yet significant, creations such as the wheel, to complex electronics that run our modern world, technology has been the force guiding our daily lives.

Think about how much modern technology you use in a single day here at UMass. We use fiber optic technology so we can continuously check the updated profiles on Facebook. We have satellite technology which powers our cell phones so we can chat with others on our way to class, or text them when we are bored in lecture. We use electricity and gasoline when we ride the bus on a cold morning. All of these technologies make life more comfortable, efficient and organized.

The types of technology we use most frequently here on campus are devices which help us connect and interact with other people. Used correctly, these technologies give us access to millions of pieces of information and keep us in contact with hundreds of people. We can e-mail professors when we have last minute questions about an assignment. We also use these technologies to find late night food to keep us fueled for a study session, or intense game of Madden. We even sometimes use technology to get help with our homework. Having a laptop or a phone with Internet capabilities expands us to reach out and interact with others, even if it is just the delivery guy from "Wings."

Technology has evolved mankind. Not only are we more organized, and can multi-task, but we can connect with so much more than if we did not have technology. I argue technology interconnects us and creates more relationships. Yes, maybe more people keep in touch through e-mail or cell phone calls on their way home from work, but isn't that better than no communication at all?

Our lives are becoming busier by the day and, for some, it is hard to stop for a moment and call your Uncle Frank to wish him a happy birthday. However, with technology like e-mail, I can e-mail him a fun card while I am on my lunch break or while I am working on my OWL questions.

People blame television or the Internet for breaking up the family unit and destroying the personal relationships people build as they grow. Some opponents of technology think there is too much available with one click of a button. They don't like that we can buy our food and clothes online, or that we can do research on the computer and not in a library, or that we can have little yellow faces that express our emotions.

I say this is not the right attitude. Innovation is the driving force of civilization. Limited technology would punish the economy and consumers, and it would limit our capacity to learn, communicate and function. When it comes to technology, the benefits outweigh the costs.

We don't condemn the use of knives because some people might use them as weapons, nor do we curb other forms of exploration. Technology is an exercise in creation that services the personal needs of consumers who buy up Razor phones and I-pods.

Furthermore, think of the role technology has played in major events. The Watergate tapes brought down the presidency of Richard Nixon. The Internet is spreading democracy in China, despite unease from the government. Even our own recent horror of digital camera images of abused Iraqi prisoners has changed the nature of the war and the perception of our nation abroad.

Technology is vital to mankind, and we must think of it in a broad sense, especially when we see some of its minor abuses around campus.

Michael Shulman is a Collegian columnist.

Risks of this new age

Nick Milano

Life is made a little bit easier with every new invention. The Internet makes it simple to find information, purchase items and communicate with people. Cell phones can now locate your position on earth using GPS and allow you to send and receive e-mail. Music devices, like iPods, allow the storage of thousands of songs on a tiny machine to be carried any and everywhere. All this technology enables people to do more and in a shorter amount of time, but there are two significant risks involved. Not only is technology making life easier (too easy) but it is also taking the personal touch out of many normal social activities.

The Internet has provided a variety of services never found before in a single entity. It has enabled thievery in file sharing programs (like Kazaa and Napster), it allows plagiarism in the publication of millions of works, and it permits cheating in the form of Spark Notes and Cliff Notes. Granted the The Internet is not to blame entirely, the person doing the stealing and cheating deserves some of it as well. The point is, the Internet makes these vices a viable option and sometimes hard to resist.

The dating process is even made easier by the Internet (well, TV ads claim it is). Just go to match.com, itsjustlunch.com or eharmony.com, and there are thousands of people looking to meet somebody new. If you think these dating Web sites are only for adults, what is the nature of Facebook and MySpace?

These two sites are even more addictive than Blackberry cell phones. Anyway, if the soul mates and new friends you have found online hold up, at the first significant date, whether it is an anniversary, holiday or a birthday, just go to presentpicker.com. This Web site is sure to take care of all your gift needs. Simply fill out the six categories and boom; you get a list of presents that apply to someone just like your true love.

Besides the Internet, new cell phones enable people to check e-mail. Like all new technology, this is a tool with benefits and drawbacks. For businesspeople, it enables them to keep in contact with their employers and employees, but the only problem is, it enables them to keep in contact with their employers and employees. Who wants to be within reach no matter how far from the workplace?

On the topic of cell phones, text messaging is the greatest invention since sliced bread. Text messaging is a quick and easy way to communicate with your friends. Translation:

But the only problem is, it enables them to keep in contact with their employers and employees. Who wants to be within reach no matter how far from the workplace?

the technology of text messaging allows that annoying girl sitting next to you in that awful 8 a.m. Gen Ed to text her best friend every detail from the night before.

Cell phone text messaging is second only to Blackberries. These phones have achieved a Facebook-sized addiction. Being an intern and ordered to do meaningless tasks while my boss played with his Blackberry made me an archenemy of the product. Talk about inconsideration.

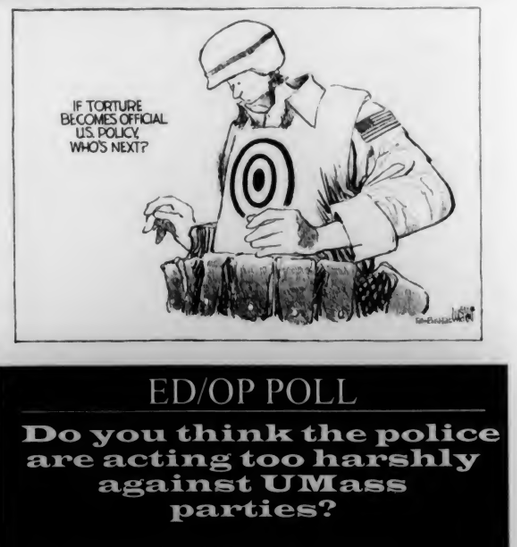
E-mail also threatens the future of handwritten letters in this Internet-driven world. The personality of handwriting tells a story far more compelling and shows more dedication than a simple e-mail. A thank-you note written out on stationary, even if it is one of 50, which read exactly the same, means so much more than the same thank you note manufactured by computer and printer. Invitations by hand signify more effort, and, though it may be corny, seem more welcoming.

Despite all this rhetoric, I do not mean to sound like somebody's grandparent hating a culture of modernity because advances in medicine, transportation, communication and all other fields have changed millions of people's lives. Patients have access to the best medicine in the world, family members everywhere can be sent pictures of a new baby instantaneously and rescue personnel can report to the most storm-wrecked parts of the world. It is natural to desire making a product a little bit faster, and a little bit smaller, than anything ever constructed, but with this dream comes risk.

It is important to hold technology accountable for its defects. As dependence on Facebook continues to rise, people may choose to remain friends by posting (is this the right terminology?), than meeting for a movie or something to eat. A smile cannot be completely conveyed and, though a picture is worth a thousand words, seeing a person's face light up in happiness is worth 10 times that.

As businesses continue to expand globally, co-workers will never meet, but only communicate through conference calls and e-mails. Reading books will be sacrificed for just reading the summaries, because it is easier and takes less time. Technological advancements appear to be endless, and every so often, we should stop and ask if we have gone too far.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist



Good variety on campus

Greg Collins

As the holy holidays of two different religions dawn upon us, Ramadan for Islam and Yom Kippur for Judaism, it is a good time to recognize the varying elements of diversity at UMass, Amherst. Although racial and ethnic makeup is the primary focus of diversity by administration officials, other aspects of diversity on campus are more important in expanding our outlook on people and belief systems.

For instance, while walking to class last semester I noticed a group of students wearing construction hats, standing near a small construction site and listening to the professor of the course teach his lesson plan. These students were pursuing a major, building materials and wood technology, which I had never considered previously as being a legitimate course of study for a post-graduate career to pursue at a university. My exposure to this occurrence removed the superficial layer of the limited mindset which had obscured my judgment regarding certain aspects of diversity before I had come to this University.

The image of students wearing construction hats represents why UMass, Amherst is unique in comparison to other members of the Five College Consortium. This University offers a wide spectrum of majors, ranging from turf grass management to nursing and wildlife and fisheries conservation. More importantly, these academically diverse options reflect the varying career pursuits of UMass, Amherst students of different socioeconomic backgrounds, pursuits and backgrounds which are not as wide ranging at other nearby schools.

The other four nearby schools focus on a strong liberal arts education to bolster the outlook of its students to think critically about human beings and the world. While a strong liberal arts component is necessary to do this, UMass, Amherst offers additional opportunities for students to pursue non-traditional, non-liberal arts majors. It gives without saying that these majors benefit those who pursue them. However, they also benefit those pursuing more traditional majors, whose undergraduate experience is enhanced by the most diverse classmates of any school in the Pioneer Valley in the areas where diversity matters most, namely, diversity of thought and experience.

For example, diversity of religious thought is apparent in the variety of belief systems practiced by students on campus. The Campus Crusade for Christ, the Muslim Student Organization, Hillel and Student Pagans Integrating Religion and Life

How can we downgrade the pursuance towards a career in construction work or writing, or a belief in Christianity or Islam, when the people who exhibit these types of diversity are all equal in God's eyes?

Spiritually (SPIRALS) embody the vibrancy and prevalence of diverse religious and supernatural beliefs present on campus. Often our minds are infiltrated with stereotypical assumptions, whether justified or unjustified, by pop culture and news organizations concerning belief systems, but only when we interact with people who practice these religions can we form educated opinions about those beliefs.

Still, the question remains as to why academic and religious diversity is more important than racial and ethnic makeup, and why University administrators should focus on the former aspects more than the latter in promoting this educational institution. Individuals have little control over choosing their racial and ethnic background, which is based on evolutionary tendencies, and which are not indicative of the true essence of human beings.

Racial and ethnic makeup depends exclusively on forces beyond human beings' control, while religious and academic diversity depends on the individual choices of human beings. The true essence of humans, and what distinguishes them from other animals, is dependent on their God-given abilities to make value judgments and engage in conscious decision-making processes. On a deeper level, unlike biological makeup, religious and academic diversity is as pure a representation of the manifestation of the soul as human beings can attain within their power.

Our views on diverse people are expanded only when we recognize that these differences indicate human beings are more than creatures inhabiting the earth for hedonistic purposes. While people vary in intellectual ability and socioeconomic background, this recognition reveals all human beings are equal in the soul and should not be defined by external characteristics. Equality of the soul at our level of creation is the essence of humankind's natural equality.

Understanding humankind's natural equality broadens our outlook on why different people decide to do different things and hold varying beliefs, and makes us less prone to becoming intolerant and bigoted. How can we downgrade the pursuance towards a career in construction work or writing, or a belief system in Christianity or Islam, when the people who exhibit these types of diversity are all equal in God's eyes?

I feel fortunate enough to attend a University that shows this diversity, something students at other area colleges are not exposed to with as much depth. This is not to disparage these students or their colleges but to highlight why UMass, Amherst should be hailed as a campus, not for just being racially and ethnically diverse, but also, for fostering the highest form of differences manifested by the God-given human soul among Pioneer Valley colleges. This is the true diversity to which we all should strive to contribute.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist

ED/OP POLL

Do you think the police are acting too harshly against UMass parties?

A) Yes, they should just let us party.

B) Yes, if the neighbors don't complain, then leave us alone!

C) No, they're just doing their job.

D) No, if they didn't, someone might get hurt.

Submit your answer at dailycollegian.com!

A road less traveled

Andrew Freeman

As I started college four years ago, one of my friends from high school chose another path. He went to San Francisco, where he worked in a hotel and enjoyed the radically different culture of the city. The next time I heard from him, he was teaching English in Italy. When I talked to him this semester, he planned to settle in New York and pursue a career in writing. Three years without college have not set his goals back at all.

Our educational system is based on the idea that everyone should go to college, but college is not for everyone. The reality is people have differing interests and goals, and it is conceit to think any educational institution can assist in the accomplishment of all of them. You may love learning and aspire to be an academic, while your friend would rather party and goes grudgingly to class, if at all. Both of you may enjoy it here, but the actual process of education is only benefiting you.

Accordingly, the value of a college diploma is more perceived than real, but this perception is important, as many employers will not hire someone without a degree.

Nevertheless, college is set forth as the pinnacle of education to which all should aspire, and upon which success in society depends. Middle class society pushes its children towards college with manic determination. Many children, almost from birth, are competing to enter the best schools, and their parents ensure they are trained in sports, music and whatever else might look good to Harvard admissions staff. This process works for some, but it should not be expected of everyone.

There is no inherent social value in compelling those uninterested in learning to attend college. For many students, particularly in the humanities, what they study will have little application to their careers, most relevant education will occur on the job. Accordingly, the value of a college diploma is more perceived than real, but this perception is important, as many employers will not hire someone without a degree.

Moreover, a college education does not benefit society by making you a better person, ethically or intellectually. Ethics can be taught ad nauseam, but knowledge of that subject does not ensure correct behavior. College provides the opportunity for intellectual growth and achievement, but it will not improve your natural intelligence or create interest where none exists. Intelligent, creative people cannot be manufactured, and that is not the most frequent function of universities.

College usually serves as a sort of limbo between high school and the workplace – a place where you have added time to learn what you are interested in and what you want to do. Many of us, for better or worse, are not as independent or determined as my friend was, and college gives us more time, before embarking on a career, to explore our options.

The problem with this function is college is extremely expensive. Is it worthwhile to pay tens of thousands of dollars and put off work, in the hopes of gaining self-knowledge? Even this limited goal eludes some students, who become entangled in a culture of modernity because of the many distractions of college life that they give little thought to career aspirations.

The expense of college is also significant in that, because it is a gateway to most careers, people of limited means are further disadvantaged. Even with financial aid, these students must often go into debt to afford their education, and at times, the expense becomes too much for them to complete their degrees.

Accordingly, many people who enter college never finish it, and those who do often spend long periods of time. Here at UMass, the four-year graduation rate is 45 percent, and after six years, only 66 percent of students had finished, according to University figures.

A more efficient system of higher education should be instituted, one that does not compel everyone to attend college. The role of universities and colleges should be to train people for specialized careers or for academia.

It is unfair and illogical to hold college education as necessary for professional employment, when what is learned in college is often not relevant in the workplace. Nonstudents, those uninterested in study and education, should not have to attend college to secure a job, and would be better served by entering the workforce and discovering there what they are interested in.

We should accept college is not for everyone, and the path to success need not run through it. There are so many other roads to happiness and success, and ultimately, it is up to the individual, not his or her professors or parents, to discover them.

Andrew Freeman is a Collegian columnist.

Take a stand: fight apathy

Scott Harris

Eligible voters between the ages of 18 and 25 represent the second largest voting block in the United States. Together, we make up 15 percent of the total population of the United States eligible to vote in federal elections. But every November, our generation proves it just can't be bothered. In the 2004 Presidential election, just 42 percent of us turned out to the polls. Our share of the national electorate remained unchanged from 2000.

Some say they are apathetic, they just don't care enough about the political process to pay attention. Some say they are busy, that they don't have time to pay attention. And when the process breaks down even further, when politics gets even nastier and money gains even more influential, our generation uses it as a cop-out. In a warning shaped for an earlier generation, Dante Alighieri said "the hottest places in hell are reserved for those who, in times of great moral crises, maintain their neutrality." We are living in a time of great moral crisis.

The United States Congress, the national Legislature the Founding Fathers erected primarily to serve as the protector of our freedoms, has authorizcd the president of the United States to violate several key clauses in the Constitution.

Deep inside the details of the Military Commission Act of 2006 lies one of the most disgusting abuses of our Supreme Law that you will ever find in a history book.

For any person, American citizen or not, accused of being an "unlawful combatant" by the Bush administration, the right to habeas corpus is denied. The seven century old human liberty to petition the government for charges to be brought against you so you may defend yourself has officially been revoked.

For any person, American citizen or not, the protection against cruel and unusual punishment is denied. The definition on what is cruel and what is non-demeaning is so blurred that any good legal mind – and there are many in our current government – could come up with a justification for any number of interrogation tactics. With the reports we have heard and the images we have seen, there is no reason to believe this law will do anything to stop the torture of suspected terrorists.

For any person, American citizen or not, the right to review the evidence against you, the right of your defense counsel to have access to government witnesses and prosecutorial testimony is revoked. And in a final attempt to strike a blow to the heart of our Constitutional freedoms, this law retroactively immunizes any U.S. official who has engaged in torture or other "cruel and unusual" interrogatory tactics.

When the political process has gotten this bad, when we are so lost as a country that we allow laws like the Military Commissions Act of 2006 to become U.S. code, it's our fault too. The blame for corrupt politicians lies with us. The blame for cuts to student aid, healthcare for the poor and skyrocketing living costs lies with us. The blame for laws that authorize our government to detain anyone, at anytime, for any reason without any due process is with us.

No longer can we place blame on our parents, or their parents, or Big Corporate America, or Tom DeLay, or K Street Lobbyists. The buck stops here.

In 25 years from now, newer editions of the textbooks we are reading will not reflect kindly upon these times. With things the way they are now, depicting our generation as incompetent, apathetic and not up to the challenge of defending the freedoms many of our predecessors sacrificed their lives for will be nothing less than the cold, hard truth.

The textbooks will not look kindly upon these times. History will not absolve us.

Scott Harris is a UMass student.

One class too far

Wesley Miller

For any one of you who have ever taken a five-college course and been surprised to see you're going to receive 16 credits instead of 15 this semester, you know how I feel. In my senior year, I've decided to branch out and take courses at Smith and Hampshire. Though I've known all along these students receive four credits per class, it never really hit home until now.

What makes UMass different as a university? Or rather, what makes UMass so different that we have to spend an extra three or four hours in class a week, stretching ourselves thin over our various Gen Ed and major requirements? The University mentality would argue this system provides a more diverse education with more nuanced students as a result.

I would, however, contend it does the opposite. By increasing our course load, we decrease the student's focus, making it more difficult for him or her to create a sense of value in what he or she is doing.

Gen Eds are case in point. How focused can I be in my degree in English literature if I'm forced to take an extra three hours out of my schedule for a class in computer literacy and then an extra three to five hours to complete the lab?

And for the computer science major stuck in a literature requirement reading Milton, I have the same sympathy. Do you know what I remember from my class in computer literacy? Nothing. Do you know why? I had to read a 500 page epic poem about the nature of Satan, God and creation. If the University wants me to care about computer literacy and Milton alike, I should be given more time to explore both. Give me four credits to study HTML and I'll give you my time and effort.

What makes matters worse is that I could have taken linguistics for my R2 requirement and had a completely different experience. Why didn't I? I couldn't find time for it in my schedule. We all know the agony of sitting at our computers, pouring over our SPIRES struggling to find something that's going to both fit and satisfy a requirement. Eventually, you just take anything.

I can honestly say I left that class a more brain-dead and dejected person. Yet the University insists that these seminars in embarrassment have some over arching value

Some of these Gen Eds make me want to cut myself. Diversity Education? Three hours a week of class discussion about affirmative action. I cringe when I hear what some of our students have to say. After all, what could be more effective than a three-hour class discussion designed to root out your lifelong prejudices and turn them into pure enlightened gold?

Boy was I wrong to use the phrase "of color" in a course entitled "Writing by women of color." My professor made sure to berate me in front of a class of impressionable freshmen for a reason. I can honestly say I left that class a more brain-dead and dejected person. Yet the University insists that these seminars in embarrassment have some over arching value.

I thought we came to the great University of Massachusetts to escape the disempowering, bureaucratic nightmare of high school. Yet, still I sit in classes I don't want to take, falling asleep or staring out the window at busses pulling in and out of Hagis Mall. Sometimes I feel like any sort of break would make this more tolerable.

How many times last semester was I forced to skip my Gen Ed in global warming to do more important things: notably work and warding off the depression of sitting through that class. And yet I got a B+ in the class, which makes me wonder why the hell people should bother in these classes if everything gets inflated a full grade point anyway?

Forgive me if I haven't articulated my point well, but I feel some sense of righteous anger at the way this University is constantly throwing barriers in my way. I realize Gen Eds serve their purpose, but the way I see it, you either have to decrease their presence or increase their value if you want the student body to care. A three-credit system is detrimental to learning and creates nothing but resentment, especially when I hear a student at any one of the other colleges complaining about how hard their life is because they decided to take the plunge and enroll in 5 classes. Oh that poor soul. How will they cope?

Wesley Miller is a Collegian columnist

White privilege

M.J. Toomey

In what amounts to a chromosomal crapshoot, I hit the jackpot. My award is beyond invaluable, because it amounts to societal immunity, failsafe and bulletproof, also serving as my key to success in virtually any endeavor I undertake. In fact, I should have rephrased that. I didn't hit the jackpot, I am the jackpot. I live pricelessly every day.

You see, following my conception, my identity anxiously bade the gestation period, awaiting the answer to the question posed when a white parent and a brown parent have a child together. While at one extreme, I could face prejudice, suffer discrimination, hate crimes, endure unwarranted fears and, in sum, take an insecure, uncomfortable place in society, there was also the chance of being wholly accepted, unconditionally trusted, overestimated, essentially enjoying a ridiculously smooth ride through life. I emerged into life red with dark, dark hair, evidence that I was indeed my father's son, but in less than a year my native colors washed away into a rosy cherubic theme.

So, with me having a touch of nastiness being a given, I'm giving the fair warning to society that giving me shelter under the exaltation of "whiteness" is a really bad idea

Today at 6'1" with a fairly athletic build I get Chad Michael Murray or Justin Timberlake instead of Geronimo or Crazy Horse. It's reasonable to assume with my blue eyes and broad smile I'm the kind of guy you can trust, the kind of guy you might throw a football around with, who'll bring you flowers on a date, just a nice, albeit devastatingly handsome, fellow. The thing is, and I don't want to get too sociological here, I don't want to get too far past my scope and generalize, society might be doing itself wrong by stereotyping that very feasible, brown me.

See, the thing is, as virtue goes, I can be pretty lax on the whole issue. In fact, I might go so far as to say, sometimes the white immunity I've been blessed with allows me to subterfuge, cheat and manipulate with ease. What I'm getting at here is, don't trust me. I'm far from an upstanding citizen.

I'm not sure exactly what the root causes of my subversive streak happen to be, but for the hell of it, let's cite Freud here and say I suffer from underdeveloped facilities holding in check my libidinous drives. So, with me having a touch of nastiness being a given, I'm giving the fair warning to society that giving me shelter under the exaltation of "whiteness" is a really bad idea.

On the micro level, no one ever trails me in stores, but the only reason I don't steal anything is because I'm so discontented I don't want anything at all, and my sneer actually resembles a warm smile. I've stolen before. I won't disclose how, where and when. Any incriminating details will be held until further notice. Mind you, I've never been a very good thief. It's not for any slight of hand tricks or cunning guile that I've never been caught; it's just rarely anyone in a city looks to the blond, blue-eyed boy as a potential shoplifter. Let's get it straight though, don't give me an excuse, something to the lines of me being unemployed, resorting to larceny for lack of income or anything like that.

I've been instantly hired to any job I've applied for, and the funny bit is most of my employers seemed to think they were really making the right choice for their company. They tend to wear this satisfied smile that might very well say, "Finally, a really good kid," and that's funny, because I add nothing to the store's efficiency, if I don't actually serve as a detriment to its functioning. I'm lazy, but worse, I'm arrogant enough to indulge in that sloth fully. I loaf, and I do it obscenely. I'll sit down wherever I'm working, whatever I'm supposed to be doing but I can counteract any suspicion with a hearty smile and a couple displays of that great job a great kid like me does.

So I've got all this going for me, and I still have a violent streak. I don't act on it too often, because I have a nice girl who quells any overt aggression, but if that wasn't the case, heads would roll. Fights would be in order almost everywhere I go, because I'd knock over women, children and any other fool who happened to be in my way. You can be sure I'd talk my way out of guilty verdicts like a wink through your girl's heart.

As you can imagine, I'm also the guy parents like their daughters to go out with, which is one of life's injustices for a parent. Knowing what I know, I'd lock my daughter in the basement before I let her spend time alone with a guy like me.

Hey, so I've got a good thing going here, and so far, all my crimes have been either petty or moral, so you've got no right to complain. Of course, this could get progressively worse, but I have this suspicion I know how to work what I've got. Legal system...phhph. I've got what counts until y'all prove me wrong.

Michael Toomey is a Collegian columnist

Chilling effect

Chris Eckel

As poorly as the war on terrorism is going around the world, some of the most troubling stories about the conflict are coming from within the borders of the United States. It might have been lost among the hubbub over the changes to Facebook, but Congress passed a series of new laws regarding what powers the head warden, George W Bush, has to police his prisons.

Among other things, it completely disregards the tenets of the Geneva Convention and essentially eliminates judicial review. In one fell swoop, our Bush-league president has placed his judgment on a pedestal above that of 194 countries and 203 years of precedent as set by judicial review. Whatever happened to that "coalition building" he was focused on when trying to build support for the Iraq conflict?

Bush treating the Constitution as if it was as legally significant as a set of rolling papers certainly lends itself to a lot of criticism, but one aspect of the new law that hasn't been explored is how reporters will be affected by the new laws. The definition of "illegal enemy combatant" has been left extremely vague. It is possible that residents of the United States could fall under the auspices of this classification for a variety of crimes and be detained with no hope of appeal.

Might some be detained for doing their job? Two essential duties of journalists are to impartially uncover the truth and to critique those whom they cover, whether they are athletes, politicians, public servants or business titans. The media serves as a source of knowledge to the public, and journalists are charged with questioning those in power on behalf of their readers.

However, it is beginning to look like they might be restricted in their ability to do so by these laws. Already, journalists in Iraq have been arrested for very disturbing reasons. Among them is Bilal Hussein, an Associated Press journalist who photographed insurgents in Iraq; he has been in American custody without charges since April.

Last time I checked, taking photographs is not against the law, and yet it would appear Hussein is languishing in a jail cell for doing precisely what his employer, a respected and credible organization, hired him to do. Pardon the bad pun, but something is terribly wrong with that picture.

Since Bush takes criticism about as well as I can perform a triple axel, one must wonder if he would eventually start locking up journalists simply because they had the nerve to criticize his policies

Think that couldn't happen in the United States? Well, we are not that far away from such a scenario. You've heard of Barry Bonds? Has a head bigger than Pluto (does that make him a minor planet?), hits a lot of home runs and uses a lot of "supplements?"

You probably have heard of Bonds, but you probably have not heard of Mark Tainaru-Wada and Lance Williams. Those two gentlemen wrote a book entitled "Game of Shadows" that deals principally with constructing a case that Barry Bonds knowingly and willingly took steroids to improve his athletic performance. Steroids are classified as a controlled substance, meaning it is illegal to possess or take them unless prescribed by a doctor.

Yet, Bonds is not the one going to jail. Tainaru-Wada and Williams are – for 18 months. Their great crime was refusing to reveal their source who leaked grand jury testimony to them. The confidentiality of sources has long been a central tenet to reporting, but is now being trampled by an overzealous judge. Although he is certainly very fond of keeping his own secrets, George W. Bush is most assuredly not very tolerant of other people keeping secrets from him.

If two men can be sent to jail for refusing to reveal a source in a situation that can hardly be described as related to national security, is it really that hard to believe that Bush would seek to imprison other reporters writing about more sensitive matters? With little to no oversight, it would be all but impossible to ascertain whether those who were imprisoned had actually committed a crime.

Since Bush takes criticism about as well as I can perform a triple axel, one must wonder if he would eventually start locking up journalists simply because they had the nerve to criticize his policies. You might call that scenario crazy, but I don't think anyone could have predicted several years ago how significantly the laws would have changed in the six years since Bush took office.

Joseph Pulitzer once wrote that a journalist must serve his/her readers by reporting the news "clearly so they will appreciate it...and, above all, accurately so they will be guided by its light." Reporters today must strive to ensure that George W. Bush cannot extinguish that light, or else he will be free to continue to pull the wool over the eyes of all Americans and make the world darker for all of us.

Chris Eckel is a Collegian columnist

ZZZZZZZZZZZZZZZZ
I WAS DREAMING WE WORKED LONG AND HARD, WITHOUT SLEAZE OR CLICHES, PASSING VITAL LEGISLATION, HONORING THE CONSTITUTION AND MAKING AMERICA A BETTER PLACE TO LIVE.
THANK GOD WE ADJOURNED I'M EXHAUSTED!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 4, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The 'Tribe' slays the stage in Worcester

By Johnny Metropoulos,
Collegian Correspondent

Headlining the "NBA 2k" Bounce Tour promoting the upcoming NBA 2k7 videogame, A Tribe Called Quest arrived at the Worcester Palladium with rappers Consequence and Rhymefest last Friday night. While both opening acts battled with a somewhat muddy audio mix—vocals were buried beneath the bass lines—they held their own.

Rapper Consequence was first up, alone on stage, save one DJ in the far corner spinning record after record almost non-stop. After four or five songs, Rhymefest climbed onstage next, accompanied by several other emcees aiding him with verse and supplying vocal harmonies. His set's highlight involved climbing into the audience while freestyling over a sample of Pharaoh Monch's "Simon Says." Without losing his flow, Rhymefest covered topics such as the Palladium's taut stage barriers and a fan's ringing cell phone before the song ended.

By the time the beat was over, all mouths hung open in complete awe, and Rhymefest called it quits on a high note. Waves of people now began to inch forward in anticipation of Tribe, and what followed was nothing short of incredible.

To alert their entrance, the "Midnight Marauders Tour Guide" blasted from the wall of speakers set behind the stage, and eventually trailed off as Q-tip (now Kamaal Ibn John Fareed after his Islamic conversion), Phife, and Shaheed Muhammad walked out to an absolutely silent crowd. As soon as the three were in clear view, the entire Palladium erupted. With Phife in his Yankees jersey and Muhammad in just a black tee-shirt, Q-tip went all out, adorning himself in a purple velvet sports coat à la New York City pimp. After a moment of chaotic howls, Quest went right into "Buggin' Out", and brought the place down on almost every jam. Opener Consequence came out for "Phony Rappers" to help Tip and the boys tear it up. Phife was on point for "Butter", and then a huge showstopper hit – Jarobi White, an original member who separated from the group after their debut album, was brought on stage for "Sucka Nigga" and there he remained for the duration of the show.

Phife, Shaheed Muhammad and Q-Tip were joined by their original counterpart Jarobi White last Friday in Worcester.

The Tribe touched upon Q-tip's solo library with "Vivrant Thing", and hit their classics such as "Bonita Applebum", "Electric Relaxation", and "Can I Kick It?" After two hours, the four members walked off stage.

But once the noise from the fans rose to a deafening wave, they came back for an encore that consisted of "Scenario" (requesting audience participation for all of Busta Rhymes' verse), "Check the Rhime", and "Award Tour" – teasing the audience by replaying the song's intro upwards of three or four times before actually jumping into the first verse.

The show was altogether an amazing experience – it seemed every audience member was out of his or her seat for most of the performance. Though the majority of songs performed were written over ten years ago, the lyrical content in Tribe's music is relevant to present-day social issues. It's no wonder they still have a strong fan-base after all this time, making it clear to any venue owner, "If you got money, Quest is for the bookin'".

Mystic Seaport deserves second look

By Bob Downing
Akron Beacon Journal

MYSTIC, Conn. — Mystic Seaport is a cool nautical illusion.

Yes, the collection of sailing ships, wharves, shipyards, galleries and exhibits is real, but Mystic Seaport is a man-made creation along the Connecticut coast.

There never was a port at the site of the 17-acre complex along the Mystic River that calls itself Mystic Seaport — The Museum of America and the Sea.

That's a pretty sweeping title, but Mystic Seaport produces. It is a world-class maritime museum and a major tourist attraction halfway between Boston and New York City.

It is right up there with Massachusetts' Old Sturbridge Village and Plymouth Plantation and the Mayflower as top New England attractions.

It's not large, but a lot is packed into a small space.

It attracts more than 320,000 visitors a year and is one of the biggest tourist attractions in Connecticut, after the ultra-popular Mohegan Sun and Foxwood casinos.

Mystic Seaport, with 510 boats and ships in its collections, is the largest maritime museum in the United States.

You can tour the displays, galleries and exhibits ashore and, in season, join in on-the-water cruises from the historical complex, which has 60 authentic maritime buildings.

Mystic Seaport features a re-created 19th-century seafaring village with cobblestone streets. It is complete with the sights, sounds and smells of maritime America and how people are connected to the sea.

Visitors can meet craftspeople, coopers, shipsmiths, storytellers, woodcarvers, musicians and chanteymen in and outside the waterfront shops.

It provides visitors with a look at shipbuilding, life at sea and ashore, sailing skills, New England fishing and more.

You can learn how rope was made, see how coopers made barrels in which to transport goods, visit a sail loft in which sails are made, inspect a chandlery where items are sold for departing ships and check out a rigging shop. Spectators can also see how sailors used the stars to navigate, and admire ships' ornate carved figureheads and highly prized scrimshaw or whale ivory.

There is a children's museum, a planetarium, a full-service restaurant, a bookstore with serious nautical offerings and shops. There is even a 19th-century shipyard, where authentic repairs can be made to keep Mystic Seaport's flotilla afloat.

Mystic Seaport's historical collections include more than 2 million artifacts and more than 1 million vintage maritime images.

In addition, there are more than a thousand ships' registries, 600 taped oral interviews, 200 videotaped interviews and 1 and a ½ million feet of maritime film footage.

Mystic Seaport's biggest attraction is the old whaling ship Charles W. Morgan, a 113-footer built in 1841.

The wooden ship is the last of its kind in the world and a National historic landmark. Built in New Bedford, Mass., the ship made 37 whaling voyages over her 80-year career.

It took three to five years to kill the 50 whales needed to fill its hold with whale oil.

In 1886, the Morgan moved to San Francisco and cruised the Pacific Ocean in search of whales until 1903. She then returned to New England in the waning days of the whaling industry. The ship was retired in 1921.

It has been restored to the way it looked around 1900, complete with its double-topsail bark rig. The mainmast towers 110 feet above the deck.

There are pots on deck to boil blubber to produce the oil, and harpoons and blubber cutters, among other tools.

The vessel is scheduled to be removed from the water in the

See MYSTIC on page 9

'Dracula' has no bite

By Ellen Carnes
Washington Square News (NYU)

NEW YORK — Elizabeth Kostova has said she wanted to spill less than a cup of blood in "The Historian," her sprawling Gothic novel about a scholar's pursuit of the truth behind Dracula. And that's a pity — her elegant vampire tale could use a few more cups of blood and a little more bite. "The Historian" begins promisingly. In the first few pages we get shadowy libraries, a menacing ancient book and an old professor's startling proclamation that "Dracula lives among us today." The novel is most captivating when it tracks a bumbling academic's search for Dracula through various crumbling monasteries and forgotten tombs in Eastern Europe, but loses steam as it strays into excessive descriptions and long-winded digressions. "The Historian" offers an unusually compelling portrayal of the Prince of Darkness himself, of whom we see far too little in the book.

Kostova's debut novel took 10 years to write, winning the University of Michigan's Hopwood Award for novels along the way. Months before publication, "The Historian" was already labeled the 'next big thing' in books and had earned a reputation as a more cerebral "Da Vinci Code." Kostova's writing is certainly more scholarly than Dan Brown's, but both books benefit from the recent fascination with historical and mythological mysteries. In Kostova's case, Dracula is not an easy subject to tackle, yet she manages to do it with sinister grace.

The unnamed narrator of "The Historian," a sheltered American teenage girl living in 1972 Amsterdam, unearths a yellowing collection of old letters that begins, "My dear and unfortunate successor ..." This eerie correspondence propels her onto a mission to uncover the truth about Vlad Tepes, a ruthless medieval Wallachian warlord who earned the cheery nickname "The Impaler" by skewering his victims on six-foot stakes. The story spans several decades — the '30s, '50s and '70s — using a complex series of recollections and letters.

It begins with the narrator's father, Paul, a graduate student of history at Oxford University in the 1950s. Paul finds an old book left in his desk, blank except for a "great woodcut of a dragon with spread wings and a long looped tail, a beast unfurled and raging, claws out stretched" and a single word—"Drakulya." This prompts Paul to bring the mysterious tome to his mentor, the charismatic Professor Rossi. After a cryptic conversation, during which Rossi admits he received a book similar to Paul's many years before, the professor disappears, leaving Paul with only a bundle of letters and a lot of questions. So Paul and the professor's brilliant daughter, Helen, head behind the Iron Curtain to Romania to find Rossi and locate the tomb of Dracula. Years later, Paul recounts both his own and Rossi's tales to his naive daughter.

Kostova juggles all three storylines and time periods beautifully, intricately weaving them together while maintaining a clear structure. The prose is atmospheric and sophisticated—there is no doubt that "The Historian" is an extremely well-written book. And that is part of its problem. Too often, the novel digresses into long, exquisitely crafted sections on the European scenery or history. These slower parts defuse the tension created by the genuinely creepy vampire-hunting moments. "The Historian" is at its moody, page-turning best when it sticks to the

Critic tries to conquer all

By Colleen Mastony
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — The world has plenty of critics: film critics, restaurant critics, music critics. Kevin Elliott, a 27-year-old Chicago waiter and bookstore worker, outdoes them all. He is a Critic of Everything.

Taxi rides across town, four loads of laundry at Spin Cycle, the card he bought for his grandmother's birthday. He scribbles opinions about them all, posting up to two days a week, maybe 365 days a year, on his Web site, kevinsmatron.com.

A bowl of iceberg lettuce, six-packs of Old Style beer, Soft Choice toilet paper. Such are the mundane purchases of modern man. But Elliott believes they add up. In his eyes, thousands of receipts make a mosaic of life.

There are limits, of course.

"I don't review rent and utilities," he says over lunch at Taiwan Cafe (later rated 4.25 out of 5), in Chicago's Wicker Park neighborhood explaining that he wants to keep some financial details private.

Earnest and introspective with shaggy blond hair and small, round wire-rimmed glasses, Elliott says he's not out to change the world. He just wants to observe it and then give everything a score from 1 to 5. "I think it's interesting to examine the everyday things in life," he said. "I don't want to get too preachy or deep."

The result is a consumer diary of sorts—Zagats, MySpace and Consumer Reports rolled into one—all produced by the irreverent and energetic Elliott, a film-school dropout from Wisconsin.

Elliott says the site gets only about 100 hits a day. His publicity campaign so far has consisted of Elliott riding a green bicycle around the city and leaving piles of small buttons with the Web address and logo in coffee shops.

Elliott writes reviews sitting on the sofa in his Bridgeport apartment. He hopes the venture eventually will lead to a paid writing job. "Writing has always been my dream," he said. So he knocks out his reviews: Camel Lights cigarettes (rating: 2.5), 12 gallons of gasoline (rating: 1.75/5), and a pack of Hanes premium tube socks (rating: 4/5).

The idea for the site came during a slow shift at The Artists Café in Chicago, where Elliott waits tables. He and another waiter, Josh Benedict, 25, were "talking about how much crap we buy," Elliott recalled.

Although there were many Web sites with reviews of big purchases, the two waiters couldn't think of any place to find reviews of small, everyday things. "Like what someone thought of their toothbrush," Benedict said.

Elliott sketched out a logo: an upraised fist clutching a wad of burning cash. "It was a joke at first," Elliott said. But within a few days, he was saving receipts and dashing off opinions. In a small black notebook, he recorded every dime spent.

"I started doing it and I realized it was funny," Elliott said.

See CRITIC on page 9

Los Lonely Boys spread 'Texican' rock

By Wade Tatangelo
McClatchy Newspapers

The Garza brothers spent years performing around West Texas as the backing band for their father Enrique in crowded cantinas and roadhouses. Eventually, the siblings formed their own power trio and after choosing the name Los Lonely Boys took their distinct brand of "Texican" guitar rock from the Lone Star State to the world. In doing so, they joined a very elite club of Chicano "crossover" stars.

Los Lonely Boys have been in the limelight ever since their 2004 self-titled debut album generated the breezy hit single "Heaven." The LP has sold more than 2 million copies and earned the trio a Grammy for best Pop Vocal Duo/Group. The 2005 release of "Live at the Fillmore" documented the band's power in concert, most notably the chops of lead guitarist/singer Henry Garza, whose style recalls fellow Texan Stevie Ray Vaughan.

This summer, Los Lonely Boys released its highly anticipated second studio record "Sacred." Far from a sophomore slump, the disc was a critical and commercial success that hit No. 2 on the Billboard 200 and produced the hit single "Diamonds."

Los Lonely Boys is 28 year-old Henry Garza and his younger brothers Jo Jo (bass) and Ringo (drums). When we caught up with Henry he was getting ready for a concert in Buffalo, N.Y., featuring Los Lonely Boys and Santana.

"Bro, it's pretty cold here," Garza said, with a laugh. "But we gotta come up here to bring them some Texican rock n' roll with Santana." For decades, when most people heard the term "Chicano rock star" or "Latino guitar hero" only the name Carlos Santana came to mind.

"He came to visit us backstage after a concert in San Francisco at the Fillmore," Henry said. "The first word out of both of our mouths was 'finally.'

"Santana is a part of Chicano culture," Henry continued. "You hear him at barbecues, at weddings, whenever there's people getting together there's Santana."

Although the group is still years short of Santana status, Los Lonely Boys is well on their way to becoming a household name.

Above, the Los Lonely Boys stand proud with their 2005 Emmys for Best Pop Vocal Duo. Their self-titled first album sold more than 2 million copies and earned the trio a Grammy for best Pop Vocal Duo/Group.

The brothers gained worldwide recognition when they performed at the 2005 Grammys and walked home with the award for Pop Vocal Duo/Group. "It's still like a dream that you don't think is real," Henry said. "We still feel the same but also feel very honored. Sometimes dreams do come true."

Henry is acutely aware of how rare it is to be a Hispanic musician embraced by white America.

"We are Hispanic without asking to be and there's not many of us making it in this business, it's just one of those things," Henry said. "We're real happy to be a part of it and to be an inspiration to our people and people in general. It's different colors but it's all the same human spirit we're looking to reach."

Like most musicians, Henry has to makes sacrifices to bring that message of unity to the masses. In addition to having two younger brothers he's also the father of three sons.

"My own 'Los Lonely Boys,' a daughter, too," Henry enthused. "I give my best to teach them what my dad taught us. Because of the success we've had I want to give them the opportunities we didn't have. I want them to finish school and go to college like their dad didn't do."

Los Lonely Boys is one of the hardest working bands in rock n' roll. The brothers spent their teens and early 20's backing their father and recent years have found them courting audiences across the nation. "The longest break we've taken in our lives has only been a couple months," Henry said. "We just try and pace ourselves and keep our schedule human."

And Henry laughed again.

"We've been pretty much on tour our whole lives."

The Garza family has labored hard and been around hard workers all their lives. Their native San Angelo, Texas, is home to Air Force personnel, cow hands and cotton pickers. Last month, Los Lonely Boys again performed at Farm Aid. Farm Aid's first concert was organized by Willie Nelson, Neil Young and John Mellencamp in 1985 to raise awareness about the loss of family farms and to raise funds to keep farm families on their land.

"This is our second or third one. We've been doing Farm Aid ever since we met Willie," Henry said. "We try and make an effort to help out with what Willie and the other musicians are doing because it's a cause we believe in."

Los Lonely Boys' "Sacred" album features the track "Outlaws," which features guest vocals from the boys' father Enrique Garza and Willie Nelson.

Comedy Central airs FreakShow

By J.M. Friedman
Collegian Staff

"Freak Show", the warped brainchild of David Cross and Jon Benjamin, follows the tribulations of the Freak Squad, a team of second-rate super heroes.

Those familiar with Arrested Development, one of the most popular yet least-known comedy series, will recognize the voice of Cross as Tobias Funke. Cross created the highly acclaimed sketch-comedy series "Mr. Show with Bob and David" and has appeared in recent episodes of the Colbert Report as Correspondent Russ Lieber.

Jon Benjamin, a Worcester native, is known on the Adult Swim circuit for his work on the cast of "Home Movies," the short-lived UPN series picked up by Cartoon Network after cancellation. Benjamin was a staff writer for the Comedy Central show "Dr. Katz: Professional Therapist". His voiceover credits include "Aqua Teen Hunger Force", "Family Guy", and most notably as the can of beans in "Wet Hot American Summer."

Fans of Adult Swim and its irreverent, offbeat brand of comedy should enjoy the adventures of the five not-so-super heroes in "Freak Show."

The show centers around Tuck and Benny (Siamese twins with the power to separate), voiced by Cross and Benjamin, engaging in argumentative dialogue only possible by a conjoined and oft-conflicted pair of siblings.

Tuck and Benny are joined by The Bearded Clam (appropriately voiced by Janeane Garafalo) who is able to shoot "blinding bitch juice", along with The World's Tallest Nebraskan, the slow talking dim-witted country hick who can shrink up to six inches. Rounding out the cast is Log Cabin Republican, "an actual Republican who is gay," who can transform into the S&M garbed Burly Bear.

Perhaps the most disturbing character, (a tough choice) Primi, the soft-spoken premature baby with pinpoint projectile vomiting, is indicative of the audacious genre of humor employed in "Freak Show".

Secretly employed by the Pentagon to carry out low priority missions, the five uniquely-abled characters take the tasks neglected by the top-tier Justice League.

While the superhero parody is nothing new, the talent of David Cross and Jon Benjamin shine as they combine inane sketch comedy and "TV Funhouse" style animation, resulting in a twisted panorama of humor.

In the pilot episode, the Freak Squad is called away from their day jobs at the last independently-owned and operated circus freak show. The cast of misfits take on the Pentagons request for a covert operation to re-supply the President with his beloved Perry Nuts, the second leading export (only behind human blood) of an embargoed island controlled by the evil General M'Dinka Maguobi. Hilarity ensues.

Judging by the first two episodes, the series has plenty of laugh-out-loud moments, from profanity laced tirades, scatological humor and awkward social parody to more subtle, easily missed bits of scathing, politically charged insinuations.

For instance, the pin worn by Log Cabin Republican on his conservative suit jacket is none other than "Lev 20:13", the verse commonly cited by anti-homosexual proponents as biblical evidence against same-sex relations.

Another easily missed snippet of Conservative satire comes when Duncan Shiestt (voiced by Will Arnett of "Arrested Development"), representative of Freakmart International, the evil corporation set on buying Bob & Helen's Funtyme Freakshow, mentions in passing that the owner of Freakmart International is none other than Mal Winston, a partial anagram of Sam Walton, founder of WalMart.

When the show struggles, it is only because things have crossed the threshold into over-irreverence, if that is indeed possible for a target audience accustomed to the brazen style of humor made popular by animated behemoths Family Guy and South Park, along with the lesser known treasures occupying fifteen minute slots on the late night college staple, Adult Swim.

Much of the politically charged humor, congruent with Cross' standup routine and earlier work on Arrested Development, should resonate with the commonly toasted, college aged, liberal viewership that has made late night comedy blocks a success.

Using comedy to advance left-leaning views may be frowned upon and out-right scorned by more moderate audiences, except, in the case of "Freak Show", the task of interjecting social and political commentary is handled with a self-mocking tone that makes the pill easy enough swallow.

Comedy Central is well-aware of their target demographic, releasing early screenings of "Freak Show" on college campuses across the northeast in an attempt to build awareness and buzz. The series premiers tonight, at 10:30 following South Park.

Critic Elliott rates it all online

CRITIC from page 8

"It said a lot about my personal habits and it made me think, 'Why am I buying all this junk?'"

The son of a computer programmer, Elliott had taken a Web design class and knew how to set up an Internet site. Within a few weeks, he had established consumatron.com.

His first posting appeared Oct. 3, 2005, a review of a tuna salad sandwich bought at 7-Eleven. "The crack team of scientists at 7-Eleven laboratories struck sandwich-salad gold with their decision to add celery bits and pickle to the mix, which gives the sandwich a little bit of a zing," he wrote. He rated the sandwich 3.75 out of 5.

He bought a digital camera (rating: 4.75/5), and added photos. He carried the camera everywhere, taking pictures of his meals in restaurants, each item he bought in the grocery store, the beer he bought in bars and even a hotel room he rented on vacation at Wisconsin Dells.

He has become an Everyman critic, a connoisseur of canned foods and a fast-food aficionado. Unlike professional critics, Elliott goes only to the places he likes; buys what he can afford and eats what he wants. His tastes run toward takeout pizza, mom-and-pop diners and Chinese food.

Although he observes a weekly "Buy Nothing Day,"

Self-acclaimed critic Kevin Elliott is a surveyor of all things, especially in his Chicago apartment.

Elliott says the site isn't against consumerism or capitalism. "It's not anti-anything," he says. "I'm just a guy, and this (site) is about what I buy and why I buy."

The site has made him more conscious of his spending and eating habits. While chronicling his purchases, he says, he noticed a startling trend: He was polishing off many bags of peanuts and eating a disturbing number of sandwiches from 7-Eleven; he resolved to cut back.

October marks the one-year anniversary of the site. On the 15th, he plans to hold a party at Subterranean, 2011 W. North Ave. in Chicago, in hopes of gaining attention, advertisers and, perhaps most importantly, readers.

Though the site started off a lark, Elliott said he found the writing "surprisingly satisfying." The project has kept him productive, forcing him to bang out several reviews a day. He has thought about going to journalism school but, if none big way, he already has accomplished his dream. The site has made him the writer he always wanted to be.

A Majestic Mystic

The 113 ft. floating Charles W. Morgan is just one of the many ships on display in Connecticut's Mystic Seaport.

MYSTIC from page 8

fall of 2007 for a $3.5 million renovation that will take three years.

Other attractions include a model of the Mystic River, where 600 vessels were built between 1784 and 1919. But the vintage ships are really the centerpiece, the heart, of Mystic Seaport.

You can take 30-minute cruises aboard the wooden coal-fired steamboat Sabino. It was built in 1908 to serve as a Maine ferry. There are also 90-minute late afternoon cruises on the Sabino.

The 80-foot schooner Amistad — a re-creation of the ship whose story was told in Steven Spielberg's 1997 film, "Amistad" — was built at Mystic Seaport from 1998-2000.

The film is about the 1839 rebellion by 53 captive Africans against slave traders. They stood trial for murder and piracy, and their case fueled Northern abolitionists.

The vessel is operated by Amistad America, a separate nonprofit group, and is frequently anchored at Mystic Seaport.

The tall ship L.A. Dunton, a 123-foot schooner, was built in 1921 and was used to fish for cod off the New England coast. It was one of the last un-motorized fishing vessels of its kind in the United States.

Mystic Seaport features lots of fishing boats.

You can learn to sail aboard the Brilliant, a 61-foot schooner built in 1932. It is a classic sailing yacht.

The tall ship Joseph Conrad, built in 1882 and 111 feet long, is on exhibit.

Mystic Seaport was founded in 1929 by the Marine Historical Society. The three men behind the project to save America's marine past were lawyer Carl Cutler, doctor Charles Stillman and silk manufacturer Edward Bradley.

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

Fans gear up for 'Lost'

By Joseph Deiorio
The Dharma Initiative (Dharma 8.7%)

HANOVER, NH. — Polar bears. Black smoke. French women. The Dharma Initiative. Claire's baby. Long-lost Walt. Jack and Kate. Sawyer and Kate. Henry Gale. 4, 8, 15, 16, 23, 42. The hatch. The Others.

Feeling "Lost?" Join the other 15 million viewers who have eagerly and meticulously followed the weekly ups and downs of Oceanic Flight 815 over the last two years. This week marks the premiere of the Emmy-winning hit show's third season — a premiere that will (we hope) answer some of last season's most burning questions and (undoubtedly) present a number of brand-spanking new mysteries, both frustrating and endlessly intriguing.

Even the most devoted "Lost" fan could use a slight refresher on the status of our beloved castaways since they left us last May. Here is a brief, unofficial and moderately helpful summary that should get you up to speed, character-by-character, before Wednesday night's bedazzling premiere.

Jack (Matthew Fox): The resident doctor and "hero" of the show, who was flying the corpse of his alcoholic father back to the United States, was led into Michael's trap to rescue Walt and is now in the custody of the Others.

Kate (Evangeline Lilly): The bad girl (turned good?) with a mysterious past, who had been flying back to the United States in the custody of a U.S. marshal, was also led into Michael's trap and is now in the Others' hands.

Sawyer (Josh Holloway): The proud antihero and hoarder of necessary supplies had been deported from Australia. He too ended up in the clutches of the Others after falling for Michael's trap.

Sayid (Naveen Andrews): The former Iraqi Republican Guardsman was returning from work for the CIA in Australia. Now he effectively uses his military skills to survive on the island. Sayid was last seen scouting out the Others' abandoned camp on the north side of the island.

Locke (Terry O'Quinn): The once-paralyzed box company supervisor crashed on the island and found he could walk again, prompting an undying faith in the island and the hatch. Since the near explosion of the hatch, we have yet to see what has become of Locke.

Hurley (Jorge Garcia): The unlucky lottery winner was investigating his special relationship to his winning lotto (and hatch!) numbers in Australia and became the good-natured, friendly neighbor on the island. Hurley was sent back by the Others to prevent the passage of any more castaways to the north part of the island.

Jin and Sun (Daniel Dae Kim, Yunjin Kim): The troubled Korean couple—Jin was controlling and lied about work; Sun learned English behind Jin's back. The two were last seen exploring the Others' abandoned camp with Sayid.

Eko (Adewale Akinnuoye-Agbaje): Eko is the only surviving "tailie" with a dark and troubled past in Nigeria as a con man and priest, whose travel details are still unknown. He was last seen, like Locke, enveloped in the electromagnetic blast.

Claire (Emilie de Ravin): En route to Los Angeles to give her baby up for adoption, this Aussie was kidnapped and treated by the Others, later escaped, and gave birth to baby Aaron. Claire was last seen safely back at camp, sharing a kiss with ...

Charlie (Dominic Monaghan): The recovering heroin addict and rock-star burnout was returning from Australia after begging his brother to reunite their band, Drive Shaft. Clean and hopefully free of ominous dreams about Aaron, Charlie was back at camp with Claire during the season finale.

Michael and Walt (Harold Perrineau, Malcolm David Kelley): Returning from an awkward father-son reunion in Australia where Walt's mother had passed away, Walt was kidnapped by the Others. Desperate, Michael killed some "tailies" and led Jack, Kate and Sawyer into the Others' trap in exchange for a boat and the return of his son. They were last seen leaving the island.

A number of burning questions are left by the topic of this summer's cliffhanger third season itself. Why do the Others want Jack, Kate and Sawyer? What happened to Claire while she was in their custody? Are Michael and Walt successful in their escape? What will the electromagnetic explosion do to the island's inhabitants? Who exactly are the Others? Look for interesting storylines concerning Henry Gale and Desmond (who turned the hatch key) at the hatch as well.

"Lost" kicks off its third season Wednesday, Oct. 4 at 9 p.m. on ABC.

Missed out on the first and/or second seasons? Watch them both on DVD. Or just then catch up with the third season on iTunes, where each week's episode will be made available for download every Thursday for $1.99. It's true—there's nothing better to do on a Wednesday night than to get "Lost."

www.greenfieldsavings.com

$26,000!

That's a sight sore eyes.

Check it out. You earn a great account. Local schools receive more money. Sign up for Civic Action today and your everyday spending helps area education be a little more in focus.

Connecting all branches
413-774-3191
413-549-3660

Greenfield
Amherst
Conway
Shelburne Falls
South Deerfield
Turners Falls

GREENFIELD SAVINGS BANK
the people's choice

Member FDIC
Member DIF

UMass skiers hope Fox is the missing piece

SKI COACH from page 12

Replacing Vanovac in 2004 was Thoman, a former captain of the Minutemen who raced for the team from 1998-2002. After a year off, Thoman returned to UMass to lead the team. In just his second year as coach, he led the men to its highest finish ever at the USCSA nationals. The Minutemen finished third overall in the 19-team field.

The team was led by sophomore Rush Hawkins, who became the first American skier in 10 years to win both the slalom and giant slalom events, making him the individual USCSA champion, another first for UMass. Typically, European skiers in their mid-20s who transfer to American schools out west take the title, but Hawkins, at 21, swept the field.

Even after such a successful season, Thoman abruptly left the UMass ski team just as LeBlanc and Vanovac did before him after two years at the helm. Just over a year removed from leaving the program he devoted six years to, Thoman cited the lack of support from the administration as the main reason for his departure.

"When MacConnell retired, it meant they had to pay a full-time coach real money, something they didn't want to do," Thoman says. "Every coach since MacConnell has realized this and usually has left within two years. Basically, the ski team is the team they don't want and would rather forget. But they have to keep it, so they do it with minimal funds.

"The problem is the department is financially strapped," he continues. "They just can't get money anywhere. They finally got a track for the track team this year. It only took them 20 years."

Fox's comments contradicted Thoman's, possibly demonstrating a recent change of heart on the part of the athletic department, or perhaps simply revealing support that was always there.

"This is actually a pretty good job in the realm of ski coaching," Fox says. "When you get full benefits, health, dental, and the option of retirement, in the ski-coaching world, that's pretty good. I'm sure there's a lot of little clubs out there, like the one at Berkshire East, that can't do that for their coaches, they just can't. But for a major university like this, this is a fairly decent job in the ski-coaching world."

McCutcheon defended the University's support of the program and maintained his position that the administration is behind UMass skiing.

"The athletic department cares a great deal about the ski teams," McCutcheon says. "We wish we could give more and do more for many of our teams, but limited resources will not allow for that. We are very proud of their accomplishments and are optimistic about their future."

After losing three promising coaching prospects, the athletic department turned to another UMass alum and former skier in Rouleau. The 1998 graduate returned to the UMass program after a year coaching the Harvard ski team, but lasted just one season before being fired for a number of infractions.

"A few times during the middle of the season, [Rouleau] would come out reeking of [marijuana]," a source close to the team says. "And the parents would ask us, 'Is your coach high?' You can't have a coach suspected of that."

"UMass had three great coaches come through and they let all of them go," Thoman says. "Then they got stuck with [Rouleau], who was a disaster, and they are surprised that this occurred."

It is clear when listening to past and current skiers discuss their coaches that the University is now struggling to find quality leaders for the program.

In the 1999 UMass Skiing Media Guide, former team captain Thomas Holden attributed the team's long-term success to MacConnell.

"Coach MacConnell is the glue that keeps the team from unraveling. It is amazing how he keeps going," Holden says.

MacConnell's disciples were just as respected by the skiers.

"Ken [Thoman] was a good coach, a good friend and he also knew how to really lay down the law in the preseason which helped out in the season," current team captain Rush Hawkins says.

The coach-athlete bond has broken down since that time, however, as Rouleau struggled throughout the season to gain the trust of his athletes.

"[Rouleau] did some great things for us in the offseason, like getting us rain gear and sneakers, but on the hill he was more of a distraction than a coach," junior Jason Small said just days after the troubled coach was fired.

"Before our runs, when mental preparation is all you need to worry about, he would try and talk to us and get us to tweak our techniques, which is a terrible thing to do," Small added. "Before my run, I just want to be left alone and 'get into the zone' but he just wouldn't leave me alone."

The 2006-07 season will see another new coach at the slopes with the team, and for veterans like Hawkins, that means a third coach in as many seasons. Hawkins, however, remains optimistic.

"If anything it might make me stronger for my most mature year in college," Hawkins says. "Not only me but the rest of the team as well. If there is something we have to deal with, we all pretty much know it needs to be done as a team; otherwise it really wouldn't work."

Hawkins and his teammates are not as worried about the team's coaching situation as one might expect. They are just "happy to be a varsity sport at all."

A number of times throughout its history – including last year – the skiing team was under threat of being demoted to club level, but was able to stay afloat as a varsity sport. The biggest threat came in 1986, when the team was actually demoted to club status following the 1985 season, but was reinstated as a varsity program before the start of the next season.

"It's a very delicate situation," Thoman says. "The athletic department, from what I gather, kept the team on roster out of a courtesy to coach MacConnell because he donated a large sum of money to the school when he was a professor here."

The school's apathy is evident in the level of promotion the team receives from its own Media Relations department. The department releases a media guide for each varsity sport, sending them to most local media outlets, particularly the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Most sports' media guides are extensive, with profiles of all the coaches and athletes and pages upon pages of statistics and won-loss records from past seasons. The 2006 UMass Softball Media Guide, for instance, is a 72-page book that tells any media source everything it would need to know to cover the team for the upcoming season.

The 2006 UMass Skiing Media Guide has five pages of team content accompanied by two more pages about the University and another two on UMass Athletics overall.

It has a short profile of Rouleau, followed by 2005 season reviews for both the men's and women's teams. The next two pages contain the information of every athlete on either team. Other sports' media guides devote a full page to each athlete individually.

Despite the close proximity to the ski team office – the Media Relations office is exactly two doors away – Media Relations provided no information in the media guide from earlier seasons or historical data on the team. When asked if there was any archived information at the Media Relations office, the only response was, "We have nothing compiled."

"Media Relations was always told to have us on the bottom of their priority list," Thoman says.

The best source of information on UMass skiing, especially during the offseason, is the Special Collections archive in the W.E.B. DuBois Library, located on the 25th floor. In this remote section of campus, one can find a small folder containing media guides from the past decade (all the same length and depth of information) and a handful of articles from the Campus Chronicle.

It appears as though the existence of the UMass ski team is a mere formality to the rest of the University.

"With the increasing failure of the basketball program and other major programs in the last decade, UMass would rather put more resources into those failing programs to hopefully turn them around and generate some athletic revenue for the school," Thoman says. "The ski team will always be a low priority for them, and if it wasn't for some powerful alumni it would have [disappeared] a long time ago."

While UMass' revenue-generating sports – basketball and football – have not peaked since their success in the late 90s, the men's and women's skiing teams have remained competitive atop the ECSC consistently for decades.

However, while basketball and football fans can watch games right on campus, the UMass skiers compete hours away, on the mountains of Vermont, New Hampshire, and Maine. The team does not sell tickets to its races, so it generates no revenue for the University or the athletic department. It is maintained through alumni support and, it seems, the general goodwill of UMass Athletics.

"I can't see any reputable coach coming to UMass in the near future," Thoman says. "There just is no job security or backing for the program."

Fox now has the opportunity to prove his coaching predecessor wrong and build a reputation of his own. For now, however, the ski teams remain relatively unknown.

"Eliza [Hawkins] was real frank with me," Fox says. "She said, 'we're a bit skeptical,' because I'm the fourth coach in four years or something like that. What's my job? To prove them wrong. Like I said, I have not seen that side of the coin where there's no support from the University."

It seems whether the administration is behind UMass skiing or not, the program is still struggling to find stability and the recognition many feel it deserve.

Despite competing high atop mountains and soaring above rival schools, the UMass ski team is still flying under the radar here at home.

"Eliza [Hawkins] was real frank with me," Fox says. "She said, 'we're a bit skeptical,' because I'm the fourth coach in four years or something like that. What's my job? To prove them wrong. Like I said, I have not seen that side of the coin where there's no support from the University."

Hawkins and company are pleased that skiing is a varsity sport, despite being under their third coach in three years. Contrary to recent complaints about the UMass athletic department, Skip Fox holds it in high regard.

GET PUNTED
OR WRITE FOR SPORTS
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Text MARINER to 2DRIVE (237483)
for a chance to win:

A 60 GB iPod with adapter

A $25 iTunes Music Card

A ringtone brought to you exclusively by Ford and mtvU featuring Matchbook Romance's "Monsters"

DEFINE yourself

$500 cash bonus

Special offer for college and trade school students, recent grads and graduate students

Certain purchase and eligibility restrictions apply.

Visit www.fordcollegehq.com for official Program rules. Or, see your local Ford or Lincoln Mercury Dealer.

Available only on participating carriers. Standard messaging rates apply. Other charges may apply. For Help, text HELP to 237483. To end, text STOP to 237483. NO PURCHASE NECESSARY. Void where prohibited. Open to legal residents of the U.S. who are 18 or older at time of entry and who as of 9/5/06 are enrolled (or have graduated after 5/1/04) in/from a nationally accredited college/university, junior college, community college or trade school. Game ends 1/2/07. See Official Rules and entry restrictions at www.Fordcollegehq.com/2DRIVE.

Three undefeated teams survive week

A-10 M. SOCCER from page 12

goals scored and currently is ninth all-time for assists.

ROOKIE OF THE WEEK

Charlotte senior midfielder Andre Lee earned the A-10 Rookie of the Week honor. Lee scored his first career goal in a 1-0, road victory over Temple. Lee also added an assist in a 6-1 thumping of Saint Joseph's. For the season, Lee has four points with one goal and two assists.

FAST START

The Atlantic 10 conference play began last week and three A-10 teams started 2-0 – Charlotte (6-3-2, 2-0 A-10), Rhode Island (5-3-3, 2-0 A-10), and Richmond (5-5-2, 2-0 A-10). The Spiders defeated Temple, 3-1, and beat Saint Joseph's, 1-0, in double overtime. Spiders sophomore forward Delano Pierre leads the team with seven points (two goals, three assists). The 49ers also took down Temple, 1-0, and Saint Joseph's, 6-1. The 49ers are led by senior forward Michael Rose who has compiled 12 points (four goals and four assists).

MORAL VICTORY

St. Bonaventure played No.12 Fordham to a 0-0 draw in its conference opener. The Bonnies have yet to taste victory with a record of (0-8-1, 0-0-1 A-10). They out shot the Rams, 15-8, in the game, and 4-0 in the overtime period. The team has struggled mightily and has been a victim of five shutouts this season.

FADING AWAY

The Massachusetts men's soccer team started the season strong with a 5-0-1 record and a national ranking in the Top 25. Since then they have gone 1-4-1, dropping their first two A-10 games. George Washington defeated the Minutemen, 3-0, and La Salle embarrassed them, 5-0. UMass (6-4-2) looks to rebound this weekend against Dayton and Xavier.

A-10 LEADERS

Gonsalves leads the conference in total points with 17 and goals scored with eight in 10 games. Gonsalves also ranks second in game-winning goals with three behind Fordham's Kevin Meyer who leads with four. Rhode Island junior forward Lukasz Tumicz leads the conference with five assists in 10 games. UMass senior goalkeeper Zack Simmons leads with 53 saves. However, he dropped to second in goals-against average to Fordham junior goalkeeper Doug Devereaux. Devereaux's goals-against average is 0.66 in nine games and Simmons' goals-against average is 0.89 in 12 games.

Sophomore midfielder Prince Ofosu and the Minutemen stumbled in their Atlantic 10 openers, dropping their first two contests.

Submit A Comic And Be Reborn
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

6				5		7
1			6	3	2
		8	5	1
	8		7	3
7						2
			4	1		6
		9		8	2
	6	1	3			8
8		7				5

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Pants
6 Hood
10 Cobbler's tools
14 In plain view
15 Relaxation
16 Bog material
17 Eagle's nest
18 Recite an onison
19 Knotty
20 Walked all over
22 Hard to find
24 Fencer's instrument
25 Like a gnu
26 Not productive
29 Start a volleyball point
30 GPs org.
31 Edge
33 Choose to compete
37 Acerbic
39 Below, to a bard
41 Ballerina's skirt
42 Piece of paper
44 Church parts
46 Prohibit
47 Does Virginia's fence?
49 Retailer's transaction
51 Inflexible
54 Junky jalopy
55 ... advocate
56 Aloofness
60 Bearing
61 ... friendly
63 Compositions for three
64 Blocking shade
65 Part to play
66 Acts as barker
67 New Jersey live
68 Meadow mamas
69 Expunge

DOWN
1 Capricorn's symbol
2 Declare
3 Evening in Venezia
4 Elementary school text
5 Siberian plains
6 Plains dwelling
7 Difficult
8 "Born in the ..." Yellowstone sight
10 Obvious
11 Strange
12 Knight's weapon
13 Mrs. Peel's partner
21 Butchered reader
23 Grotto
25 Sugar source
26 Loverlike
27 Sludge's
28 Adam nanny
28 Once in a lifetime
29 Palm-face encounters
32 Dish-tucked the cards
34 Big, hand tote
35 List entry
36 Old alphabet character
38 Finishing point
40 Toast's start
43 Blue shade
45 Washington city
48 Make certain
50 Less abundant
51 Commercial enters
52 Clear frost
53 Turn away
54 Takes on
56 Removal order
57 Perla's sister ship
58 Unpaid-for packages
59 Lawn tabog
62 Spread seeds

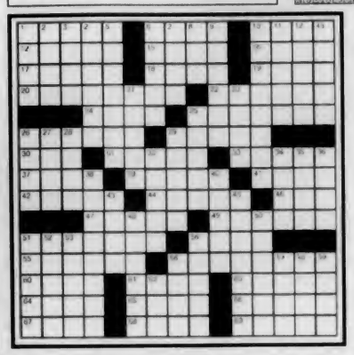
THE HARP
FALL SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
HRS. - Rudy Brown
FRI Irish Seisiun
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the river 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate readers poll
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
163 Sunderland Rd - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-9000 www.theharp.net

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Be kind to everyone, who knows what they're going through."

—Sean Thomas Duram

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek
What's it like being divorced so often?
I've only been divorced once.
Couldn't find another man to marry you after the first one?
Wasn't interested, thanks
What about your job after you got fired?
I retired
Pam gets all cranky when I try to talk to her unsolicited
Did you?



BEST BAR AROUND
Seven O's
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
Live Band
Oct. 7, 2006
Rock 201
Student Band Wanted!!
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
NEXT TO CITIZENS ARTS.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You know what's up? The H-Train! Don't knock it 'till you try it.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Find out what a Sestina is, and write one for your TA.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Lucky number for today is ∞... and so on.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Buy a blue leotard and wear it like you never could.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Tuck Everlasting is Mormon propaganda... Or is it?

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Buy a red footie and wear it like no other.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Class is more interesting when you're not there.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Learn the way of the Ninja, but only use your skills to steal from the meek.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Dog fights are illegal, no matter how old the dogs are.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Homophobia is gay.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
The complaint of a compliant person is worth noting.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Nobody likes a misanthrope.

THANK YOU FOR READING
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van.
Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays.
See you there!
www.dwightchapel.org

Be and Do something Bigger than yourself. Learn, Lead, and Succeed with Army ROTC Full Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly.
Call 413-545-2321
www.umass.edu/armyrotc

APARTMENT FOR RENT

92 Toyota Camry Station Wagon
$850 549-9639

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr
English must be your first language.
Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day. Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

EMPLOYMENT

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

PT Sales Assoc. positions available in the bakery, deli and produce departments. Evening, weekend, and holiday availability required. Call or email Kelly at 253-9528 kelly@atkinsfarms.com

EMPLOYMENT

Graphic Designer wanted. Undergraduate okay. Only requirements, talent and desire to work 5/10 hours/wk. Interesting Work. Competitive pay. Resume and portfolio to bob@buenoysano.com

McDonald's Crew Members Needed. Full & part-time openings at Michell Bradley/McDonalds. Competitive wages & salaries plus benefits. Start at $9.62 /hr. Apply at Michell Bradley/McDonalds office at Bradley Int'l Airport, Terminal A, 2-5pm, M-W, or send resume to EHmichell@aol.com Call 203-223-0153 with questions.

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types
413-824-7301
www.4eyes.us

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

SERVICES

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Publish or perish! Need to be writing but aren't? I can help with motivation, discipline, and support. Dr Ange DiBenedetto 549-4145

Do you have Legal questions? We have the Answers. Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 4, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Fox set to stabilize rocky program

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"I see myself in this office and on the snow, working with UMass athletes for a long time."

Former UMass ski coach Justin Rouleau, Fall 2005

Rouleau was fired just five months after making this statement. He was hired in the summer of 2005 after Ken Thoman, a former coach and player, left for unexplained reasons. In the coming season, Rouleau produced Eastern Collegiate Ski Conference Regional Championships for both the men's and women's teams, along with a number of standout performances by individual skiers.

Less than a month after the end of the season, Rouleau was let go by athletic director John McCutcheon amidst a number of allegations involving rumors of marijuana use on the job. Rouleau also incurred sanctions from the United States Ski and Snowboard Association, banning him from competition for lying to its president, Paul Wojick.

Rouleau's dismissal is just the latest in a number of setbacks the program has endured since 2001, when the team's coach of 40 years, Bill MacConnell, retired. Amidst the turnover of coaches, UMass lost what was essentially its only race on home turf. The UMass Carnival at Berkshire East will not be held for the second consecutive season.

In the five years since MacConnell began to faze himself out of the program, the team has had three different coaches. Mike LeBlanc, Igor Vanovac and Thoman and the program has begun to rapidly erode.

Thoman, who preceded Rouleau as coach, experienced the most success of any coach in the post-MacConnell era, and yet he left after just two years.

"When I was coaching, we had one of the best alpine programs in the country," Thoman explains. "[We won] multiple regional championships, individual national champion titles, and the athletic department could care less. That's why I left, that's why Mike LeBlanc left, and that is why Igor left."

"When I was coaching, we had one of the best alpine programs in the country," Thoman explains. "[We won] multiple regional championships, individual national champion titles, and the athletic department could care less. That's why I left, that's why Mike LeBlanc left, and that is why Igor left."

Skip Fox, recently hired as coach for the Maroon and White, will mark the fourth in six years. His impression of the administration is a very different one from that of Thoman.

"So far I haven't seen that, the lack of support," Fox says. "As a matter of fact I was told we will be moving offices in December [to a larger room]. Everybody's been real nice and supportive in giving us places to train."

So far this fall, the teams have done dry-land training in Boyden Gym, Garber Field, and McGuirk Stadium.

Despite the issues off the slopes, the team is still producing on race day, as the Minutemen and Minutewomen have earned several regional championships as well as an individual national title since 2001, though many of the current skiers on the roster still have ties to the storied coach.

Before becoming the coach at UMass, Rouleau himself competed as an undergraduate for the Maroon and White under MacConnell, the man credited with building the program into a perennial contender.

MacConnell took over the position in 1961 after its original coach, Larry Briggs, retired after 30 years. MacConnell then retired officially at the end of the 2003 season, after 40 years as head coach and two more as an assistant, completing a 70-year span that saw just two coaches at the helm for UMass. During his run, the Minutemen and Minutewomen earned a combined 30 ECSC Regional Championships. To honor the coach's achievements, the ECSC even named one of its divisions the "MacConnell Division."

However, the past five years have shown not only a lack of stability, but a lack of focus as well. In seasons past, UMass would host the first official ski race of the season at Berkshire East Ski Resort, where the team trains.

A number of sources close to the team attributed the absence of the UMass Carnival in the 2006 schedule to the fact that a head coach had not been named until late summer, after the annual schedule meetings.

"I was hired around Labor Day weekend [in 2005]," Rouleau said during this past season. "The team suffered somewhat from a lack of leadership during the summer since they were without a head coach."

Fox was also hired late in the summer, very close to the beginning of preseason training for the team. Once again, there is no UMass Carnival. However, Fox is optimistic that it will return.

"I've been program director at a couple of places, and I love running events," Fox says. "I'm pretty good at it. I've heard rumors, but I don't know exactly why the carnival didn't come back to Berkshire East, but I'd like to re-establish that."

Fox also says that he and Senior Associate Athletic Director Thorr Bjorn plan to speak with officials at Berkshire East to begin talks with the goal of bringing back the carnival.

Thoman, however, was quick to point the finger at the top of the organization, blaming the administration for a lack of support for the program.

"The ski team will always be treated like a second-rate team at UMass," Thoman says. "The athletic department will never put the financial resources into the coaching staff as with their other teams. They would rather cut the program than see it succeed."

McCutcheon responded to Thoman's claims, saying that the athletic department is doing all it can to support the team.

"In the past two years we have increased the head coaching position to full time and restructured their budget in an effort to give the team members a more positive experience," McCutcheon says.

While he admits that the administration cannot fully support the team and fill all of its needs, McCutcheon assures that the athletic department is fully behind the skiing program.

"Skiing – like several of our sports teams – is not fully funded per NCAA allowable limits regarding scholarships or number of coaches," McCutcheon says. "They also have operational needs that we are not able to support, as is the case with many teams. We try to provide support so that they are able to compete in their league."

Even when the program thrived under MacConnell, the skiers had virtually no coverage. MacConnell even resorted to writing his own articles about the team, sliding them under the door of the Media Relations office as though a college student following the team submitted them. At the time, it was the only way the skiers would receive any exposure.

Since 2001, five different coaches have either left the program, or been removed from it. As MacConnell gradually passed the torch during the early years of the new millennium, it became difficult to figure out to whom he was passing it. During the last few years that MacConnell acted as head coach, assistant Mike LeBlanc was handling most of the coaching duties, but he left after just two years with the team to become the head coach of the women's varsity ski team and the men's club ski team at Brown University.

The next official head coach was Igor Vanovac. The Yugoslavia native took over for MacConnell in 2002. He lasted just two years before taking a job as Director of Ski Racing at Diamond Peak Ski Resort at Lake Tahoe, Calif.

See SKI COACH on page 10

New UMass ski coach Skip Fox replaces last year's head man, Justin Rouleau, who was fired six months ago after drug allegations surfaced.

Senior captain Rush Hawkins was the first American in 10 years to sweep the USCSA Nationals when he beat the field two years ago as a sophomore. His sister, Eliza, is a junior on the women's team this season.

Charlotte and Rhode Island start on top

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Atlantic 10 conference play is now is full swing. It's still early, but the first A-10 games are a good indication of how teams will fare down the stretch.

Charlotte (7-3-2, 2-0 A-10) and Rhode Island (6-6-0, 2-0 A-10) established themselves as the frontrunners of the league, posting two victories each.

A-10 W. Soccer

On Sept. 29, Charlotte defeated Temple (3-8-0, 0-2 A-10), 2-0. Senior defender Kelsie Ormsby and junior forward Rachel Mees both scored in the game.

Two days later, the 49ers notched their second league victory against St. Joseph's (4-7-0, 1-1 A-10). Charlotte scored three times, while allowing only one Hawk goal. The 49ers scored all three goals within the first 20 minutes of play.

The other A-10 frontrunner, Rhode Island, won a close 1-0 contest against LaSalle (4-7-0, 1-1 A-10) on Sept. 29. Senior forward Senior Lauren Forgione scored the game's only goal at the 20-minute mark of the first half.

On Oct. 1, the Rams hosted A-10 rival George Washington (7-5-0, 0-2 A-10). URI preserved its perfect home record with two second-half goals. Sophomore Dora Larusdottir, who hails from Reykjavik, Iceland, scored both goals of the game.

Saint Louis (6-1-2, 1-0 A-10), Fordham (7-3-0, 1-0 A-10), and Dayton (3-3-3, 1-0 A-10) are next in the A-10 conference standings. Each school has recorded a victory in one game played.

The Billikens won in the most impressive fashion of the group, shutting out lowly Duquesne (1-6-1, 1-0-1) in a 6-0 victory on Oct. 1.

Dayton has been idle since two weeks ago, when it defeated Xavier for its first A-10 victory and Oakland in a non-conference match-up.

Massachusetts (7-3-0, 1-1 A-10) defeated George Washington on Sept. 29, 1-0, for its first conference victory. But the Minutewomen lost to La Salle on the road two days later, 3-1.

Senior captain Stephanie Barrett and the Minutewomen are 1-1 in Atlantic 10 play after defeating George Washington, 1-0, on Sept. 29.

Sophomore defender Melissa Tonlonse has three points so far this season, including an assist on the game-winning goal against George Washington.

National Rankings

For the fifth week in a row, Saint Louis improved its standing in the National Top 30 rankings, published by Soccer Buzz Magazine. Each week the Billikens have established a new program record for highest ranking.

Saint Louis is currently ranked at No. 17. It is the only A-10 team that has eclipsed the Top 30 this season.

The Northeast has two representatives in the Top 30. Boston University (9-2-2) is ranked at No. 13, followed by Maine (9-1-1) at No. 30.

The season of former Top 30 member UConn (5-7-1) continues to spiral out of control. The Huskies lost two games last week to Big East foes Villanova and Georgetown.

On the national stage, Santa Clara (9-2-0) overtook Florida State (8-1-1) for No. 3 in the rankings. Undefeated Notre Dame (11-0-0) remains at the top spot and North Carolina (12-1-0) is still No. 2.

Players of the Week

Senior midfielder Leah Jerome of Fordham and junior forward Rachel Mees of Charlotte were named A-10 Co-Players of the Week.

Jerome lead the Rams to a victory against St. Bonaventure (1-8-1, 0-1 A-10), posting her first career hat trick in the 4-1 win. The senior moved into fourth place in program history with 17 career goals.

Mees had a part in both 49er goals in a 2-0 shootout victory over Temple on Sept. 29. The goal and assist that Mees recorded propelled her into first place on the team with four assists and 12 total points.

Rookie of the Week

Saint Louis forward Kelly Waeckerle was named Rookie of the Week by the A-10 conference. The Saint Louis native scored two goals and added an assist in a 6-0 blowout victory against Duquesne. She scored the first goal only 33 seconds into the match, which was the game-winner. ... Saint Louis is second in the league in total goals scored, despite having played the least number of games. However, the team's average of 2.33 goals per game is still tops in the A-10. ... Only two teams have a goals-against average of below one. Saint Louis is first at 0.84 and UMass is not far behind at 0.98. ... Four A-10 teams – George Washington, Charlotte, Rhode Island, and Xavier – have posted a league-best four shutouts this season.

Rams ranked No. 12 in latest national poll

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Fordham University men's soccer team is ranked No. 12 according to the latest NSCAA Top 25 poll. The Rams record stands at 16-0-3, 0-0-1 Atlantic 10.

They have outscored their opponents 16-8. The Rams are led by senior forward Kevin Meyer, who has scored four game-winning goals.

A-10 M. Soccer

The Rams opened up conference play with a 0-0 tie to the winless St. Bonaventure Bonnies (0-8-1). Fordham is seeking its first conference victory and will travel to Duquesne on Friday.

Player of the Week

Rhode Island senior forward Jeffrey Gonsalves is the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week for the second time this fall. Gonsalves recorded eight points and the game-winning goal in two A-10 conference games.

He scored his first career hat trick in a 6-1 stomping of La Salle and netted one goal in a 2-0 shutout against George Washington. Earlier this season, Gonsalves was named to the College Soccer News National Team of the Week and was ECAC Co-Player of the Week after leading the Rams to the UMass Invitational championship title. He currently ranks eighth on the Rhody's all-time scoring list with 83 points (32 goals and 19 assists). He ranks seventh all-time in

See A-10 M. SOCCER on page 10

Redshirt sophomore defender Chris Brown scored one goal in the 2005 season and is fighting for playing time in the 2006 campaign.

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

Jim McCoy and Monty Mack are the only two players in UMass basketball history to score over 2,000 points for the Minutemen.

UMass hosts William & Mary Page 12

Tim O'Brien speaks at UMass Page 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

MOSTLY SUNNY : HI: 64 LO: 41 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5, 2006

UMass sorority sister passes away

A student at the University of Massachusetts passed away this weekend as a result of a heart condition.

Students, faculty and staff were notified via e-mail yesterday that Malvika Mookerjee, a senior from Newton, Mass., and a member of the Sigma Delta Tau sorority, died over the weekend.

The e-mail, sent by Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vasun, stated that Mookerjee, "known as Molly to her many friends, was expecting to complete her degree this semester."

Mookerjee died early Sunday morning at her sorority house at 409 North Pleasant St., according to Ed Blaguszewski, Director of News and Information.

Michael Wiseman, Director of the Office of Greek Affairs, said Mookerjee was very involved in her sorority, and was also a member of the Pan-Hellenic Executive Board last year.

"She was someone well-known, someone well-loved, someone who contributed to different efforts while she was an officer," said Wiseman. "She was definitely active in her sorority in what she did there, so she was definitely an important person in our community."

Wiseman said there will be an on-campus memorial service for Mookerjee in the near-future, but the time and date is not set.

"I'm trying to be respectful of the students, and where they're at with their grief," said Wiseman.

He also said that Mookerjee had a heart condition and prior to her passing, "a lot of people in the fraternity and sorority community, as well as her academic major, were aware of her [health] circumstances."

–Eric Athas, Collegian Staff

UMPD warns students of crosswalk dangers

BY MATT BELLIVEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Police Department sent a campus-wide email to remind both pedestrians and motorists of the importance of crosswalk safety.

"Specifically, during early evening hours, when the sun is beginning to set in the west, commuter traffic exiting the campus on our westbound roads is driving directly into the sun," stated UMPD Chief Barbara R. O'Connor. "At the same time, a significant number of pedestrians are crossing these roadways. In a few situations within the last year, poor visibility due to the sun has resulted in a number of serious motor vehicle/pedestrian accidents on our campus."

Numerous students have been hit by moving vehicles within the last year, including a short span in February where six people suffered serious injuries from being struck on the street.

In February 2006, three women were crossing Massachusetts Ave. at the intersection of Sunset Ave. near the Southwest Residential Area at 4:40 p.m. when they were hit by a Nissan Maxima.

Just days later, another student suffered multiple injuries after being struck by a car.

Olivia Simpson, a UMass student from Washington Heights, N.Y., was reportedly hit by a white truck while walking across Eastman Lane near the Totman Gymnasium.

Two days before, two contractors involved in the "information line" picketing at the construction site of the North Residential Area next to Sylvan were reportedly struck by motor vehicles, but neither of the contractors have filed any charges against the drivers.

The surge in pedestrian injuries comes during a semester-long pedestrian safety program designed by UMass officials to improve the attitudes and actions of pedestrians as well as drivers, to upgrade the physical landscape of campus roadways and to serve as a source of crucial data to be used in designing similar programs on campuses nationwide.

The program, called "Cross Safely, Drive Safely," was funded through a $75,000 grant from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. It is administered by UMass police, the Massachusetts Traffic Safety Research Program (MassSAFE) and the department of civil and environmental engineering through the UMass Transportation Center.

"Respect for the crosswalk laws and due caution by both pedestrians and motorists during these times is called for to prevent these types of accidents," stated O'Connor. "The University of Massachusetts Amherst Police Department takes crosswalk education seriously and will be visible in high traffic areas such as Eastman Lane near Totman Gym and Massachusetts Avenue near Lot 71 and Sunset Ave. for the coming weeks."

Officials break ground on $25M building

BY MATT BELLIVEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

UMass Chancellor John V. Lombardi, along with numerous UMass officials and guests, broke ground on the new $25 million Studio Arts Building, Tuesday.

Officials at the University of Massachusetts broke ground Tuesday, for a new, approximately $25-million Studio Arts Building that will bring together a variety of programs and replace small, obsolete facilities currently scattered across campus.

The ongoing construction of the 47,000 square foot new arts building, seen on the east side of North Pleasant Street, at the corner of North Pleasant and Infirmary Way, and in close proximity to the Fine Arts Center, should be completed by fall 2007, according to the University.

UMass Chancellor John V. Lombardi hosted the event. Other guests included Keith Motley, UMass vice president for business and public affairs, Ellen Story, state representative from Amherst, William F. Giblin, chairman of the Massachusetts Building Authority, Joel Martin, dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, and Randolph Bromery, former UMass Amherst chancellor and a member of the Development Advisory Committee.

The new facility is organized around a central common area that will serve as the primary entrance point into the building. This common area will be a gathering space for students and faculty, and it's also set to serve as a venue for special events such as art shows and guest lectures.

The studio is designed to meet the needs of painting, printmaking, sculpture and ceramics with fully equipped instructional studios, individual and group studios and space for presentation and review of student projects.

Additional features include natural light and open space studios, outdoor patio work spaces, advanced ventilation systems, flexible instructional studios for painting, sculpture and ceramics, faculty and graduate student studio space, a central location for photography, a high-end digital and computer graphics studio, and large teaching studios and lecture rooms.

The project is being funded by money borrowed by the UMass Building Authority.

The building, designed by Gund Partnership llc...of Cambridge, aims to be one of the more energy efficient and environmentally friendly buildings on campus, university officials said.

Tuesday's groundbreaking represents the 10th such ceremony at the UMass campus in just a few years. The university recently completed construction of a $47.9 million dormitory complex and the North Residential Area and a new $3.1 million track and field facility.

The building will also be one of the "greenest" on the campus using sustainable building materials, operable windows for natural ventilation and a variety of energy and water conserving measures.

The University hopes the project will also serve as the catalyst for making safety and aesthetic improvements to the east side of campus. To accommodate the building and address some traffic and pedestrian conflicts, the western end of Clark Hill Road will be realigned. In addition, the development will include an extension of the redesigned pedestrian path system for the south and east sides of the Fine Arts Center.

UMass' new Studio Arts Building shown in digital renderings above, will feature natural light and open space studios, outdoor patio work spaces, advanced ventilation systems, flexible instructional studios for painting, sculpture, and ceramics and large teaching studios and lecture rooms.

Amish mourn victims of school shootings

BY MICHAEL RUBINKAM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NICKEL MINES, Pa. – In just about any community, a deadly school shooting would have brought demands from civic leaders for tighter gun laws and better security, and the victims' loved ones would have lashed out at the gunman's family or threatened to sue.

But that's not the Amish way.

As they struggle with the slayings of five of their children in a one-room schoolhouse, the Amish in this Lancaster County village are turning the other cheek, urging forgiveness of the killer and quietly accepting what comes their way as God's will.

"They know their children are going to heaven. They know their children are innocent ... and they know that they will join them in death," said Gertrude Huntington, a Michigan researcher and expert on children in Amish society.

"The hurt is very great," Huntington said. "But they don't balance the hurt with hate."

In the aftermath of Monday's violence, the Amish are looking inward, relying on themselves and their faith, just as they have for centuries. They hold themselves apart from the modern world, and have as little to do with civil authorities as possible.

Amish mourners have been going from home to home for two days to attend viewings for the five victims, all little girls laid out in white dresses made by their families. Such viewings occur almost immediately after the bodies arrive at the parents' homes.

Typically, they are so crowded, "if you start crying, you've got to figure out whose shoulder to cry on," said Rita Rhoads, a Mennonite midwife who delivered two of the five girls slain in the attack.

At some Amish viewings, upwards of 1,000 to 1,500 people might visit a family's home to pay respects, according to Jack Meyer, 60, a buggy operator in Bird in Hand. Such visits are important, given the lack of e-mail and phone communication, Meyer said.

The Amish have also been reaching out to the family of the gunman, Charles Carl Roberts IV, 32, who committed suicide during the attack. Dwight Hefever, a Roberts family spokesman, said an Amish neighbor comforted the Roberts family hours after the shooting and extended forgiveness to them.

"I hope they stay around here and they'll have a lot of friends and a lot of support," Daniel Esh, a 57-year-old Amish artist and woodworker whose three grandnephews were inside the school during the attack, said of the Robertses.

Huntington, the authority on the Amish, predicted they will be will be very supportive of the killer and his wife,

See AMISH on page 4

Aide says he reported Foley three years ago

BY DEVLIN BARRETT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Speaker Dennis Hastert's political support showed signs of cracking on Wednesday as Republicans fled the fallout from an election-year scandal spawned by steamy computer messages from disgraced Rep. Mark Foley to teenage male pages.

At the same time, the congressional aide who last week counseled Foley to quit said in an Associated Press interview he first warned Hastert's aides more than three years ago about Foley's worrisome conduct toward pages. That was long before GOP leaders acknowledged hearing of it.

The aide, Kirk Fordham, who resigned Wednesday, said he had "more than one conversation with senior staff at the highest level of the House of Representatives asking them to intervene" at the time.

He made his comments as Rep. Roy Blunt of Missouri, third-ranking leader, told reporters he would have handled the matter differently than Hastert, had he known of it.

And Rep. Ron Lewis of Kentucky, in a tougher-than-expected re-election race, abruptly canceled an invitation for Hastert to join him at a fundraiser next week.

"I'm taking the speaker's words at face value," Lewis told the AP. "I have no reason to doubt him. But until this is cleared up, I want to know the facts. If anyone in our leadership has done anything wrong, then I will be the first in line to condemn it."

Ron Bonjean, Hastert's spokesman, declined to comment on the claim made by Fordham.

He said the entire issue had been referred to the House ethics committee. "We fully expect that the bipartisan panel will do what it needs to do to investigate this matter and protect the integrity of the House," he added.

House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi issued a statement saying that Hastert and the rest of the GOP leadership should be "immediately questioned under oath" by the panel.

"The children, their parents, the public, and our colleagues deserve answers and those who covered up Mark Foley's behavior must be held accountable," she said.

Foley, 52, a Florida Republican, resigned last Friday after he was confronted with sexually explicit electronic messages he had sent teenage male pages. He has since entered an alcohol rehabilitation facility at an undisclosed location. Through his lawyer, he has denied having had any sexual contact with minors.

His abrupt departure left behind a virtual sex scandal that has shaken Republican confidence — and poll numbers — little more than a month before elections at which their control of the House will be tested.

It also plunged Hastert and others into an intensive effort to respond to a string of unanswered questions — what senior lawmakers knew, when they learned and what they did about it.

Rep. Tom Reynolds, R-N.Y., speaks at a fundraiser in Amherst, N.Y., yesterday. Reynolds top aide, Kirk Fordham, resigned Wednesday.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 23

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherel Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jamison Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Virginia Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COMICS EDITOR Sean Daram
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaLasse
NEWS EDITOR Matt Belliveau
SPORTS EDITOR Rob Greenfield
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Calade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Theresa Barba
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dolianitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonyakaukul
ASSISTANT SPORTS Danny Picard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jon Pelland
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Tom Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CLASSROOM SEMESTERS. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALUMNI LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1901, THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE THE MASS. COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET UNTIL JANUARY 1996. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Belanger, Chris Martin

Colo. gunman was shot four times

BY JON SARCHE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — The man who took six girls hostage at a Colorado high school last week was shot four times as the standoff ended — once by his own gun and three times by SWAT officers, according to autopsy results released Wednesday by state officials.

Authorities were awaiting more information to determine whether Duane Morrison died from the self-inflicted gunshot wound or the officers' shots, said Lance Clem, spokesman for the Colorado Bureau of Investigation.

Morrison, a 53-year-old drifter, had taken six girls hostage at Platte Canyon High School Sept. 27. He released four of them before SWAT officers blasted their way into Room 206, when authorities say he shot 16-year-old Emily Keyes before shooting himself.

Clem said autopsy results showed that Morrison killed Keyes with a single gunshot to the back of the head. She and the other five girls had been sexually assaulted, Sheriff Fred Wegener has said.

Tests show that Morrison had no drugs or alcohol in his system, Clem said.

Clem also said school surveillance tapes showed Morrison's yellow Jeep in the parking lot of the school near Bailey, about 40 miles southwest of Denver, the day before the shooting. District superintendent Jim Walpole said officials do not know what Morrison had been doing at the school then.

The name Emily adorns the back of the helmet of Platte Canyon High School player Greg Davis in Bailey, Colo., on Tuesday.

The shooting, one of several at schools across the country in the last several days, was similar to a slaying Monday at an Amish schoolhouse in Pennsylvania, in which a man tied up 10 young girls and shot them, killing five, before killing himself.

During a fundraiser Wednesday in Denver for GOP gubernatorial candidate Bob Beauprez, President Bush said he has asked Attorney General Alberto Gonzales and Education Secretary Margaret Spellings to lead a meeting of experts to determine how the federal government can help state and local officials deal with school shootings.

"We want to make it certain around the country that the schoolhouse is a safe place for children to learn," Bush said. "May God bless Emily's family."

Students and parents were allowed to return to Platte Canyon High for the first time Wednesday to pick up belongings left behind when the building was evacuated last week. Classes were to resume Thursday.

Homeless advocates pursue suit against Worcester library

BY ADAM GORLICK
ASSOCIATED PRESS

(AP)—Advocates for the homeless say they're not ready to drop their lawsuit against the Worcester Public Library and the city despite the library's recent decision to reverse a rule that had limited homeless people to checking out only two books at a time.

Jonathan Mannina, executive director of the Legal Assistance Corp. of Central Massachusetts, called the library's new policy a "positive development," but said it isn't perfect.

"We're still trying to iron out some details that we hope will lead to a resolution of the case," Mannina said Wednesday. Citing the pending litigation, Mannina wouldn't specify what his remaining concerns are.

A hearing was scheduled in federal court for Oct. 27.

Reacting to the lawsuit filed in July by Mannina's group and the American Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts, the library's board of directors voted last month to let anyone with a valid photo ID and a current address borrow an unlimited number of books, movies or audio recordings at a time.

The move reversed a three-year-old policy that prevented people who lived in shelters and transitional housing from checking out more than two things at once.

Library officials said that policy was not intended to discriminate against the homeless, and was imposed because an increasing number of items were not being returned by borrowers who could not be tracked down through a permanent address.

"Some people continue to be concerned about the retrieval of non-returned items," said Penelope Johnson, the city's head librarian. "We're going to be monitoring our losses and talking with agencies about encouraging them to help us if things aren't being returned."

She said the library's board of directors hasn't considered raising adult late fees from 10 cents a day to recover any losses, but is thinking about doing some fundraising to help replace missing materials.

Library officials have not said how many items borrowed by homeless people were not returned, citing the pending lawsuit, which was filed on behalf of some homeless parents who were told they couldn't check out more than two books for themselves and their children.

Ballot question may let food stores sell wine

BOSTON (AP)—Opponents of a ballot question that would let grocery stores sell wine took their case to the steps of the Statehouse on Wednesday, saying the change could lead to a spike in drunken driving fatalines and increased underage drinking.

Former Spencer and Winthrop Police Chief Tom Shamshak, flanked by police and lawmakers, said more than two dozen police chiefs already have signed on to oppose the question known as Question One — which he said would undermine the progress Massachusetts has made battling drinking and driving.

"Question One would completely upend Massachusetts' system of liquor licensing," he said. "It would more than double the number of liquor licenses."

Opponents of the question include Ron Bersani, grandfather of the teen for whom "Melanie's Law" was named. The law, approved last year, toughened the state's laws on repeat drunken drivers.

The question is pitting liquor stores, who oppose the change, against convenience and grocery stores, who support it.

Backers of the question, which will appear on the November ballot, say the easing of the liquor laws will give consumers more choice and brings more competition to the market. They said most other states allow the sale of wine in grocery stores.

Kim Hinden, a spokeswoman for supporters of the question, said the liquor stores are trying to whip up public fears when the issue is really economic for them and an attempt to quash competition.

—Associated Press

Operation experts speak at UMass

Energy policy, the airline industry and mathematical modeling in medicine are among the topics to be covered in the Operations Research Management Science Fall Speaker Series at the University of Massachusetts.

Sponsored by the UMass Amherst student chapter of the Institute for Operations Research and the Management Sciences (INFORMS) in the Isenberg School of Management, the series began Sept. 29.

All talks take place on scheduled Fridays at 11 a.m. in 112 Isenberg School of Management and are open to the public. After the talks, attendees may join the presenters for lunch at the University Club to discuss topics of interest and enjoy a meal. The five remaining speakers are:

— William Hogan, the Raymond Plank Professor of Global Energy Policy at the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University (Oct. 13).

— Cynthia Barnhart of the department of civil and environmental engineering and the engineering systems division at MIT (Oct. 27), who will speak on "Optimization Approaches to Airline Industry Challenges."

— Andrew McCallum of the UMass Amherst department of computer science (Nov. 3), an expert on statistical machine learning applied to information extraction and document classification, will discuss "Bayesian Models of Social Networks and Texts" and an application to the Enron investigation.

— Les Servi of Lincoln Labs at MIT (Nov. 17) has also worked at Bell Laboratories and GTE. He holds seven patents and was awarded GTE's highest technical award in 1999.

— Nathaniel Whitaker of the UMass Amherst department of mathematics and statistics (Dec. 1) develops numerical methods for solving differential equations, especially those which result from fluid mechanics. Whitaker's talk is titled "Some Mathematical Models in Medicine."

Support for the speaker series is provided by the Isenberg School of Management, the department of finance and operations management, the John F. Smith Memorial Fund, and INFORMS. Anna Nagurney, the John F. Smith Memorial Professor at the Isenberg School of Management, serves as the faculty advisor to the speaker series.

UMass News Office

The only thing more powerful than our systems? Your imagination.

The technologies we create define leading-edge. So do our opportunities. Join Raytheon, one of the world's most admired defense and aerospace systems suppliers, and apply your mind in ways that you've always thought possible.

Advance engineering with a diversity of people and talents. Take on challenges that defy conventional thinking. And meet us at the forefront of innovation.

Visit our Career Fair Booth on Oct. 11, 2006

Opportunities are available in the following areas:
Accounting | Business | Business Administration | Economics | Entrepreneurship | Finance | International Studies | Marketing | Political Science | Pre-Law

www.rayjobs.com/campus

Raytheon
Customer Success Is Our Mission

Report: Global warming could make Northeast like the South

BY LINDA A. JOHNSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TRENTON, N.J.—The climate of the nine northeastern states could become like that of the South by the end of the century unless greenhouse gas emissions are steadily lowered, the Union of Concerned Scientists warned in the most detailed regional report yet on the issue.

The report, released Wednesday, states longer, much hotter summers, warmer winters with less snow and other changes fueled by global warming could put significant strain on the power grid and health care system, along with farms, forests, marine fisheries, recreation and tourism. The impact could be much lower, though, if carbon dioxide emissions are reduced by 3 percent each year, according to the advocacy group and university scientists who worked on the report.

Their collaboration, called the Northeast Climate Impacts Assessment, spent two years using multiple state-of-the-art climate models and weather records to project likely climate changes from New Jersey and Pennsylvania up to Maine through 2099.

"This has enormous implications for human health. It puts a lot of stress on the energy system. It could lead to blackouts," Katherine Hayhoe, an associate professor of geosciences at Texas Tech University and a lead author of the report, told reporters during a teleconference.

If power plant and auto emissions of carbon dioxide — considered the main culprit of global warming — continue unabated, average temperatures in the Northeast could rise between 6.5 degrees and 12.5 degrees by the end of the century, she said. If society shifts to cleaner, renewable energy sources, the temperature increase would be halved, she said.

The study said, without any change, New Hampshire's climate will be more like that of South Carolina by the end of the century; with lower greenhouse emissions, it would be like North Carolina. In the New York-New Jersey-Connecticut region, without changes the climate would be like eastern Virginia's by century's end, with lower emissions, it would be more like Georgia's.

With no changes, Boston could see its number of 90-degree-or-higher summer days jump from one to 40 and New York City could have 70.

"We're beginning to see the climate in the Northeast changing" already, with average temperatures rising 1.5 degrees in the summer and 4 degrees in the winter between 1970 and 2000, said the other lead author, Cameron Wake, an associate professor at the University of New Hampshire's Climate Change Research Center.

Hayhoe said the report shows winter precipitation is likely to increase, but mostly in rain, and snow would be on the ground for much shorter periods. Meanwhile, summers could become up to six weeks longer and spring could start earlier, affecting plants, wildlife and recreation tied to the cycle of seasons.

The report targets the Northeast because it is the world's seventh-largest source of emissions, ranked behind the U.S. as a whole and five other nations, and because the region's leaders have already taken steps to reduce emissions and could serve as a national model with innovations in policy and technology.

Mike MacCracken of The Climate Institute, a former head of the interagency group that did climate assessments under a Clinton-era research program, called the report "a high-quality job" with plausible results. He said its findings are similar to those of the federal program's last Northeast regional assessment several years ago.

"These give pretty reliable indications of the amount of change" without being overly precise, MacCracken said.

Doug Inkley, senior science adviser at the National Wildlife Federation, said the report was done by top-tier scientists and backs up his group's research showing a warmer climate in the Northeast will push out temperature-sensitive species from sugar maple and northern pine trees to songbirds and trout.

"I certainly hope people would act on it," Inkley said. "This report is yet another wake-up call we cannot ignore."

John R. Christy, director of the Earth System Science Center at University of Alabama-Huntsville, said regional analyses his center has done indicate the latest climate models "do not have the predictive skill needed, especially with regard to rain and snow."

He said the report's recommendations — mostly centered on replacing or upgrading buildings, cars and appliances with more energy-efficient ones — won't have much effect on the total amount of carbon dioxide going into the atmosphere, partly because energy demand will continue to grow.

Smog drifts over the famed Hollywood sign in this August file photo. A new report shows Boston could see its number of 90-degree-or-higher summer days jump from one to 40 and New York City could have 70.

CEO apologizes for Apple's questionable stock practices

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP)—Apple Computer Inc. CEO Steve Jobs apologized Wednesday for the company's past stock-option practices after a three-month internal investigation raised concerns over how some grants were handled between 1997 and 2002.

The iPod and Macintosh computer maker also announced the resignation of former Chief Financial Officer Fred Anderson from the company's board of directors.

The company said Jobs knew that some grants had been given favorable dates "in a few instances," but he did not benefit from them and was not aware of the accounting implications.

"I apologize to Apple's shareholders and employees for these problems, which happened on my watch," Jobs said in a statement. "We will now work to resolve the remaining issues as quickly as possible and to put the proper remedial measures in place to ensure that this never happens again."

Shares of Apple shed 57 cents to $74.81 in after-market trading after closing up $1.30, or 1.8 percent, on the Nasdaq Stock Market on Wednesday.

Apple, one of the most prominent companies caught in the nationwide stock options mishandling scandal, said its investigation into the matter did not uncover any misconduct by any member of Apple's current management team, but that it did raise "serious concerns" regarding the actions of two former officers.

The company did not name the two officers but announced that Anderson, who served as the company's chief financial officer from 1996 until 2004, had resigned from the company board. Apple said it will provide all details of their actions to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The probe found irregularities in the recording of stock option grants made on 15 dates between 1997 and 2002, the company said. The grants made had dates that preceded the approval of those grants.

More than 100 other companies nationwide are entangled in similar stock-option trouble. In most of those instances, companies have traced their problems to "backdating" issues.

Under this practice, insiders could make the rewards more lucrative by retroactively pinning the option's exercise price to a low point in the stock's value.

Apple has said it will have to restate some earnings as a result. The looming restatements threaten to wipe out some of the profits generated during the most prosperous stretch in Apple's 30-year history as millions of consumers snapped up the company's ubiquitous iPod. Apple has reported profits totaling $3.1 billion during the past four years.

The company's special committee conducting the investigation examined more than 650,000 e-mails and documents, and conducted interviews with more than 40 current and former employees, directors and advisers.

—Associated Press

Apple Computer Inc. CEO Steve Jobs gestures at the MacWorld conference in this January file photo in San Francisco.

Probe begins on Big Dig collapse

Gov. Mitt Romney, discusses safety problems on Boston bridges and tunnels during a news conference at the Statehouse in Boston, Sept. 26, 2006.

BY DENISE LAVOIE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — A special grand jury has been convened to investigate the construction and design of Big Dig tunnels as part of a criminal probe into a tunnel ceiling collapse that killed a Boston woman.

A spokesman for Attorney General Tom Reilly confirmed the grand jury was impaneled Tuesday in Reilly's criminal investigation.

Reilly has said his investigation would determine whether anyone who worked on the massive highway project should be charged with a crime for the July 10 ceiling collapse that killed Milena Del Valle, 39.

Four three-ton concrete ceiling panels fell in the I-90 connector tunnel and crushed Del Valle's car. Her husband, who escaped with minor injuries, and her daughter have filed a wrongful death lawsuit against the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority and nine companies associated with design and construction of the project.

Reilly's investigation is focusing on how the concrete panels were designed, whether they were secured properly for their weight and whether they were tested properly.

The grand jury is expected to hear testimony from construction workers and their supervisors, ceiling designers and others. Reilly has said the grand jury is expected to hear evidence for six months.

Reilly's spokesman, David Guarino, would not comment on what the panel has done so far, citing grand jury secrecy rules.

Guarino said Reilly's staff has already reviewed more than 150,000 pages of documents and interviewed people knowledgeable about the design, construction and inspection of the ceiling panels.

"The family of Milena Del Valle and the taxpayers of Massachusetts deserve answers to what went so tragically wrong on July 10," Guarino said. "This is the next step in a very deliberate, fact-based effort."

Reilly's office has subpoenaed documents from the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority, which oversees the Big Dig; Bechtel/Parsons Brinckerhoff, the project manager; Modern Continental Construction Co., the company that constructed the I-90 connector ceiling; and others.

"We've always said that we're happy to have our work judged on the merits and we will stand behind that work, but we have no comment on grand jury proceedings," said Andy Paven, a spokesman for Bechtel/Parsons Brinckerhoff.

Modern Continental issued a statement saying it "is cooperating fully with the investigation into the cause of this tragedy.

"We are confident that our work fully complied with the plans and specifications provided by the Central Artery Tunnel Project. In addition, the work was inspected and approved by the Central Artery Tunnel Project," the company said.

The Real Spring Break
Europe

Party abroad with MTV cast this spring break

London & Paris 8 days from $995
Amsterdam & Paris 7 days from $925

Book by October 15 and save $100!
Price includes airfare, hotels, transportation, and much more!

Call 1.800.766.2645 or visit efcollegebreak.com today

BRING 8 FRIENDS, GO FREE

college BREAK
efcollegebreak.com
800.766.2645

D.P. Dough = Great Calzones + Low Prices + Fast Delivery
OPEN UNTIL 4 A.M. Thursday, Friday, and Saturday
256-1616 * WWW.DPDOUGH.COM

Amish citizens attempt to cope with terror

AMISH from page 1

"because judgment is in God's hands. 'Judge not, that ye be not judged.'"

Roberts stormed the school and shot 10 girls before turning the gun on himself. Investigators said Roberts, who brought lubricating jelly and plastic restraints with him, may have been planning to sexually assault the Amish girls.

Roberts revealed to his family in notes he left behind and in a phone call from inside the West Nickel Mines Amish School that he was tormented by memories of molesting two young relatives 20 years ago.

A deputy county coroner on Wednesday described a gruesome scene at the school, with blood on every desk, every window broken and the body of a girl slumped beneath the chalkboard, below a sign that read "Visitors Brighten People's Days." Roberts' body was face-down next to the teacher's desk.

"It was horrible. I don't know how else to explain it," said Amanda Shelley, a deputy coroner in Lancaster County.

Funerals for four of the victims — Naomi Rose Ebersole, 7; Marian Fisher, 13; Mary Liz Miller, 8; and her sister Lena Miller, 7 — are scheduled for Thursday at three homes. The funeral for the fifth girl, Anna Mae Stoltzfus, 12, is Friday.

About 300 to 500 people are expected at each funeral, said Philip W. Fisman, an undertaker. The church-led services typically last about two hours before mourners travel in horse-drawn buggies to a cemetery for a short graveside service.

In keeping with custom, the Amish use simple wooden caskets — narrow at the head and feet and wider in the middle. An Amish girl is typically laid to rest in a white dress, a cape, and a white prayer-covering on her head, Fisman said.

Five other girls remained hospitalized — three in critical condition and two in serious condition. They ranged in age from 6 to 13.

Enos Miller, the grandfather of the two Miller sisters, was with both of the girls when they died. He was out walking near the schoolhouse before dawn Wednesday — he said he couldn't sleep when he was asked by a reporter for WGAL-TV whether he had forgiven the gunman.

"In my heart, yes," he said, explaining it was "through God's help."

A boy sits a field yesterday, in Paradise, Pa. Charles Carl Roberts IV shot children in a nearby Amish schoolhouse on Tuesday.

Iran: Sanctions won't derail enrichment

Iran's President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad shakes hands with supporters while attending Friday prayers in Tehran Sept. 29, 2006. Ahmadinejad said on Wednesday Iran wanted talks to continue to remove the West's concerns over its nuclear program, but said Tehran would not abandon its right to make nuclear fuel.

BY ALI AKBAR DAREINI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

IRAN — President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad warned Wednesday that sanctions will not stop Iran from enriching uranium after a European negotiator conceded "endless hours" of talks had made little progress and suggested the dispute could wind up at the U.N. soon.

The talks had been seen as a last-ditch attempt to avoid a full-blown confrontation between Iran and the U.N. Security Council after Tehran ignored an Aug. 31 deadline to suspend enrichment — a key step toward making nuclear weapons — or face punishment.

The latest comments — and the view of senior U.N. diplomats who told The Associated Press on Tuesday that nearly two years of intermittent negotiations had failed — suggested an emerging consensus that the time has finally come to consider Security Council sanctions.

Iran maintains its nuclear program is for peaceful purposes and does not violate international law. Its refusal to give up enrichment compounds the failure of more than three years of U.N. inspections to banish suspicions that Tehran might have a secret weapons program. The conflict picked up steam after last year's election of the hard-line Ahmadinejad, whose tough stance on the nuclear issue is wildly popular in Iran — even among moderates.

Javier Solana, the European official who has been negotiating with the Iranians, told the European Parliament on Wednesday that the Iranians had made "no commitment to suspend." The dialogue with the Iranians "cannot last forever" and it was up to Tehran "to decide whether its time has come to end," he said.

Solana said his talks had found "common ground" on some issues "but we have not agreed in what is the key point, which is the question of suspension of activities before the start of the negotiations." He suggested that if the talks ended, the standoff should be moved to the Security Council.

In a speech shortly afterward, Ahmadinejad warned that sanctions would not dissuade his country from pursuing nuclear technology, including the enrichment of uranium.

"You are mistaken if you assume that the Iranian nation will stop for even a moment from the path toward using nuclear energy, due to your nagging," he told the West, speaking to a crowd of supporters outside Iran's capital.

"For 27 years they haven't allowed us to use technologies that they possess," Ahmadinejad added. "This nation is powerful and won't give in to one iota of coercion."

In an apparent response to Solana, the Iranian president said his nation favored continued negotiations.

"We are for talks. We can talk with each other and remove ambiguities. We have logic. We want talks to continue," he said.

Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice and foreign ministers from five other major powers were expected to meet, possibly Friday, in London, to discuss the situation.

Diplomats said the Security Council could meet as early as Monday to start work on a resolution imposing the first of a series of sanctions meant to make Iran roll back its program.

Iran was initially referred to the Security Council in February by the International Atomic Energy Agency, the U.N. nuclear watchdog, which said Tehran's suspicious activities represented breaches of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty. The Vienna-based agency also said it could not be sure Iran was not trying to make weapons.

The United States insisted that Tehran halt enrichment as a precondition for further talks on its nuclear program, but Iran ignored the Aug. 31 deadline set by the Security Council.

The Americans then agreed to let Solana hold more talks with the Iranians after Russia, China and France spoke out against a rush to sanctions.

At first, both Solana and Iran's top negotiator, Ali Larijani, had signaled progress in the talks.

On Tuesday, however, diplomats said Larijani told Solana that the hard-line Iranian leadership had rejected even a limited enrichment freeze.

One diplomat said Western council members — the United States, Britain and France — favor an embargo on sales of nuclear or missile technology to Tehran as a first sanctions step. That would be followed by other sanctions, including travel bans on Iranian officials and the freezing of their assets.

Iran has so far shown little concern about the prospect of such sanctions — perhaps because such limited sanctions would not greatly hurt the country overall.

Russia and China, both veto-wielding council members, traditionally oppose sanctions, and the United States could still face a tough fight getting them to agree to any truly punitive measures.

U.S. officials have said they intend to start with trying for relatively lower-level punishments as a way to persuade Russia and China to sign on.

Engineering
& Computer Science
career fair
CO-OP +FULL TIME POSITIONS
Campus Center Auditorium
October 11, 2006
10:00AM - 3:00PM
Career Services
www.umass.edu/careers
01010101010101010101010
CAREER SERVICES
Student Affairs & Campus Life
06
UMASS AMHERST

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

State of the undergrad male

Brad Leibowitz

To every man out there, this is a wake up call. For any man in college, this is a must read. For any girl in college, this is something you should already know, yet the men sadly don't. Men, if we ever hope to instill confidence back in our peers, within ourselves and, more importantly, the women around us, we must act now.

First and foremost is eye contact. Make it part of your daily routine to look everyone you come in contact with directly in the eye. Whether it be passing a lady while going to class, greeting a business confidant or keeping it in the middle of a conversation, eye contact is key. Simply, when you meet someone, make direct eye contact for three seconds. This lets the other person know three things automatically: You're personable, you're interested and you're not to be taken lightly. Do this with everyone you meet, especially women.

Eye contact with the opposite sex upon first meeting tells her volumes about your character. Esquire columnist Tom Chiarella in his article "The Invisible Grip" says, "A person's gaze has weight, resistance, muscularity ... for the one who's being looked at, eye contact sends a message, signaling acknowledgment, connection ... Being seen is, on some level, being felt. It's nice to be acknowledged."

Eye contact shows you're interested in her. However, it more importantly signals to her that if you're confident enough in yourself to look her directly in the eye, you're confident enough to ask her for her number face-to-face, rather than copping out by contacting her on Facebook.com.

Secondly, stop using Facebook.com, Myspace.com or any other I-am-a-stalker.com to contact your new crush. If you have to hide behind an electronic façade whose face is that of Tom Brady or a vintage Cindy Crawford picture, she knows you're not mature enough to have her take you seriously. Make her laugh when you meet, ask for her number face-to-face and then talk to her on the phone. Once this is done, then, and only then, can you ask to chat with her over AOL Instant Messenger. (However, ask her out to dinner face-to-face.)

When you do get her back to your room to mellow out and have her meet your roommate friends, whatever you do, take down the posters of Cindy Crawford, Heidi Klum or whoever else's half naked body is hanging on your wall. She understands your straight tendencies — it's the sole reason she's in your room.

Think about it this way: despite our culture being heavily over-saturated with Paris Hiltons and early '90s Pamela Andersons, when you bring her to you're room,

Dressing up to look your best does not question your masculinity. Conversely, if you're too scared to dress up due to false paranoia of sexuality, that insecurity puts your masculinity in question.

she is going to want to know you're interested in real women, not some unattainable poster girl who, frankly, you'll never get with. In lamens terms, women have to feel comfortable, so when you bring her home, do her that honor.

As a man, I also shift through my fair share of steamy poster images yet, I know those models are not what we all should look to for our cultural definition of what a woman is. Not only does our national infatuation with Lindsey Lohan's breast size corrupt our sense of reality, it makes women all around the nation believe they should be something which they aren't: fake.

Recently, Pink came out with a song entitled "Stupid Girls" which lays out the devastation the American man has done to the American woman. In her song she states, "What happened to the dreams of a girl president/ She's dancing in the video next to 50 Cent/ They travel in packs of two or three/ With their itsy bitsy doggies and their teeny-weeny tees" — and I agree.

Women, stop giving in to the never-ending male fantasy of getting Paris Hilton and Jessica Alba in bed ... at the same time. In the middle of winter, wear dress pants and a turtle neck to lunch instead of a micro-mini skirt and a tank (it might help to curtail the actions of the cute boy you have a crush on to a more gentlemanly manner).

Fashion is another big problem in which we need to take monumental, yet easy, steps. Every college male should own the following items as an essential part of his wardrobe:

Hanging in your closet there should be at least two pairs of pressed dress pants (grey, black or brown). To go along with those pants, every man in college should own three to five fitted or non-fitted collared shirts (white, black, darker blues and the occasional lavender/lighter color). On the issue of tucking the shirts in —, do it, it's a refreshing change. To finish out the attire, a pair or two of dress shoes (black or brown) wouldn't kill you.

Collectively, as men, we need to understand that dressing nicely on a daily basis, or over the weekends, isn't considered homosexual; it's in good taste. Dressing up to look your best does not question your masculinity. Conversely, if you're too scared to dress up due to false paranoia of sexuality, that insecurity puts your masculinity in question.

Finally, video games. Stop trading in novels and women for PS2 and Xbox. That's all that needs to be said about that.

From eye contact, to confidence to attire, on a whole we have a long way to go. Now don't get me wrong, I'm not trying to bite the hand that feeds me; I am addressing a topic which must be tackled if we ever are to fix our collective male culture.

The reality of it is, in a few years we will all be entering the quote un-quote real world, and in that business world dress pants, collared shirts, dress shoes and confidence are key to survival. Essentially, I am simply asking that we all take a look around to assess our surroundings, so that we, as individuals, along with a collective male culture, can trade in spurious looks and Tom Brady jerseys for direct eye contact and self-belief.

Brad Leibowitz is a Collegian columnist.

UMass policy needs a new brew

Adam McGillen

The number seven party school in the nation has become a pest for our neighboring residents. Sure, parties have always been hosted off-campus, in and around the town of Amherst and other nearby cities, but lately party-goers have felt an even bigger push outside the university borders.

Not only does this serve to further affirm the status of UMass as the disgraceful home to riots, violence, and binge drinking (and these are truly bad things, no matter how many students take pride in them), but the increase in number and size of parties at the Townhouses and Puffton Village has pushed locals to call for backup and puts the lives and reputations of students at risk.

I'll admit the phrase, "Proud to go to the number seven party and number one most violent school in the nation — if we can't party harder than those other 6 schools, we'll just stab them," is humorous in its childishness. Yet going to UMass doesn't get you any "street cred," and for the most part, UMass students are only violent when it comes to destroying inanimate objects and public property. In fact, on any given weekend, students with knives are more likely to drunkenly dice themselves rather than anyone else.

The repercussions for possession and consumption of alcohol on campus get harsher every year, but the fact of the matter is, college students are not going to stop drinking. It's no mystery the frats are going up in smoke as the University tries to crack down on underage and binge drinking across the board. But rather than eliminating the problem, UMass is in fact just pushing the issue outside the controlled area of the school zone.

It's only a matter of time before something terrible happens along the roads leading off-campus and into the now growing hot-spots for UMass parties, especially as the flow of students taking those paths increase.

Amherst police have recently broken up parties of over 1,500 people at the Townhouses, and complaints from local residents for noise and disturbances have soared. Tow-trucks have been working overtime in Puffton, as the weekend population far exceeds the actual number of students living in the apartments there.

Students living on campus find it harder and harder to gather with friends (especially if they and their roommate have any more than eight friends combined), and this results in students feeling a push to get outside the confines of dorm restrictions. So, they drunkenly wander down dark roads, crossing streets blindly and frequently losing their way in the haze of Captain Morgan and/or Oktoberfest. Never mind the students who decide to head off-campus by climbing behind the wheel, sometimes with beer in hand.

When and if they manage to arrive at their party destination off-campus, they find themselves mingling with a mob of drunken students in heat. Off-campus, students are in the real world, and real consequences can ensue for their collegiate level inebriation. Being caught doesn't mean a simple warning or being "written up" — being caught means arrest, jail time, and a scar on your permanent record.

For students who feel the need to drive, the possibilities are worse. DUI, accidents, insurance increases, and even vehicular manslaughter. It's only a matter of time before something terrible happens along the roads leading off-campus and into the now growing hot-spots for UMass parties, especially as the flow of students taking those paths increase.

But what can the University do to prevent this exodus and keep students on the much more controlled and safer campus environment? Simply this: lighten up. Students are going to drink, regardless of any policy UMass decides to enforce, so why not let more than 10 people into a dorm room, lounge or apartment in North? Is that not better than 10 or more students stumbling down roads in the dark, or worse, swerving down the street in their cars and possibly plowing into their fellow fun-loving students? For the sake of student safety, UMass should not place such strong restrictions on students so they're made to feel it is impossible to have a good time in their living areas.

UMass can't be held entirely responsible, though. As students, we're all part of this trend, and I see nothing wrong with taking pride in having a good time, but there is really no fun to be had in assault, destruction or drunk driving. If we want a campus where we can all party safely, we just have to be respectful of the institution that has allowed us to make it the number seven party school in the nation.

So, if you're going to grab a cold one this weekend, remember to chill out, because stabbings are not conducive to a good party experience. And if the school doesn't feel so threatened by the student population, maybe Gargano will join us all in pounding beers, rather than just fists.

Adam McGillen is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

SWASTIKAS ON YOM KIPPUR

I'm writing to express my deep concern about the appearance of two swastikas in the October 2nd edition of the Collegian, which just happened to be the most solemn Jewish holiday of Yom Kippur. As I'm sure you are aware, the swastika was the symbol of the Nazi party, which was responsible for extermination of 11 million people during the Second World War, six million of whom were Jews.

The swastika appears in a photo of the band Tool, published, disturbingly, on both the front page and again in the Arts section on page five. Especially troubling is the placement of this photo in the most prominent part of the front page (top center, above the fold) — even though it has little if any news value, given the fact that the band did not even perform on this campus (the concert was at the Tweeter Center in Mansfield).

While the swastika in question is intended to convey an anti-Republican Party rather than an explicitly anti-Jewish message, the symbol is "inherently anti-Semitic and deeply offensive to Jews (as well as gays and lesbians, and many other groups who suffered at the hands of the Nazis). Even more so when it appears on the most important Jewish holiday.

At the very least, if you felt it important to publish that particular photo, you could have cropped it so as to exclude the swastika (or if you feel morally obliged to publish photos as is, without editing, then you could have used a different photo entirely). But there was absolutely no reason to do so on this Jewish holiday, and certainly not on the front page (and definitely not twice).

For those reasons, I believe you owe the Jewish members of the UMass community an apology. I hope you will think more carefully in the future before printing such offensive material, especially when the "news" (i.e. a concert that occurred last week, somewhere else) is of such little relevance to this community.

Larry Goldbaum
Office of Jewish Affairs

VOTE, BECAUSE YOU CAN

I would like to commend Domenic Poli's article, "No excuse not to vote," for encouraging students to register to vote, both locally and by absentee ballots. It is wonderful to see a student encouraging peers to vote and offering instructions on precisely how to do so — especially in this day and age.

In 1972, when the voting age was lowered to 18, 50 percent of 18-24 year olds voted. It hasn't been that high since, but the numbers are growing quickly, and we could break the record this year. Candidates don't ignore us because we're students; rather, they ignore us because we don't vote.

If our generation can be fully mobilized, we can take charge of our common future and tell politicians that we want them to care about issues that affect students at UMASS, such as affordable higher education and textbook rip-offs. Furthermore, Domenic is spot on when he argues that it's so easy to vote — especially when numerous student groups, faculty members, and administrators are currently sponsoring a non-partisan effort to register students to vote here, on campus, over the next few weeks.

In fact, up until the October 18 Massachusetts registration deadline, these groups are not only tabling, but are also making class presentations and going door-to-door in dorms to encourage students to register. Registration at your door — it couldn't be any easier. They will even mail the forms for you.

So, you can eliminate the trekking home, or having to ask a relative to go to City Hall, and just come down to the Student Union or Campus Center and find a group registering people to vote. Take advantage of this wonderful opportunity to have your voice heard here at UMass.

Thomas Coon
UMass Student

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

Respond to what we print! (550 word limit)

Send letters to: editorial@dailycollegian.com or go to: dailycollegian.com

O'Brien discusses reality

TIM O'BRIEN / UM

Author Tim O'Brien discussed subjects such as his childhood in Worthington, Minn. and his intention to make readers know the difference between make believe and reality.

BY MORGAN-ANN ROUSSEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Tuesday night, award winning author Timothy O'Brien spoke at the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts. An engaging storyteller, O'Brien discussed some childhood memories, as well as his skepticism about literary truth and the power of stories.

The speech was part of the second Distinguished Lecture Series hosted by the UMass Department of History, and sponsored by UMass Alumnus Kenneth R Feinberg ('67).

The lecture began with an introduction by Professor Christian Appy from the UMass History Department, who described O'Brien as one of the greatest writers of the English language today.

When O'Brien came on, the audience welcomed his presence with sincerity. His opening remarks were casual and down-to-earth, and displayed a genuine nature that held true for the entirety of his lecture.

"I'm a little uncomfortable giving speeches because they imply a coherence of thought," O'Brien commented.

He explained that he believes in trial and error, and doesn't like to plan everything in his life or work.

"In my work I blunder along word by word, paragraph by paragraph. Good stories are concrete, not abstract. They don't have instruction as a main purpose," O'Brien said.

After a career as a reporter for the Washington Post, O'Brien published his first memoir in 1974, called "If I Die in a Combat Zone, Box Me Up and Send Me Home." Today after writing eight books, his fictional novel "The Things They Carried" (1990) endures as one of the most widely assigned books in U.S. high schools.

The author said his hope when writing "The Things They Carried" was to "make us believe in our stomachs" that war is hell.

According to O'Brien, although it is created in our imaginations, fiction is important because imaginary creations uncover psychological, intellectual and emotional truths that can't be realized in reality. He strongly believes that stories are a powerful part of life that is underestimated by everyone, and that "stories elevate our dreams."

"We recognize ourselves in characters, and that we participate in stories. We find a comfort in stories," O'Brien said, also citing Pablo Picasso's well known quote, "Art is a lie that helps us realize the truth."

O'Brien spent part of his lecture telling a memorable story from his childhood in Worthington, Minn. He did so with the hope that his underlying message about truth and fiction would "soak in," as many truths are absorbed through storytelling.

The story was about his and a childhood friend's misunderstanding about the difference between "make-believe" and reality. After realizing that they could not built a wooden airplane, they decided to play Sunday school, and nail his friend's sister to their wooden airplane in a re-enactment of the crucifixion. Luckily O'Brien's mother caught them in time. But when his father lectured him on the difference between fantasy and reality, O'Brien argued that "to him fantasy was real."

O'Brien drew a comparison between this experience and the Vietnam War by saying that being a youth at war feels very much like playing a game. He said that most U.S. soldiers are college aged, and they carry their youth to war with them.

"The stories you bring to war account for the disillusion that you bring home from war," O'Brien said. "Wars are fought by real people, not by abstractions and generalizations ... Middle America is where our soldiers all come from. And it's to where they return."

He talked about the power of story in our lives, and about how much is real in his novel "The Things They Carried." He said that some, but not all, was real.

In regards to the search for fictional material, O'Brien said that a misapprehension about novelists is that novelists must "slay dragons" to come up with material — when in actuality good material lies in daily life and imagination.

In addition to speaking on his views about truth, war and the power of stories, O'Brien offered some literary advice to the prospective writers in the audience: avoid overly pretty language, avoid poetic alliteration, use modifiers carefully and don't be afraid of lying, as anything can happen in fiction — even miracles. O'Brien called these lies "noble lies."

O'Brien emphasized his skepticism of truth by encouraging the avoidance of absolutism. Rather than fixing on one version of the truth, it is necessary to adjust to the fluid nature of what is regarded as truth.

"Truth evolves. It isn't fixed. It changes," he said.

He ended the lecture by giving the young audience some advice.

"When thinking about your future occupation you are making a story for yourself. I urge you to make a powerful ambition, and march boldly into those stories."

Umphrey's Mcgee coming to Worcester Polladium Friday

BY LAUREN MODINET
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Umphrey's Mcgee is coming to Worcester this Friday, Oct. 6. After gracing Northampton with a performance at Pines Theatre this summer, they return to the area to reach out to their fans and corral them into The Palladium.

If you missed their double performance at Higher Ground in Burlington, Vt., this is your chance to make up for it.

The five member band consists of lead vocalists/guitarist Brendan Bayliss and Jake Cinninger. Joel Cummings works the keyboard while Ryan Stasik rocks on the bass, and Kris Meyers jams on the drums while Andy Farag adds percussion. Most of the members know each other through years spent at Notre Dame, which they proudly display along with their companion, Yoda.

They have become nationally renowned from their travels across the states and to many festivals such as 10000 Lakes and All Good. Although they are making their way to the top of the ladder, the boys of the band still maintain their modesty. It isn't unusual to spot them in the crowd during set breaks and schmoozing after they finish their gig, or even calming the crazed fan who faints in their presence (true story).

MYSPACE.COM/UMPHREYSMCGEE

After performing this past summer in Northampton, Umphrey returns to Massachusetts for a set at the Worcester Palladium.

They have such an extremely diverse style that's it's hard to categorize them. Their music has elements of funk, modern and classic rock, with an occasional ballad. Songs like Miss Tinkles Overture can pass without categorization — you just simply need to hear it. This is a song that was derived from circumstances on the road concerning a bottle of urine and one of the members' pillows. Despite the inspiration, this wordless composition plainly explains the extreme talent of the band.

Umphrey's is a growing band that originated out of Chicago and represents their roots with pride during their performances. These days they play their newer music from their most recent albums, Safety in Numbers and Anchor Drops.

They aren't your typical hippie band. Instead of having a focus on jamming, their music revolves around the lyrics and the sound. They have a wide variety of fans that follow them all over to support them.

Their name, Umphrey's Mcgee, comes from Bayliss' uncle: Humphrey Mcgee. Bayliss speaks about the inspiration behind Safety in Numbers and this is what he tells his followers.

"We had kind of a crazy year and it all came out on this record, though it's not all obviously dark, there's kind of a theme that runs through it. It wasn't a conscious effort to spill my guts," says Bayliss. "But life and its circumstances are a balancing act, and it's all on the record."

Safety in Numbers holds so much life experience for Bayliss and he expresses his passions and hardships in a very modern and stylish manner.

You couldn't possibly imagine their talent until you see them live. Especially with Bayliss and Cinninger on guitars, the likelihood of a disappointing performance is minimal.

Tickets should be purchased before they sell out, because they usually do. They are available at tickets.com for $20.

Hilton claims attack at restaurant

BY LARRY CARROLL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Paris Hilton claimed former beauty queen Shanna Moakler punched her in the face at a Hollywood nightclub early Wednesday, police and Hilton's publicist said.

Moakler contended she was attacked by Hilton's ex-boyfriend Stavros Niarchos, who bent her wrists, poured a drink on her and shoved her down some stairs, Moakler publicist Susan Madore said.

Hilton, 25, and Moakler, 31, both filed police reports alleging battery, police Officer Karen Smith said.

The hotel heiress said she was struck around 1 a.m., shortly after arriving at Hyde nightclub with Niarchos, her publicist Elliot Mintz told The Associated Press.

Mintz said Hilton told him Moakler walked up to his client, "used the most vile of language" and then struck Hilton in the jaw with her fist. Hilton claimed the alleged attack was unprovoked.

Madore said Moakler, Miss USA in 1995 and a "Dancing With the Stars" contestant this season, exchanged profanities with Hilton when Niarchos stepped in and threatened to beat her.

Police took pictures of Moakler and Hilton at the station, Smith said, and will speak with witnesses at the club as part of their investigation.

Hilton and Moakler's ex-husband, Blink 182 drummer Travis Barker, were recently linked romantically in tabloid reports. Mintz said the two were "just friends."

Ask the attorney weekly update

BY MICHELE LEAF
SLSO STAFF ATTORNEY

Q: Now that the school year is finally here we want to give a big party to celebrate. We live in a house in Amherst and are wondering what laws we should be aware of?

A: If you are hosting a party, you can be held liable for the actions of your guests, so it is very important to make sure that the party does not get out of hand. Limit your guest list to a manageable number, preferably all people that you know. It is particularly important to control alcohol use because serving an intoxicated or disorderly person could result in substantial financial liability for the party hosts. Providing alcohol to a minor is a criminal offense punishable by a fine of up to $2000 and imprisonment for up to six months. It is important that you do not charge admission or sell drinks at the party because you could then be found guilty of selling alcohol without a license. If you want to serve beer from a keg, then it is necessary to apply to the police for a free keg license in advance of the party. Violation of the keg by-law will result in a fine of up to $300.

If you keep the party indoors, with windows and doors shut, you will better be able to reduce the noise. If the party is outside, make sure that your guests know that possession of open containers containing alcoholic beverages on any town street or sidewalk can result in a $50 fine and are aware that Amherst has a noise by-law. This regulation prohibits excessive, unnecessary, or unusually loud noise which annoys or disturbs others. Violators are subject to arrest and a fine of up to $300. For this reason, it is important to talk to your neighbors in advance of the party. You should let them know of your plans and ask that they contact you immediately if the party is disturbing to them. Consider giving your neighbors a cell phone number to call if there is any disturbance, to best assure that you are aware that a complaint is being made. Otherwise, leave a note by the telephone advising guests to let you know if anybody calls during the party. If neighbors call to complain but are unable to speak directly to the host they usually make the next call to the police. An appearance by an officer means either a warning or a citation for a noise violation. Although cooperation with the police does not guarantee that you will only receive a warning, the lack of polite sober cooperation will assure you of the citation and could possibly result in your arrest. If at all possible, try to meet the officer outside and do not invite him or her into the house. During the party, it is recommended that the host monitor the sound level outside, and keep guests from gathering too close to the neighbors' windows. It is also a good idea to place trash containers in the yard to reduce litter, and to clean up any trash promptly after the party. Caution and proper planning can help to prevent party fouls and insure a problem-free celebration.

The information contained in this article refers to Massachusetts law and does not constitute legal advice. Please submit legal questions to asktheattorney@stuaf.umass.edu*. If you need legal advice, seek out an attorney who can give you advice based upon your circumstances and applicable law. Fee paying UMass Amherst students with questions may call the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 to arrange and appointment, or come to 922 Campus Center to pick up more information.*

Clapton classic back in concert

(AP) — Eric Clapton is playing "Cocaine" in concert again. The recovering drug addict and alcoholic, who founded the Crossroads Centre addiction recovery center on the Caribbean island of Antigua, stopped performing the song written by J.J. Cale when he first got sober.

"I thought that it might be giving the wrong message to people who were in the same boat as me," Clapton said to the Associated Press.

"But further investigation proved ... the song, if anything, if it's not even ambivalent, it's an anti-drug song. And so I thought that might be a better way to do it, to approach it from a more positive point of view. And carry on performing it as not a pro-drug song, but just as a reality check about what it does.

"It's one of those songs that you can take it any way you like," Clapton said. "But it very clearly says in the opening verse, 'If you wanna get down, down on the ground,' I mean, that's, I think, the focal point of the song. That's what the song's about, is that, you know, there's a price."

Clapton also said he missed playing "Cocaine," with its signature guitar riff, "just purely from a musical point of view."

Clapton, 61, is on the North American leg of his world tour.

—Associated Press

New 'Chainsaw' doesn't cut it

BY RENE RODRIGUEZ
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

It's business as usual in "The Texas Chainsaw Massacre: The Beginning," which purports to be a prequel to the 2003 remake of the seminal horror classic, but is really just more of the same-old in chainsaw land, only bloodier and grosser than before.

Yes, the movie, directed by Jonathan Liebesman ("Darkness Falls") from a screenplay by Sheldon Turner ("The Longest Yard"), explains how the power-tool wielding maniac Leatherface (Andrew Bryniarski) turned out the way he is (short answer: He was picked on by bullies in school). Yes, we find out how the murderous and obviously insane sheriff (R. Lee Ermey) came to wear a lawman's badge (he just killed the former sheriff) and took over the job).

And yes, we finally discover why this particular family is so fond of slaughtering anyone who steps onto their property and then dining on their flesh (they couldn't afford real food). As you've probably deduced by now, none of this origin stuff is the slightest bit interesting a sentiment the filmmakers apparently share, judging by the scant screen time they devote to it. Besides, any self-respecting "Chainsaw" fan already knows Tobe Hooper, who directed the 1974 original, loosely based his movie on the exploits of Ed Gein, the Wisconsin serial killer who also inspired "Psycho."

But Hooper, who served as a producer on "The Beginning," obviously isn't above beating this deadest of horses, and anyone who buys a ticket for the new film probably isn't interested in sitting through "Leatherface: The Terrible Twos" anyway. The bulk of this oppressively vicious, sadistic picture details the various tortures and degradations suffered by a cast of young, good-looking, vaguely familiar actors, such as Jordana Brewster and Taylor Handley.

If watching people having their faces cut off, getting their legs amputated and having their throats tenderly slit is your idea of a horrific good time, you'll certainly get your money's worth here. Me, I share the sentiment of the extremely vocal young woman who sat behind me and yelled out "Ay Dios mio, I don't want to watch this movie anymore." Amen, sister.

A new author to an old story

BY SUE LEEMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

John has discovered a cutlass in his bed; the twins are inexplicably covered in war paint - and a snapping crocodile is terrorizing the members of the gentlemen's club.

Wendy, always the most astute of Peter Pan's friends, knows what this means. "Something is wrong in Neverland, gentlemen," she announces. "And that is why we must go back."

And so begins another adventure with the impudent boy who never grew up: Oct. 5 sees the publication around the world of "Peter Pan in Scarlet," the authorized sequel by award-winning British writer Geraldine McCaughrean.

The plot is being kept a secret until publication day, but London's Great Ormond Street Hospital for children, which owns the Peter Pan copyright and commissioned the sequel, is promising another tale of excitement and derring-do, featuring all the original's favorite characters. Royalties will be split between the hospital and McCaughrean.

"I wanted to extend the life and usefulness of Barrie's boy," said McCaughrean, who beat nearly 200 other entries in a competition to choose an author for the sequel. "The book was not hard to write because Peter really got a grip on me."

The book has already been so sold in more than 30 countries from Japan to Estonia to Canada. Advance sales are so brisk that the book is already being reprinted in Britain and the United States, where the first print run alone was 200,000, according to Emma Dryden, who edited the book for Margaret K. McElderry Books, an imprint of Simon & Schuster.

To whet appetites, the publishers have released the first chapter of the 275-page book, which has a dashing scarlet cover showing Peter clad in a waistcoat of vivid red leaves.

Twenty years after their original adventure, the children who first accompanied Peter to Neverland are all grown up: the balding John is married with children, Tootles is a judge, Curly a doctor and Slightly is now The Honorable Slightly, having married a titled lady.

All are having disturbing dreams of Neverland, and waking to find unexpected objects - a candle, a bow, a top hat - in their beds.

Neverland, concludes the sensible Wendy, is "rubbing against the Here and Now, wearing holes in the fabric in between." And so the adventure begins.

McCaughrean, who already has 130 children's books under her belt, shows a deftness and assurance that allow the reader to slip seamlessly from Barrie's original to "Peter Pan in Scarlet."

She has dispensed with Barrie's Edwardian flourishes of language, but has maintained his characters, his witty style - including the dry asides to adults that so enchanted Barrie's readers - and the original's looming sense of menace.

"I didn't want to bring the book right up to date. I didn't want to do a modern Peter Pan," said McCaughrean, whose books, "The Pirate's Son" and "The Kite Rider," won the American Library Association Best Book for Young Adults in 1998 and 2003.

"Children like other-world adventures - they like going there. Children like to be taken out of themselves," she said.

"She's done a brilliant job - J. M. Barrie would definitely have approved," said David Barrie, the famous author's great-great-nephew. "The original worked on so many levels; there were so many subtexts that appeal to people of different ages. Geraldine has taken J. M. Barrie's inspiration and moved it into a new area."

McCaughrean was careful not to give away too many secrets about the plot as she talked to The Associated Press at her home in the hill-ringed village of Great Shefford near Wantage, 80 miles west of London.

"There is a secret to do with the past," she said, cryptically. "In Neverland, time has moved on, it's not perpetual summer any more. That makes the weather more extreme."

A slim, gentle woman with a sparkling wit, McCaughrean also reveals that this time the action moves beyond the confines of the Netherwood and the lagoon, where the original was set. She said she felt justified in the change of scene because "Neverland has no fixed size or shape."

There are also fairies, pirates, children - and a circus - "because children love animals and I felt we needed more of them."

Wendy, she said, is "a bit more central to the story" this time - "I wanted to make her more a prime mover."

In fact, there are two girls on the trip this time, the other, McCaughrean said, "fulfills the role of the helpless female who hangs on Peter's every word."

And what about Hook, last seen dropping into the open jaws of a crocodile?

"I don't do ghosts," she said. "But Hook does figure, so does (the fairy) Tink, but she's not there at the beginning." New characters include another adult and a fairy.

Other authors who wrote sequels to Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With the Wind" and Daphne du Maurier's "Rebecca" have been criticized for parody or pastiche - and for trying to cash in on the big literary names.

"This is such a good cause and that is the only premise on which I would have done it," she said. "I don't feel any sense of guilt."

The book launches Thursday at a party at Kensington Palace hosted by its British publishers Oxford University Press and the Great Ormond Street Hospital.

Sir James Matthew Barrie bequeathed the copyright to Peter Pan to Great Ormond Street Hospital in 1929, and it receives royalties from plays, books and other items that mention Peter Pan. Over the years, this has raised millions of pounds for the hospital. However, Barrie expressed the wish that the amount should never be revealed, so the hospital does not give figures.

It currently needs more than $281 million to replace dilapidated 1930s buildings, and for new equipment, medical research and providing accommodations for parents of young patients.

The Peter Pan character first appeared in a 1902 novel, "The Little White Bird," and the play that made him famous premiered at the Duke of York's theater in London two years later. Barrie turned the story into a children's book in 1911 and its combination of mystery and magic made it a children's favorite.

There are now over 100 professional and amateur productions of the play of Peter Pan in its many forms, from the original to adaptations such as musicals, ballet, ice-skating shows, pantos, puppet shows, not only in Britain but also in the United States and Europe.

McCaughrean, a former teacher and journalist who has garnered three of Britain's prestigious Whitbread literary awards, identifies in some ways with Peter's Scottish-born creator.

"We both understand that children need this other world, they need to get away from being small and subjugated," she said. "And we both love fairies and the magical."

"But where I differ from Barrie is that I don't believe that life goes downhill after childhood."

Author Geraldine McGaughlinrean is the author of over 130 children's books including 'The Pirates Son' and 'The Kite.'

Nice guys don't always finish last

Jasmine Monteiro

The term "nice guys finish last" has become a popular statement made by the male sex. Girls are constantly ridiculed for rejecting the guy who takes her out, buys her flowers, and even calls when he says he's going to (certainly a rare occasion). While there may be some truth to this, it is also true that there are always two sides to a story.

I won't deny that some guys are dealt a bad hand. They seemingly do everything right (as mentioned before) and still don't end up with the girl. And while you may be wondering how this could be, I've already figured it out. You do it to yourself. That's right, we are not really the coldhearted insensitive girls you make us out to be. The main reason you finish last is your own fault.

Now guys, before you reject this observation and think it's ludicrous, hear me out. There are an overwhelming amount of girls right now that don't know what they want from a guy — a friend, a companion, a lover — who knows. And I can guarantee you that one of you "nice guys" has dated one of them. Because, let's face it, we will get attention any way we know how. I know you're probably thinking, "So what? I don't know what I want either." In case you didn't notice, girls like to make things complicated, we can't always go with the flow. Here lies the problem.

Remember that girl you dated who just broke up with her cruel boyfriend, only to end up back with him again? Well, I don't know about you, but to me, that has "emotionally unavailable" written all over it. Trust me, I've had it written all over me plenty of times. You think that just because you come around and try to play knight in shining armor that it'll all work out, and that's just not true. It's also not true that she enjoys being mistreated and would rather have that than a guy that treats her right. It's really just that she's not ready to let go of her past relationship. And contrary to what you think, you most likely will not be the one changing her mind.

Many guys don't even realize that they voluntarily choose the wrong girl. While it may not be obvious at first, it becomes obvious sooner than later. For some reason, men seem more drawn to women when they appear the most vulnerable. Maybe it's because you want to pick up the pieces and teach her how to love again, even though you can't. And at the first sign of the "case of the ex" consider that your official warning. Most girls will be honest with you about it, and give you the right to decide what's best for you. There's nothing wrong with being there for her when she needs you, but you need to make sure you don't get caught up in a bad situation.

The bottom line is that a girl needs closure after a difficult breakup. If she never obtained that, she won't be capable of another one. The healing process takes time and patience. Sometimes it's not worth waiting around to find out where you stand in her life. Just look for the signs and find a girl who doesn't have any baggage. And when a girl is ready, she will wholeheartedly accept your pampering, and would definitely return the favor. The effort will be worth it and you're more likely than not to come out on top (or at least not last).

—Jasmine Monteiro is a Collegian relationship columnist

Author and activist dies at age 79

BY PABLO GORONDI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Andras Suto, a writer and human rights advocate for his fellow ethnic Hungarians in Romania who was persecuted by Nicolae Ceausescu's regime, has died. He was 79.

Suto died Saturday night at a Budapest hospital where he was being treated for cancer, said Laszlo Cselenyi, Suto's son-in-law.

Hungarian Prime Minister Ferenc Gyurcsany described Suto as a "creator, a sufferer and nearly a martyr of our common history."

"His rich life's work, individual example and personal tragedy is a warning to us all, that our region, Central-Eastern Europe, can have only one road: openness and tolerance toward each other and the finding of a common denominator called culture," Gyurcsany said in a statement.

Western Romania, including Transylvania, was part of Hungary until World War I and still has a large ethnic Hungarian population, whose fate has since often defined relations between the two countries.

Suto for decades spoke up when the human rights of ethnic Hungarians in Romania were threatened, including attempts at forced integration, efforts by Ceausescu's communist regime to eliminate Hungarian-language schools and plans to bulldoze villages, many of them predominantly Hungarian.

In March 1990, Suto was nearly beaten to death and lost an eye during clashes between Romanians and ethnic Hungarians in the Romanian city of Tirgu Mures after Ceausescu was ousted in December 1989.

In his works, Suto wrote much about the ordeals of living as a minority often in humorous, melancholic tones but he also called for the peaceful coexistence between ethnic groups.

"We lived in decades in which intellectuals, including writers, could not exclude themselves from the aspirations of a community," Suto told the British Broadcasting Corp. last year. A writer "has to be aware of the world he lives in and writes for and whose fate and historical and national status force upon him certain duties."

From 1960, the Ceausescu regime banned his books and plays, but they continued to be published and performed to great critical and popular acclaim in Hungary.

Among his best-known works are the semi-autobiographical "My Mother Promises Light Dreams," the essay collection "I of The Words Come To Me" and a play "Advent On Harghita." His diary "An Eye For A Word" was published in 1995.

Suto was a member of the Romanian parliament from 1965 to 1977 and vice president of the Romanian Writers' Association from 1973 to 1982. He received numerous state and literary awards both in Romania and Hungary.

Anthony to star in 'El Cantante'

BY MICHAEL MELIA
ASSOCIATED PRESS

As he worked his way to salsa stardom, Marc Anthony said he saw the tragic career of the Puerto Rican performer he plays in an upcoming movie as inspiration and a warning to avoid industry pitfalls.

Anthony, who kicked off a concert tour in San Juan this weekend, said he felt a personal connection to Hector Lavoe, who was credited with bringing salsa to the United States and died in 1993 at age 46 following a struggle with drug addiction.

"He painted this clear picture of what you could be if you put your mind to it, but how painful a life you could live if you made the wrong choices," he said.

The biopic "El Cantante," which has Anthony starring opposite his wife, Jennifer Lopez, premiered this month at the Toronto Film Festival. It is expected to be released in North America next year.

The film traces Lavoe's rise from the Caribbean island to stardom in New York, where the sold-out concerts and best-selling albums of the 1970s give way to drug addiction and a strained marriage in the 1980s.

Lopez, who co-produced the film, took on the project nearly five years ago when Lavoe's widow approached her with a script and asked the pop star to consider playing her role.

The husband-and-wife duo, which also collaborated on Lopez's upcoming Spanish-language album, with Anthony as the producer, was expected to appear on stage together this weekend.

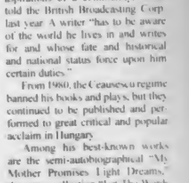
Singer turned actor Marc Anthony stars in 'El Cantante' with his wife Jennifer Lopez. The movie premiered this past month in Toronto.

Art is your Friend!
ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass Amherst Fine Arts Center Series 2006-2007 Season

WHERE IMAGINATION MEETS INNOVATION

Sean Jones
Thursday, October 19 at 7:30 pm
Jones is steeped heavily in 21st century modern bop. He is joined by his quartet for this performance. Dont miss this hot, new trumpet sensation.
Bowker Auditorium
Sponsored by
Yale Genton, Fathers & Sons, 88.7 WFCR
Part of the Ninth Annual Billy Taylor Jazz Residency



Luma Theater
Friday October 27 at 8:00 pm
LUMA creates a "TechnoCircus" that is born in the shadows and has audiences sitting on the edge of their seats with google eyes and slack jaws. ONLY $15 FOR YOUTH 17 AND UNDER!
Concert Hall
Sponsored by
WMUA, Valley Gazette
Post Performance talk back immediately following performance

Niyaz
Friday November 3 at 8:00 pm
An exciting new fusion of traditional Persian music and modern electronics. The group performs the Farsi and ancient Indian Urdu to a hypnotic, ecstatic, and eminently danceable beat
Bowker Auditorium
Sponsored by
Valley Advocate, WMUA
Presented in collaboration with the Asian Arts & Culture Program

TICKETS ARE ON SALE NOW!
TICKETS ARE ONLY $7 $10 $15
FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS
UMass Amherst FINE ARTS CENTER
CALL 545-2511 OR 1-800-999-UMAS WWW.FINEARTSCENTER.COM

NY band slowly gathers fame

By Chris Riemenschneider
McClatchy Newspapers

As if it's just another acquired taste, Southern California hasn't yet caught on with TV on the Radio singer Tunde Adebimpe.

"It's beautiful and everything," Adebimpe said by phone two weeks ago from a tour stop in Pomona, Calif., "but I find don't get it."

Funny, a lot of people have said the same thing about TV on the Radio's music.

Unlike a lot of modern-rock bands who think being innovative means imitating Radiohead and Wilco, the multiracial New York quintet offers a mind-blowingly new sound. Whirring, frayed guitar parts, jagged and jumbled rhythms, splatter-like song structures and Adebimpe's haunting howl of a voice are just part of the unique makeup of the band.

Those components helped TV on the Radio's second disc, "Desperate Youth," beat out discs by the Killers, Franz Ferdinand and even Wilco for the 2004 Shortlist Music Prize (a U.S. answer to England's coveted Mercury Music Prize).

Last month, TVOTR issued its follow-up album, "Return to Cookie Mountain," on Interscope Records after coming up on Chicago indie label Touch & Go. The new album is a little more accessible than "Desperate Youth," but that had nothing to do with the switch in labels, the singer said.

"The fact that we toured for a year and a half had a lot to do with how this album sounds," said Adebimpe. "We developed a shorthand on how to do things. We communicated better and had more at our disposal sonically."

As Adebimpe tried to explain that communication process between the five band members who don't usually stick to one instrument or job title in the studio he offered a deeper glimpse into how TVOTR really does manage to be different.

"Everyone in the band wants to be engrossed in the music like it's a living, breathing thing," he said.

"There are definitely cases where a song has been written and somebody dubs it as sounding 'too normal,' which of course is a completely subjective thing especially in the case of the five guys in this band. But 'normal,' whoever is defining it, usually isn't what we're going for."

The roots of TV on the Radio go back to 2000, when Adebimpe and producer/guitarist David Sitek started painting and recording together in a loft in a communal-like loft in Brooklyn. Their first disc, "OK Calculator," was little more than a compilation of experimental tracks they made on a whim.

"We silk-screened the CD sleeves ourselves and left copies in cul-de-sacs and bookstores around Brooklyn with nothing more than an email address on them," Adebimpe recalled.

The CD earned the duo a weekly gig at a nearby club, which is when they picked the name and made it a real band. Guitarist Kyp Malone was added "just to see what it'd be like playing with him," Adebimpe said. The other two guys joined in the same fashion.

The band's experimental spirit is alive and well in many of the best tracks on "Return to Cookie Mountain," including the hand-clapped chant "A Method" and the frantic first single TV on the Radio began back in 2000 in Brooklyn and now they are one of the most successful touring bands in the indie scene.

"Wolf Like Me," which starts with a stalking beat and builds and builds to Adebimpe's wild refrain, "We're howling forever."

Another highlight, the moody techno/soul song "Province," features backup vocals from TVOTR fan David Bowie. Adebimpe said working with the rock legend "was surreal because it was so normal."

"He's just a very personable, knowledgeable guy who has the weird added bonus feature of being David Bowie. He was there in the studio just trying to do his vocal part and working hard at it, and I'm next to him thinking, 'That's Ziggy Stardust. That's the Goblin King from "Labyrinth."'"

That latter reference, to Jim Henson's 1986 sci-fi film starring Bowie, revealed Adebimpe's interest in sci-fi and animated art. A Pittsburgh native who lived in Nigeria for three years as a child, Adebimpe, 31, studied film at New York University and worked as an animator. Among his best-known work: MTV's "Celebrity Death Match."

"I was one of their 12 original animators," he said proudly. "I worked on Michael Jackson vs. Madonna, the Beastie Boys vs. Backstreet Boys. There's a lot of carnage in my past."

Adebimpe's animation gigs also including the Yeah Yeah Yeahs video "Pin" are just some of the many unusual side projects from TVOTR's members. Sitek has produced other bands including the Yeah Yeah Yeahs and Liars. Malone acted in the 2003 indie film "Scumrock." Drummer Jaleel Bunton has been a scenic artist for movies, including 2006's "Hamlet" with Ethan Hawke.

"Everyone in this band has something else they should be doing," Adebimpe said with a laugh. "It's like we're all drawing in the margins in this band instead of paying attention in class."

The weirder the story gets, the more TV on the Radio starts to make sense.

Men shopping more, says study

By Julie Sevrens Lyons
San Jose Mercury News

SAN JOSE, Calif.—In the battle of the sexes one more stereotype has fallen: A new Stanford University study suggests men are just as likely as women to be serious shopaholics.

But they're much less likely to get help for their problem, according to the most comprehensive survey to date of out-of-control spending among Americans.

The random telephone survey of 2,514 adults found that 5.5 percent of men and 6 percent of women are addicted to shopping so obsessed that they may go deep into debt, wind up divorced or even consider suicide.

These aren't your average folks who enjoy an occasional day at the mall. The problem must be so severe that the sufferer is in financial or personal turmoil and has problems functioning.

"What's shocking and unexpected is how common this problem is," said Eric Hollander, professor and chairman of psychiatry at Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York, who was not involved in the study.

Previous studies indicated that perhaps 2 percent of the American public had such severe shopping compulsions that they could be labeled as having an "impulse control disorder."

Yet the Stanford researchers found the prevalence is about three times greater, with about 1 in 20 Americans afflicted.

They didn't come out and ask people whether they were shopaholics. Instead, they asked a series of questions designed to reveal the urges within. Compulsive buyers were more likely to say they need to spend money, buy things to improve their mood, lose control when shopping, see their spending as aberrant and have financial problems as a result.

Shopaholics, the researchers found, tend to be young and live in homes with annual incomes less than $50,000. They're also about four times less likely than the average consumer to pay off their credit card balances in full.

"The behavior creates stress in the form of guilt or remorse, or dysfunction in the form of family conflict or unapproved time away from work to shop," said Lorrin Koran, lead author of the study and an emeritus professor of psychiatry at Stanford. The research appears in October's American Journal of Psychiatry.

While men and women may be

A new Stanford University study suggests men are just as likely to be shopaholics. 5.5 percent of men are addicted to shopping.

afflicted to the same degree, they do differ in one area, Koran said.

Previous research has shown that men are much more likely to be obsessed with tools, electronic gadgets, books and CDs. (One of Koran's patients just had to have 2,000 wrenches, while another purchased 50 cameras that he didn't use.) Women overspend on clothes, jewelry, makeup, craft paraphernalia and items for the home.

"Men are going to Fry's," he said, "and women are going to Macy's."

Tom Hedges, co-owner of the Mad Hatters in Los Gatos, Calif., said he hasn't seen too many compulsive buyers come into his shop — hats aren't that trendy, after all — but he doesn't doubt the researchers for a second.

"Everyone knows someone who goes overboard in the shopping department, he said. And Hedges, a self-proclaimed "high-tech geek type" admits to rushing out and plunking down $40,000 on a stereo the day a start-up company he used to work for went public.

"I haven't ever done it since," he said.

Scientists who consider compulsive buying a mental disorder believe the problem could be biological, sociological, psychological or a combination of all three.

Some say shopping addictions are really no different than addictions to gambling or sex. Others theorize that shopping gives some people a physical rush, a pleasurable feeling they want to capture over and over.

Still others see it as a natural outcome of our increasingly affluent society. Consumers have easy access to credit cards and often use them to assuage boredom and depression or boost their self-esteem.

"Nobody knows the cause," said Koran, adding that a generation ago, this was an area that wasn't defined, researched or understood.

Scientists have recently begun investigating whether medications might help curb obsessive shopping.

But some experts don't buy the notion that the tendency to shop 'til you drop is a problem requiring medication.

"Calling irresponsible buying a disease or a disorder is a way for removing responsibility for the behavior," said Jeffrey A. Schaler, a psychologist and professor at American University's School of Public Affairs in Washington, DC. "We're going down a slippery slope where any socially undesirable behavior can be excused."

Schaler, author of "Addiction Is a Choice," argues that "impulse control disorders" such as compulsive buying are "fabricated" to serve the financial interests of doctors and researchers. Medical conditions such as cancer, diabetes and AIDS are true diseases, he said. Behaviors, such as gambling, smoking and shopping, are not.

Christian movie lacks appeal

By Robert W. Butler
McClatchy Newspapers

The story behind "Facing the Giants" may be more interesting than what's on the screen.

This inspirational football film, made for a paltry $80,000, is an evangelical outreach effort by a Christian congregation in Georgia. It was written, directed and edited by Alex Kendrick, who also takes the leading role, and cast mostly with church members making their film debuts.

This could have been a recipe for an amateurish disaster, but the makers of "Facing the Giants" have nothing to be embarrassed about. The film (actually it was shot on high-def video) is technically solid cinematographer Bob Scott and the film's sound crew have numerous TV and film credits and Kendrick has created a believable environment.

And if it cannot avoid the clichés of both the sports film and the inspirational film, at least "Facing the Giants" leavens its message with good humor.

Grant Taylor (Kendrick) is the football coach for the Shiloh Christian Academy. Never having had a winning season in his six years, Grant and his players are demoralized. Some of the kids' fathers are agitating to have the coach replaced.

Things aren't much better at home. Grant can afford only an unreliable car held together by rust, and after four years of trying he and his wife, Brooke (Shannen Fieldst), have been unable to get pregnant.

To top it all off, he wryly notes, he's losing his hair.

At the end of his rope, Grant picks up his Bible for inspiration and decides to start coaching in the name of God. This sets off a spiritual revival in the school and turns the team around. Now they're playing not just to win, but also in the name of the Almighty.

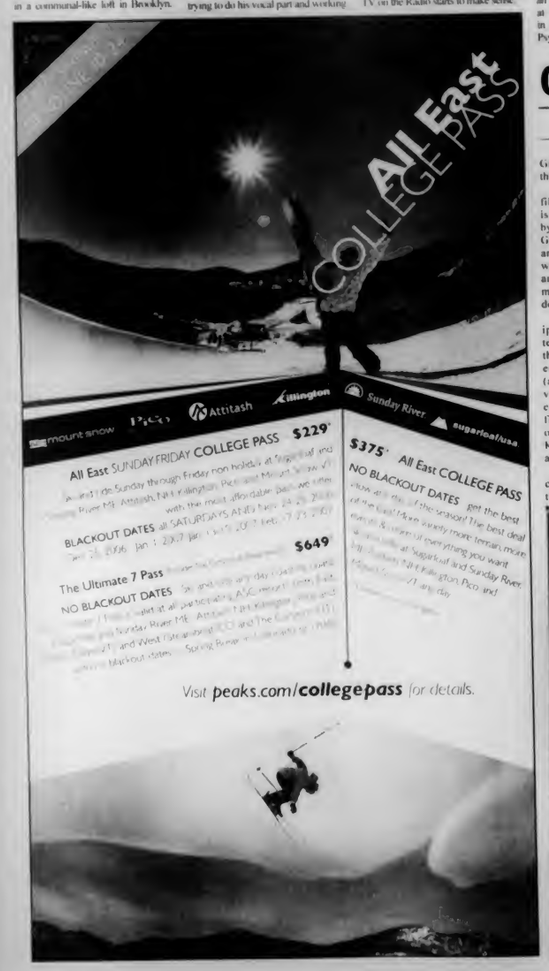
"Stay sharp. Stay focused. Play hard. And honor God," Grant tells his young warriors before they run out onto the field.

In short order Grant has a new set of wheels, Brooke is with child and the team gets a shot at the state championship.

No luck: apparently, with the premature balding

Kendrick, who has one earlier film credit, the made-for-TV Christian-themed "Flywheel", has an affable, sincere screen presence utterly untainted by Hollywood glamour. The supporting players range from adequate to good, and the football action shot without benefit of stunt men or special effects is so hard-hitting that you may worry for the kids out there on the field.

It will be interesting to see if "Facing the Giants" finds an audience beyond church going Christians who make up its target audience. But whatever your religious leanings, the film inspires by example. Grass-roots moviemaking can be a viable alternative to the usual Hollywood claptrap.



All East
COLLEGE PASS
mount snow
Attitash
Killington
Sunday River
sugarloaf/usa
All East SUNDAY-FRIDAY COLLEGE PASS $229*
BLACKOUT DATES all SATURDAYS, Nov 25 - Dec 2, Dec 9 - Dec 16, Jan 1 - Jan 7, Jan 13 - Jan 21, Jan 27 - Feb 4, Feb 10 - Feb 18, Feb 24 - Mar 4, Mar 10 - Mar 18
$649
The Ultimate 7 Pass
NO BLACKOUT DATES
$375* All East COLLEGE PASS
NO BLACKOUT DATES
Visit peaks.com/collegepass for details.

UMass returns to action after bye week they break off long plays that can be devastating to a defense.

FOOTBALL from page 12

Last week against the Pride, Cuoco completed passes of 46 yards, 41 yards, and 30 yards. Two weeks ago wide receiver Joe Nicholas caught a 54-yard pass in William & Mary's win over the Virginia Military Institute.

"They've had multiple [big] plays per game, and they make a point to take a number of deep shots each game," Brown said. "They're not random. They're very calculated and they look at what you're doing and they're going to go ahead and take a couple shots down the field. You really need to stand up to those."

Another factor weighing on the A's take 2-0 series lead over Minnesota possibly the final time of his 12-year career. Dan Haren, in his first postseason start, will pitch for Oakland.

ALDS from page 12

Bonser, a rookie, struck out three in six innings, giving up two runs and seven hits. Sidearmer Pat Neshek, who took the loss, started the seventh before yielding to Reyes.

The A's — who got an RBI double from Marco Scutaro for the second day in a row — tacked one more on in the ninth when Nick Swisher doubled against Juan Rincon and scored on Joe Nathan's wild pitch.

Huston Street worked the ninth for his second save in as many days after blowing 11 chances during the regular season. He gave up a single to Jason Bartlett and a walk to Luis Castillo, but retired Nick Punto on a popup on a 3-2 pitch with AL batting champion Joe Mauer on deck.

Minnesota won championships in 1987 and 1991 without winning a single road game in either of those World Series, and the Metrodome — with the deteriorating, dust-colored ceiling and the din of a sellout crowd — is a difficult place for opponents.

But the advantage for the Twins seems outdated now. They've lost seven straight at home in the postseason, with their last win coming in Game 1 of the 2002 AL championship series against the Angels.

Bonser, who arrived from the Giants with Nathan and All-Star Francisco Liriano in the lopsided trade for catcher A.J. Pierzynski, settled in as a reliable member of the rotation when his third stint in the majors began in mid-August. The Twins were impressed by his aggressiveness, and his anger when prospect Matt Garza was promoted ahead of him following the first revelation of Liriano's injury.

Bonser attacked the strike zone like he was supposed to, being careful with Frank Thomas on a second-inning walk for his only four-ball count of the afternoon. A ground-rule double by Thomas, 4-for-7 in the series, didn't lead to anything in the fourth, and it wasn't until the fifth that Bonser had trouble.

Swisher started with a double, and Scutaro drove him in with a two-base hit to the exact same spot — in the right-field corner. Kendall's one-out RBI single gave the A's a 2-0 lead, just like the one Barry Zito had by the second inning in Game 1 to beat Johan Santana.

Loaiza, who had an up-and-down year marked by a trip to the disabled list in May, a drunken-driving arrest in June and an outstanding August, scattered six singles over the first five innings and had flawless infield defense behind him from Swisher at first base, Scutaro at shortstop and Chavez at third. He was looking strong until he left a 3-2 pitch over the plate for Cuddyer to crush into the seats.

Morneau came next, sending a 1-2 delivery soaring into the upper deck. Suddenly, the game was tied and Loaiza was leaving the mound, replaced by Kiko Calero — who got three outs and the win.

Notes: A's second baseman Mark Ellis fouled a ball off his right index finger in the ninth and left the game in the bottom of the inning. He was taken for X-rays, and Macha said he was concerned ... Including the 2003 division series against the Red Sox, Chavez is in a 1-for-30 slump in the playoffs ... Cuddyer's postseason hitting streak is at seven games, dating back to the 2003 division series against the Yankees. In 12 career first-round games, he's batting .400 (16-for-40) with five RBIs ... Ray Durham hit Oakland's last playoff inside-the-park homer, against Minnesota's Rick Reed exactly four years ago in Game 3 of the division series here ... The A's won their first two games in New York in 2001, then lost three in a row.

WHY GO HOME THIS WEEKEND WHEN YOU COULD GO TO A UMASS SPORTING EVENT INSTEAD? CHECK THE UMASS WEB SITE FOR UPCOMING GAMES AND EVENTS!

Minutemen mean business

BYE WEEK from page 12

and sometimes it doesn't.

A retired basketball player who suited up for the Celtics in their glory days used to get cozy with Bud and Miller once the games ended. A legend spawned out of his drinking habits:

When the Chicago Bulls came to town during the regular season, several good-looking women latched onto the Celtics player at a bar the night before a big game. They ushered him into inebriation and he was in terrible shape for the game the next day. However, he scored over 30 points in the Celtics win on limited sleep and beer in his bloodstream.

When he walked off of the court victorious, he saw the girls that he had partied with the night before: they were Chicago cheerleaders, and had hoped that the long night of partying would slow him down. He walked by them and shouted, "Thanks for the great night, ladies."

That man was Larry Bird — the star who never shied away from a good time yet managed to win three championships and three regular season MVP awards.

But only some are so fortunate. For Brown and the Minutemen, suspensions and violations are a reality resting right around the corner, and bad things can happen to even the best of kids.

So if you were the quarterback of a 3-1 team that's capable of doing damage in the postseason, would you be worried?

"Not this year," Coen stated. "We just have such a different team than we did last year. If you had asked me that question last year then I really wouldn't have known what to say. Coach [Brown] made it pretty clear that there was no nonsense going on [this season]."

Coen seems convinced of his team's abstinence and dedication, and points to the last 10 days of practice as proof.

"I think [a bye week] has the potential [to throw the team off]," Coen said. "But I'll tell you what, we practiced really fast last week. We practiced really well last week. We didn't skip a beat."

The Minutemen handled a weaker Stony Brook on Sept. 23 and had all of their starters out of the game by half-time. Coen threw just eight passes and completed six of them before retiring to the sidelines.

With a 41-point blowout and limited playing for the starters in the game before the break, this bye week was a significant opportunity to get sloppy. But both Brown and Coen believe that, if anything, things have gotten tighter.

"It was a good week and I thought we used it properly," Brown said. "We worked hard in the pass game, kicking game. We didn't pound the guys out. We tried to get the guys healthy who needed to get healthy and at the same time get our work done so we're ready to go. And obviously we'll use Thursday as a William and Mary day."

Brown's guys are banged up. Even the players who appear healthy are worn down after weeks of bone-crushing hits and face plants.

So there's a delicate balance to

Sophomore quarterback Liam Coen and the UMass offense are eager to get back on the field after the team's bye week last Saturday.

bye-week coaching. Brown wants to rest his players so they can get their legs back, but at the same time push towards the next game without slipping.

"[The week off] altered last week because you're trying to get your guys adequate rest but continue to move forward," he said. "But this week is back to business."

It's always about business with this team.

Players Association will not appeal

By Teresa M. Walker
Associated Press

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—The NFL Players Association will not appeal Albert Haynesworth's five-game suspension for stomping on the head of Dallas center Andre Gurode.

The Tennessee Titans defensive tackle was suspended Monday for kicking Gurode in the head twice in Sunday's 45-14 victory by the Cowboys. The unprecedented suspension is more than twice the previous longest, a two-game suspension for Green Bay's Charles Martin in 1986.

Haynesworth announced through his agent on Tuesday that he would not appeal the suspension. NFL Players Association executive director Gene Upshaw discussed the suspension with Haynesworth and others, including NFL commissioner Roger Goodell.

"We represent both players here, and it is best for all concerned that we let the suspension stand," Upshaw said Wednesday. "While Roger has expressed a willingness to meet with Haynesworth and I expect that meeting to take place, there will be no formal hearing where the suspension will be challenged."

That leaves the next move to Gurode, who still has the option of filing criminal charges or a civil lawsuit. His agent Kennard McGuire said Monday that Gurode would talk with his family before deciding what to do. But Gurode was not in the Cowboys' locker room when reporters were allowed in, and McGuire did not return a message left by The Associated Press on Wednesday.

Gurode did not practice Wednesday. Dallas coach Bill Parcells said he expects his center can practice Thursday. The coach did not think Gurode was having vision problems and could wear a helmet despite the cuts on his forehead.

"I think he can, yeah. I think he'll go tomorrow," Parcells said.

Haynesworth also hasn't spoken publicly since he told reporters after Sunday's game that he was disgusted by his act of kicking Gurode's face with his cleated shoe, leaving seven cuts needing 30 stitches.

But the defensive tackle has scheduled a news conference for Thursday at a Nashville hotel.

AP Sports Writer Jaime Aron in Dallas contributed to this report.

Hobbs uncertain about status for week 5

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBOROUGH, Mass.—Ellis Hobbs has a broken wrist and a desire for a rematch with the team he faced in his impressive NFL starting debut last season.

The injury could keep the Patriots cornerback from fulfilling that wish.

Hobbs said Wednesday he had surgery on his left wrist last week. New England didn't seem to miss him in last Sunday's 38-13 win at Cincinnati and plays at home Sunday against Miami.

"It's just day to day," Hobbs said of his injury, "getting better."

In keeping with his practice, coach Bill Belichick gave no details of Hobbs' injury. He didn't even say whether Hobbs had surgery.

"Whether they put ice on it or put two ice packs on it instead of one or three instead of two or massage it, that's the medical treatment," Belichick said. "I don't have anything to do with that."

Hobbs actually had a screw put in his wrist but wouldn't concede that he won't play against the Dolphins. He missed at least part of Wednesday's practice and was listed as questionable on the injury report, meaning there's a 50-50 chance he'll play.

Linebacker Tedy Bruschi returned to a game five weeks and four days after having surgery on his broken wrist on Aug. 9.

"Everybody's different, recovery-wise," Hobbs said. "I am my own person and, positive thinking for me, I take a lot of pride in that. And I do believe how positive you do think about the situation, the faster you heal."

Hobbs is fortunate the Patriots have a bye week after Sunday's game that gives him extra time to get better.

"It's only a blessing if I take advantage of it," Hobbs said. "Obviously, I'm not thinking like that. I'm thinking day to day and whatever happens we go on from there."

He cracked a bone in the first quarter of a 17-7 loss to Denver when he was going across the middle in coverage and hit his wrist on a teammate's shoulder pad. He played the rest of the game, trying not to think of the pain.

Hank Poteat started in his place last Sunday and Chad Scott also filled in. Scott finished with six tackles, tied for second most on the team. But with Hobbs and safety Eugene Wilson having been sidelined for the game against Cincinnati, the Patriots on Wednesday signed free agent cornerback Chidi Iwuoma, who spent the last four seasons with Pittsburgh, primarily as a special teams player.

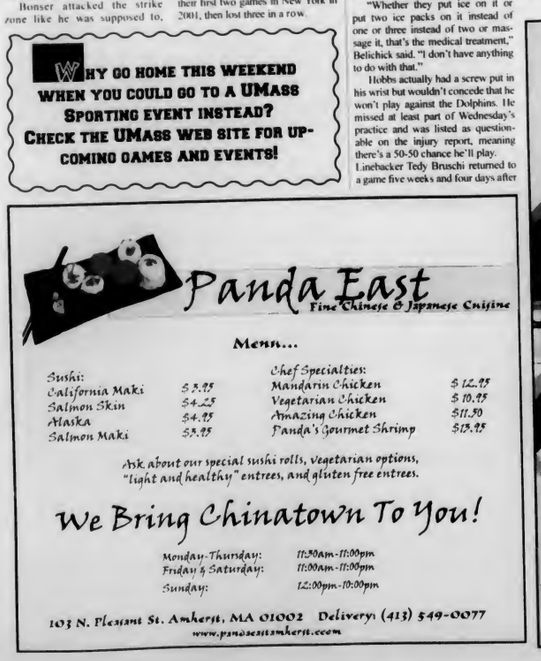
Hobbs, a third-round draft pick last year out of Iowa State, got his first NFL start in the ninth game last season and started the final eight regular season games plus the Patriots two playoff games. In his first start, he had eight tackles, two fumble recoveries and an interception in a 23-16 win at Miami.

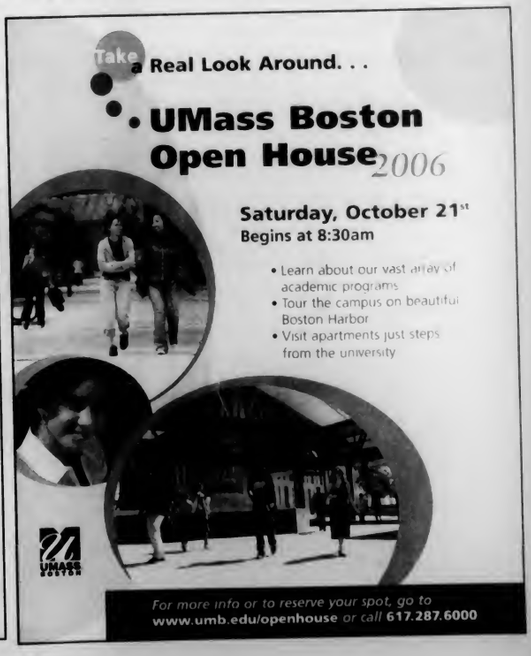
"We liked him a lot in the draft," Dolphins coach Nick Saban said Wednesday. "He's very aggressive. He's physical. He's a great competitor."

Hobbs is eager for a rematch with the Dolphins and wide receivers Chris Chambers, Marty Booker and Wes Welker.

"It's a good group. They have a lot of receivers that are (deep) threats," Hobbs said. "They have a quarterback that can get it to them now that's mobile."

Daunte Culpepper has completed more than 10 passes to each of them but also has been sacked 21 times in four games. The possible absence of Hobbs and his coverage skills could put more of a burden on defensive linemen to pressure Culpepper.





Take a Real Look Around. . .
UMass Boston
Open House 2006
Saturday, October 21st
Begins at 8:30am
• Learn about our vast array of academic programs
• Tour the campus on beautiful Boston Harbor
• Visit apartments just steps from the university
UMASS BOSTON
For more info or to reserve your spot, go to www.umb.edu/openhouse or call 617.287.6000

Hernandez will miss playoffs

By Mike Fitzpatrick
Associated Press

NEW YORK—Now, the New York Mets are missing two top starters.

Orlando Hernandez is expected to sit out the entire postseason with a calf injury, just days after the Mets announced three-time Cy Young Award winner Pedro Martinez is out until next summer because of calf and shoulder injuries.

The NL East champions left Hernandez off the first-round playoff roster because of a torn muscle in his right calf. Then, they turned to rookie John Maine to start Game 1 of the playoffs Wednesday against the Los Angeles Dodgers — the Mets' first playoff game since 2000.

The right-hander was 6-5 with a 3.60 ERA in 16 games this season, including 15 starts.

He lacks the October experience the Mets were counting on with Hernandez, acquired from Arizona in May. El Duque owns four World Series rings, and his teams are 12-3 in postseason series.

Hernandez got hurt while he was jogging in the outfield Tuesday as the Mets tuned up for the best-of-five series. The 40-year-old right-hander was pulled off the field and went for an MRI exam that revealed a tear in his calf.

"That takes time," general manager Omar Minaya said. "All year long we've had guys who picked each other up. I'm confident somebody will pick up El Duque."

Hernandez has been one of the best postseason pitchers in baseball history, going 9-3 with a 2.55 ERA in 19 games, including 14 starts, mostly with the Yankees.

"It's not great news, that's for sure," Mets manager Willie Randolph said Tuesday. "He was very upset."

New York's options for a replacement were limited.

Tom Glavine, slated to start Game 2, pitched Saturday in Washington. So if the Mets had wanted to bump him up, the 40-year-old lefty would have been working on three days' rest. They decided against that.

Steve Trachsel, 15-8 with a 4.97 ERA this year, skipped his scheduled outing last weekend to attend to a family matter on the West Coast. He returned to New York late Tuesday afternoon, but Randolph said the right-hander probably wasn't an option to pitch Wednesday on such short notice.

Randolph didn't even think Trachsel had been throwing while he was away from the team.

That left Maine as the most sensible choice.

Hernandez was replaced on the first-round roster by erratic lefty Oliver Perez, acquired at the trade deadline with reliever Roberto Hernandez in the deal that sent right fielder Xavier Nady to Pittsburgh.

Left-handed reliever Royce Ring also made the team, and the Mets kept 12 pitchers for the first round.

New York Mets starting pitcher Orlando Hernandez is expected to miss the entire postseason with a calf injury. John Maine replaced him in Game 1.

As for the Dodgers, their rotation was all set for the first three games. Derek Lowe will go in the opener, followed by rookie left-hander Hong-Chih Kuo and future Hall of Famer Greg Maddux, who has 333 career wins.

Lowe pitched his best ball of the season down the stretch, going 8-1 with a 2.39 ERA in his final 11 starts to help Los Angeles win the NL wild card. Relying on his nasty sinker, he finished the year 16-8 with a 3.63 ERA.

The right-hander has had plenty of success in October, too. A closer in Boston before he became a regular starter, he has a 3.05 ERA in 17 postseason games, including six starts.

Lowe also won the clinching game for the Red Sox in all three of their postseason series in 2004, helping them to the first World Series title in 86 years.

Showalter fired, Rangers move on

SHOWALTER from page 12

Showalter's ouster came the day after owner Tom Hicks had dinner at his home with Daniels, his 29-year-old general manager, and Showalter for what Hicks said would be a "candid conversation" about what went wrong this season.

"I have the utmost respect for Buck Showalter," Hicks said Wednesday. "He is extraordinarily committed to the game of baseball, and he has been an excellent representative of the Texas Rangers."

Hicks said before the meeting he wasn't leaning either way on Showalter's future, and would rely on a recommendation from Daniels, the youngest GM ever in the majors when he was hired a year ago.

Daniels accompanied the team on its final road trip last week, partly to talk to players and determine if clubhouse discontentment with Showalter was widespread.

The 50-year-old Showalter, whose contract was extended after the 2005 season, is still owed $5 million to $6 million by the Rangers. His overall record is 882-833, including four seasons with the New York Yankees (1992-95) and three in Arizona (1998-00).

The Yankees and Diamondbacks won the World Series the season after Showalter's tenure ended. The Arizona championship in 2001 ended the Yankees' run of three titles in four years.

"They're on an upswing," Showalter said of the Rangers.

Texas this season spent more than two months atop the AL West despite never being more than six games above .500, then were out of first place for good a week after the All-Star break. The Rangers had a losing record at home (39-42) for the first time since 1997.

Showalter's replacement will inherit a roster that includes three-time All-Star shortstop Michael Young, switch-hitting slugger and Gold Glove first baseman Mark Teixeira, two-time All-Star third baseman Hank Blalock, closer Akinori Otsuka and Kevin Millwood, the No. 1 starting pitcher with four years left on his contract.

"I had choices to make and chose Arlington. I would do the same thing over again," Showalter said. "These are good people. I had a heck of a seat the last four years, watching Mike Young and these guys play every day."

The Rangers also have nine potential free agents, including Carlos Lee, the two-time All-Star outfielder acquired from Milwaukee before the trade deadline in late July.

Other likely free agents include Gary Matthews Jr., the All-Star center fielder and leadoff hitter who had a breakout season, six-position starter Mark DeRosa, catcher Rod Barajas, and starting pitchers Vicente Padilla and Adam Eaton.

It's unlikely the Rangers will keep all their potential free agents, unless Hicks is willing to significantly increase this season's $68 million payroll.

Lee was traded only after he turned down a four-year extension worth at least $48 million from the Brewers, and Matthews could at least triple his $2.3 million salary. DeRosa is a free agent for the first time, and Padilla is a 15-game winner available in what is expected to be a sparse market for quality starters.

Buck Showalter (right) had a 319-329 record with the Rangers. They never finished above third place in his four-year tenure with the team.

Leinart ready to make first NFL start

By Bob Baum
Associated Press

TEMPE, Ariz.—The starting call has come earlier than expected for Matt Leinart, who went through his first practice as an NFL first-string quarterback on Wednesday.

Leinart capped the session with a little extra work on the field with Edgerrin James, then pronounced himself confident for his first start for Arizona on Sunday against the Kansas City Chiefs, although he acknowledged, "They're probably licking their chops with a rookie quarterback coming in."

With costly mistakes plaguing Kurt Warner and the sputtering offense, coach Dennis Green decided to switch to Leinart, who was supposed to spend the entire season learning as a backup.

"This was not our intention. It's not what we wanted," Green said, "but we're 1-3 and just so many turnovers have brought it on."

Leinart has impressed coaches and teammates since he came to the Cardinals after a surprising drop to the No. 10 pick in the draft.

"I think you've got to understand who Matt Leinart is," Green said. "As far as college football is concerned, I don't know if there's a quarterback in the history of the game who has had as much success on that level."

USC was 37-2 with Leinart at quarterback, earning two national championships and winning a Heisman Trophy for him in 2004. But that was not the NFL, and it wasn't the downtrodden Cardinals, who are off to a 1-3 start for the fourth year in a row and have one winning season since 1984.

"What I want to try to do is not cram everything in and try to do too much," he said. "I'm comfortable with what I'm doing. Really, football is obviously studying your opponent and knowing what you're going to do, but really just playing, just going out there thinking and playing football."

He will operate behind a suspect offensive line that drew a public berating by Green this week. On his weekly radio show, the coach said it was time for the line to "stop whining" and work harder.

As any new quarterback would be expected to do, Leinart defended the line.

"I think they're going to be fine," Leinart said. "I think we just need leadership out there and hopefully I can come in there and just kind of bring a spark. Those guys have talent. We've struggled as an offense, and that's on everybody. That's not just on those guys. I know that they're going to be fine. I have faith in them, and I think they have faith in me.

"And I think we're going to see that this Sunday."

Warner, who has lost starting jobs before to Marc Bulger in St. Louis and Eli Manning with the New York Giants, pledged his support and promised to help Leinart, but said the transition to the pro game is bound to take a while.

"To have a full grasp is going to take a long period of time, and I'm sure Matt's not even close to that yet," Warner said. "How quickly he'll be there? I don't think it will be at least until sometime next year where he feels completely comfortable with everything, relaxed and just can play football."

Leinart, though, said his goal is to do just that right away, and to enjoy it while he's at it.

"I'm not sure what it's like in the huddle when Kurt was in there, but I know the type of guy I am," he said, "going in there talking, keeping the guys motivated, just playing, just having fun. That's what it's all about."

His goal, like the quarterback he replaces, is to get the ball to the team's playmakers: James, Larry Fitzgerald and Anquan Boldin.

"I think Matt's way ahead of where most guys are when they come in," center Alex Stepanovich said. "I wouldn't say he's arrogant, but he's got a good confidence about him. He knows what he can do and what he can't do, so I think he'll be fine."

AMHERST HAIRSTYLISTS
Caren's Place
Mon-Fri 10-6
Sat 10-4
253-1200
40 Main St
Downtown Amherst

New in Town?
Come in and get the attention you want!

- Students Always $22 shampoo & cut
- Hair Services for both men & women
- We specialize in Multi-Color Highlights using three to four complementing and blending colors
- Free Haircolor consultation
- Facial and Body waxing available
- Walk-ins Welcome

$2 off Haircut or 1/2 price facial waxing
With this COUPON ONLY

WWW.CARENSPLACE.COM

Attention First-Year Students:
Have you completed MyStudentBody?
It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, October 16th. For instructions, go to the University Health Services website,
www.umass.edu/uhs
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

Interested in writing for the collegian?
Contact us via e-mail at Sports@dailycollegian.com OR visit us in the Campus Center basement!

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

"Results you can feel
... without the side effects."
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Participating provider for HMO's student insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, car insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
Most insurance accepted.
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

comedy CONNECTION HUKELAU
413-593-5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
OCT. 13TH
Host of Comedy Central's "Insomniac"
DAVE ATTELL
OCT. 21ST
From NBC's "Studio 60 on the Sunset Strip" and host of Comedy Central's "Weekends at the DL"
D.L. HUGHLEY

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
MICHAEL IAN BLACK, MICHAEL SHOWALTER
MTV's The State and Comedy Central's Stella
FRI. OCT. 6 • 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
yonder mountain string band
SAT. OCT. 7 • 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub
18 PEARL STREET • NORTHAMPTON, MA
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL: WWW.IHEG.COM
413-586-8686

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

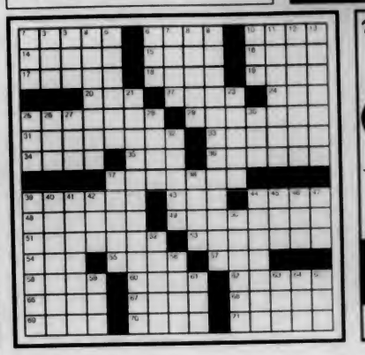
		8			9	5		3
	6							1
3			5					6
			9		4		1
	8	5				3	9
	1		2		5
8					6			2
1							7
7		3	1			6

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Golfer's "snowman"
6 Joke's target
10 Woeful lament
14 Lost
15 Diva's moment
16 Campbell of "Scream"
17 Dominion
18 Actress Conn
19 Those people
20 Fairy queen
23 Tree fluids
24 Medical pic
25 Mythic founder of Rome
29 Spotted hunter
31 Sheets
33 Person with pressing duties
34 Jumble
35 Krazy
36 All the rage
37 Take off
39 Gordon of "Oklahoma!"
43 French king
44 Catch sight of
48 Merman and Waters
49 Waste removal system
51 Last
53 Actor Terry
54 McKuen's title "the Lonely"
57 Negatives
58 Pension $$
60 Head-to-head fight for honor
62 River of Hades
66 Beatty and Burstine
67 Sicilian peak
68 Accelerating vehicle sound
69 Fruit drinks
70 Chipper
71 Aztec's 1956 state-mate

DOWN
1 Jug handle
2 President's suffix
3 Org. founded by Juliette Low
4 Kohl and Schmidt
5 Hawaiian hot meal
6 Exit
7 "Battle Cry" author
8 Of ocean motion
9 Location of the 101 Towers
10 Wee crawler
11 Soprano Lotte Lenya
12 Declared
13 Somewhat and Cavers
21 Grievous
23 Rhenium
25 Record speed?
26 Mineral matter
27 Connolly and Udall
28 Stick around
30 "Ulalume" author
32 Has the lead
37 Three-time Masters winner
38 Melonlunes
39 Italian strait
40 Dressed
41 Blatant deception
42 Stamp's buddy
44 Pencil ends
45 Actor Mineo
46 Org. of Toms and Couples
47 Affirmative
50 Change with the 52 Disney dog
55 Yearnings
56 Sound of a leak
61 Deposit
63 Kiddy
64 Garden tool
65 Type widths

THANK YOU FOR READING THE DAILY COLLEGIAN



Your Room Smells Like ASS!
Fast odor eliminator... Just plug it in! only $29
A Division of The Vac Shop
Rt. 9 Hadley, MA
(413) 585-0822
Ask About Student Specials
1-87-ROOM-AIR-9

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Always carry a small flagon of whiskey in case of snakebite and furthermore always carry a small snake."
—W. C. Fields

YOUNG NEBRASKA By Mitchell Kendall

Grandpa! Will you read me a bedtime story?
OR
Once upon a...
You're not seriously going to start like that are you?
I mean with all the lack of imagination in children today through t.v. and the media, I'd think older people like you would at least try to...
Grandpa?
Aww... Poor little guy never stood a chance.

WOMBAT By Neil Bryer

NEIL IS THAT?
YUP I BUILT A TIME MACHINE AND NOW I'M GOING INTO THE FUTURE TO GET MY FLYING CAR
NOW I JUST HAVE TO GET THE 121 GIGAWATTS
PLEASE TELL ME YOU DON'T HAVE ANY PLUTONIUM IN HERE
NOPE I'M JUST GOING TO HAVE TO DRIVE AROUND UNTIL I GET STRUCK BY LIGHTNING
THIS WILL NOT END WELL.

JUST SAY "NO" By Anna A. Lee

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Krzykowski

FATHER, PREPARE TO LEAVE. THE BOY WILL BE HERE IN A MOMENT.
I'VE SEEN TO IT PERSONALLY.
THE BROTHER'S NEXT STOP WILL BE HIS INCREDIBLE DEATH.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Good luck in surgery...

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Whenever you see low flying geese... Duck.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Give peace a chance; like 10 to 1 odds.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
What the hell do you know about art!

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Stop noise pollution; take a vow of silence.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Never forget how beautiful you are—and will be—just as long as you buy Gap.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You used to be great, but these days you're just less great.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't trust a hope, it has forsaken these lands.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Catch a falling leaf and the pain will be brief.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
We know control your fate—Don't mess with us! Unless we ask you to.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
As the Greeks would say: "Gnothi se auton."

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Be a real American. Get bored, eat bonbons, and watch Springer... Fatty.

Chicago Pizzaria Yes, We Deliver!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 3pm 2am
Thurs Sat 3pm 3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Minor in Leadership and get paid for it! Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly. Be an Army Officer full time/part time after college www.umass.edu/army-rotc

AUTO FOR SALE

92 Toyota Camry Station Wagon $850 549-9639

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837. Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day. Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Female PCA Wanted Nights, Evening, weekends. $10.48/hour. Must have transport. Call Martina at (413) 210-6301

EMPLOYMENT

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

McDonald's Crew Members Needed. Full & part-time openings at Michell Bradley/ McDonalds. Competitive wages & salaries plus benefits. Start at $9.62 /hr. Apply at Michell Bradley/McDonalds office at Bradley Int'l Airport, Terminal A, 2-5pm, M-W, or send resume to EHmichell@aol.com Call 203-223-0153 with questions.

EMPLOYMENT

PT Sales Assoc. positions available in the bakery, deli and produce departments. Evening, weekend, and holiday availability required. Call or email Kelly at 253-9528 kelly@atkinsfarms.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

EMPLOYMENT

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Publish or perish! Need to be writing but aren't? I can help with motivation, discipline, and support. Dr Ange DiBenedetto 549-4145

Do you need help filling out your Immigration forms? Do you want advice on arranging documents for filing with the INS? Contact the Student Legal Services office at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

Travel with STS to this year's top 10 Spring Break destinations! Best deals guaranteed! Highest rep commissions, Visit www.ststravel.com or call 1-800-648-4849 Great group discounts

Submit your classified by stopping by our campus center Basement office.

Or call 545-3500 to speak to an experienced classified advertising representative.

Or submit online at www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass hosts William & Mary

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

They're rested, they're prepared, and there's no doubt they're ready to play. It's been nearly two weeks since the Massachusetts football team has played against someone wearing colors other than maroon and white.

Coming off their bye week, the Minutemen (3-1, 1-0 Atlantic 10) host William & Mary this Saturday at McGuirk Alumni Stadium. Game time is set for 1 p.m.

"I don't think there is any question we have that itch to play," UMass coach Don Brown said. "I looked around [at practice Wednesday], and even coaches, we want to play too."

The last time UMass was out on the turf, it dismantled a lowly Stony Brook team, 48-7, in a game where many of its starters played just the first half.

Senior running back Steve Baylark and sophomore Liam Coen both contributed to the beating the Minutemen gave the Seawolves. Baylark carried the ball 12 times en route to gaining 96 yards and three scores.

Coen completed 6-of-8 passes for 177 yards including an 89-yard touchdown pitch-and-catch to Rasheed Rancher. It stands as the second-longest pass play in school history.

Brown said his team has a lot of confidence coming off the bye, but there's always the question every coach thinks about after a week off.

"How are your guys going to respond to it?" Brown asked. "I think that's a thought that goes through every coach's thought process as he looks at coming off the bye week. We can't control the schedule so you take the bye and move on as best you can."

The Minutemen will be moving on to face a deceptive William & Mary team. Though their record stands at 1-3 (0-1 A-10), the Tribe has been in many close games this season with notable opponents.

In their season-opener, they hung in with Maryland before falling to the Terps, 24-17. The game that concerns Brown the most is William & Mary's tight contest with Hofstra last week — the team that came between Brown's Minutemen and the playoffs less than a year ago.

A mid-fourth quarter field goal gave the Pride the advantage and they narrowly held on for the 16-14 victory. Towards the end of the game, the Tribe was threatening before it turned the ball over on downs at the Hofstra 36-yard line with 1:20 left on the game clock.

"I think they're a very dangerous football team," Brown said. "The concern is they're missing on a couple cylinders, but they're not far from being a great football team. We're very concerned. Defensively they're playing very well in all four of the games."

In particular Brown is concerned with the Tribe's passing attack. They have six wide receivers that see significant minutes each week. Each

See FOOTBALL on page 9

Senior running back Steve Baylark has rushed for 368 yards this season. He is trying to become the third player in Division I-AA history to have four 1,000-yard seasons.

Business as usual for UM during bye week

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

UMass isn't the best place to have leisure time.

Drugs, alcohol, and violence (the holy trinity of UMass weekends) have made Massachusetts into one of the most dangerous schools in the nation.

Athletes have more responsibility when planning their time off. There are team rules, University policies, and dogmatic coaches breathing down their necks — and weekend nights in Amherst aren't necessarily wholesome. It creates a touchy situation for athletes with a lot to lose.

The Massachusetts gridiron gang is coming off of its bye week. There was no game last weekend, and the team entered the game-less stretch after a 48-7 romp over Stony Brook, the Atlantic 10's resident high school team.

Last week, UMass experienced its first Friday night without a Saturday game to worry about.

Popular football players with the inside track to the campus keggers on a free Friday night — trouble, right?

No suspensions. No arrests. No trouble. And that's more than can be said for much of the student body.

"We talk about living right all of the time," UMass coach Don Brown said. "That's a part of our process on a day-to-day basis. You can ask the guys what 'living right' means and I'm sure that they'd expand."

Ok, Liam. How about it?

"Our guys don't want to go out and do that stuff this year," quarterback Liam Coen said. "It's all business. It's all about William and Mary this weekend and it's about this season.

"If you can't sacrifice seven weeks, seven Friday nights ... then we're not going to get it done."

It sounds like a team on a mission.

Athletes at all levels are broadsided by the party scene. Sometimes the trouble affects on-the-field performance,

See BYE WEEK on page 9

Richmond reigns supreme

By Michael Chandler
Collegian Staff

After defeating No. 11 American University, the Richmond Spiders once again entered the week ranked No. 19 in the NFHCA (National Field Hockey Coaches Association) Top 20. The Spiders took all of the Atlantic 10 player honors as well.

A-10 Field Hockey

Junior midfielder Shannon Taylor continues to glow, earning her second straight Player of the Week honor and third of the season after recording 17 points last week. She had a hat trick in a 6-0 win over Radford, and tied the Richmond record for single-game goals with four in a 9-0 win over Davidson.

Taylor leads the team and conference in scoring, tallying 19 points on the season. She is now tied for fourth on the Spiders' all-time points list with 89 and sits at fifth all-time at Richmond with 36 goals. Taylor is tied for third in the nation in goals per game (1.45) and is also tied for fourth in the nation in points per game (3.27).

Meanwhile, freshman forward Lindsey Conrad took the A-10 Rookie of the Week honors. Conrad recorded four goals in the three-game week, including her first multi-goal game in a loss to the No. 8 American University Cavaliers.

The Spiders, hoping to continue their glory as the reigning four-time conference champion, have established themselves as the team to beat in the A-10 after going 7-4 in non-conference play. A-10 play begins at Richmond this weekend when it hosts West Chester and La Salle at Crenshaw Field.

Quantifying Defensive Prowess

Defense is hard to rank statistically, but going slightly in-depth with offensive statistics can tell how good a team's defense really is.

An interesting trend takes place while looking at the number of saves per game for each team. The teams that are in last place in the conference rank the highest in saves per game, while the teams at the top of the conference rank last.

For example, West Chester ranks first with 101 saves on the season, and an average of 9.18 per game. This is more than 1 1/2 times more than the team second in saves, which is La Salle, coming in with 67.

This normally would seem like a positive feature of a team, but the seemingly obvious explanation for the team rankings must be that the defense of the last place teams allows more shots-on-goal per game, forcing the goalie to work harder.

Another way to quantify defense is the number of shots a team's offense can produce. If the offense is taking a lot of shots, then they are controlling the ball, and not allowing the opposing team to spend a lot of time in their territory.

It comes as no surprise that the teams saving the most shots are also taking the fewest shots, with La Salle and West Chester at the bottom of the list with 104 and 70 shots, respectively.

Combining these two storytelling statistics, one can quantify defensive prowess based on how high the number of shots per game is and how low the number of saves per game is.

Not surprisingly, the number of shots per game nearly resembles the actual rankings of the teams based on win/loss records, and the number of saves per game is the opposite. Richmond ranks first in shots and last in saves, it is also the only nationally ranked team in the A-10.

UMass ranks second in shots per game, but close to the top of saves per game. Applying the analysis, one can come to the conclusion that UMass, though sporadic, is a capable team offensively and defensively and could succeed in the upcoming conference play despite a current 3-8 record.

Conference Play

A-10 play begins tomorrow, kicking off with Temple (9-3) visiting UMass (3-8) at 3 p.m. UMass hopes to regroup after a tough 1-0 overtime loss against Syracuse, while a powerful Temple team shutout Longwood, 2-0, in its only action last week. UMass will later host Saint Joseph's (6-5) on Sunday and Vermont next week, while Temple will travel to Rhode Island.

St. Joseph's will complete a two-game road trip which includes a game against Rhode Island (4-4) after it plays UMass.

La Salle (3-8) will also travel to St. Louis (4-5) that week. Last week, La Salle lost to No. 16 Villanova. Saint Louis split a pair of games last week, shutting out Lindenwood, 3-0, but suffered a 6-1 loss to Kent State.

Following the game, La Salle will travel to No. 19 Richmond in an attempt to upset the first place Spiders. Richmond will also face West Chester (2-9), and is happy to play two under .500 schools after a recent string of well established teams. West Chester will also face St. Louis (4-5). The teams are ready for conference play and will fight for playoff spots come November.

Junior midfielder Kara Murphy and the Minutewomen are 3-8 this season. UMass begins Atlantic 10 play tomorrow at 3 p.m. against Temple.

Showalter fired after short stint with Texas

By Stephen Hawkins
Associated Press

ARLINGTON, Texas — Buck Showalter was fired as manager of the Texas Rangers on Wednesday, ending four seasons in which he was never able to get a team with several young All-Stars above third place in the AL West.

Texas was 80-82 this season, its sixth losing record in seven years since last making the playoffs in 1999. Showalter was 319-329 with the Rangers, his third managerial job, and still had three seasons left on his contract.

"You never heard me make an excuse all year, and I'm not going to start now. We just didn't get it done," Showalter told The Associated Press in a phone interview. "They want to go in a new direction with a new voice. With the shelf life of managers, I feel fortunate."

Showalter was the AL manager of the year only two years ago, when AL MVP Alex Rodriguez was traded in the spring and the Rangers went on to contend for a playoff spot until the final few games of the season.

"Buck has been a tremendous asset to this organization," general manager Jon Daniels said. "He worked hard both on and off the field with the best interests of the Rangers in mind. However, we thought it best at this time for a fresh perspective."

The Rangers were 89-73 in 2004, the fourth-best record in team history and an 18-win improvement over 2003. They finished only three games back in the AL West, but still in third place behind the division-winning Angels and Oakland.

But the Rangers couldn't build off the momentum of that unexpected playoff chase. They backtracked last year with 79 victories, and were only one game better than that this season.

Showalter is the fifth manager to lose his job since the end of the regular season, joining Joe Girardi (Florida), Dusty Baker (Chicago Cubs), Frank Robinson (Washington) and Felipe Alou (San Francisco).

Girardi, the potential NL manager of the year and a candidate to replace Baker in Chicago, could also be pursued by the Rangers. Current bench coach Don Wakamatsu and hitting coach Rudy Jaramillo could be candidates as well.

See SHOWALTER on page 10

Buck Showalter was fired by the Texas Rangers on Wednesday. He spent four seasons as manager of the Rangers, but failed to make the playoffs.

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

The prior two times Buck Showalter has been fired, the team he left went on to win the World Series the very next season. Both the New York Yankees (1996) and the Arizona Diamondbacks (2001) won the World Series the year after Showalter was fired.

Hunter miscue costs Twins in Game 2

By Dave Campbell
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Right after two of his Minnesota teammates hit back-to-back home runs, Torii Hunter tried to be the hero.

Instead, the Gold Glove center fielder made an ill-advised dive for a sinking line drive. Sprawled on the turf, he could only watch as Mark Kotsay circled the bases for an inside-the-park home run that lifted the Oakland Athletics over Minnesota 5-2 Wednesday for a 2-0 lead in their AL playoff series.

"It was the worst feeling in the world. You can't do anything about it," said Hunter, who blamed himself for this devastating defeat.

As starter Esteban Loaiza clipped in the sixth inning, surrendering consecutive solo homers to Michael Cuddyer and Justin Morneau that evened the game at 2.

But with Jason Kendall on first base, two outs in the seventh and reliever Dennys Reyes pitching, Kotsay hit what should have been a single. Hunter, bothered by a sore left foot this season, charged forward.

There's only one person in this league that can make that catch, and it's Torii," said Cuddyer, who watched from right field. "Although it's as close as you come, he's not Superman."

The five-time Gold Glover missed — by a lot — and the ball rolled to the wall. Kotsay raced all the way around to give Oakland a 4-2 lead.

"Once you commit, you're kind of in no-man's land, and it's best to go," said Kotsay, also a center fielder. "He went, and for his sake, unfortunately, the ball took off."

Said Twins manager Ron Gardenhire: "When he goes after a ball, I don't second-guess him. Ever."

The A's handled the Boof — Bonser, that is — and here's the truth: These perennial playoff underperformers have arrived at yet another elimination game. They're 0-9 in those since 2000, losing four straight first-round series.

"This team knows what to do," said Eric Chavez, a regular on all four of those clubs. "We're hard-nosed baseball players that like to play the game. I don't think anybody here, regardless if they've been in this position, is going to take Game 3 lightly."

The series shifts west Friday, with Twins right-hander Brad Radke taking his broken shoulder socket to the mound for

See ALDS on page 9

MINUTEMEN DOWN, BUT NOT OUT PAGE 10

'SCHOOL' NOT WORTH THE TUITION PAGE 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 61 LO: 35 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, OCTOBER 6, 2006

Demolition Derby

Frat Row will be demolished in the upcoming days

TUAN TRINH/COLLEGIAN

By Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

The demolition of the five houses on North Pleasant Street, known to many as Frat Row, will begin as early as today and will take about two weeks to complete, according to an Alpha Tau Gamma, Inc. official.

ATG is a development company that currently owns the five parcels, and is on the verge of completing a sale that will give Frat Row to the University of Massachusetts in exchange for $2.5 million.

Once the Town of Amherst gives ATG the green light, "the heavy equipment comes in and it will start crunching the houses," said Jim Mulcahy, ATG's treasurer.

He said the demolition process will take about two weeks, because the houses will be knocked down one at a time, rather than all at once. He said the house that currently stands at 401 North Pleasant St. will be the first to get leveled. The four other former Greek houses are located at 375, 387, 389 and 395 North Pleasant St.

While an exact start time of the first demolition has not been cemented, Mulcahy said it will take place anytime between today and Monday. A fence was put up around the five houses last Monday, and ATG has since been working on shutting off the utilities.

"All of the overhead utilities are gone, the electricity, the cable TV, the telephone, and they're working with the town now to shut off the water for each of the buildings, and cap the sewer line," said Mulcahy.

The destruction is included in an agreement between UMass and ATG. After all five houses are demolished, and the land is seeded, UMass will purchase the five houses, said Peter Norstrand, Deputy Commissioner.

See DEMOLITION on page 3

Birth control patch may cause blood clots

By Mackenzie Issler
Collegian Staff

The updated label on the birth control patch, Ortho Evra, has caused concern with women across the country, warning users that the patch exposes women to higher levels of estrogen than most birth control pills.

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) updated the label after one study showed women on the patch had twice the risk of blood clots, than women on the pill. However, a second study found no difference in risk between the pill and the patch, according to the New York Times.

Dr. Constance Lentz, a doctor for University Health Services at the University of Massachusetts, has extensive knowledge about birth control and according to Lentz, although one study suggested a link, it has yet to be confirmed (or replicated) by further studies that the Ortho Evra patch is any more dangerous than birth control pills. She stressed blood levels of estrogen are at a higher, steady level with the patch than the pill and the Nuva-Ring.

Since the patch went on sale in 2002, more than four million women have used it, according to an article published by the Associated Press.

The numerous adverse risks of taking forms of birth control have been well documented. According to a publication in the "Prescriber's Letter" in 2002, the

See BIRTH CONTROL on page 3

Amanda Bianchi, 20, shown Aug. 26, 2005, in Colorado Springs, Colo., is part of a lawsuit filed against the makers of Ortho Evra, a birth control patch.

UMPD Chief issues Crime Alert warnings

University of Massachusetts Police Chief Barbara O'Connor sent out two crime alert e-mails to students yesterday, concerning a larceny and extensive property destruction on campus.

At 11:30 pm Wednesday night, UMPD received a report from a female student that claimed while walking in Lot No. 11, by McGuirk Stadium, a male grabbed her backpack while she walked back to her hall.

The suspect is described as white, approximately 6 feet tall, heavy eyebrows, short black hair and a slim build. The lone suspect was reported to be wearing a dark-colored police-security style uniform and possibly fled on foot. No weapon was shown and the victim was unharmed. A small amount of cash was taken.

The UMPD also urged the student to disclose any information concerning two serious incidents that occurred within the past few weeks, the attempted burning of a motor vehicle in parking Lot 22, west of the Southwest Residential Area and the separate incident of the breaking into of a gated area surrounding the cell tower in the north east area of campus.

In this offense, the offender left blood trails on the scene, apparently from lacerations to his/her hands.

Police patrols in and around the University parking lots are being increased to address this concern.

"Throughout the years, senseless acts of property destruction have accounted for hundreds of thousands of dollars in loss. These costs are frequently passed on to all of us through higher fees and prices for goods and services," wrote O'Connor. "If you know of anyone who sustained a laceration injury to the hand(s) on or about September 19, 2006, or if you have any information that may help in the ongoing investigations of other unsolved crimes, please contact the university police with the information."

Matt Belliveau

Student to give public apology wearing toga

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

A district court judge known for handing down unconventional sentences is forcing a University of Massachusetts student to publicly apologize to a female police officer while wearing a toga.

Eastern Hampshire District Court Judge Nancy Dusek-Gomez ordered James I. Connelly to stand for one hour outside the Amherst Police Department wearing a toga, on Tuesday.

Connelly, of 324 Northampton Rd., Amherst, was arrested Sept. 30 when police arrived at his house investigating a noise complaint during a toga party. He and three other 20-year-old males were charged with being minors in possession of alcohol, as well as having an unlicensed keg and creating excessive noise in violation of a town bylaw.

The Daily Collegian was unable to reach Connelly by phone Wednesday afternoon.

Various news outlets had reported Connelly actually suggested his toga apology, but sources close to the defendant claim it was Dusek-Gomez's suggestion.

During the incident, Connelly reportedly directed an obscene comment toward a female police officer.

Dusek-Gomez ordered Connelly to take part in the West County diversion program, complete four hours of community service and pay $300 in fines.

He was also placed on pretrial probation for four months, which means that if he stays out of further legal trouble, the charges won't be reflected on his record.

Dusek-Gomez has struck a level of fame for issuing some unusual orders in the past.

In 2001, she ordered a 17-year-old caught with a marijuana pipe to write a detailed report on the song "Because I Got High," which tells the story of a college student whose marijuana habit causes him into a car accident and paralysis.

Some of her sentences have been criticized by members of the public and the legal community, and Dusek-Gomez may receive more for approving Connelly's toga-apology.

Sigma Delta Tau Remembers Molly

Malvika Mookerjee, commonly known as Molly to her friends, was a kind-hearted and selfless person. At an early age, Molly moved from India to Newton, MA. When she was 5 years old, she was diagnosed with Eisenmenger Syndrome which means, in simple terms, she had a hole in her heart. She came to the University of Massachusetts to major in Communication Disorders. Molly wanted to become an Audiologist. She always knew she wanted to help people and she made sure she exhibited this in her everyday life.

Molly's laughter was contagious and when we think of her now, we can only picture her smiling. When talking to sisters of Sigma Delta Tau,

Sasha Bohan: "Molly had this gift, this ability, to give me confidence and show me strength that I didn't even know I had. There was something about how pure and genuine she was that when she spoke to you, you knew everything was possible, that everything she was saying was the truth."

Molly cared a great deal about school and she really cherished her time here at UMass. Not only was she a sister of Sigma Delta Tau but was previously a member of the Panhellenic Council. She also took part in the National Student Speech Language Hearing Association (NSSLHA).

One of Mookerjee's best friends, Nicole Orsini: "Molly was the type of person that it was a privilege to know. Every single person who met her was touched by her hunger for life and her desire to strive. She cared so much about her school, her sorority, and people in general. It is truly a tragedy to know that she is no longer with us because she would've done so much more for this world than anybody else could possibly do in a lifetime."

"Molly had this quality that was so welcoming and personable. In classes we had together people would approach her if they were lost or needed help. Even when I was moving into this house, Molly was always there. She was what made me love this house. We became best friends in such a short amount of time and she knew things about me that people who have known me my whole life didn't know," said Monique Thomas.

"Nothing I can say or write seems to come even close to describing what Malvika meant to be," said Monique Thomas Philbin. "She had this way of brightening your day. She allowed you to be yourself and let you know it was okay to laugh. I will always cherish the memories I have of her, whether it's going to Dunkin' Donuts on a daily basis, or blasting the radio and singing along to Kelly Clarkson while we drove around in my car for hours, or remembering the funny voices she always used, or certain phrases she used constantly, like 'that's not okay.' She will be in my heart always."

On Oct. 11, 2006 at 8:00 p.m., the sisters of Sigma Delta Tau will be holding a memorial service at the Newman Center for their beloved sister, Molly Mookerjee.

Paige Skolnick, sister of Sigma Delta Tau

ABC unveils ID in Foley page probe

ABC News' fleeting, inadvertent publishing of a computer screen name enabled a blogger to track down and make public the supposed identity of a former congressional page who traded salacious messages with former Rep. Mark Foley (news, bio, voting record).

In breaking the story of the now-burgeoning scandal, the network last Friday posted on its Web site a series of instant message exchanges between Foley and the teenager. The name of the page was not included.

But in one exchange the network inadvertently left the victim's screen name on. It was quickly discovered and removed, replaced by a version with the name redacted.

However, ABC said Thursday that a blogger was able to retrieve the deleted file. The blogger, known as "Wild Bill" from the "Passionate America" site, went on a computer detective mission he describes in detail on his site to discover the name.

Associated Press

Rep. Mark Foley in Washington in 2005. Foley's comeons to teenage pages in Congress is just the latest in a long history of Washington sex scandals.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 24

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Eric Athas
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherri Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jamison Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Editorial Production Virginia Nielsen
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Copy Editor Sean Duram
Editorial Editor Kristen LaCasse
News Editor Matt Bellistrat
Sports Editor Rob Greenfield
Circulation Manager Jeff Perrin
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Theresa Barba
Assistant Business Phil Smoller
Asst. Art & Living Tim Mccall
Asst. Art & Living Alex Butler
Assistant News Anna Dolianitis
Assistant News Nicole Boomkamkakul
Assistant Sports Danny Picard
Assistant Sports Jon Pelland
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Tom Trash

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts Amherst academic year, except during vacation periods and finals. The Collegian is a nonprofit corporation owned by the students of the University of Massachusetts Amherst. Founded in 1890, the Collegian is the oldest college daily in Massachusetts and has been published continuously since 1994. For more information, see the Collegian's policy statement on page 3.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Marresa Hughes

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Ginny Nielsen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Tiffany Van Langen

Voters say scandal will affect votes

Satellite trucks and a security detail from the U.S. Capitol Police position themselves across the road from the home of House Speaker Dennis Hastert in Plano, Ill., yesterday.

By Jim Kuhnhenn
Associated Press

WASHINGTON—In yet another hurdle for Republicans, the scandals that have dogged Congress for the past year are prominent in the minds of many voters who say corruption will significantly influence their vote in November.

With midterm elections less than five weeks away, the latest Associated Press-Ipsos poll found that about half of likely voters say disclosures of corruption and scandal in Congress will be very or extremely important when they enter the voting booth.

About two out of three of those voters said they would cast their ballots for Democrats in House races, further complicating the political landscape for Republicans already struggling against negative public perceptions.

The poll was conducted this week as House Republican leaders came under increasing pressure to explain what they knew of sexually explicit messages from former Rep. Mark Foley (news, bio, voting record) of Florida to teenage pages. Last month, another Republican, Rep. Bob Ney (news, bio, voting record) of Ohio, admitted that he accepted trips, meals and other gifts in exchange for legislative favors.

In that mixing environment, the poll found that by a margin of nearly 2-to-1 likely voters say Democrats would better combat corruption than Republicans. More troubling to Republicans, likely voters in some key Republican groups were split on whether to trust Democrats or Republicans to clean up corruption.

Voter perceptions about corruption underscore a strong sense of dissatisfaction, if not outright anger, toward Congress. And they help explain the pessimism with which some Republicans in and outside Congress now view their chances on Election Day.

Among likely voters, 28 percent said they are angry at the Republican leadership in Congress and 35 percent said they were dissatisfied but not angry.

Rep. Mike Simpson (news, bio, voting record), R-Idaho, told the Associated Press that Republicans had been somewhat upbeat in early September, believing they would only lose a handful of House seats and still retain their majority. But after Foley's electronic exchanges with teenage boys became public on Friday, Simpson said he now is "not confident" they can keep control of the House.

"From Thursday it went (from) fairly confident we were going to keep the majority to a real tossup," he said.

The Foley scandal, with its proximity to the elections and its simple set of facts, has sent Republican leaders and GOP candidates on a political detour just as they were preparing their final offensive against Democrats to save control of Congress. Since Friday, the Foley affair has broadened amid questions about who in the GOP leadership had been warned about his behavior.

Like other Democrats, Joe Courtney, who is challenging Republican Rep. Rob Simmons of Connecticut, has called for the resignation of House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., over the Foley matter. But he said voters raised the subject without prompting during campaign stops last weekend.

"This Congress wasn't exactly held in high regard before this incident," he said. "It has a life of its own."

Lawrence Naccio, a 78-year-old Republican from Glen Cove, N.Y., said he would vote for Democrats for the first time out of frustration with Republican congressional leaders.

"I'm a registered Republican, but when I turn around and see them trying to cover up — and that's what they're doing — and try to pass the buck to the Democrats, that's not right," Naccio said. "You have elected officials who are running the country and you assume are doing the right thing, but they're not."

Whether they live in the suburbs or cities or rural areas, likely voters tended to trust Democrats more than Republicans to handle corruption. That didn't necessarily mean they would vote for Democratic candidates, but the results highlighted a vulnerability for Republicans. Even suburban men, traditionally a strong Republican voting bloc, were divided about which party could better address the problem of corruption.

Overall, Democrats maintained a 10-percentage point lead over Republicans in House races. Fifty-one percent of likely voters said they would vote for the Democrat in their congressional district, 41 percent said they would vote for the Republican. That's essentially unchanged from last month.

The number of adults who say the country is on the wrong track remained virtually unchanged from last month at 64 percent. That's still lower than in August, when it was 71 percent or May when it reached 73 percent.

The leading issue among likely voters remained Iraq, followed closely by the economy.

But the poll also found that President Bush's efforts to depict the war in Iraq as part of a larger campaign against terrorism and to portray Democrats as weak on national security was not altering the political landscape.

E. coli blamed in death of Idaho boy

By Rebecca Boone
Associated Press

A 2-year-old boy who died from kidney failure last month had been infected with the same strain of E. coli bacteria that prompted a nationwide consumer warning on fresh spinach and sickened at least 192 people.

Kyle Allgood was the second confirmed death in the outbreak, which also killed an elderly Wisconsin woman.

"This confirms what we suspected for quite some time," said Ross Mason, a spokesman for the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare. "Confirming that, though, was important information and will help us in the future if we have similar situations."

The boy, who would have turned 3 in December, died Sept. 20 in Salt Lake City after developing a type of kidney failure caused by E. coli. Health officials had to wait for the results of genetic testing on the bacteria to determine whether his illness was from fresh spinach.

The test took time because the sample taken from the boy was fairly small, so technicians had to let it grow for several days at a laboratory before analyzing it, officials said.

The toddler became ill after having a fresh spinach smoothie, according to his mother, Robyn Allgood.

Last week, the FDA lifted a two-week consumer warning on fresh spinach. On Wednesday, the FBI searched two California produce companies for evidence of possible felony violations of federal environmental laws.

E. coli lives in the intestines of cattle and other animals and typically is linked to contamination by fecal material. It causes an estimated 73,000 infections each year in the United States, including 61 deaths, according to the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Sources can include uncooked produce, raw milk, unpasteurized juice, contaminated water and meat, the agency said.

A worker cleans crops near the Natural Selection Foods LLC plant in San Juan Bautista, Calif., Wednesday.

Engineering
& Computer Science
career fair
CO-OP +FULL TIME POSITIONS
Campus Center Auditorium
October 11, 2006
10:00AM - 3:00PM
Career Services
www.umass.edu/careers
CAREER SERVICES
Student Affairs & Campus Life
06
UMASS AMHERST

FDA updates labels on birth control patch

BIRTH CONTROL from page 1

formation of blood clots (thromboembolism) is associated with the use of hormonal contraceptives. The FDA first updated the label in November 2005 and stated, while an individual is exposed to 60 percent more estrogen than typical birth control pills, containing 30 mcg of estrogen, the patch still has lower levels of estrogen than most other birth control pills.

According to Lentz, estrogen increases the tendency of blood to clot, a tendency which could be genetically inherited.

In addition to inherited risks, a woman's choices can affect the risk of blood clots. Cigarette smoking increases the risk of serious cardiovascular effects, and the risk increases with age and heavy smoking. Women taking hormonal contraceptives should be advised, and encouraged, by their doctor to stop smoking.

"The Ortho Evra patch remains a reasonable choice of contraception for women who are properly screened for clotting risk who find taking a pill every day onerous, and who don't want to use a vaginal method of contraception such as the Nuva-Ring," said Lentz.

The Nuva-Ring is another option women have when choosing a birth control method. It is a flexible, two inch ring that is inserted into the vagina once a month. The vaginal muscles keep the ring in place for three weeks. During that time period, a low dose of hormones is released into the body, in order to prevent pregnancy. The Nuva-Ring has a lower dose of estrogen than most hormonal contraceptives, and that is why it should be considered by women at risk for blood clots, and other heart related complications. Also, a woman does not have to take the pill everyday. The ring stays in for three weeks, is removed, and another is inserted a week later.

Jen Mainville, a graduate of Women's Studies from UMass, previously used the birth control patch.

Mainville suffered numerous adverse reactions, came off the patch, and has not been on birth control since.

"I went on the patch because I had been on the pill and always forgot to take it. Mainly, it was for convenience. You only had to change it once a week," Mainville said. "I never worried about blood clots, but I did have really bad side effects from the patch. I became really moody and depressed. I started having anxiety attacks and I had no idea what it was from."

According to Mainville, her doctor never told her that depression could be a side effect, and she did her own research online and found a forum online where women were commenting that they had the same side effects from various types of birth control.

University Health Services will prescribe Emergency Contraception—the morning after pill—to any woman needing it after unprotected sex.

The phone number for University Health Services is 413-577-5000.

Kristin Ribakusky-Templin, 20, of Randolph, New Jersey, developed blood clots after using the birth control patch, Ortho Evra.

Hangovers worse than inebriation, says study

By Eric Brown
Kansas State Collegian
(Kansas State U.)

MANHATTAN, Kan.—According to research in the Annals of Internal Medicine, those experiencing hangovers can be a threat to themselves and others even after their blood alcohol levels have returned to normal.

Because of the reduced cognitive abilities that accompany a hangover, routine activities can be seriously affected. The research suggests that hangovers can potentially be more dangerous than actual inebriation.

In the quest for hangover prevention, Nutrimark, LLC, recently has uncovered its Hangover Prevention Formula. According to the HPF Web site, www.hangoverprevention.com, HPF is a natural dietary supplement that provides protection from the "morning after" symptoms experienced after prolonged or excessive alcohol consumption.

Gerald Stefanko, chief executive officer of Nutrimark, said taking one dose of the formula two hours before drinking will continue curing the drinker's hangovers for the next three days. The recommended HPF dose is one pill for alcohol consumers weighing less than 130 pounds and two pills for those weighing more than 130 pounds.

HPF contains a patented, all-natural extract, Tex-OC, derived from the fruit of the Prickly Pear Cactus. This extract accelerates the body's natural response to physical stressors like alcohol. Along with Tex-OC, HPF contains supplementary B vitamins, which prevent alcohol's depletion of vitamins necessary for proper nerve and muscle and cardiovascular functions.

Along with nutritional benefits, Stefanko said numerous clinical tests, including a double-blind, randomized study among 62 graduate medical students at Tulane University, have proved the extract's ability to protect the human body against various types of hangover symptoms.

"We are different than anything out there today. All other products released on the market are just that: remedies," Stefanko said. "Our product, Hangover Prevention Formula, is the only clinically proven hangover remedy. After 10 years of research, this is what we have come up with."

Bill Arck, director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service with University Counseling Services, said he had not heard of HPF. However, he is skeptical of the new formula.

"Let's just say I'm not going to invest my retirement funds into this company," Arck said.

In his years working at AODES, Arck said he has seen at least one new hangover-cure formula every six months, but he has yet to be impressed by any of them. Arck also said research has shown the best method to cure hangovers is one that's much cheaper than buying pills or formulas.

"There is too much good research that proves the best way to prevent hangovers is simply time," Arck said. "If you drink too quickly or drink heavily for a long period of time without allowing your body the appropriate amount of time for the alcohol to work through your system, you'll get a hangover — period. It doesn't matter what kind of hangover-prevention supplements you use."

Arck said that in order to prevent hangovers, the appropriate amount of time for alcohol to fully work through your body's system is one hour per alcoholic beverage. Arck noted that one alcoholic beverage is a 12-ounce beer, a 5-ounce glass of wine, or one shot of hard liquor. Arck also stated that drinking 8 oz. of water for every alcoholic beverage also contributes to your body's recovery.

Along with Arck, Barbara Pearson, a licensed psychologist with the campus counseling services, expressed her skepticism.

I feel that the placebo effect sometimes plays a role when people feel that these hangover cures work," said Pearson.

The placebo effect is the phenomenon that a person's symptoms can be alleviated by an otherwise ineffective treatment, since the individual expects or believes that the treatment will work, Pearson said.

"Take for example if I were to be exercising with a personal trainer," explained Pearson. "I might have been doing the same workout before on my own. But since I'm working out with a personal trainer, I would feel like I was now getting a better workout."

Pearson then discussed how she would test HPF.

"If I were to test the this formula on 50 people, I would give 25 of them the actual formula, and the other 25 people a sugar pill, telling them that it was the HPF formula. I can almost promise you that some of those 25 people who took the sugar pill would say that they felt better because of this placebo effect, or because they wanted to feel better."

"The mind-body connection is very strong," Pearson said. "If we think positive, or feel better mentally, our bodies will then feel better."

Frats to be torn down

DEMOLITION from page 1

for the Department of Capital Asset Management, which negotiated with ATG on behalf of the University.

When the land is eventually obtained by UMass, it will be used to enhance the entryway of the campus, said Joyce Hatch, Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance, in a telephone interview in September.

At some point, Hatch said, classrooms will take the place of the plots. "In the long run, it's a good site for a smallish classroom-office building," said Hatch.

Talks between UMass and ATG have been ongoing for over three years. Last April the two fraternities and one sorority living in three of the houses at the time were told by ATG they had to move out by the end of the 2006 spring semester. The houses have been vacant since the summer.

Magazine names 'fittest' colleges

(AP)—As a member of Dickinson College's volleyball team, Cara Scaduto gets plenty of exercise, but she still has to take physical education courses in order to graduate.

Scaduto, a senior majoring in policy management, says she doesn't mind the requirement, though A two courses for students who play sports and four for those who don't.

"It's a very important thing for everyone to have their heart healthy and your body in shape," said Scaduto, 21, as she sat on an exercise machine Monday in the campus fitness center. "For me, it's a stress reducer. If I'm having a hard time with a paper or something, I can come here and let off some steam."

Dickinson's physical education requirement, its recreation center amenities and range of healthy choices in its dining halls all helped the 2,300-student liberal arts college come out on top in a ranking of the nation's "fittest colleges" by Men's Fitness magazine.

The second annual survey of nearly 12,500 students at 115 colleges and universities will be published in the magazine's October issue, which hits newsstands this week.

Men's Fitness put the top 25 schools A— which include the University of Richmond; University of Virginia; Roanoke College; Virginia Tech and University of Mary Washington A— on its "fit list." The rankings are based on student responses to questions about their diet and exercise habits and about the availability of fast food, nutritionists and fitness trainers on campus, editor-in-chief Neal Boulton said.

"It's a commonsense study," Boulton said. "We take a look at the kinds of foods offered in college cafeterias — is there information available to students to encourage good eating and nutrition, and perhaps fitness advice?"

At the same time, the top schools offer a range of nutrition and exercise choices, rather than forcing students to adhere to a strict regimen, Boulton said.

"They provide a very balanced lifestyle within which anyone could exist, whether they're kind of cheating a little or in a fitness mode," Boulton said.

The magazine also placed eight other schools deemed underachievers on "academic probation": California State University-Long Beach, Carnegie Mellon University, Eastern Michigan University, Flagler College, Seton Hall University, University of Michigan-Flint, University of Missouri-Rolla, and University of New Orleans.

April Vari, Dickinson's dean of students, said promoting physical fitness and wellness for both students and employees is just as important to the college as providing a well-rounded liberal arts education.

"One of the things that makes Dickinson distinctive is how broadly we interpret fitness and wellness throughout the campus," Vari said. "There are so many ways we think about fitness and wellness, I think there's something for everybody."

—Associated Press

Attention Students:
Come see what you've been missing out on!
Atkins Farms
Country Market
While grabbing your weekly groceries, stop by our...
• Sushi Bar
• Deli Bar
• Extensive Salad Bar
• Bakery
• Full Service Florist
Come Check Out Our Specialty Fall Products...
Homemade Caramel Apples
Apple Cider
Homemade Fudge
Cider Donuts
Also Available:
Take - Out Food
Student Care Packages
Corner of Route 116 & Bay Road
South Amherst, MA 01002
(413) 253-9528 * www.atkinsfarms.com
Just a short drive from UMass

The Real Spring Break
Europe
Party abroad with MTV cast this spring break
London & Paris 8 days from $995
Amsterdam & Paris 7 days from $925
Book by October 15 and save $100!
Price includes airfare, hotels, transportation, and much more!
Call 1.800.766.2645 or visit efcollegebreak.com today
BRING 8 FRIENDS, GO FREE
college BREAK
efcollegebreak.com
800.766.2645

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

THE CAMPUS SCENE

A WEEKLY LOOK AT THE UNIVERSITY LIFESTYLE

Abstinence: the other option

Why some students on campus decide to avoid sex

By Melissa D'Amico
Collegian Staff

In a society where the majority of media continually portrays the life of college students as one which is surrounded by alcohol, drugs, and partying, people are being exposed to the idea of sex at earlier ages. The government-funded National Center for Health Statistics reported in 2005 that 47 percent of high school students were already sexually active, and 14 percent have had four or more sexual partners within their lifetimes.

While many high school and college students may consider sexual behavior a standard element of relationships, others focus on a different lifestyle– one in which they choose to remain sexually abstinent.

According to online recourses at Planned Parenthood, a national sexual and reproductive health care advocate and provider, there are two types of sexual abstinence:

"Both prevent pregnancy. Both keep sperm out of the vagina," reads the Planned Parenthood Web site.

These two forms are known as periodic abstinence and continuous abstinence.

Periodic abstinence is a way that sexually active women prevent pregnancy.

Women who practice periodic abstinence become familiar with their fertility patterns and then abstain from vaginal intercourse and abstain from vaginal intercourse in the days they believe they could become pregnant.

Continuous abstinence is the more commonly thought of idea when thinking about abstinence. This is where a person refrains from all forms of sexual activity with their partner. Continuous abstinence, unlike periodic abstinence and other forms of sexual contraception, is 100 percent effective in preventing both pregnancy and sexually transmitted diseases.

"Practicing abstinence does not mean a person is sexless. Almost all women and men are abstinent at some time in their lives. It can be a positive way of dealing with sexuality — as a well thought-out choice regarding one's body, mind, spirit, and sexual health," states Planned Parenthood Online.

There are many different reasons as to why people may choose to practice abstinence, ranging all the way from religious influences to waiting for the "right person," to protection from pregnancy and sexually transmitted diseases.

"I have chosen to practice abstinence because it is safe and because I don't want to be like the rest of our teenage and young adult population that regard sex as something that comes with relationships," said Santos-Toro. "For the most part, it is my own personal decision. My mom was just a big influence growing up, but after a certain age I began to understand why she was protecting me from following a promiscuous lifestyle. Also, my decision has some religious connection because I did grow up going to church. I do not consider myself a religious person anymore, but rather a spiritual person, and just because I stopped going to church or my mom is not present in my life as much does not mean I will start having sex because those influences are not present."

Peter Babokhov, a UMass sophomore, practices abstinence for mainly religious reasons. Babokhov also views his abstinence as a way to work against the stereotypes of college students.

"Partly I practice abstinence because of my own morals (I want to stay pure of body). This is my decision as a person and as a good Christian, and my faith has had a very strong influence on my decision," said Babokhov. "I also chose to practice abstinence out of a need to rebel against the norm here at college. I officially became abstinent this summer, mainly because I was sick and tired of my friends telling me I should get laid."

Planned Parenthood Online also suggests that practicing abstinence can have many positive health benefits for those who practice. "Women who abstain until their 20's — and who have fewer partners in their lifetimes — may have certain health advantages over women who do not. They are less likely to get sexually transmitted diseases (STDs), become infertile, and develop cancer of the cervix."

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) reported in 2004 that "an estimated 4,883 young people aged 13-24 in the 33 states reporting to CDC were diagnosed with HIV/AIDS, representing about 13 percent of the persons diagnosed that year."

The CDC also reported that each year there are 19 million new STD infections, and approximately half of the infections were in young adults aged 15 to 24.

Other benefits to practicing abstinence, as noted by Planned Parenthood are that, while other forms of birth control and contraceptives have some cost, abstinence costs nothing.

In the case of college students choosing to practice abstinence, it is a phenomenon that is frequently judged by others to be somewhat strange or unacceptable. For those who practice abstinence, sharing their decision with others and dealing with their reactions can be an interesting experience.

"Whenever I tell people that I am still a virgin I get the bug-eyes, raised eyebrow, 'are you for real?' deal. It doesn't surprise me, but I do love the fact that I stand out from the crowd. I get the curious questions, too, and explaining my reasoning is fun," said Santos-Toro. "Sometimes those who find out I am a virgin, especially men, show more respect and are careful with their words. I don't know why they do that because although I am not sexually active I don't mind having a conversation about sex in general. I actually like to know as much as I can about."

Continuous pressures from cultural aspects like the media (movies, magazines, the Internet) can create obstacles for young adults who are practicing abstinence. With the presence of sex and sexual relationships being a main focus in many movies, books, music, etc., young adults practicing abstinence may find it difficult to continue their practice. "Although I don't feel completely pressured by other people or the media to stop practicing abstinence, they (movies especially) make it seem like sex is a huge deal, and sometimes I do wonder why I am not having sex," said Santos-Toro.

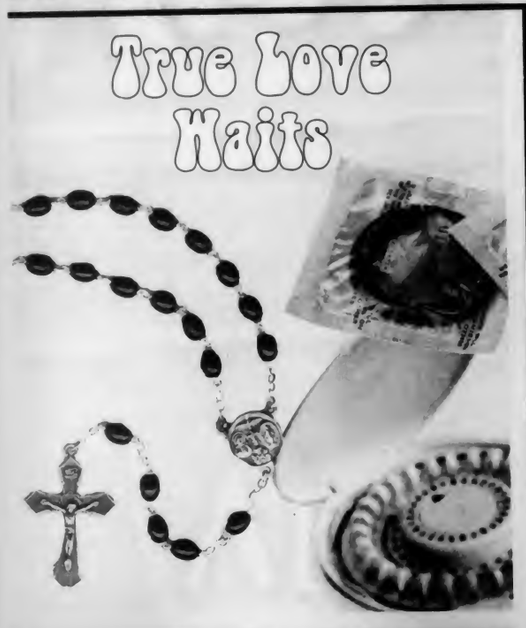
"I can say that I have come close to having sex on two different occasions but I always reminded myself of the whole picture rather than that one moment in time. It's also very interesting to hear what my other friends consider sex to be and how far is too far. Personally, sex is sex when there is penetration and I also consider oral sex, sex. Anything that is not in that realm is not sex to me. I don't consider touching or caressing, sex, but it can definitely lead to sex and that's when boundaries need to be laid down."

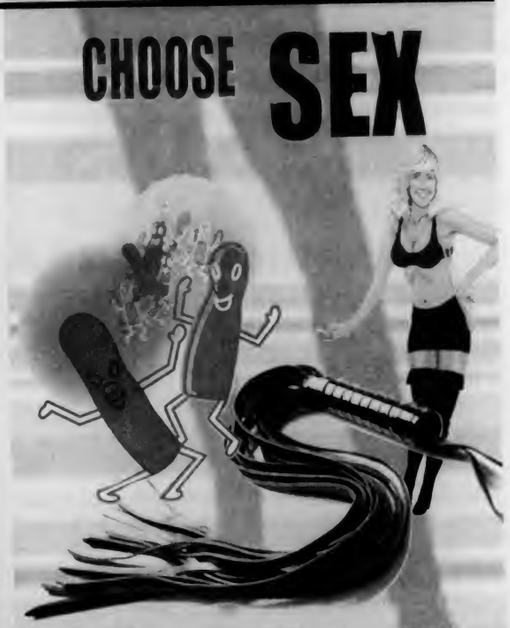
Maintaining a long, working relationship, while practicing abstinence can be difficult for many young adults, particularly when one partner does not practice abstinence. "The two boyfriends I had a couple of years ago responded really well to my choice. However, the most recent boyfriend I had wanted to build trust between us so that I would change my mind, but that didn't fly by me. I don't trust anyone, especially men, and that is an underlying factor for my abstinence," said Santos-Toro.

With the media defining what they believe the everyday college student should be like, it is possible for some young adults to feel as though they are missing out on important aspects of college life if they do not drink, or party, or have sex. For others however, their personal morals are more important than social pressures, and they are able to both participate in the college community and maintain their own beliefs. "My college life is so much fun and is fulfilling even without sex," said Santos-Toro. "Plus, college is about education. As far as I'm concerned, sex is not a class."

The decision to participate in sexual intercourse or to abstain is a very important decision many young adults have to face within their relationships. "I honestly believe that abstinence is something that should be practiced until a certain age and maturity," said Santos-Toro. "I don't see the point in teenagers having sex at 12, 13, 14, whatever age, when they don't know the deeper meaning of such a personal act."

PAGE LAYOUT AND GRAPHIC BY GINNY NIELSEN





THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 6, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A different kind of animal house

Hadley Court set a new precedent this week. James Connelly, a junior at UMass, signed an agreement to publicly apologize to the Amherst Police Department while standing out on Main Street in a toga. Arrested last weekend for organizing a Toga Party on Rte. 9, Judge Nancy R. Dusek-Gomez condemned Connelly at his arraignment for making an offensive comment to a female officer while imprisoned.

Without a closer look into the incident, it would seem like the story of a punk kid who stepped on the wrong polished shoes and paid the price. There was a large gathering at his house, kegs were tapped without a permit, he was underage, and he insulted a female police officer. Local news and official reports have made it seem that it was Connelly's suggestion for the public apology dressed in full roman garb. He signed the papers, he agreed to it. Judge Gomez, along with a $300 fine, 4 months probation, and alcohol class, saw fit to include this act of penance. Justice was served, right? Wrong.

He already spent the night in a cold concrete room, in nothing but his underwear, being ridiculed by the police, why must he now apologize to them?

Mike Cunningham, a roommate and subsequent cellmate of Connelly, tells a different tale. Beginning with the night of his arrest Connelly was left in nothing but his boxers, his toga being removed under jail protocol that hopes to prevent any long object like a belt to be used for potential suicide. Repeatedly asking for a phone call and a blanket, Connelly received neither.

As Cunningham put it: "I watched the officers tease him. He's a good kid, but I guess he just snapped, and eventually told her [the female officer] to go suck his dick."

Connelly is indeed an honors student at UMass with no previous record, but because of his one insult, he has given permission to undergo Corporal Punishment. Hadley Court is going to publicly humiliate him, when all other equal misdemeanors would simply require that the defendant complete a diversion program.

Sure he signed off on it, unwisely sealing his fate, but what would you have done? At the arraignment, Cunningham remembers that Judge Gomez berated Connelly in the middle of the court room, asking him if he would talk to his mother that way, and asking if he was sorry. Getting his turn to speak, Connelly expressed his desire that he had never said it, stated that he was not that kind of person. According to Cunningham, Judge Gomez then interrupted Connelly, abruptly asking if he was willing to dress up in a toga on Friday afternoon in front of the police station and apologize for his words.

Again, what would you have done? You are scared, and being verbally attacked by fully adorned judge, bearing down at you from across a desk and gavel. Connelly heard "diversion," he processed "no record," and conveyed his desires for judicial redemption by saying the easy "yes." Many of us at that flashpoint, where time speeds by without time to think, would have done the same.

Why was this UMass student coerced into public humiliation? He already spent the night in a cold concrete room, in nothing but his underwear, being ridiculed by the police, why must he now apologize to them by undergoing cruel and unusual punishment?

The actions suggested by Judge Gomez go well beyond any requirements under law. What this incident reflects is instead the utter ignorance of the law system that regulates UMass students. With little else more extraordinary than busting parties, the police and courts have become frustrated. They can't seem to curb the problem which only gets worse every year. The more they tighten the net, the more students aggressively resist. Along with this clamp down, they seem to become more belligerent, and as a result, students like James Connelly get stuck in the middle.

To further the exposure for Connelly, news crews from NBC were at his apartment, the scene of the crime, in an effort to get an interview about Judge Gomez's "unconventional orders" (to quote the Daily Hampshire Gazette). Attempting to remain out of the penetrating light, Connelly has remained silent, but that has not stopped this story from hitting local news.

Connelly's sentence is a manifestation of the abrupt and abrasive enforcement policy on campus. The Police and Courts are cracking down, harshly trying to stamp out the brush fire that is collegiate drinking habits. In James Connelly's case, they are trying to do so through fear and humiliation. Will it work, or will it only bring forth spite and hate to last a lifetime?

Today Connelly is supposed to give a public display of his atonement. Sometime in the afternoon, he has to stand alone with a good probability of cameras surrounding him, and pretend he's sorry.

This editorial reflects the opinion of the Collegian staff.

Poor giants

Lauren Modisette

Every year the Big E (Eastern States Exposition) rolls around, and a plethora of New Englanders travel to Springfield, Mass. to join in the experience.

The fair is well known for its eastern states motif with a different building for Maine, Rhode Island, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut and New Hampshire. The main attraction is the variety of food available. From the loaded Maine baked potatoes, to Massachusetts maple cotton candy, to the Rhode Island clam chowder (in a bread bowl) people come from all over New England to participate in this early fall tradition.

Unfortunately, not everything about this fair gives you a warm, fuzzy feeling inside.

As I wandered around the fair with my group of friends, I came across some things I strongly disagreed with. Sure, there were buildings devoted to a glut of goats and llamas amidst some jumbo pigs and cows, but outside of these arenas is where the real brutality was apparent.

To my horror, as we were making our way out of the fair, we passed by three different stands that made my stomach turn.

First, there were the mythical "giant" creatures which you had to pay $1 to see. Naturally, we stood outside the "giant horse" stand, which promised a specimen over 26 hands tall, contemplating whether or not to waste the merit of the $1 it required.

All three of my friends went in to witness it and came out shocked upon realizing it was real; yet, one came out relatively upset and concerned. UMass student, Samantha Taft, was one who observed the animal first hand. She explained it was kept in a tiny, noisy stall with little room to move and it was irresponsible for the owner to allow it to be treated this way solely for profit.

Trainers are educated to find pressure points on the elephant's skin and use the bull hook to inflict pain and force the animals into submission.

After witnessing the appalling sight of the living condition of this amazing animal, we opted not to support the man displaying the "giant pig."

As we entered another area with a group of more goats in reasonably sized cages, a friend motioned to the arena just left of the goats. To our disgust there was an elephant being lead around in tiny circles with a saddle on it for people to ride.

Looking at the poor giant, you could see in its eyes it was completely drained of its spirit. It is no myth these poor elephants take incredible amounts of abuse in order for their trainers to keep them docile and safe for the ignorant riders.

Not many people truly realize how unbelievably inhumane these elephant rides actually are. The trainers use a bullhook on the poor animals when they are young, to keep them in line and in order. A bullhook looks similar to a poker you would use in a fireplace with a relatively sharp point that rests atop a two or three foot poll. This tool is not used in a delicate manner and it's extremely painful and abusive to the elephant's physique. Trainers are educated to find pressure points on the elephant's skin and use the bull hook to inflict pain and force the animals into submission.

The fair is not the only place where this abuse is apparent. The Ringling Brothers have had an ongoing investigation on the treatment of their Asian elephants (an endangered species).

When elephants are kept in captivity it is very common for them to develop mental disorders. This is so because they are plucked from their natural habitat and are unable to use their instincts in their everyday way of life. Elephants in captivity, and especially in circuses (and in this case fairs) are deprived of their natural ways to reduce stress and relax.

One way wild elephants do this is by rolling in mud walks and rivers. Captive elephants are deprived of this relief when, in the wild, it is a pleasurable sensation that keeps their skin healthy and is an important social aspect of their everyday life.

When will people begin to realize animals are not our toys? There are people who believe animals cannot feel or understand what happens to them. To all of you, I am sorry to say, you are truly mistaken on this matter. There is nothing enjoyable or funny about an animal that is used and abused for the entertainment of people.

Nothing can be said to justify the way these animals are treated and it has gotten so out of control that stopping it seems far out of reach. Do your part, and help these animals by not supporting the people who abuse them. Put these ignorant and malicious carnies out of business.

To learn more about how people subdue these beautiful creatures check out www.circuses.com/bullhooks.asp.

Lauren Modisette is a Collegian columnist.

Valuable knowledge

Kevin Pascucci

Ever since my freshman year here at UMass, I've found great entertainment in watching the new wave of students each semester. For most freshmen, college is their first time living away from home, leaving them without much knowledge that is acquired over time here at the University.

Three years later, I've learned many valuable things during my time here. I didn't know coming in. Without knowing the things I've learned, I probably wouldn't have made it this far in school. It's for that reason I will share a few of these nuggets of knowledge with the class of 2010.

1. Unless it's absolutely necessary, don't sign up for a credit card to get a free t-shirt. I've been approached by credit card representatives many times here on campus with the enticement of a free t-shirt. I know "Animal House" was a good movie, and nothing is more appealing than having the word "College" on your chest like John Belushi, but is it really worth going into debt at 18? I think not.

They should give out shirts that say, "I have serious credit card debt, and all I have to show for it is this stupid shirt." They'll also try to get you on your dorm phone, but I would encourage you to be rude and hang up on them. Credit cards are sometimes necessary, but I would hold off as long as you can.

2. Don't sign up for 8 a.m. classes. For 12 years of your life, you were made to wake up while it was still dark out and go to school early. When you graduate, you'll probably have to do the same for whatever job you end up at. This is the time to sleep in.

My first semester here, I took my first and only 8 a.m. class, and I learned my lesson very quickly. Some people are good at getting up in the morning. Some even enjoy it (masochists). For the rest of us, the thought of a few more hours under the covers sounds pretty good. Not to mention the fact you will probably end up going to that class about three and one-half times throughout the whole semester. Mom and dad won't like that report card.

3. When doing your laundry in the dorms, go get it when your time is up. Some people like to put their clothes in the washer for a half hour cycle, and then go switch it two hours later. Let me tell you now, people don't appreciate this. What will happen is, eventually, someone will take your clothes out and put them on top of the machine. No big deal, right? I've lost many innocent socks this way. Sometimes people will miss a sock hiding in the machine, and you will never see that poor sock again. There's nothing worse than going to fold your laundry and having socks without mates. If for no one else, do it for your socks.

4. Don't get "Wings" more than once a week. We've all been there. It's a Friday night, you're hanging out with your friends, and someone says, "Hey, let's get wings." Everyone agrees this is a good idea, and the wings are ordered. I've found eating "Wings" is like eating MacDonald's food. The thought of it is actually better than the actual thing. The first three or four wings are good, but then, by the end of the box, you don't want to smell wings ever again.

There's nothing worse than going to fold your laundry and having socks without mates. If for no one else, do it for your socks.

Then Saturday rolls around, and you find yourself hanging out with a different group of people. Again, someone suggests "Wings," and everyone is on board. If you thought you were sick of "Wings" on Friday night, that box is going to come on Saturday night, and you're not even going to want to look at it. Do yourself a favor, and don't let this happen to you.

I hope these tips come in handy to the new students reading this. I know you've been here a month, and you probably feel like you have this place figured out already. I've been here three years and I still don't have it all figured out. But I have learned the valuable lessons I've shared here.

You may be saying, "Who cares about losing a sock?" I guarantee you that you'll be thanking me in two months. You'll be debt-free, able to sleep in, wearing matching socks and not getting sick off of "Wings." Some people would tell you to worry more about your grades, but there are those of us who know there is much more to college than that. You're welcome.

Kevin Pascucci is a Collegian columnist

Pressuring pedestrians

Colin McDonald

It's Monday morning, and I've almost made it to my first class. Walking along the pathway to Machmer, I hear shouting over the Sublime playing on my iPod. In a moment I'm approached by a rather severe gentleman with a cowboy hat, backed by a young woman wielding a massive sign. The man forces a flyer into my gut while the young woman accuses me of being some kind of programmed robot.

As some of you may recall, last week, a small group of zealots made quite a ruckus at the heart of the UMass campus. Normally, you'd expect a messenger of a faith to approach you in a calm, pleasant manner, offering information about their beliefs, but this group nearly drowned out the sound of the "New Dirt" construction. Quite frankly, I was appalled.

To be honest, I don't even recall their message about Jesus and salvation, simply because I was too dismayed by their tactics. I walked on without taking a flyer.

Don't get me wrong: I may not be a religious person, but that doesn't mean I don't associate with or condemn those who are. Whatever you believe in, that's fine with me, but don't force your opinions on me. Don't call me a robot. Don't tell me working hard at college for a good job is simply my procession along a conveyer belt.

Freedom of assembly is an important part of student rights, so long as a demonstration follows a code of guidelines. As defined in the student handbook, "Students are prohibited from blocking free entry to or free exit from buildings, interfering with free movement, or presenting obstacles to regular University activities. 'Interfering with free movement' is defined as any physical denial or restriction of a person's ability to freely reach or leave a given geographical area, or harassment as defined in the Code of Student Conduct." I felt harassed by the demonstrators, as I'm sure others did too.

Preaching and spreading the word of a religion is absolutely acceptable, but there is a right way and a wrong way to do it. Telling people they are being processed like meat is, in my opinion, the wrong way.

"I'm pretty sure one of them called me a sheep, then 'ba-aa-aa'd' at me," says Maggie Fogg, a confused student.

Some stood by to watch the demonstrators tear through their victims. Ruthless and unflinching on the offense, these crusaders made quite a spectacle of themselves. I got the sense that most passer-bys were unsure of what it was the demonstrators were trying to get at. Besides a strange sense of bewildered-amusement, most of the people I've interviewed about the demonstration had a rather negative reaction to the whole ordeal.

"They're just alienating people, if anything," student Eric Chi commented.

I was born a Christian, but through my own right I have developed my own views on life. However, I can imagine if I were still practicing Christianity, I would have been offended by the demonstration. It seems like hypocrisy to try to attract people to you by offending them in the worst way possible, to try to spread a message by shutting your audience down. I don't think these people represented the ideals they were trying to spread at all.

Normally, you'd expect a messenger of a faith to approach you in a calm, pleasant manner, offering information about their beliefs, but this group nearly drowned out the sound of the "New Dirt" construction.

"There was one guy shouting that Jesus didn't care about your degree," remarked student Olga Deshchenko, "so I have no idea who he was preaching to."

I understand maybe in their eyes they were trying to enlighten us, maybe persuade or convince a few of us, but I can't help but wonder just how they can justify their actions. I don't stand in front of religious centers and mock people. I don't point people out and classify them as robots or sheep. I don't say anything because, in my opinion, a person's religious belief is their own. No one should be condemned for their thoughts.

If the demonstrator's goal last week was to attract followers, I can't help but feel like they failed. If anything, they simply managed two things: to offend the casual passer-by, like myself, and to make fools of themselves. Whatever their message was, it got lost in their act.

In no way is it my intent to offend any religion. I simply can't stand the way some people try to force their beliefs on others. I realize this is just a very tiny percentage of extremists, but it should be known they not only offended me, but many of my peers as well.

Colin McDonald is a Collegian columnist

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 6, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Yonder Mountain

BY LAUREN MUDISETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Are you a fan of bluegrass? Not going home for the holiday weekend? Why not head to Pearl Street Night Club on Saturday, October 7? Yonder Mountain String Band will be performing and it will be a show worth seeing.

Yonder Mountain is a band from Nederland, Colorado who is spreading their string instrument styles across the nation and up the east coast.

They are a four member strings band; no percussion or drums here, who have been making a name for themselves across the country. While many New Englanders have been resisting the bluegrass wave, I can assure you that this concert will keep your feet moving.

Yonder Mountain seamlessly combines bluegrass, folk, and rock into a crazy string instrument parody that everyone can enjoy.

The band consists of Jeff Austin on mandolin, Ben Kauffman on bass, Dave Johnston on banjo, and Adam Aijala on acoustic guitar. All four musicians play a role in the vocalizing of their songs.

In October 2004 their album "Mountain Tracks 3" made it to #2 on the Top Bluegrass Albums list. They have since come out with their first self-titled record and "Mountain Tracks #4".

The New York posts claims "this is a jam band, but one without the typical electrical instruments." Yonder Mountain noodles with acoustic instruments such as guitar, banjo, mandolin, fiddle, and bass. Sustained notes are abandoned and replaced instead with fleet-fingered flat-picking. And their vocal harmonies are almost as precise as their picking."

With popular songs such as "Rambler Anthem" and "40 Miles from Denver" it is guaranteed to be a good show that will keep you dancing all night long.

The Daily News says "the group specializes in clean, crisp picking that reached the far limits of endurance... THREE YEARS?" Bluegrass Unlimited claims "their picking is so hot and clean... fans of hard driving Bluegrass will find much to please here."

The band has played at many festivals like Bonnaroo, All Good, Jam Cruise, and the Austin City Limits Festival. So far they have produced nine studio albums, each hitting the charts with a hard blow.

Tickets are $20 in advance and $23 at the door so hurry up and get involved with this bluegrass legend. Don't miss the chance to see them for yourselves and get turned on to this western style of music.

If you are going home this weekend, have no fear. Yonder Mountain will be making appearances up and down the east coast over the next week in venues like Higher Ground in Burlington, VT on Wednesday, October 11, Chevrolet Theatre in Wallinford, CT as well as Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel which will be hosting them in Providence, RI on Friday October 13. They will be returning to Massachusetts on Sunday, October 15, where they'll be performing at the Avallon Ballroom. So if you will miss them this Saturday be sure to catch them on their upcoming nights. To find out locations of more east coast shows and browse through their merchandise visit them at www.yondermountain.com. See you there.

The Yonder Mountain String Band will perform at Pearl Street this Saturday in Northampton. The string quartet stems all the way from Nederland, Colo.

A Dose of Comedy
Michael Ian Black and Michael Showalter are performing tonight at Pearl Street. The two comedians are frequents on Comedy Central and started in their own movie, "The Baxter," released this past summer

'School' not worth the tuition

BY KATE BAUER
COLLEGIAN CONTRIBUTOR

Let me give it to you straight: this movie isn't worth seeing in theatres. Despite a great cast ensemble and an interesting premise, "School for Scoundrels" turns out to be nothing more than sub par. Todd Phillips, the latest comedy hit-director ("Old School," "Starsky & Hutch," "Road Trip") and co-screenwriter, ends up delivering the same kind of man versus man, hot chicks and frat-boy-principles as his previous films (this time toned down to a PG-13 version). The amusing parts are few and far between (the best of them are given away in the trailer), and the actors look awkward and out-of place.

So, the well-thought-out, brilliant story is as follows: Roger (Jon Heder), a hapless pushover secretly lusting after his neighbor Amanda (Jacinda Barrett), learns about a secret class that teaches nerds how to become 'men.' The class is taught by Dr. P (Billy Bob Thornton). Here are a sampling of the class rules that students must apply when it comes to dating: #1 Always get the girl alone. #2 No compliments, ever. #3 Lie, lie and lie some more. #4 Be dangerous, it's cool. As the rules and lessons progress, Roger starts to do so well that Dr. P no longer sees him as a student, but a rival. And so we lead up to the man versus man plot, and the games begin as each man attempts to outwit the other in a series of more and more ridiculous games.

In his first leading role in a (potentially) blockbuster film, Jon Heder appears awkward in his portrayal as meter-maid Roger. His performance pales in comparison to that of the one we saw in "Napoleon Dynamite." Thornton, again taking up the role of the bad guy we know and love to hate, doesn't have enough material to work with here, and therefore seems to spend most of the movie strutting around in pinstripe suits looking pompous (I guess you could say that he nailed the part of a man who thinks he's 'the shit'). Michael Clark Duncan, walking farther and farther away from his "Green Mile" Oscar, serves as Dr. P's pawn, Lesher, appearing to pretty much be there only to physically beat down the students. (Unfortunately Lesher's history with the students is brought up, something that really didn't need to be addressed). The cast also includes a surprising number of comedians: Sarah Silverman ("Evolution") is refreshing as Amanda's roommate Becky, and Horatio Sanz (Saturday Night Live), and Paul Scheer (VH1's Best Week Ever), are two of Roger's classmates. David Cross makes an appearance as Roger's friend who tells him about the class, and Ben Stiller makes an all too brief appearance as a former protege of Dr. P's.

There are a few laughs in "School for Scoundrels" but far too few, and overall the material lags. Like I said, it's not worth seeing in theatres. I recommend you save your $5.25 and wait till it comes out on DVD.

SITI play a success

BY MICHAH HARDMAN
COLLEGIAN CONTRIBUTOR

William Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" was exotically portrayed Tuesday night. Taking place in Bowker Auditorium, the SITI Company kept the audience laughing and cheering for more almost constantly.

The SITI Company is known for creating bold, new productions and to create opportunities for artistic dialogue and cultural exchange. They are based in New York, with New York City and Saratoga. The company was founded in 1992 by Anne Bogart and Tadashi Suzuki, to revitalize contemporary theatre. On Tuesday night, they performed "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

The play retained the romantic, love story elements of the Shakespearean original but created an almost shamanistic atmosphere. The impressive physical movements by the actors, the spacey folk background music, and strong tribal sexuality combined to create this effect.

The company contemporized their depiction of the performance as well with their wardrobe and speech patterns. They kept to the script to honor the typical Shakespeare feel. They also used a small amount of props, and the ones they did use were far more contemporary than the play.

One patron mentioned that although they showed a contemporary element, they chose to convey the script's nature of the play. The actors were able to make a fairy humorous and the entire crowd was erupting into laughter all night. The most entertaining moment of the night was when Bottom, a weaver who is mainly used for comic relief, was put on to play. During a scene where Mr. Bottom character croaked, as he was supposedly in agony, he began "Gangnam Style" (or UMASS" chant. The crowd broke into a frenzied dance.

The overall acting of the ensemble was solid. They voiced their characters well, and their athletic abilities were spectacular. The eight member team had to portray all twenty-six characters, no small feat. They used Puck as an impish ringmaster to shape shift through the scenes, which worked well.

Every actor had their place, but the character of Bottom was downright hilarious. He had a slightly heavier-set body from the rest of the crew, making his movements and mannerisms extremely comedic. He was also the subject in a strange, ritualistic portrayal of a love scene between Titania and himself. The audience was stunned and could only shriek with laughter in response to what was going on in front of them.

Overall, the play was very well done. The fantasy-world production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" is a bit of a risk, but was a welcoming adaptation that everybody seemed to love.

As the company ended the play, they received a deserved standing ovation from the crowd. The audience received their money's worth on Tuesday night.

Though you may recognize him as Napolean Dynamite, Jon Heder takes on a new lead role in "School for Scoundrels."

Everyone Orchestra not for everyone

Reed Mathis of the Everyone Orchestra strums his bass during Tuesday's performance at Pearl Street.

BY LAUREN MUDISETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Tuesday night Pearl Street Night Club had the honor of kicking off the east coast tour of Everyone Orchestra.

With members including Jon Fishman (Phish), Scott Law, Jamie Masefield, and Reed Mathis, the orchestra put on a performance that was to die for.

Conductor Matt Butler took his position front and center with his cue cards, for the audience, and white boards which he used to communicate with the musicians. Conductors usually have more of a central role, but Butler didn't vouch for such. He didn't so much control their playing but rather made suggestions. There were some occasions when the players shrugged off some of his suggestions, and he retracted them, allowing for the orchestra to do their own thing.

They kicked off the performance piece by piece, one instrument at a time. Mathis would rock out a bass line and then Fishman's deep bump on his drums would be added in. Once getting in sync, Butler slowly began to incorporate all of the other musicians until he resulted in a full out jam.

In order to hold the direction of the musicians, Butler would write out commands to change keys, or signal for a specific musician to change up the beat or rhythm (and all this on the white

See EVERYONE on page 7

Julee Avallone blows her heart out on one of her many tenor saxes.

Pearl St. show comes up empty-seated

Matt Butler, conductor of the Everyone Orchestra, claps along with the eclectic performers to tie them all together.

EVERYONE from page 6

boards for the players to see).

They had a sound that was wonderfully influenced by a combination of Phish and Pink Floyd. There were also strong undertones of The Grateful Dead. Guitarist Scott Law has played with Phil Lesh and Friends in 2005 and has also toured with Melvin Seals Melting Pot (the Jerry Garcia Band). So it is no wonder that their musical combination gave off that good old feel.

Along with an infusion of different musical idles, Julee Avallone and Peter Apfelbaum enhanced the "groove" with their eclectic wind varieties and Avallone's distinctive and liberating vocals.

I was very impressed by the skill, enthusiasm, and energy that Everyone Orchestra provided for the audience. Coming from someone who has never seen them before and had no idea what to expect, it is an honor to announce that this was the best concert I have seen, so far, this semester.

With their idiosyncratic and diverse techniques backing each individual artist they produced a sound like no other. This was their first time performing in the eastern states since Snow Down, last year, and they are attempting to broaden their fan base and draw them in.

This is a group of musicians who truly appreciates their effect on their audience. At one point Avallone hopped off stage to join the crowd, as she belted away on her saxophone, giving everyone a "you're-one-of-us" vibration. Butler was sure to include the audience by bolding up cards requesting a scream, "ah", "ohm", or other lyrical combinations. Meanwhile, there were two touring artists in the back of the venue creating masterpieces to form a personal representation of the music.

Unfortunately, there wasn't much advertising done to work in the orchestra's favor so the venue was far from full during their performance. Even after a mind-blowing first set half of the audience seemed to disperse to less interesting and energetic atmospheres, opting not to return to observe the second.

There were numerous photographers and writers present for this performance and many, including myself, couldn't resist the musical groove and found themselves dancing to their charismatic and electrifying jams.

After the show there was a small group of enamored fans waiting outside the backstage doors to snap a photo and get an autograph from the brilliant artists. The musicians permitted them back stage to socialize with them as they were recovering from the hours of jamming on stage.

Even though they perform phenomenally, they still hold a place in their hearts for their fans and don't mind a little bit of extra attention that some bands would prefer to resist. It is refreshing to come across a group of artists of this caliber that still has hints of modesty among them.

Several new films push the envelope in taste and politics

BY ELIZABETH WEITZMAN
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Remember the 2005 Oscar nominees? I very one of the movies up for Best Picture last spring was touted as daring and provocative, the work of directors determined to break new ground and test their limits.

Ah, innocence.

Moviegoers are facing a slate of films that will challenge them to such a degree, last year's movies will look like, well, yesterday's news. Thought two gay cowboys were shocking? Get ready for the pansexual gymnastics performed in full-frontal glory throughout John Cameron Mitchell's "Shortbus." Found the racial sparks of "Crash" a bit much? Buckle up for "Horat," which mines extreme sexism and anti-Semitism for humor. And if the political implications of "Munich" seemed unnerving, be prepared for "Death of a President."

And that's not to mention potential rabble-rousers like the comedy "Sleeping Dogs Lie" and the gender-switching indie "Zerophilia"; the documentaries "Dixie Chicks: Shut Up and Sing," "F---," "Jesus Camp" and "Deliver Us From Evil;" and the seemingly mild-in these shores, anyway British drama "The Queen."

What's causing this uptick in onscreen instigation? Douglas Brode, author of "Sinema Erotic Adventures in Film" and a cinema studies professor at Syracuse University, points to a growing sense of public unrest.

"After 9/11 we were all trying to stay within the bounds of good taste and we were all encouraged to self-censor," Brode says. "But as the political climate grows more divisive, people are now beginning to speak out more."

Filmmaker Paul Schrader agrees. As the screenwriter of "Taxi Driver" (1976) and "The Last Temptation of Christ" (1988), and writer-director of "American Gigolo" (1980), he knows a thing or two about controversy.

"In troubled times like these, people look to the arts for answers, and start to welcome a challenge to the status quo," Schrader says. "And in terms of (onscreen) nudity, we're much more conservative now than we were 30 years ago. It's part of a pulling back and a national conservatism that began in the Reagan era."

The status quo takes a backseat to the Kama Sutra in the comedic "Shortbus." "When you have a conservative culture, dialogue is stimulated, and that's healthy," says Mitchell, who insists his goal is actually to make sex less shocking.

"We are a sexually obsessed society, but also a strangely prudish one," he says. "When people are scared of something, they try to squash or compartmentalize it. (With "Shortbus") I hope they'll see that they can integrate sex into their lives, rather than separating it into something that's just procreative, or dirty, or prurient."

Brode thinks Mitchell is wise to take a comic approach to such frank subject matter, suggesting that, "You can always get away with more if you use humor." Robcat Goldthwait, who directed the upcoming "Sleeping Dogs Lie," also believes that "comedy makes every subject more palatable." So he hopes Goldthwait's movie is about the fallout from a woman's sexual experience with, um ... her dog.

Meanwhile, British satirist Sacha Baron Cohen will be heating up all sorts of political waters via humor in November, when his comedy "Borat Cultural Learnings of America for Make Benefit Glorious Nation of Kazakhstan" is released.

Fans of Cohen's "Da Ali G Show" on HBO are already familiar with "Horat," a bumbling Kazakh with an unfortunate tendency to view women and Jews in the most offensive manner imaginable (and state those views in unacceptable ways). Unlike Mitchell, who tried to downplay the controversial nature of his film, Cohen, who's Jewish, by the way, has welcomed any hullabaloo with so much enthusiasm, the outraged president of Kazakhstan (who has condemned the movie) doesn't appear to realize he's engaged in a public battle with a fictional character.

Inevitably, there will be those who are happy to join Cohen in a rousing chorus of offensive anthems (which is why the comic has continuously amped up the character's ridiculousness — no one who parades around in a bright green body thong the way Cohen-as-Horat did at Cannes earlier this year — can be taken seriously).

So, the question is, how serious is this creator's intent? While European audiences were already aware that anti-Semitism is too tenacious to be ignored, Americans tend toward a smug complacency. We're too savvy for that kind of ignorance, right?

Which brings us to Mel Gibson's "Apocalypto." A few years ago Hollywood would have thought the biggest problem with a violent movie subtitled in a dead language with inexperienced actors set during the decline of Mayan civilization would be the subtitles; then Gibson made 2004's "The Passion of the Christ." But with the Oscar-winning actor-director's anti-Semitic tirade this summer after a DUI arrest, "Passion" is being looked at with increased doubt as to where Gibson's heart was. And while there may not be anything objectionable about "Apocalypto," the issue becomes, will audiences still want to plunk down $10 to see a film by Gibson?

Brode points out that it's often the off-screen story that creates a storm. Yet Gibson himself seems determined to court controversy, recently comparing "Apocalypto's" brutality to the war in Iraq.

Given that even Gibson is using his art as a political statement, how far will this trend go? In England, audiences have been amazed at the bluntness of "The Queen," a fictionalized account of Queen Elizabeth II's cold reaction to the death of Princess Diana. But loyal monarchists have nothing on the Americans already appalled by "Death of a President," which imagines the assassination of President Bush after an antiwar demonstration (the film's titular event is done by manipulated video images).

Realistically, those who may protest "D.o.a.P." will most likely also be the ones who won't see it. But the notion of a film even approaching such a topic would've been unthinkable a few years ago.

After all, look at the outrage that greeted the Dixie Chicks when singer Natalie Maines publicly disparaged the president in 2003. And, you can look at it as if the band's dramatic fall from grace is chronicled in the cheekily titled "Dixie Chicks: Shut Up and Sing." That title, though, has nothing on the forthcoming documentary "F---," which examines a taboo word newspapers can't print.

In fact, documentaries have always been fertile ground for discourse, so it makes sense that this year would bring an especially defiant crop. "Deliver Us From Evil" will take on pedophilia in the priesthood, while "Jesus Camp" is already inciting debate over its depiction of children raised in evangelical Christian homes who are sent to a "Christian soldier" camp in North Dakota. And there's been a notable increase in films critical of the Iraq war, including "My Country, My Country," "The War Tapes," "The Ground Truth," "Occupation Dreamland" and "Iraq in Fragments."

This doesn't surprise Brode, who recalls, "It was impossible to make an anti-Vietnam War movie in 1966, because people weren't ready. But only two years later, everything was different."

Observing that the floodgates soon opened to the confrontational cinema of the 1970's, he predicts that these films are only "the tip of the iceberg."

Pointing the Wrongs of the Right

BY PATRICK T. REARDON

In the fall of 2003, Al Franken and other liberals, as if awakening from a deep sleep, charged onto the nation's best-seller lists to do battle page for page with the right-wing commentators long dominant there.

A year later, George W. Bush won re-election anyway.

Now, a much larger wave of books, written by authors ranging from moderate conservatives to social activists, is hitting bookstores just in time for the midterm elections in November — with the Religious Right in their crosshairs.

Although some of the nearly two dozen works aim simply to explain the Evangelical movement, most are full-bore attacks, accusing conservative Christians of hijacking the Republican Party and of seeking to roll back the clock on freedoms many Americans take for granted.

At one end of the spectrum is former U.S. Sen. John Danforth, a Republican and Episcopal priest. In "Faith and Politics" (Viking), Danforth expresses deep shock at the willingness of the GOP to kowtow to radical religionists, particularly regarding Terry Schiavo and similar high-profile controversies. Yet, he also makes clear in an interview, "I don't want to, in any way, belittle anyone's religious beliefs."

At the other end is Chris Hedges, a former Pulitzer Prize-winning foreign correspondent for The New York Times, who has titled his book, due in January, "American Fascists: The Christian Right and the War on America" (Free Press).

Hedges, who attended Harvard Divinity School, acknowledges in an interview that "fascist" is an incendiary word. Yet, comparing the political growth of the Religious Right with Hitler's rise to power in Germany, he contends, "This is a potent and a ruthless mass movement that would like to dismantle American democracy."

While Hedges characterizes conservative Christian leaders as manipulative cynics, Mel White argues in "Religion Gone Bad" (Tarcher Penguin) that they're especially dangerous because they're true believers.

White is an evangelical Christian who was a ghostwriter and speechwriter for many of those men, including Jerry Falwell and Pat Robertson, until he came out as a homosexual. Much violence against gays and lesbians, he asserts, is directly due to fundamentalist rhetoric.

"Consciously or unconsciously," White writes, "fundamentalist Christians are using their anti-homosexual campaign to test how much intolerance the American people will tolerate."

Linda Bubon, co-owner of Women and Children First bookstore in Chicago, says the books critical of the Religious Right represent an important development. "As a feminist and a woman," Bubon says, "what (the leaders of the Religious Right) say about women and women's place in society and in the family is anachronistic. Next, it'll be 'Don't leave your father's house until you move into your husband's house.'"

However, Becky Anderson, co-owner of Anderson's Bookshops in the Chicago region, wonders about the audience for such books. "Conservatives aren't going to buy these," she says. "I'm not sure even a lot of liberals will buy these books."

The authors with well-known names, Anderson predicts, will do the best in the crowded field. And so far sales are bearing her out. Among the 2 million titles for sale at Amazon.com, Danforth's book ranked 298th on Monday followed by "American Theocracy" (Penguin) by best-selling political historian Kevin Phillips at 371 and "The Holy Vote" (Rayo) by Ray Suarez, senior correspondent with "The NewsHour With Jim Lehrer," at 2,464.

The present flood of books began as a trickle two years ago when Jim Wallis, a liberal activist and evangelical Christian, published "God's Politics" by (HarperSanFrancisco). On Monday, the hardcover version ranked 3,427 on the Amazon.com, while the recently published paperback was 1,781.)

In the book, Wallis writes, "The religious and political Right gets the public meaning of religion mostly wrong — preferring to focus only on sexual and cultural issues while ignoring the weightier matters of justice."

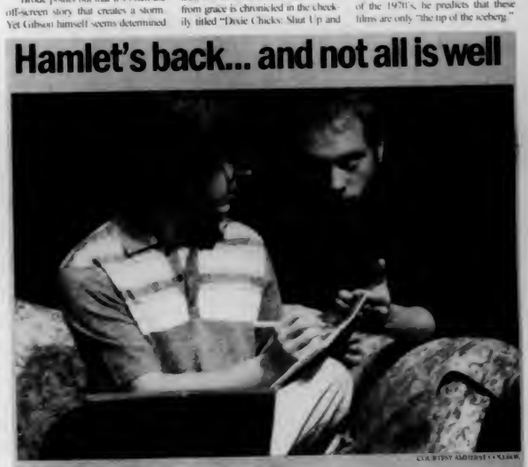
Yet, Wallis is also critical of "secular fundamentalists." In an interview, Wallis says, "The secular Left's barring of religion from the public square and barring speaking of moral values is a big reason why the Religious Right has been successful."

Also blaming the Left — but for a different reason — is Michelle Goldberg, a senior writer at Salon.com, who describes herself as neither a believer nor an atheist.

After several years of filing reports on the growing political power of religious conservatives, Goldberg began writing "Kingdom Coming" (Norton) two years ago because "it was very difficult to get people to take the movement seriously."

She writes that liberals need to borrow many of the bare-knuckled strategies of conservative Christians rather than seek to dialogue. "As long as the movement aims at the destruction of secular society and the political enforcement of its theology, it has to be battled, not comforted and appeased," Goldberg asserts.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 8
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Fri 10/06/06 thru Thurs 10/12/06
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
The Departed (R) 1:00 2:00 4:25 7:00 7:45 10:20*
Employee of the Month (PG13) 1:05 1:40 4:30 4:55 7:15 7:50 9:45 10:25*
Texas Chainsaw Massacre: the Beginning (R) 1:35 2:40 7:40 9:55*
The Guardian (PG13) 1:00 4:05 7:10 10:15
School for Scoundrels (PG13) 1:30 4:45 7:20 9:45*
Open Season (PG) 1:20 4:00 6:50 9:05*
Jackass: Number Two (R) 1:50 4:50 7:30 9:50
All The King's Men (PG13) 1:10 7:05
Jet Li's Fearless (PG13) 1:15 4:15 7:35 10:00
The Black Dahlia (R) 4:10 10:15
The Illusionist (PG13) 1:45 4:20 7:00 9:35
* no passes or superpasses
Senior Show (October 12th) All The King's Men - 10:05a.m.
Friday Night Rewind (October 6th) The Last Days - Midnight
• NO PASSES NO SUPERPASSES
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com



Dan Lucey (background), a UMass student, will be playing Hamlet alongside Will Crunch (Guildenstern) in a new rendition of the Shakespearean classic from October 26-28 at the Kirby Theater.

Panda East
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
Menu...

Sushi:		Chef Specialties:
California Maki	$3.95	Mandarin Chicken	$12.95
Salmon Skin	$4.25	Vegetarian Chicken	$10.95
Alaska	$4.95	Amazing Chicken	$11.50
Salmon Maki	$3.95	Panda's Gourmet Shrimp	$13.95

Ask about our special sushi rolls, vegetarian options, "light and healthy" entrees, and gluten free entrees.
We Bring Chinatown To You!
Monday-Thursday: 11:30am-11:00pm
Friday & Saturday: 11:00am-11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00pm-10:00pm
103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002 Delivery: (413) 549-0077
www.pandaeastamherst.com

D.P. Dough = Great Calzones + Low Prices + Fast Delivery
OPEN UNTIL 4 A.M. Thursday, Friday, and Saturday
256-1616 * WWW.DPDOUGH.COM

UMass opens conference play

FIELD HOCKEY from page 10

of a six-game winning streak, the latest coming in the form of 2-0 win over Longwood last Sunday.

The Owls game plan begins and ends with their defense, which is spearheaded by goalkeeper Erin Hanshue.

Hanshue has been superb in goal this year for the Owls. The sophomore has posted a 1.07 goals-against average and .794 save percentage while going 9-3. A member of the A-10 All-Rookie team last year, Hanshue is starting to garner praise as one of the nation's best goalkeepers. She ranks amongst the national leaders in all major statistical categories.

"Hanshue, in goal, has been great for [Temple]," Shea said. "She makes a lot of initial saves. We'll have to be ready to put rebounds in on her."

She received A-10 Player of the Week honors for the period ending September 11. In that stretch, she recorded a shutout against Rider and made 12 saves against perennial national championship contender Maryland in a losing effort.

The Temple backfield is anchored by senior Megan Hannahoe. The captain has been great on defense while adding to the team's offensive attack tallying two goals this season. She scored the game-winning goal against the Minutewomen last October in a 2-1 overtime victory in Philadelphia.

"Temple likes to control the tempo," Shea said. "They like to possess it and pass around their backfield and pick their chances carefully. They like to kind of lull you into following them from side to side and then when you fall asleep defensively, they'll attack you."

The familiarity between UMass and Temple extends farther than what has happened on the field between the two programs. Temple coach Amanda Janney played under Shea.

Maintaining a consistent offensive attack has been a problem for the Minutewomen to this point in the season. However, Shea is confident that they have the tools necessary to change their fortunes.

"We have an edge in team speed," she said. "But we have to be willing to utilize that to make it an advantage for us."

After Temple leaves town, the weekend will not get any easier for UMass. The Saint Joseph's Hawks (6-5) soar into Amherst on Sunday afternoon.

The Hawks haven't had the success of Temple, but still pose a threat to the Minutewomen. They're coming off an impressive 3-1 win over Longwood last Saturday.

Led by senior All-American candidate Nicole Antonini, the Hawks offense is an enigma this season. At times they've been explosive – posting five shutout wins by a combined score of 18-0. They've also been stymied at times, being held scoreless twice.

The UMass defense needs to be aware of Antonini's location at all times. Her ability to force penalty corners, paired with her raw scoring talent makes her an absolute nightmare for opposing defenses.

"Antonini, up front, is quick as lightning," Shea said. "She'll really put the pressure on you to execute in your own zone."

The Hawks have forced 73 corners this season. That is second only to Richmond's 93 in the A-10.

The Hawks defense, however, has been the story all year. They held their opponents scoreless in five games.

Junior goalkeeper Rebecca Cunfer has been a stalwart in goal, carrying a thrifty 1.33 goals-against average into this weekend's action.

The Hawks face Rhode Island this Friday in Kingston before heading to Amherst. URI's Rhode Island Field Hockey Complex features a grass field. UMass coach Shea believes this to work in the favor of the Maroon and White.

"The good thing is we get them after they play at Rhode Island," Shea said. "So we have a little bit of an advantage because they're coming from a grass surface to a turf surface."

The Minutewomen hope to exploit this lack of familiarity on turf by taking it right to St. Joe's and scoring early. St. Joe's high-pressure offense makes it hard to stifle them for an entire game. The Minutewomen cannot afford to be as out of sync as they appeared on the offensive side of the ball in previous games.

Aside from their offensive issues, an inability to make in game adjustments has plagued the Minutewomen all year.

"We have to be able to make changes throughout the game to be successful," Shea said after last Saturday's loss to Syracuse. "If we don't have key players willing to make these changes we won't be successful."

As was the case with Janney, Shea knows St. Joe's coach Michelle Finegan very well too.

"I actually played with her on the national team for years," Shea said.

As conference play begins, the Minutewomen need to do more than just execute on both sides of the ball. They need to play with emotion. Emotion that UMass coach Shea just hasn't seen from her side enough this season.

"It's conference and the emotional matchups of the conference are huge," Shea said. "You could almost throw everything else out. Whoever plays with the most emotion has the edge."

Hostile environment awaits UM in Ohio

BASICS from page 10

this past weekend. Right now we're reminding everybody of what their defensive responsibilities are. In a funny way, we had gone away from it, trying to work on the offense. And I think we realized this past weekend that we need to polish up our defense a little bit more than we have."

UMass has been so concerned with getting a goal that it has been pushing men forward in order to spark some sort of offensive production. As a result, the Minutemen left themselves vulnerable, and teams have taken advantage.

"We lost our defensive shape a lot," junior captain Kenny Cook said. "That was something we were good at earlier in the year. And when you get down a goal, you want to push guys forward and start getting goals. We got spread out, and it was easy for teams to work their way through us."

Now the Minutemen find themselves in a big weekend in Ohio. Dayton is one of the toughest places to play in the league. While not the place or situation of choice, UMass hopes that a rejuvenated focus on defense will take some of the pressure off the offense, leading to what has been missing for so long: goals.

"We've gone back to basics this week," Davy said. "The last couple of training sessions we worked hard on defense again because that was where we were getting success early in the season.

"We told the guys that goals will come," he added. "But unfortunately, we go a goal down, and we struggle with the psyche of the game. Sports psychologists would have a field day with our boys right now. We go a goal down and we start to panic. And we shouldn't. Because we panic, we make mistakes, and we're getting punished for those mistakes."

Scoring drought has Minutemen sliding

M. SOCCER from page 10

that right now.

"They lost their first game with Xavier, so they're feeling a little pressure since they started off with a loss. They're certainly going to be ready. They're going to be fired up to play us, and it's going to be a good, hard-fought game."

On offense, the Flyers are sporting a one-man show in forward Caleb Lindemann. The sophomore has tallied 11 points on five goals and an assist. He is by far the Flyers leading scorer, as three players are tied for second with two goals each.

Since Lindemann is a sophomore, Koch and the Minutemen have never seen him play in person, which will prove difficult to plan for the Flyers' best offensive weapon.

"We didn't play against him last year when he was a freshman, but I've heard good things about him," Koch said. "The bottom line is we're not as concerned about him as we are concerned about what we need to do. If we do our job, then they will have to worry about us, and that's the way we have to go into the game."

With Xavier on deck, Koch is as always reluctant to look ahead, but the Musketeers won their first A-10 game. A win on Sunday may launch UMass right back up the A-10 standings and into the playoff picture.

"I don't think it will be an easier game [than Dayton], I think it will be a hard-fought game," Koch said. "We'll be playing during the day, so it's not as hostile an environment."

No matter the environment, the Minutemen need a win this weekend to keep pace in a tight A-10, but added pressure is the last thing UMass needs to think about.

"I don't think [the players] feel that anxiety that we have to win, or else we're done," Koch said. "They'll be focused on what they need to do. I don't think they'll have to worry about the other stuff."

Conference play adds to old rivalries

By J.M. Friedman
Collegian Staff

The opening shots of Atlantic 10 play will be fired at Garber Field this afternoon when the Temple Owls face off against the Massachusetts field hockey team.

With a fresh season of conference play, comes the renewal of long-standing rivalries.

"It was always the Pennsylvania region [versus] the New England region," UMass Coach Patty Shea said. "Now that we're in a conference together, you have that regional rivalry combined with the conference [implications]."

Although the 2006 season has thus far been disappointing for the Minutewomen, the start of conference play signals a new beginning, and an opportunity for UMass to redefine the campaign as a success.

"This is our season right now," Shea said. "[Conference games] are more intense, more emotional, with the A-10 you throw out the records, anything can happen."

The last time the Minutewomen met the Owls in the regular season – a 2-1 overtime loss in Philadelphia –Shea was red-carded, resulting in an ejection from the field. After her ejection in the second-half, the Minutewomen rallied to tie the game against stand-out sophomore goalkeeper Erin Hanshue (1.04 goals-against average this season) only to lose on a penalty corner in the extra period.

"All the years that I played as a high school, collegiate [player], and all the years internationally, I never received a card," Shea said. "I asked the umpire a question – which I have the right to do – but he just didn't want to hear it. In regards to legitimacy it was questionable."

The conflict is indicative of the level of intensity during conference play. This afternoon, when UMass takes the field, they play for more than field hockey alone.

"It's not only about field hockey, we're also playing for the pride of the university and Commissioners Cup points," Shea said. "It's me against you, and I want to win more than you do."

On the sidelines, Shea is a vocal, intense leader. A fierce competitor at the highest level of field hockey as a goalkeeper, Shea tries to convey her attitude regarding competition to her players.

"I say to [the players], 'you guys are the best kept secret,'" Shea said. "As coaches we have no control, our control is during the practice. [The players] have complete control of their destiny, they can either seize or it, or let somebody else dictate their consequence.

"My job right now is…to make them understand that they have all the tools to be successful," Shea added. "Sometimes they're afraid of messing up, and by not taking the risks to fail, they're not taking the risk to get better."

Since Shea began her tenure in the 1997 season, the Maroon and White have gone 9-3 against the Owls.

Statistics never account for the human element of sport, they do not communicate emotion and pride that often supersedes the black and white printout of a box score. Today at Garber Field, the Minutewomen turn a new page on the season, and will write their own chapter of a long-standing rivalry, regardless of what the numbers say.

Cross Country teams fight off illnesses weekend. The two finished first and second on the team respectively. They finished sixth overall in New York.

CROSS COUNTRY from page 10

The Minutewomen were led by junior Christina DeRosa. Not too far behind her was a tight pack featuring senior Cuisle Kierans, freshman Lauren Lauzzo and junior Taryn Trapp.

This week they will be running on a familiar course. Most of the runners have run at Franklin Park and some of them have even run the course in high school.

"Franklin Park is a fast course, it has a national reputation. [The] kids know they can run fast when they get there so they come with their engines already running," O'Brien said.

The Minutemen have run strong this season and coach O'Brien is trying to keep the momentum swinging in the right direction.

"It's not unusual for a team to take two steps forward and one step back during the season," O'Brien said. "When you talk about momentum, I think increased team chemistry over the last six weeks is very key to gaining and maintaining momentum."

Recently he has been changing up the way they practice by having the team compete against each other in relay races.

"We had one of our first hard workouts on Tuesday and rather than just doing it as a workout, we did relays," O'Brien noted.

Last year at the New England Championships, the men finished 16th out of 47 teams and the women finished 17th out of 44 teams. The notable finishes from last year were DeRosa finished 21st overall and Durkin finished eighth overall in the sub-varsity race.

Cahoon eyes opportunity for evaluation

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

Tonight at the Mullins Center, the Massachusetts hockey team gets a chance to evaluate its players in a game situation for the first time since Boston University ousted them from the Hockey East playoffs seven months ago.

The Minutemen take on New Brunswick in an exhibition contest beginning at 7 p.m.

UMass faced St. Francis Xavier the past five years, but coach Don Cahoon felt it was time to make a change.

"I don't know much about [the current] New Brunswick [team]. I know about the program, it has been a long standing program in the Canadian league and they've played several programs from our league over the past year," he said. "And we thought we'd switch it up. We've played St. Francis Xavier the past five or six years. So I thought we'd just make a change, face some different bodies and just get into a game circumstance. It gives us a chance to make some evaluations."

In last season's exhibition, the Minutemen defeated St. Francis by a count of 5-2. Stephen Werner scored a pair of goals along with one apiece from P.J. Fenton, Alex Berry, and Jamie Solon. Of the four, only Berry and Fenton remain on the team.

Cahoon's squad has had time to prepare for tonight's matchup. A change in NCAA rules allowed the team to hold practice sessions since the middle of September. Cahoon says the change has given the Minutemen a better chance to prepare for tonight's game, and the rest of the season.

"All things being equal we're way ahead of where we've been in the recent past," he said. "We were actual able to get out on the ice in practice settings for an hour apiece. That's given us a big jump start going into this week."

But Cahoon knows game situations are much different than practice.

"I think we're going to try to get ourselves ready for a game situation for a week from [today – UMass' season-opener]," he said. "Obviously we'll look at more bodies. They also changed the rule in terms of the number of people we can dress for the contest. They extended it from 18 skaters to 21 skaters, so there's a chance to look at a few extra guys. Obviously we'll look at special teams because it's such a pivotal part of what we do. It gives us a starting point and an evaluation in a game situation."

The exhibition may also help answer some questions that surround the Minutemen entering the 2006 season. UMass needs to fill holes left by the graduation of co-captains Werner and defenseman Marvin Degon.

Werner was the Maroon and White's premier scorer for the majority of his four years in Amherst and Degon was an anchor at the blue line and at the point for power-play situations.

A week from today the Minutemen begin their regular season at home. UMass is set to play Clarkson on Friday night and Sacred Heart on Saturday.

Minutewomen must overcome injuries

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

The second big weekend of the Atlantic 10 schedule kicks off on Friday for the Massachusetts women's soccer team. The Maroon and White hope to improve on last weekend's performance when it split two games at Rudd Field.

However, this weekend the Minutewomen will be playing without junior defender Tina Rodriguez, who suffered a devastating knee injury in the loss against La Salle on Sunday. Rodriguez is slated to have surgery in the coming weeks and will miss the rest of the season.

The injury occurred when her knee buckled and she fell to the ground after attempting a cut. The pouring rain and wet conditions on the field contributed to the fall.

Rodriguez has been extremely durable in her two-plus years at UMass. She has never missed a game. Entering this season, she played in all 36 games of her freshman and sophomore campaigns, making all but one start. This season was more of the same for her as she started in all 10 contests.

"Tina is a really important part of our team," senior captain Nadia Villarroel said. "Just having her on the field is comforting. Even though she's hurt, Tina is keeping a positive attitude and will still contribute to the team. She's almost like a coach now on the sideline."

Junior midfielder Jenny Roehrig echoed Villarroel's comments.

"Losing Tina's presence in the back hurts us," she said. "It's a huge loss but we can't let that get us down. We'll play with what we have, and we'll be fine." Although losing Rodriguez's presence and play on the field will be difficult, UMass coach Jim Rudy is confident his players will step up and fill the void that her injury left.

"Losing Rodriguez is a big blow to our team," Rudy said. "But we'll be able to adjust by moving our players around."

Rudy expects a handful of freshman, among others, will step in for Rodriguez, including forwards Sydney Stoll and Cristina Adams and midfielders Meghan Gould and Katie Ruggles.

Rudy remains upbeat going into the weekend due to the leadership that his captains, seniors Stephanie Barrett and Villarroel, bring to his team.

"They're both hardcore kids who want to win," Rudy said about his leaders. "They're hungry for success. Stephanie tends to be the louder one, more demanding. She's the one you hear the most. Nadia does the captaining more behind the scenes and in personal conversations. She's more show by example."

This duo of leadership has helped lead the Minutewomen to a solid 7-3 start thus far in the season. Coming off of a tough loss to La Salle and a key injury, the leadership of a team becomes imperative. The hard work exerted by Barrett and Villarroel doesn't go unnoticed by teammates.

"Stephanie and Nadia lead our team on and off the field," Roehrig said. "They build our team chemistry and help us keep a positive attitude."

Villarroel is confident that the team is heading in the right direction entering another physical weekend against conference opponents Dayton and Xavier.

"We're trying to keep the team positive right now after the loss to La Salle," she said. "We'll try to keep everybody motivated and keep everyone on the team on the same page going into another week of A-10 [games]."

The league games against the Flyers and the Musketeers will prove to be a big test mentally and physically for the Minutewomen this weekend. It will be even more difficult without Rodriguez, but the team will rely on its versatility and senior leadership in an effort to get a leg up in the A-10 standings.

comedy CONNECTION HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
OCT. 13TH
Host of Comedy Central's "Insomniac"
DAVE ATTELL
OCT. 21ST
From NBC's "Studio 60 on the Sunset Strip" and host of Comedy Central's "Weekends at the DL"
D.L. HUGHLEY

Be A Local Hero
Pick Your Own Apples
Apex Orchards
153 Peckville Rd.
Shelburne, MA 01370
Open Daily 9 - 5
Phone (413) 625 - 2744
I-91 to exit 26, Rt. 2 west 3.5 miles
follow the signs to Apex Orchards

Submit A Comic Or You'll Get It!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

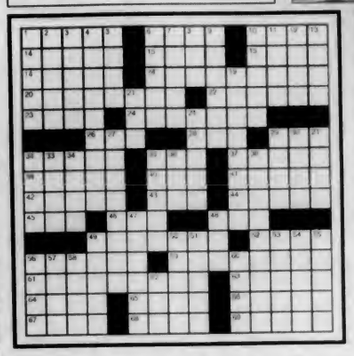
Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		1	5					3
		7		6	8		9	4
					2
5		6			7		8
				5
	7		9			3		6
			2
2	5		8	4		1
7					9	8

ACROSS
1 Explosion
6 Wildcat
10 As well
14 Condor's nest
15 Part of BYOB
16 Thoroughfare
17 Beetle Bailey's boss
18 Stalk tactic
20 Send
22 Preferences
23 "A Day Without Rain" singer
24 Accomplish
26 Gale garb
28 JFK predecessor
29 Crafty critter
32 Waffle topper
35 Get the picture
37 Wide-eyed
39 Clock numbers
40 Sine ___ non
41 Superman's pal Jimmy
42 Tiny hooter
43 WWW address
44 Extremist
45 Catacomban sheer
46 Small battery size
48 Made in the 49 Israeli commune
52 Wilson's predecessor
56 Gandhi of India
59 Jailbird
61 Put back in office
63 Bat free
64 Swindler's victim
65 Lovable Lucas little one
66 Click-on images
67 Bohemian
68 Liars
69 Camp shelters

DOWN
1 Sew loosely
2 Pick up
3 Lay out for show
4 John Hancock
5 Course prep
6 Like sonnets and odes
7 Formative years
8 Sister
9 For adults only
10 Came up
11 Clumsy gal
12 Campus mentis
13 Betting probabilities
19 Very hungry
21 Wright of "Air"
25 Utopian
27 Second floor
29 Clenched hand
30 Composed
31 Lawless princess?
32 Buzz off!
33 Catcher-to-out
34 Govern
36 Nesting pigeon
38 "Over There" cont.
38 Out of the blue
47 Slackened
48 Israeli weapon
49 Like highly curled hair
50 "The Jungle" author Sinclair
51 Arduous journeys
53 Dramatist Chekhov
54 Deceptive move
55 Shock or lock
58 ___-la Doolie?
57 Close at hand
58 Gossip
60 Legal action
62 Feeling of wonder

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

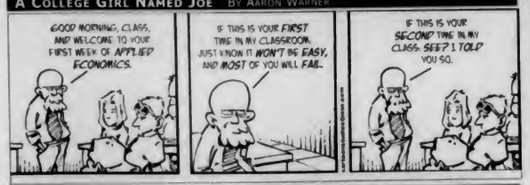


BEST BAR AROUND
Seven O's
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
Live Band
Oct. 7, 2006
Rock 201
At 9:00 pm
Student Band Wanted!!
Call (413)665-7116
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-8788
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
NEXT TO CHIVSEE APTS.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"It is the mark of an educated mind to be able to entertain a thought without accepting it."
—Aristotle

A COLLEGE GIRL NAMED JOE By Aaron Warner



GOOD MORNING, CLASS, AND WELCOME TO YOUR FIRST WEEK OF APPLIED ECONOMICS.
IF THIS IS YOUR FIRST TIME IN MY CLASSROOM, JUST KNOW IT WON'T BE EASY, AND MOST OF YOU WILL FAIL.
IF THIS IS YOUR SECOND TIME IN MY CLASS, SEE? I TOLD YOU SO.

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

I heard the rangers talking about putting a road through here tourists could drive right up and take pictures of us the last thing we need is more tourism I can't handle that kind of stress
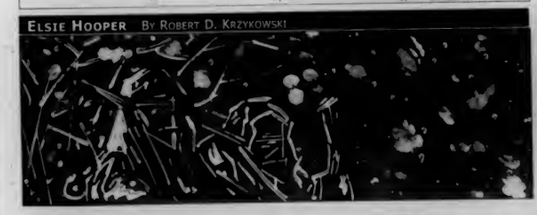
What kind of stress is that?
I'd have to put on a Broadway show for them, or something
Hmmm Which Show?
Are there any owls in Cats?

ECOLOGY By Jen Fill

ELSIE HOOPER By Robert D. Krzykowski



HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Google knows who you are.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Hold in those tears if you really want to be as big and strong as Schwazenegger.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Nine months ago yesterday a newborn's parents were gettin' it on.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
That fast food will get the best of you.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
That baby's name was Juliette Elizabeth Murphy.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
She lives in Montpelier, VT. with two loving parents.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Awkward...

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You are just full of good ideas.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Have a drink to celebrate.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You little scoundrel; you better shape up or ship out.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Things are getting better all the time. Especially after a week like that.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Your family is growing by leaps and babies.

THANK YOU FOR READING
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

All money going to school and none for the weekend? Let us pay you to be a student and learn leadership with Army ROTC www.umass.edu/armyrotc

AUTO FOR SALE

92 Toyota Camry Station Wagon $850 549-9639

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day. Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties… Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

Female PCA Wanted Nights, Evening, weekends. $10.48/hour. Must have transport. Call Martina at (413) 210-6301

EMPLOYMENT

McDonald's Crew Members Needed. Full & part-time openings at Michell Bradley/McDonalds. Competitive wages & salaries plus benefits. Start at $9.62 /hr. Apply at Michell Bradley/McDonalds office at Bradley Int'l Airport, Terminal A, 2-5pm, M-W, or send resume to EHmichell@aol.com Call 203-223-0153 with questions. Entertainment

PT Sales Assoc. positions available in the bakery, deli and produce departments. Evening, weekend, and holiday availability required. Call or email Kelly at 253-9528 kelly@atkins-farms.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

LOST AND FOUND

White Palm Pilot lost 9/21

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SERVICES

Publish or perish! Need to be writing but aren't? I can help with motivation, discipline, and support. Dr Ange DiBenedetto 549-4145

Do you need help filling out your Immigration forms? Do you want advice on arranging documents for filing with the INS? Contact the Student Legal Services office at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

TRAVEL

Travel with STS to this year's top 10 Spring Break destinations! Best deals guaranteed! Highest rep commissions, Visit www.ststravel.com or call 1-800-648-4849 Great group discounts

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

HAPPY BIRTHDAY TARA!

If you see this girl at the bar this weekend, buy her a drink.
She's finally legal!
HAPPY 21ST!
We love you Bags.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 6, 2006

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen down but not out

Kenny Cook (No. 21) and company are trying to bounce back after allowing eight goals last weekend. Rookie Ben Hogan (No. 11) and the rest of the Minutemen have been shutout in five consecutive games.

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After dropping a pair of games in the opening weekend of Atlantic 10 play, the Massachusetts men's soccer team (6-4-2, 0-2 A-10) finds itself in dire need of a win to stay in contention for the A-10 tournament.

The Minutemen are in Dayton (4-5, 0-1 A-10) today to take on the Flyers before visiting Xavier (4-6, 1-0 A-10) on Sunday.

After starting the season 5-0-1, the Minutemen have gone 0-4-1 in their last five games. However, UMass coach Sam Koch said his team is not down, but is hungry for a win.

"Everybody's upbeat because [we're] breathing, we're alive. We're three points out of the playoffs, and we're going to go get those points this weekend."

Last year UMass fell behind early during A-10 play, but pulled off a six-game unbeaten streak to finish the regular season and sneak into the playoffs. Koch is confident this new group of Minutemen can bounce back as well.

"If I wasn't confident [in this team] why would I be coaching?" Koch said. "Is it going to be easy? No. But we can definitely do it, and that's the plan."

UMass did not play either of its upcoming opponents during the 2005 season, making preparation for this weekend's games that much more difficult.

"It's a tough place to play," Koch said of Dayton. "The environment there on a Friday, you certainly don't want to take your first date there. I had words about my mother [yelled] from the crowd."

Clearly Koch expects the crowd to be a factor in today's game, but the Flyers themselves should prove to be a challenge. They fought Saint Louis to a shootout in the semifinals of last year's A-10 tournament, coming within a single goal of the conference championship game.

"They were one of the playoff teams last year, so we're going against one of the top six teams in the conference if you look at last year's schedule," Koch said.

The biggest challenge for the Minutemen will be getting past the imposing Dayton defenders – all but one of the Flyers' backs are taller than six feet – especially considering that UMass has not scored a goal in almost a month.

"They're big in the back," Koch said. "We have to get low-driven balls in the box to be effective, and I think we're doing a better job of

See M. SOCCER on page 8

UMass back to drawing board

BY DANNY PICARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It has been in search of the "golden goal." It has done everything in its power to find that "magical fruit" that everyone has been after.

No, this isn't the sequel to "Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory." It's the story of the Massachusetts men's soccer team, struggling to score goals, and as of late, struggling to keep them out of its own net as well.

Both aspects – allowing and scoring goals – have come hand-in-hand for the Minutemen this season. UMass has allowed eight goals in its last two games, mainly due in part to the team's desire to put the ball in the net.

"We went searching for that golden egg, the goal, and because of that we got stretched a little," assistant coach Jon Davy said. "Because we got stretched, the other teams found pockets of holes. Against La Salle, we got 1-nil down and we hit the crossbar and we hit both posts. Right now, the soccer gods aren't shining on us.

"Once we get that golden goal, there's going to be a huge weight lifted off our guys' shoulders," Davy added. "Then it's fun again, and I think the results come with that."

The Minutemen need results if they plan on playing in the postseason. After a 6-0-1 start, they have gone winless in their last five games, including the first two Atlantic 10 contests.

More astonishingly, UMass allowed only one goal in its first seven games of the season, compared to the eight scores given up in the last two matches. On the other side, the Minutemen have been held scoreless their last five matches. Something seems to have gone terribly wrong for the Maroon and White.

The team that once relied on solid defense to secure early-season victories now finds itself in a 0-2 hole in conference competition. The combination of a poor defense and an invisible offense in the past two games are cause for concern, which is why the Minutemen have gone back to their original Bible: defense.

"More than anything, we have to just get back to what we were doing before, and that is playing solid defense," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "We need to stay patient. If you go down a goal, that's not the end of the world. We need to stay patient and compact, and we'll get the goal.

"We were putting more people forward too early," he added. "And we're not a good enough team defensively to do that, which we obviously saw

See BASICS on page 8

Flyers unfamiliar foe for Minutewomen

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's soccer team (7-3) will finish up its homestand this weekend with a matchup against Dayton (3-3-3) today and one versus the Xavier Musketeers (5-7) on Sunday.

Friday's game will be UMass' first against the Dayton Flyers in three years. In 2003 the Minutewomen suffered a frustrating 1-0 loss. The lone goal was scored in the game's 43rd minute by junior midfielder Tessa Kozlowski.

By 2006, however, Kozlowski and many of that squad's other key components, such as fellow midfielder Katie Lowsmatter, have been lost to graduation.

But, a new generation of Flyers has made residence in Dayton, Ohio, and UMass coach Jim Rudy has spent all week preparing his players for it.

"[Freshman forward-midfielder] Mandi Back has done some damage for them, but they're playing so many people – it's amazing," Rudy said. "They have 24 people who have started for them this year."

Rudy also paid kudos to freshman forward Caitlin Proffitt, who has recorded two goals and an assist thus far.

But, Rudy knows he has a talented bunch of players himself and expects every one of them to contribute.

Junior forward Britt Canfield is the Maroon and White's leading scorer and has developed a flare for the dramatic.

"Britt's only a threat," Rudy said. "She'd be having what looks like a bad day and the next thing you know she's stuck one in the net."

Rudy mentioned that he is a little concerned about the beating Canfield's body has taken the last few games – especially last Sunday against La Salle.

The Granville, Mass., native was knocked to the ground repeatedly by the Explorers, who are notorious for their physical play.

"It was a hard game that was just below violent," Rudy commented. "I think the word's out – watch No. 10. She has definitely taken her licks this year."

Canfield has registered five goals and two assists this season for a combined total of 12 points.

Second on the team in the goals category is sophomore forward Vanessa Patry. She has 10 points on four goals and two assists this season.

"She's a smart kid out there," Rudy said. "She's winning air balls for us, winning headers, getting balls connected and occasionally getting through and getting her cracks on the goal."

The 19-year-old, who scored on the first shot of her collegiate career in 2005, is looking to heal some of the heartbreak of losing to rival La Salle.

"It was a deep burn," Patry said. "We worked hard and everything – things just didn't go our way. We had some opportunities, but the ball just didn't roll our way that day."

What added salt to the Minutewomen's wounds was seeing one of their teammates, junior midfielder/defender Tina Rodriguez, go down with an injury.

While fighting for a ball with a La Salle player, Rodriguez tumbled hard to the turf and immediately began clutching her knee. She was scheduled for some tests to determine what would happen in regards to her playing time, but Rudy admits that it doesn't look good.

Also on Sunday's casualty list was junior defender Christina Nunes. She was removed from the game due to a bloody chin as a result of a La Salle elbow. The cut required five stitches, but she is expected to play today.

In Rodriguez's absence, Rudy will probably adjust Patry's positioning on the field, making way for freshman Sydney Stoll to make her first collegiate start.

The 5-foot-4-inch forward is a first-year student from Dedham, Mass., and is the only freshman to score a goal for UMass this season.

Rudy says he expects all of his players will contribute today and try to finish off the season's homestretch with a bang.

The Minutewomen will still be mending their wounds when they prepare for Xavier on Sunday, but Rudy says that his players are ready for anything.

With the injury to Tina Rodriguez, freshman Sydney Stoll (above) gets the call this weekend. She is the only rookie to record a goal for UMass.

UM begins A-10 play at Garber Field

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts field hockey team (3-8) attempts to avoid yet another losing streak this weekend as they welcome the Temple Owls to Garber Field on Friday, and the Saint Joseph's Hawks on Sunday.

Still reeling from an uninspired performance in last Friday's overtime loss to Syracuse, the Minutewomen look to get back on stride as they begin the crucial Atlantic 10 portion of their schedule – seven of the team's remaining nine games are against conference opponents.

Historically, the Minutewomen have faired well against both of these programs, posting a remarkable 28-8 record when squaring off with Temple, including a victory over the Owls in last year's conference tournament. Against St. Joe's they have an equally impressive 20-2 mark.

UMass' success against these conference foes from Philadelphia is something that UMass coach Patty Shea takes great pleasure in.

"Philly has always been sort of the hotbed of field hockey," Shea said. "So it has always been a source of pride for the New England schools to take care of the Philly schools. It's a good, strong, and healthy rivalry."

Temple (9-3) is in the midst

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 8

CHRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

Erin O'Brien and the Minutewomen begin conference play today against Temple. O'Brien is third on the team in scoring with three goals.

New Englands important to Cross Country

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts cross country teams will be running this Saturday at the New England Championships in Boston. Franklin Park is the site that will host teams from all over New England, including Division II and III schools.

Last week the Minutemen were stricken with the flu, and as a result only half the team traveled to New York for the Meet of Champions. They placed sixth out of 20 teams. This week they will run at full strength with no serious injuries. The Minutewomen finished 9th overall last weekend.

"It's seemed to moderate in the last seven or eight days, they have appeared to have recovered," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said about his team's sickness.

The race itself will feature over 45 schools and it's too large to run one men's race and one women's race. The women sub-varsity will run first, followed by the women varsity. The men will run after the women, also in two groups, sub-varsity and varsity.

"It's a bigger meet because it's big, there are over 45 teams in New England," O'Brien noted. "It's an unusual athletic event in that it's probably one of the few, if not the only conference, in the country where division I, Division II and Division III all compete on the same stage. And that's rare and that makes it fun."

This meet has a lot of meaning for the team in terms of how UMass matches up with the rest of New England, however O'Brien knows it's only mid-season.

"Any meet that's six weeks before the final meet can't be that big, every game is big but the games at the end of the year are bigger. This is a really exciting start to the second half of the season, which is championship season," O'Brien said.

The Minutemen are excited and look at this race as one of the more important races of the season.

"This weekend coming up, we're looking at this as one of the top two big meets of the year – New England's and the A-10 meet," junior Ryan Durkin said.

Junior Nils Fischer and sophomore Jesse Regnier led the Minutemen last

See CROSS COUNTRY on page 8

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

The Oakland A's have lost nine [illegible] when they had a chance to clinch a [illegible]. The streak – occurring during the [illegible] – is the longest in MLB history.

Not Published

Holiday

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 67 LO: 46 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2006

Two UMass athletes arrested for fighting

Christopher C. Lowe is a point guard on the UMass basketball team.

Nana O. Ampim was arrested for disorderly conduct.

Two University of Massachusetts basketball players were arrested after a fight in front of a local coffee shop in downtown Amherst this weekend.

Christopher C. Lowe Jr., 19, of Mount Vernon, N.J., and Nana O. Ampim, 20, who has addresses in Kendall Park, N.J., and London, England, were arrested shortly after 1 a.m. on Oct. 6 and face charges of disorderly conduct.

An officer witnessed at least nine people punching and kicking a 21-year-old Lawrence man in front of a Starbucks, according to a police report.

Ampim, Lowe, and Andrew Martin Walker Jr., 21, of Brooklyn, N.Y., were arrested after they failed to obey the officer's orders to stop fighting, police said.

The victim suffered cuts and bruises, but declined medical attention, police said.

Ampim and Lowe are scheduled to be arraigned today in Eastern Hampshire District Court.

Lowe, a sophomore point guard on the UMass men's basketball team, averaged six points, 4.9 assists and a team-high 31 minutes per game as a freshman.

Ampim was a walk-on who played in four games last season.

Since Travis Ford took the reins as head coach of the team in March 2005, four arrests have been made within the basketball program.

Senior center Stephane Lasme was arrested on March 5, 2006 for disorderly conduct and resisting arrest outside of a bar in downtown Amherst. Lasme was fined $200 and was convicted on a "non-criminal charge of resisting arrest."

Massachusetts men's basketball assistant coach Steve Middleton pleaded innocent this April after being arrested when police were called to his house on High Street in Amherst after a "physical altercation with a woman," who was not identified by the authorities. The woman sustained minor physical injuries.

Matt Belliveau

Study deems sexual education program at UMass substandard

UMass received a 1.3 on a 4.0 scale in a recent report assessing the quality of sexual health education at colleges and universities across the nation.

By Emily Reynolds
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts received a 1.3 on a scale of 4.0 when it came to sexual health on a report done by Sperling's Best Places and Trojan brand condoms.

According to the Trojan Sexual Health Report Card, the study based its results on seven factors: an informative and helpful Web site, condom advice and availability, HIV and STD testing, sexual assault counseling and services, an advice column or Q&A feature in the student newspaper, campus events and other outreach, and contraception types, description, use, and effectiveness.

"We wanted to put ourselves in the position of a college student looking for information, because we believe it's important to have as much information as possible when it comes to making a decision," said Bert Sperling, president of Sperling's Best Places.

There was at least one school from every state in the study, and schools received a numeric grade out of 10, which was then changed into a letter grade, and finally calculated using a 4.0 scale.

UMass received a 1.3, failing in the categories of advice column and condom availability. The website received a D, and each of the other four categories received a grade of C.

"The access to information was limited," Sperling said, which may be why UMass received such poor grades when in fact the school met all of the expectations except for having an advice column.

"We don't feel that it accurately describes our program at all," said Amanda Collings Van, a Community Health and Patient Educator at University Health Services. "They were only looking at our Web site. Our Web site is under construction, but we offer everything at UHS."

Although UMass received an F in condom availability, it seems to be the strong suit. There are tables in the Campus Center and at the Dining Commons that distribute condoms. UHS gives out bags of condoms and condom kits to Resident Assistants twice a semester, and more often if it is requested. Condoms are also available at UHS and through programs like the Not Ready for Bedtime Players.

"Health services provide bags for the RAs to put up for people to have access to them," said Assistant Residence Director Colby Fisher. "RAs usually go back for more because they know that students utilize them."

RAs play a large role in sex education on campus as well. Not only do they usually have condoms hanging on their doors, but they also provide programs for students to take part in.

"They are asked to do educational programming, and it is usually sex education," said Fisher. "There have already been two Sex Pictionary programs so far this semester."

Different methods of contraception are also available at UHS, although they may not be mentioned on its Web site.

"We are a fully accredited health center, and we have doctors that prescribe all FDA-approved contraceptives," says Collings Van.

Additional types of counseling services can be found at UHS, and the contact information is also on the Web site under general directory, along with information for STD testing.

Collings Van also believes that other schools were unfairly rated. "Some of the schools placed above us don't have as much outreach, and some schools that received lower grades have excellent programs," she said.

Additional information about the study can be found on the Trojan brand condoms Web site, trojancondoms.com.

North Korea announces first-ever nuclear weapons testing

North Korea announced its first-ever nuclear weapons test, claiming it set off a successful underground blast despite international warnings against the communist regime Monday, Oct. 9, 2006.

By Matt Belliveau and Anna Dollanitis
Collegian Staff

North Korea sent shock waves across the world Monday after announcing that it had set off an atomic explosion underground.

North Korea's declaration of nuclear power thrusts the secretive communist state into the elite club of nuclear-armed nations and, in turn, strikes fear into many American citizens, including the students at the University of Massachusetts.

The United States, Japan, China, and Britain unanimously voiced their intense criticism of North Korea's actions, with President Bush saying the reported test poses a threat to global peace and security and "deserves an immediate response" from the U.N. Security Council, which met to discuss the crisis.

Bush said he had called the leaders of South Korea, China, Russia, and Japan, and all had reaffirmed a commitment to a non-nuclear Korean peninsula.

The reported test came one day after the ninth anniversary of reclusive North Korean leader Kim Jong Il's accent to power.

Members of the 15-nation Security Council were unanimous in denouncing the claim amid worldwide concern that it could seriously destabilize the region, with even North Korean ally China saying it strongly opposed to the move.

The Security Council had warned the impoverished and isolated nation just two days earlier not to go through with a test, and U.S. Ambassador John Bolton told the Associated Press that Washington will seek U.N. sanctions to curb North Korea's import and export of material for weapons of mass destruction, as well as its illicit financial activities.

UMass junior Stefanie Colish thinks North Korea's actions are a sign of U.S. failure in foreign policy.

"I'm worried, because I think it shows that America's foreign policy hasn't worked or their dealings have not worked in North Korea," said Colish. "I'd be more worried if I found out that North Korea had the ability to launch their nuclear weapon."

Bolton and key U.S. allies, including Britain and France, said they would seek a resolution under Chapter 7 of the U.N. Charter that would seek punishing measures, going beyond the limited sanctions in a measure adopted by the council in July after North Korea conducted seven missile tests.

"I think it would be very interesting to see how the United Nations and international community react, because military strategy will not work in the situation obviously because they have a nuclear weapon now," said Colish.

The Bush administration has repeatedly said it has no plans to invade North Korea and military action appears unlikely. But the United States proposed stringent U.N. sanctions on Monday, including a trade ban on military and luxury items, the power to inspect all cargo entering or leaving the country, and freezing assets connected with Pyongyang's weapons programs, according to a copy of the draft obtained by The Associated Press.

North Korea's U.N. ambassador Pak Gil Yon said the Security Council should congratulate his country instead of passing "useless" resolutions or statements.

AP Television News footage showed North Koreans going about their daily business with no signs of heightened alert by security forces in Pyongyang on Monday, hours after their government said it performed a nuclear weapons test.

Bush told the media that the United States was still attempting to confirm that a nuclear test had actually taken place. Still, he said, "such a claim itself constitutes a threat to international peace and security."

China, the North's closest ally and its main source of food, expressed its "resolute opposition" to the reported test and urged the North to return to six-

See N. KOREA on page 3

Local residents confront students

Through the first three weekends of the school year, 116 arrests were made with offenses including alcohol violations, disorderly conduct, operating under the influence, noise disturbances, and drug infractions.

By Chris Hynes
Collegian Staff

Amherst residents gathered at the Campus Center on Sept. 21, alongside University of Massachusetts officials, students, and members of the police and town officials, to discuss the rowdy behavior exhibited by students during the opening months of the school year.

The forum – a continuation of a discussion that was brought up during a Select Board meeting at the Town Hall – brought to light some of the problems facing residents of Amherst, such as public urination, screaming, speeding vehicles, and vandalism.

"It's getting to the point where I'll have to take legal action," said Alan Root, a 73-year-old who resides on Kellogg Avenue. "It goes beyond kids having a good time."

The Amherst Police Department seems to agree. Through the first three weekends of the school year, 116 arrests were made with offenses including alcohol violations, disorderly conduct, operating under the influence, noise disturbances, and drug infractions.

However, residents believe there's more room for improvement from UMass.

See RESIDENTS on page 3

Gastronomist
Tango dancer*
Wine connoisseur

Learn more about Xavier Flores and tell us more about you. Visit pwc.com/bringit.

Your life. You can bring it with you.

*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Students voice fears of nuclear weapons party nuclear disarmament talks.

N. KOREA from page 1

It said the North "defied the universal opposition of international society and flagrantly conducted the nuclear test."

"It will be interesting to see how China reacts to North Korea having nuclear weapons," said UMass sophomore Dennis Scott. "I think China will definitely be leading the way in the strategy to prevent North Korea from becoming a really big nuclear power."

Reports about the size of the explosion were conflicting. Russia said the blast was a nuclear explosion, but the reaction of world governments reflected little doubt that they were treating the announcement as fact.

"We have no doubts that it [the test] was nuclear," Russian Defense Minister Sergei Ivanov said.

The U.S. Geological Survey said it recorded a magnitude 4.2 seismic event in northeastern North Korea. Asian neighbors also said they registered a seismic event, and an official of South Korea's monitoring center said the magnitude 3.6 tremor wasn't a natural occurrence.

Although North Korea has long claimed it had the capability to produce a bomb, the test would be the first manifest proof that it had done so. A nuclear-armed North Korea would dramatically alter the strategic balance of power in the Pacific region and would undermine already fraying global anti-proliferation efforts.

The North has refused for a year to attend six-party international talks aimed at persuading it to disarm, calling for the United States to drop sanctions it has imposed to it for alleged counterfeiting and money laundering.

Some American's fear North Korea's action may be the start of another full-blown war.

"I feel like testing nuclear weapons was not a good idea at all," said Scott. "The United States should attempt to enter talks with North Korea, along with the other countries in the area. If nothing happens with that, I think there is a potential for war and I fear there will be rebound effects that may exist in the Middle East, like Iran, where the potential for nuclear weapons exists.

"If this happens, then everyone is screwed," Scott added. "Because these leaders are ridiculously crazy and there will be destruction and war. If the United States is involved then there will be a draft, and I'm not looking forward to this happening."

North Korea's leader, Kim Jong Il, announced the nuclear testing.

Townhouse parties draw hundreds

RESIDENTS from page 1

"I think the University has got to deal more severely with students causing problems in and around campus," Root said. He believes that students making trouble off campus should be disciplined simultaneously by the law and by the University.

Root even believes he has a solution that could help quell the problem.

"If the UMass police force and Amherst Police force could come to each others benefit during evening hours, it could help ease each other's workload," he said.

The Townhouse Apartments on Meadow Street have long been known for enormous parties inside and outside of the apartments, and have recently been demonized by the local media as one of the locations of raucous student partying.

"The news report made it look like there was trash everywhere," said Evan Panesis, a second-year resident of the Townhouse Apartments.

Even non-students can see the silver lining in a Townhouse party. After one party last year in the quad, a woman came around collecting cans to turn in for the Hurricane Katrina relief fund.

Of course, trash isn't the only problem the residents of Amherst have with their student neighbors. Throughout any night stretching from Thursday through Saturday, hundreds of students from on campus make their party crawl throughout much of Amherst.

Senior Matt Reid, who is also a second-year resident in the Townhouse Apartments, says that at times this can become unfair.

"We can't always control the kids just roaming around the quads. Sometimes you can get notices for parties that happen near your apartment even when you're not there," he said.

Overall, however, the student residents have a positive outlook on the Townhouses.

"It's a great spot for students to live off campus," said Reid. "It's so close to so many things — Pufflon, Hobart — and the bus systems let you get to and from campus real easily."

"Where else can you practice flag football in your backyard and grill on Sundays?" said Panesis.

Reid and Panesis both said they could "understand where the residents are coming from" when voicing their complaints, but they wouldn't count on any major changes occurring any time soon.

"You should expect it to be loud on weekends," said Panesis. "It's been like that for years."

"The huge parties are a great experience for a freshman or someone visiting from another school," said Reid. "When I see someone wide-eyed, seeing a huge party like that, it's just fun. I live for that."

Google to buy video-sharing site YouTube for $1.65 billion

The deal for the sale of YouTube to Google is scheduled to be finalized in the fourth quarter of this year. The company will retain its brand and its 67 current employees.

By Michael Liedtke
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Google Inc. is snapping up YouTube Inc. for $1.65 billion in a deal that catapults the Internet search leader to a starring role in the online video revolution.

The all-stock deal announced Monday unites one of the Internet's marquee companies with one of its rapidly rising stars. It came just hours after YouTube unveiled three agreements with media companies in an apparent bid to escape the threat of copyright-infringement lawsuits.

The price makes YouTube, a still-unprofitable startup, by far the most expensive purchase made by Google during its eight-year history.

Although some cynics have questioned YouTube's staying power, Google is betting that the popular Web site will provide it an increasingly lucrative marketing hub as more viewers and advertisers migrate from television to the Internet.

"We are natural partners to offer a compelling media entertainment service to users, content owners and advertisers," said Eric Schmidt, Google's chief executive officer.

YouTube will continue to retain its brand, as well as all 67 employees, including co-founders Chad Hurley and Steve Chen. The deal is expected to

See YOUTUBE on page 5

Mass. judge approves same-sex wedding

By Brandie M. Jefferson
Associated Press

ATTLEBORO, Mass. — A group of about 50 people gathered Sunday for a wedding ceremony at Capron Park in Attleboro.

The setting was basic — a few flower arrangements, a dozen folding chairs. The couple's 3-year-old son, Mickey, was the ring bearer. Their daughter, 6-year-old Hannah, the flower girl. It was 70 degrees, sunny, and there wasn't a

See MARRIAGE on page 5

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 25

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belenger
Managing Editor Eric Asher
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sheryl Welsh
Advertising Manager Jamison Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eagleston
Editorial Production Virginia Nielsen
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Sean Durum
Editorial Editor Kristen LaCasse
News Editor Matt Bellveau
Sports Editor Rob Greenfield
Circulation Manager Jeff Pentz
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wilbeck
Assistant Advertising Theresa Barbo
Assistant Business Phil Smuller
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Alex Beitler
Assistant News Anna Dellanikis
Assistant News Nicole Bonnjohnakul
Assistant Sports Danny Picard
Assistant Sports Jon Pelland
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Tom Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar year. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been independent since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413)545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

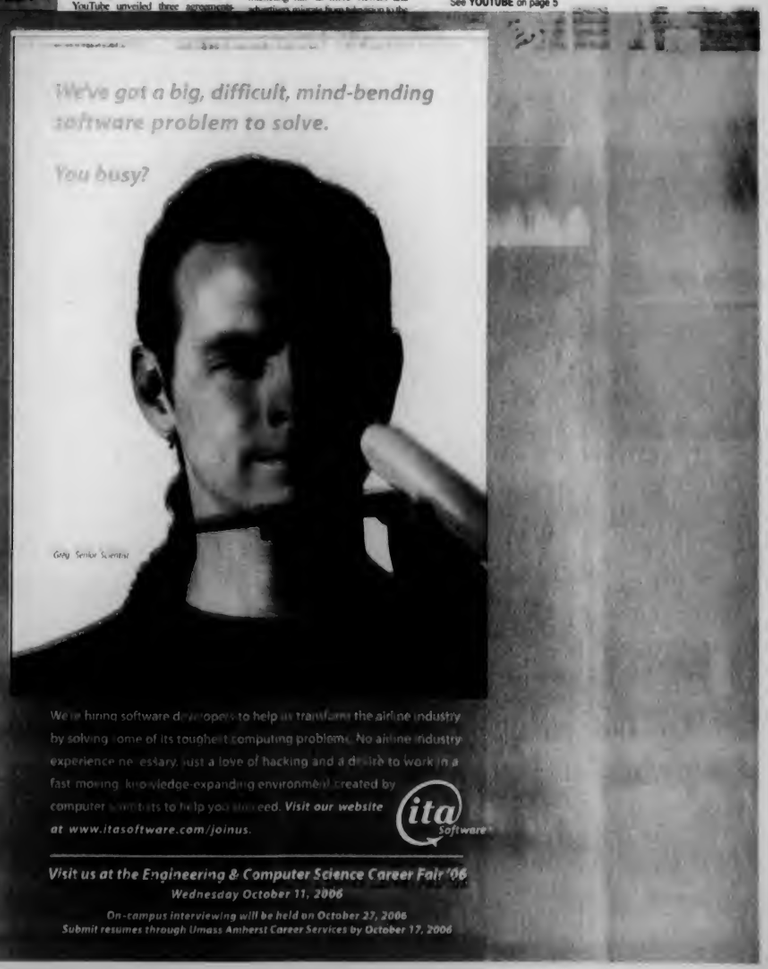
Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Rob Greenfield

COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Amanda Allen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sean Duram, Matt Bellveau



We're hiring software developers to help us transform the airline industry by solving some of its toughest computing problems. No airline industry experience necessary. Just a love of hacking and a desire to work in a fast moving, knowledge-expanding environment created by computer scientists to help you succeed. Visit our website at www.itasoftware.com/joinus.

ita software

Visit us at the Engineering & Computer Science Career Fair '06
Wednesday October 11, 2006
On-campus interviewing will be held on October 27, 2006
Submit resumes through Umass Amherst Career Services by October 17, 2006

Kerry lashes out at conservative interest group

Senator John Kerry berated the Swift Boat Veterans for Truth, a conservative interest group, on Sunday, Oct. 8, 2006. The organization questioned his service as a decorated veteran in the Vietnam War during his run for the presidency in 2004.

By Mike Glover
Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — Massachusetts Sen. John Kerry lashed out Sunday against a group that bashed him during his last run at the White House.

Kerry, who made a weekend appearance in northwest Iowa, said he is concerned that Swift Boat Veterans for Truth is again resorting to "the politics of fear and smear."

The group, financed by Texas conservatives, ran commercials questioning his record of being a decorated Vietnam veteran — the centerpiece of his presidential campaign in 2004.

"We're not going to give them an ounce of daylight," said Kerry, who is considering another run at the Democratic presidential nomination in 2008.

The senator said his response to the commercials was not strong enough.

"We thought the fact that the truth was out there was enough," he said. "Clearly it wasn't."

Those same conservatives have formed another group this year — Economic Freedom Fund — and are attacking Democrats across the country. Part of the campaign includes $500,000 to bash Rep. Leonard Boswell, D-Iowa, who is seeking re-election in the 3rd District in central Iowa.

Boswell is being challenged by state Republican Senate President Jeff Lamberti of Ankeny in a race that has included significant cash from both parties.

Boswell retired after 20 years in the Army, including two tours in Vietnam as a helicopter pilot. But the conservative group has chosen to focus on issues ranging from higher taxes to immigration. Part of the group's money is also funding an automated telephone campaign against Boswell.

Kerry said his experience in Iowa has taught him that the group's message won't sway voters.

Advocates promote use of safe haven law

By Ken Maguire
Associated Press

BOSTON — A newborn abandoned in a Boston backyard showed improvement under medical care Monday while advocates of the state's "safe haven" law called for more advertising to educate young mothers about the law.

The law allows parents to bring their newborns to a police station, fire station, or hospital without fear of prosecution.

The boy, named "Baby Jordan," was within 1.5 miles of a hospital and three Boston police stations when he was discovered Sunday morning behind a home in Roslindale.

"There needs to be more awareness" of the law, said Boston City Councilor John Tobin Jr., whose youngest brother, Patrick, was adopted after being abandoned as an infant. "With all the resources around, to leave him unattended ... it's mind-boggling."

The boy remained in the neonatal intensive care unit at Children's Hospital, where his condition was upgraded from critical to serious on Monday morning, hospital spokeswoman Andrea Duggan said.

Baby Jordan was the second baby abandoned in Massachusetts in the past six months, despite the safe haven law. A newborn boy was found in April in a trash bin in Westfield, allegedly left there by his mother, who has been charged with attempted murder.

The Legislature appropriated $200,000 for a promotional campaign after the law took effect nearly two years ago, but it's been spent, said Department of Social Services spokeswoman Denise Monteiro. The agency and supporters have raised some funds to keep posters available, but they need more, she said.

"We have no money to do a media campaign," Monteiro said.

Mike Morrisey, co-founder of Baby Safe Haven New England, said advocates need to get more creative, such as using YouTube, a company that lets people share videos through the Web.

"You can put video up of almost anything," said Morrisey, whose organization volunteers time to help DSS promote the law. "We could get high school and college kids to make their own [public service announcements] and put them all over the Web."

Since the law took effect, three babies have been surrendered under the safe haven law, while two have been abandoned, Monteiro said. Thirteen babies were abandoned in the four years before the law took effect last fall, and six of them died, Morrisey said.

"We've stopped a lot of the abandonments by using the hotlines," Morrisey said. "Women call when they're pregnant and get the help they need with counseling."

The baby abandoned in Westfield is "thriving" despite being discarded in the trash April 16, Monteiro said. Amanda Harris, 23, pleaded not guilty to charges including attempted murder.

Gas price decrease won't last

By E. Ashley Wright
The California Aggie (U.C. Davis)

DAVIS, Calif. — Although consumers may be pleased with the price breaks they have recently received at the gas pumps, oil-consumption experts warn that the long-term effects of depletion may result in higher prices in the near future.

Several explanations for the lower prices, down $0.077 per gallon since last week and $0.290 since October 2005, have been given since costs dipped below $3 per gallon, one of which is political.

With the mid-term elections approaching, Democratic Party candidates and critics have speculated that the Republican administration is manipulating prices to offset criticism of the party's stringent energy platform.

However, according to David Odeger, a member of the University of California at Davis geology department and former geologist for the Gulf Oil Corporation, the price of oil-per-barrel is constantly fluctuating and cannot be accounted for by any particular factor.

"The thing about oil prices is that it is so utterly unpredictable," he said. "There is no real grand scheme of setting the price of gas at the pump. It is all a reaction to global events and the rapidity of changes regarding issues in the Middle East, the repairing of pipelines in Alaska, Venezuela's president, and numerous other things."

Odeger added that he feels gas prices could not realistically be affected by political motivations.

"There are so many variables that go into prices at the pump that I cannot conceive a way that the Republican administration could manipulate price," he said.

John Theobald, chairperson of the University of California's Oil Forum

See GAS on page 5

Trial witness claims prison abuse

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — The genocide trial of Saddam Hussein resumed Monday with testimony that his troops buried prisoners alive and abused female prisoners by shackling them for hours in the sun and firing over their heads as they bathed.

Saddam and his six co-defendants are on trial for offenses allegedly committed against Iraqi Kurds during a crackdown in the late 1980s. If convicted, the defendants could be sentenced to death by hanging.

One woman, who testified behind a curtain and whose name was withheld apparently for fear of reprisal, told the court she was 13 years old when she was detained during the crackdown.

The woman said Iraqi troops destroyed her village in northern Iraq in 1988 and that she and some family members were imprisoned in southern Iraq.

A prison warden she identified as Hajaj "used to drag women, their hands and feet shackled, and leave them in scorching sun for several hours," she told the court.

"Soldiers used to watch us bathe," she added, saying the guards would also fire weapons over the women's heads as they washed.

The woman said several relatives disappeared during the offensive.

"I know the fate of my family [members]. They were buried alive," she testified.

The prosecution presented the court with documents showing that remains of the women's relatives turned up in a mass grave.

"I'd like to ask Saddam: 'what crime did women and children commit?'" the witness said.

The court heard from three other witnesses, including farmer Abdul-Hadi Abdullah Mohammed, who testified that his mother had died in detention. Several other family members went missing in 1988 and are presumed dead, he added.

Jalil Lateef Saleh, 64, said he, his wife and young daughters were arrested in 1988 after an attack on their village. Prison guards separated him from his family and he has not seen them since, he said.

"They tore up my identity card and threw it into my face telling me that I was an Iranian and didn't deserve the Iraqi ID," he testified.

Another woman said she lost three children while in detention in 1988 and her husband went "insane" after being tortured "by being beaten on his head."

The woman, whose name was also withheld, said her husband survived but was paralyzed.

"The traces of whips remained on his body one year after his detention," she said. "I don't know what was my fault or that of my husband to have endured all that. My daughter died in prison, while my two sons were buried in mass graves."

Saddam and his cousin, "Chemical" Ali Hassan al-Majid, are facing charges of genocide in the trial. Five others on trial face charges of war crimes and crimes against humanity.

Saddam and the other defendants sat silently as the trial resumed after a 12-day break. They were not represented by lawyers.

Chief defense lawyer Khalil al-

See TRIAL on page 5

Saddam Hussein's genocide trial resumed Monday, Oct. 9 with accusations of prison abuse by female prisoners.

California growers search for 250 cartons of recalled lettuce

By Juliana Barbassa
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The company that recalled its lettuce after irrigation water tested positive for E. coli scrambled Monday to locate 250 remaining cartons of the greens, which could be scattered across seven Western states.

On Sunday, Nunes Co. recalled more than 8,500 cartons of green leaf lettuce grown on one farm in the Salinas Valley, the agricultural region at the center of the contaminated-spinach outbreak that killed three people and made 199 others sick.

By Monday morning, all but 250 cartons of the lettuce distributed under the Foxy brand between Oct. 3 and Oct. 6 had been located and were being destroyed, company president Tom Nunes said.

The search continued for the remaining cartons, which Nunes said were believed to be in supermarkets or restaurants in Arizona, California, Nevada, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and Montana.

"If we can get it all back, I'll be a happy camper," Nunes said, emphasizing that the recall was precautionary since there had been no evidence of E. coli on the lettuce, or any reports of illnesses.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration commended the company for being proactive.

"Clearly, the company did the right thing in terms of taking the proper approach in not putting the public at risk and initiating a voluntary recall," Dr. David Acheson, chief medical officer in the FDA's Center for Food Safety and Applied Nutrition, told reporters Monday.

Acheson said the lettuce recall does not appear to be related to the contaminated-spinach outbreak.

The recall was issued for lettuce sold as "Green Leaf 24 Count, waxed carton," and "Green Leaf 18 Count, cellophane sleeve, returnable carton," and stamped with lot code 6SL0024.

The grower had relied on a backup reservoir to supplement irrigation water drawn from a regularly tested well.

Once bacteria were found in the reservoir, Nunes decided not to wait for test results to find out if the lettuce itself was contaminated, or if the E. coli — a common bacteria — was of a dangerous strain. Such tests can take at least two days.

"We knew the bad stuff could be in there," Nunes said. "We had a very good chance of stopping it before it hit the shelves."

The family-owned company grows more than 20,000 acres of vegetables in Arizona and California and has never had problems of this sort, Nunes said.

Last month, a deadly strain of E. coli was found in spinach packaged by Natural Selection Foods LLC of San Juan Bautista.

The dangerous strain can be found in animal and human feces.

It can be transmitted to produce through contaminated water, inadequate hygiene on the farm or at the packing plant, and animals wandering into fields.

North Area Government Elections

Nomination Forms are now available in the SGA

Nomination Forms are Due by Oct. 16th 2006 at 5pm

Elections are on Oct. 23rd 2006
10am-2pm
4pm-7pm
Polling Stations @ the Security Desk in all the Buildings

Any Questions: Priyanka Pant
@ ppant@student.umass.edu
Monday: 3-6pm
Tuesday: 5-7pm
Wednesday: 3-7pm

Hussein may face death penalty

TRIAL from page 3

Dulaimi said Sunday that the defense team would continue to boycott the trial to protest the removal of the first chief judge, and the court's refusal to give the attorneys time to examine thousands of documents.

Chief Judge Mohammed Oreibi al-Khalifa declared a recess Sept. 26 after a stormy session in which Saddam and his co-defendants were thrown out of court.

The judge said he wanted to give the defendants time to persuade their lawyers to end their boycott of the trial, or to confer with new ones.

Saddam has insisted that the crackdown, known as Operation Anfal, was directed against Kurdish rebels who were allied with Iran in the 1980-88 Iran-Iraq war. But the prosecution maintains that about 180,000 people, most of them civilians, were killed in the crackdown, during which Iraq forces used poison gas against Kurdish villages.

The ex-president and seven co-defendants are awaiting a verdict in another trial — for the deaths of 148 Shiite Muslims following an assassination attempt against him in 1982 in the town of Dujail.

That trial adjourned July 27 to allow a five-judge panel to consider a verdict. The court is due to reconvene on Oct. 16, but court officials say a verdict is not expected then.

Saddam could also receive the death penalty if convicted in the Dujail case.

Last week, former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, a member of Saddam's defense team, told reporters in Washington that a bloodbath would follow should an Iraqi court order Saddam's execution.

Associated Press writers Bushra Juhi reported from Baghdad and Jamal Halaby from Amman, Jordan.

—Associated Press

Experts suggest alternative fuel

Experts say that the cost of oil will continue to fluctuate, but will eventually resume its upward trend.

GAS from page 4

and professor at UC Davis, said politics are often involved in petroleum-based energy issues.

"That may be a factor, but not an important one," he said. "I would concede that some political manipulation of price is possible, but the important point is that prices will be rising in the long run."

According to Theobald, the expectation of a long-term increase in gas prices does not equate to Americans paying less right now.

"We can expect a lot of fluctuation because markets don't go up or down in a straight line," he said. "But consumers should expect the price of oil products to increase significantly in the coming years regardless of short-term drops in price."

Regardless of oil prices, experts contend that the future of worldwide energy consumption will be in conservation and alternative fuels. Research efforts such as those at UC Davis hope to be at the forefront of such discoveries.

Theobald said that while oil is the most convenient fuel in terms of its form at room-temperature and usability, alternative energies are crucial to fulfilling future energy needs.

"It's important that people understand the importance of finding alternatives to oil," he said. "We need several long-range alternatives, not just one or two viable options. It is also about conservation. We need to study a range of different subject areas."

Odeger said Americans that have expressed frustration with the price of gas may not realize that costs are comparatively low.

"The prices we pay are extraordinarily low relative to a comparable amount of any other fluid, like water or orange juice," Odeger said. "The reality is we still pay a very reasonable amount. If gas kept pace with inflation and the amount of oil left in the ground, then we would actually be paying a lot more."

YouTube's worldwide audience increases from 2.8 to 72.1 million close in the fourth quarter of this year.

YOUTUBE from page 3

"I'm confident that with this partnership we'll have the flexibility and resources needed to pursue our goal of building the next-generation platform for serving media worldwide," said Hurley, YouTube's 29-year-old CEO.

While most videos posted on YouTube are homemade, the site also features volumes of copyrighted material — a problem that has caused some critics to predict the startup eventually would be sued into oblivion, much like the once-popular music-sharing site Napster.

But Hurley and Chen, 27, have spent months cozying up with major media executives in an effort to convince them that YouTube could help them make more money by helping them connect with the growing number of people who spend most of their free time on the Internet.

While Google has been hauling away huge profits from the booming search market, it hasn't been able to become a major player in online video.

That should change now, predicted Forrester Research analyst Charlene Li. "This gives Google the video play they have been looking for and gives them a great opportunity to redefine how advertising is done," she said.

Investors applauded the possible acquisition as Google shares climbed $8.50, or 2 percent, to close at $429 on the Nasdaq Stock Market.

Several other suitors, including Microsoft Corp., Yahoo Inc. and News Corp., reportedly have discussed a possible YouTube purchase in recent weeks.

"This deal looks pretty compelling for Google," said Standard & Poor's analyst Scott Kessler said. "Google has been doing a lot of things right, but they are not sitting on their laurels."

Google's YouTube coup may intensify the pressure on Yahoo to make its own splash by buying Facebook.com, the Internet's second most popular social-networking site. Yahoo has reportedly offered as much as $1 billion for Palo Alto-based Facebook during months of sporadic talks.

"Yahoo really needs to step up and do something," said Roger Aguinaldo, an investment banker who also publishes a dealmaking newsletter called the M&A Advisor. "They are becoming less relevant and looking less innovative with each passing day."

Selling to Mountain View-based Google will give YouTube more technological muscle and advertising know-how, as well as generate a staggering windfall for a 67-employee company that was running on credit card debt just 20 months ago.

Since Hurley and Chen founded the company in February 2005, YouTube has blossomed into a cultural touchstone that shows more than 100 million video clips per day. The video library is eclectic, featuring everything from teenagers goofing off in their rooms to William Shatner singing "Rocket Man" during a 1970s TV show. The clips are submitted by users.

YouTube's worldwide audience was 72.1 million by August, up from 2.8 million a year earlier, according to comScore Media Metrix.

YouTube's conciliatory approach with major media has recently yielded several licensing and promotional agreements that have eased some of the copyright concerns while providing the company with some financial breathing room until it becomes profitable.

To conserve money as it subsisted on $11.5 million in venture capital, YouTube had been based in an austere office above a San Mateo pizzeria until recently moving to more spacious quarters in nearby San Bruno.

NETWORKING...
It's all who you know!
Tuesday, October 17, 2006 • 5:00 p.m. • Memorial Hall
WITH ALUMNI GUEST SPEAKER
Eric Friedberg '90
Eric is a founding partner at Cohen-Friedberg Associates (CFA), a marketing firm specializing in traditional, retail specific and online promotions for national and regional clients such as Gorton's, Jolly Time Popcorn, Pizza Hut and Dunkin' Donuts. Prior to CFA, he founded UniverCity Newspaper and UniverCity.com, which grew into a national college newspaper. He also developed one of the first Fantasy Sports challenges.
FREE PIZZA • FREE POPCORN • FREE SODA
To register for this FREE event, visit the Alumni Association website at UMassAlumni.com/students.
Campus to Career PROGRAMS
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
alumni loan consolidation program
www.UMassAlumni.com/studentloans (800) 936-4975

Supporters argue that R.I. law does not prohibit same-sex marriage marriage, Becker said, until the 2003 Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruling that same-sex marriages were legal in the state.

MARRIAGE from page 3

Then, Becker said, the couple decided marriage would be best for the children. "It's also about being part of this moment in time where we're close to having equality," she said.

After at first being denied a marriage license, Becker and Norton challenged the 1913 Massachusetts law that prohibits out-of-state residents from marrying if the union would not be permitted in their home state.

They argued that same-sex marriage is not specifically banned in Rhode Island. Superior Court Judge Thomas Connolly agreed, saying in his ruling he saw no evidence of a "constitutional amendment, statute, or controlling appellate decision" making same-sex marriage illegal in Rhode Island.

The decision brought cheers from same-sex marriage advocates and put opponents into a defensive position.

Kris Mineau of the Massachusetts Family Institute, which opposes same-sex marriage, said he feared a legal challenge attempting to force Rhode Islanders to recognize same-sex couples was coming.

"The people of Rhode Island can say, 'Thank you,' to the courts of Massachusetts, not the people, for throwing this grenade our way," he said.

Becker and Norton started planning their wedding almost as soon as the Sept. 29 ruling was issued.

"People take a year to pull off a wedding, so it's been a busy few days," Becker said, "but we've been emotionally planning since much longer than that."

They have known each other for 20 years. Becker works at Rhode Island College. Norton at Brown Medical School. And although they have a strong network of friends and family, they wanted to officially commit.

"We've always been concerned about 'Have we done the right planning? Have we done everything to protect our family?'"

Gov. Mitt Romney directed municipal clerks not to grant licenses to same-sex couples from out of state in March of this year. Eight couples from surrounding states challenged the decision in court. The judge sent the New York and Rhode Island cases back to lower courts. The plaintiffs from the other six states lost.

Romney praised the decision, saying at the time "We don't want Massachusetts to become the Las Vegas of same-sex marriage."

After Friday's decision, Romney sent Attorney General Tom Reilly a letter, asking him to reconsider. Reilly refused, saying there was no reason to "further burden Massachusetts courts with an issue that is for Rhode Island to decide."

So Becker and Norton got married.

Becker's mother, Margorie, stood near the women, reminding them to hold their bouquets at their stomachs, not their chests. Her father, William, couldn't stop saying how proud he was of his daughter and soon-to-be daughter-in-law.

First female space tourist is also first Iranian in space

By Bee Dunham
Iowa State Daily (Iowa State U.)

AMES, Iowa — The first female space tourist returned from the International Space Station on Sept. 29, completing an 11-day journey that also made her the first female Muslim and first Iranian in space.

Anousheh Ansari, a 40-year-old Iranian-born American businesswoman, launched from the Baikonur Cosmodrome in Kazakhstan on Sept. 18.

Although her contract forbade the disclosure of the full cost paid by Ansari, three previous space tourists have paid in excess of $20 million for their sojourns into orbit.

After spending her days at the space station conducting experiments and blogging for family, friends, and fans back on Earth, Ansari and two fellow astronauts returned to Earth in the Soyuz TMA-9 capsule and landed in the steppes of Kazakhstan.

Sara Blatz, Iowa State University senior in aerospace engineering, weighed in on Ansari's recent journey. Blatz deemed Ansari's accomplishments "remarkable," but encouraged women interested in science to look elsewhere for a role model.

"Ansari was not selected among an elite group of peers — she just had enough money to be able to pay for a seat in a Soyuz," Blatz said. "She was in charge of a few experiments through a contract with the European Space Agency, but she basically had no other [responsibilities] at the ISS than to enjoy herself for 10 days. I think the women space pioneers like Sally Ride and Eileen Collins, the first woman shuttle commander, are the role models for women and achieving your dreams."

Ansari's business ventures, as well as her journey, have sparked recent discussion of the viability of space tourism. Ansari and her family members are sponsors of the X Prize, a multimillion dollar award given to researchers and entrepreneurs who accomplish specific engineering goals designed to further industry as well as humanity.

Anousheh Ansari completed an 11-day journey in space.

Sponsored by Center for Student Development · Latin American Cultural Center
Student Government Association · Office of ALANA Affairs · UMASS Amherst
Featuring:
Roy Brown
Jose Gonzalez and Criollo Clasico
Special guests:
Tao Rodriguez-Seeger
Fernando Ferrer
ARHS Conjunto de Bomba
7:00 pm Friday, October 13, 2006
Bowker Auditorium —
$10 General Public
For tickets please call box office at: (413) 545-2511
For more info please call (413) 545-1968 — monch[illegible]@st[illegible].net
UMASS AMHERST

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Cop encounter

Melissa Garber

Last weekend I went to a party. I went to a party, I got drunk, and the cops broke the party up. Not exactly earth-shattering news. I'm fairly certain more than half of this campus followed suit. On the ride back to UMass, the Massachusetts State Police had set up a sobriety checkpoint. In an effort to curb drunk drivers, sobriety checkpoints are popping up all over the country. Wherever there happens to be traffic and booze in close vicinity, checkpoints are there.

The driver of my car stopped and politely talked to the officer. He lowered the window slightly to receive the pamphlet the cop was handing out. At this point several cops were surrounding the car with flashlights in an obvious attempt to uncover contraband. The original officer who stopped the car noted the vehicle smelled like beer, and he asked us to pull over.

This is pretty much the turning point in every cop-encounter story. The car is pulled over, the passengers are drunk, the driver is scared and nobody is usually completely sure how to handle themselves. Six college students decked out in togas and crammed in a car that smells like beer does not look like a good situation.

There were at least four or five cops now shining their flashlights in the car. Our driver had been asked to take a field test for sobriety, which wasn't an issue because he was sober. The owner of the car refused a search, and there wasn't any visible contraband so we were in the clear. We got to drive back to the dorms like nothing happened.

This was an ideal scenario. All too often students don't know their rights, or they are too scared to exercise them. When cops pull people over, it is not their job to let you know what they legally can and cannot do without your consent. It is their job to enforce the law, and if that means hassling you into incriminating yourself, they will do it.

That's why it is important to reacquaint yourself with the Bill of Rights. In fact, I have a pocket constitution I can have on me at all times. The car in front of mine the night I got pulled over had its trunk popped, revealing a 30-rack of beer. The people in that car probably had a far worse night than I had.

It is good to know that in the state of Massachusetts, if you pass a field test, you can refuse a breathalyzer.

You don't have to submit to a search unless there is probable cause, which means visible evidence of contraband in your car. Then you do not have to agree to an officer's request to search your car. When my friend refused a search of his car the cops harassed him, and jokingly asked him if he was a legal studies major.

The cops will try to get you to let them search your car, but if you stand your ground and you are not stupid enough to have contraband just lying around in plain view, then you will not be forced to. If a cop does illegally search your car, the exclusionary rule will be put into place in court, and the illegally obtained evidence will be dismissed.

It is all a matter of knowing the Fourth Amendment. It really doesn't take much to become reeducated with this information. It can get you out of a whole world of trouble.

When my car was pulled over that night, the driver took a field test. He passed the field test, and the officer asked him if he wanted to take a breathalyzer. The cop informed him he did not have to, so he didn't. Not all cops will react the same way. But it is good to know that in the state of Massachusetts, if you pass a field test, you can refuse a breathalyzer.

I'm not advocating drunk driving or saying that all cops are out to get you arrested. Cops are here to enforce the law. It is your job to keep yourself informed of your rights.

Everyone should be held to high standards. It might be a cop's job to enforce the law, but it is every citizen's job to ensure there are no infractions on the officer's part. How can you know if cops are doing their jobs up to the level our law enforcers should be held to if you don't hold yourself to those high standards?

Knowing your rights means knowing what a cop can and cannot do in any given situation. This is not an invitation to break the law, but rather an opportunity to exercise the rights given to you by our founding fathers.

Melissa Garber is a Collegian columnist

Transportation trouble

Debbie Friedman

It's Friday night in Amherst, and everybody's having a good time. The week is over, the clock strikes seven, and beer cans across the campus are clipped open. A few hours later, pre-gaming transitions into the party pilgrimage, as students face the long trek to an off-campus party and wait in a mass to cram onto PVTA buses or engage in the ultimate gamble – and drive.

Since the majority of the year makes conditions too cold for walking, and buses often cannot accommodate all the students seeking to go out, it is not surprising that students choose the driving option, leading to DUI arrests, accidents, and deaths.

Driving under the influence is a major issue, but the root causes continue to be either overlooked or ignored. While the University of Massachusetts does not have to provide better options, such as making PVTA schedules more accommodating for student night-life or providing shuttle services, they should want to. Almost half the student body is of legal drinking age, and it is only normal for that population to desire to go out, have a few drinks and make it home safely.

Yet the city demographics of the school are catered to suburban facilities, resulting in inadequate transportation that does not allow these desires to be met. And the situation only looks to get worse as the freshman classes continue to increase in size.

Other large public universities have made transportation on the weekends a high priority. Indiana University at Bloomington has a larger bus service, which operates frequently and late into the weekend nights.

On top of this, IU offers students a shuttle called the "midnight special." These small shuttle buses circle around popular parts of campus from 11 p.m. to 4 a.m. on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights for no charge.

Penn State and the University of Illinois also have impressive bus systems, accommodating student's needs much better than the UMass-Amherst campus.

The lack of options on the weekend cannot be blamed on the PVTA, since a large part of their budget comes from UMass, which is too far buried in "New Dirt" to see the trouble with transportation. However, this problem needs to be acknowledged for the benefit and safety of UMass students.

Former UMass student Marquis Hunt has created the Designated Driver Project of Amherst. This project is looking for volunteers to give up one or two nights of their semester to pick up students in need of a ride.

Until the administration decides to take action, students are on their own to find alternatives. The best option, of course, is to always have a designated driver. But for the times when that is not possible, a new program is in the works, seeking to help. Former UMass student Marquis Hunt has created the Designated Driver Project of Amherst. This project is looking for volunteers to give up one or two nights of their semester to pick up students in need of a ride.

He is hoping to make it an RSO, where members pay a small fee of $5 or $10, in order to be able to call in on the weekends to get a ride home. Hunt hopes to sign up many volunteers in order to accommodate a large number of students on campus.

The project was initiated after Hunt grew tired of seeing friends become stranded at parties, forcing them to either walk home in the cold or take a ride from an intoxicated driver. The program will go into test mode over the next few weeks in order to have it fully functional by next semester. For more information, check out www.laladave.com

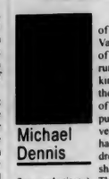
Another alternative is to call a cab. In the past, cab companies have not fared well here. Yellow Pages listings host several numbers, which are now inactive. Perhaps they have failed because students are not willing to pay, but most likely it is due to a lack of publicity.

Regardless, Celebrity Cab Service is one that is currently up and running. They provide service throughout the Pioneer Valley for a relatively low cost. Their official hours end at midnight on the weekends, but a representative stated they often stay open later. Although their reliability is questionable, the number could certainly come in handy in a bind.

With the amount of drunk driving that happens around this campus, it is a miracle there has not been more accidents or fatalities. However, UMass and its students cannot continue to tempt fate by ignoring the problem and engaging in dangerous behavior because luck runs out, and life is too high a stake to gamble.

Debbie Friedman is a Collegian columnist.

Time for celebration?



Michael Dennis

We Americans are awfully fond of our holidays. From Christmas to Valentine's Day, the meaningfulness of our days of celebration certainly runs the gamut. We celebrate two kinds of holidays; first, there are those that, despite the onslaught of commercialization, have a clear purpose, meaning, or at least a universally accepted theme. Christmas has Jesus, presents, and little children. Easter has eggs, bunnies, and shredded green plastic grass (a great floss substitute). Throw in a dash of family fun, a pinch of reckless intoxication, and whisk lightly, and you've got a good old-fashioned, traditional holiday.

And then there are those holidays, such as the recently celebrated Columbus Day, that fall under a lesser category. On a basic level, their inferiority is due to the fact that many of their dates are so unmemorable — everyone knows that Christmas is on December 25th, and the Fourth of July speaks for itself.

But ask the average person to tell you offhand when President's Day is, and it'll certainly be a struggle. So what is the point of having holidays we can't remember the dates for, and furthermore, don't stop and think of the supposed true significance of?

The very real, and often un-discussed, truth is the majority of the population does not look at such holidays as being days of memoriam or reflection, rather, they're simply a free day off from work or school. There's a reason why the observed holiday phenomenon is so prevalent.

For example, Martin Luther King Day is not on his birthday — it's observed on the third Monday of January. Similarly, Memorial Day falls on the last Monday in May, not on a date that's significant to any specific battle, war, or time of peace. Why so many Mondays? Why not Tuesdays or Saturdays? Sweet Jesus, if that were the case, we wouldn't have long weekends. And isn't that what honoring the dead is all about — an extra day of drinking and grilling?

If it's necessary to continue this trend and still name holidays after individuals, it's baffling as to why, of all people, Christopher Columbus is still honored in this way. Where's Al Capone Day, or, for that matter, Hitler Day? Columbus was nothing more than an empirical gangster and the primary aggressor in one of human history's most horrific genocides. Recently discovered documents have exposed his propensity toward torturing slaves and violently mistreating his colonial subjects on the island of Hispaniola.

Furthermore, on top of not discovering America

So, what exactly did he accomplish that was so amazing and heroic as to merit a celebration in his honor more than 500 years after his death? Paving the way for the introduction of widespread disease and genocide?

(considering the presence of indigenous peoples), many historians have presented different versions of events that suggest Columbus was not the first person from the Old World to reach the New World. It's been said that scores of independent explorers, such as barbarians and pirates, predated Columbus, and even that perhaps Chinese explorers landed in the Americas years earlier. So, what exactly did he accomplish that was so amazing and heroic as to merit a celebration in his honor more than 500 years after his death? Paving the way for the introduction of widespread disease and genocide?

Our knowledge of Columbus dates back to the way we are taught American history in grade school. It is understandable that as precocious students and all-around underdeveloped thinkers, we could not handle the weight of a dense, fully fleshed out curriculum. Had our teachers tried to explain that half the Pilgrims died off within a few years because they had no idea what the hell they were doing, our little heads likely would have malfunctioned and exploded.

Rather, we were told they were a pure people who wore big black hats and black shoes with goofy big buckles. We were also told Columbus was a hero and brought hope to the savage Indian peoples. Unfortunately, the sad truth goes beyond such simple misconceptions. Even high schools are still teaching a slanted, nationalistic version of history that romanticizes individuals, like Columbus, and paints a picture of a noble, patriotic struggle for freedom. Lost in the shuffle are those who were wrongly victimized along the way.

I'm not saying that because of Columbus, we shouldn't honor any important historical figures or groups of people. Rather, what I'm getting at is it's an absolute farce to have holidays in their honor, especially in the case of dubious legends like Columbus.

Consider all the ways in which significant individuals get their due — they have libraries, schools, bridges, towns, and shopping plazas named in their honor. They appear on currency and in memorials and textbooks everywhere. Simply put, we're not in danger of forgetting any of our past presidents, war veterans, or civil rights leaders anytime soon.

Therefore, there's nothing wrong with the fact we simply take advantage of these days of remembrance to sleep in on Monday morning. But why continue the ruse? Let's just be out in the open with it; forget President's Day, Labor Day, or any other day.

How about just declaring the third Monday of every other month as a day off? We can simply declare these bonus three-day weekends as Remembrance Weekend. That way, it allows us to remember whoever or whatever we want — whether it be Thomas Jefferson, Nell Carter, or that really sweet club sandwich we devoured (rather ravenously) the night before. And if you're so inclined, you can use the weekend to remember Columbus and his glorious conquest of those supposed savages. Just don't drag the rest of us down with you.

Michael Dennis is a Collegian columnist.

FRIDAY EVENING

Not just vandalism

Hinlan Wong

I like graffiti. Not just any graffiti, though — the ones that actually bring life back to the University of Massachusetts. The ones that are the most aesthetically pleasing to the eyes are stencil bombs scattered across the walls of buildings, sidewalks, and concrete objects blocking the sidewalks.

What is stenciling or stencil bombing? It's just a piece of paper, cardboard or anything you can manipulate to create a template for a phrase or picture. Once the template is completed, it can be easily spray painted on almost any surface. The benefit of stencil bombing is you can replicate the exact same image over and over again.

You might have thought stencil bombing is an underground or revolutionary form of art. In fact, the majority of us actually own "stencil bombing art."

If you like to keep up with current fashion trends, you may have recently purchased a T-shirt from a clothing establishment like American Eagle, Urban Outfitters, or Express. Clothing companies who make T-shirts with cool logos or pictures also take an outline of a picture and spray paint it on the shirt.

Students walk by artists' stencils on campus all the time without even knowing it. Like the UMass Fine Arts Center, you would imagine it to be a beautiful, artistic, and cultural building like other fine arts centers at other universities. I really do not see how a concrete slab shaped like a piano complimented by another huge concrete slab of open space is considered to be beautiful, artistic, and cultural.

The Fine Arts Center can never be beautiful or artistic, no matter how many times they change the landscape around it. But, since the University is not tearing it down anytime soon, culturally wise artists are turning its exterior walls into large canvases. Whether you are walking from class around the FAC or heading over to Bezanson Recital Hall, you can find these small stencil bombings.

Take a look at the dull rectangular concrete flower pot next to Memorial Hall — it has a stencil of an image related to Hunter S. Thompson. The Campus Pond, the staircases at Central and University Health Services, the front of Bartlett, some of the Dining Commons, and various other places have stencils that are interesting designwise and also give this University some much-needed variety.

One of the stencil bombers attending this University never puts his name or a call-sign on the stencils he puts around campus, not only because of the legal implications, but because he does not want to be considered a punk or gangster. He noticed bad graffiti of words, names or phrases done with markers on signs, bus stops and other public areas. What these vandals were doing was scribing a couple of lines with their name or nickname marking their territory.

When you see graffiti of words concentrated in one area, don't you automatically assume you are in danger? You might feel insecure at a bus stop or on a street corner full of bad graffiti because it's popularized in the media as gang-related. If these people had enough guts to write on private property, what is stopping them from robbing or injuring you in that same area?

Take a look at the dull rectangular concrete flower pot next to Memorial Hall — it has a stencil of an image related to Hunter S. Thompson.

Graffiti – whether it's the crude tagging of someone's name on a bus stop window or the intricate, complicated stencils used by stencil bombers – defines the type of art our generation has created. Whether you dislike graffiti or marvel at it, you have to give these anonymous artists a handshake or a pat on the back. Rarely do you see these creative minds at work. They usually come out when no observing eyes are around, and they are always being pursued by the law.

Instead of punishing these artists, why not employ them for creating art on the plain walls of our buildings? It would be wonderful to have a huge stencil of an influential person, phrase or symbol on the wall of the Fine Arts Center or on Lederle Graduate Research Center. Turn this institution into a place with color and diversity, where art can not only be found in the classroom but on the walls and floors of buildings where we work and play.

Hinlan Wong is a Collegian columnist.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW MUSIC TUESDAY

Beck returns to a groove feel with 'The Information' album

By Alex Hornbeck
Collegian Staff

Beck Hansen is a chameleon of a musician. If there's anything we're supposed to know about him, it's his ability to hop genres, to leap from alternative rocker to white soul man to broken-hearted folkster. And for a while, it worked. From 1994's surprise hit "Mellow Gold" through 2002's melancholic "Sea Change," Beck remained a consistently creative force to be reckoned with. That is, until last year's "Guero."

Armed with the Dust Brothers and a few decent riffs, he created a repetitive set of songs that, while not particularly bad, sounded like an artist merely going through the motions. With the arrival of "The Information," Beck sounds deliciously fresh again, no doubt due in part to Nigel Godrich's rich production.

Opening with a shout of, "One, two, you know what to do," "Elevator Music" kicks off the album with cool effervescent groove. "What's wrong with a little grind and bump?" Beck queries, setting the stage for the next 14 lively tracks, most of which wouldn't be out of place on the dance floor.

Some of the catchiest grooves of Beck's career can be found here. "Cell Phone's Dead" is a standout track, sporting a Herbie Hancock-worthy bass line, brief string interludes layered with hi-hat, ample scratching (provided by the outstanding DJ Z-Trip), and dark lyrical flow that hearkens back to "Hell Yes," one of Guero's few outstanding tracks. "This jam is real," exclaims someone in the background, and it's easy to believe.

Early word on this album hailed it as a return to the mangled hip-hop Beck has dabbled in throughout his career. While only a few songs on "The Information" could accurately be described as hip-hop, the album does have a bouncy, exuberant feel running through it. The energy level is consistently high, and even the album's slower songs sound vibrant and alive.

Godrich provides a welcome breath of fresh air after the lackluster work of the Dust Brothers on "Guero." After his production of Beck's folk-inspired albums "Mutations" and "Sea Change," it's somewhat of a surprise to hear the powerful funk and strut present in most of these songs. Godrich creates a true sense of sonic density without going overboard, providing gorgeous layers of synth where needed ("Soldier Jane" and "Movie Theme"), while remaining unafraid to step back and let organic instruments take over ("Strange Apparition" and "Nausea"). Beck's father, David Campbell, returns in charge of string arrangements, and his subtle contributions are well-appreciated.

One concept Beck has never seemed to completely grasp is cohesiveness. His albums often sound merely like collections of songs without threads to tie everything together. That still remains somewhat of a problem with "The Information," but a few things pop up throughout that give the tracks an interconnected feel. Beck mentions cell phones and we hear a number being dialed in opener "Elevator Music," foreshadowing "Cell Phone's Dead," the same count off that begins the album resurfaces midway through in "Dark Star;" the bass line of "Cell Phone's Dead" reappears in epic closer "The Horrible Fanfare/Landslide/Exoskeleton." Subtle cross-references like these make "The Information" a much more complete listening experience than any previous Beck album.

Some fans were put off recently by Beck's admission of being a follower of Scientology. One can't help but wonder whether or not the spaceship-referencing lyrics of songs such as "1000 BPM" and "The Horrible Fanfare/Landslide/Exoskeleton" are references to his beliefs, but as with most Beck lyrics, they remain too convoluted and stream-of-consciousness to truly understand. When it comes down to it, though, does it really matter? This is superb music and a great return to form for Beck. "The Information" is leagues ahead of "Guero" and a worthy addition to Beck's celebrated discography.

Hold Steady's 'Boys and Girls' stresses importance of youth

By Dave Master
Collegian Staff

Hold on to your beers, boys and girls. If you don't, The Hold Steady's new LP "Boys and Girls in America" will knock them right out of your hands.

If Angus Young of AC/DC and Bruce Springsteen cut an album together, this would be it. This album is sure to make pump your fists with the windows rolled down.

With the release of 2004's "Almost Killed Me" and 2005's "Separation Sunday," the Hold Steady readily established itself as the heir to rock 'n' roll. "Boys and Girls in America" is nothing short of its previous albums, but takes a step further, leaving a track of hope trailing behind.

Craig Finn is what some would call a lyrical master. He lays the groundwork for the entire album with the opening lines of the first song — "There are nights when I think Sal Paradise was right/Boys and girls in America have such a sad time together."

"Stuck Between Stations," the first song, is the definitive track of the album. Finn brings to light the insecurities of boys and girls in America, saying, "Sucking off each other at the demonstrations/making sure their makeup's straight/crushing one another with colossal expectations." The disinterested youth's mentality of partying and taking drugs is insubstantial. Finn wants more.

Just as Kerouac created ideal characters like Sal Paradise and Dean Moriarty to describe life in his book "On the Road," Finn created his own characters: Holly, Charlemagne, and Gideon. He uses them to describe life at the hardcore scene. The difference is subtle. Finn's world is set in music scenes, shows and bars, where hope shimmers "golden with bar light and beer."

After the theme of the album is apparent, the following songs are vignettes, each relating back to the sad times of boys and girls. The song "Chillout Tent" is about a boy and a girl who overdose on mushrooms at a Western Massachusetts show. They both get taken to the chill-out tent, where they fall in love. "They started kissing when the nurses took off their IVs/They had privacy of bed sheets/All the other kids were mostly in comas," sings Finn. At the chill out tent, hope is found to be sticking out like a mountain between the young lovers' tangled IVs.

"First Night" is the most emotionally convicting song. "Charlemagne shakes in the streets/Gideon makes love to the suites/and Holly's not invincible." Finn sings the song about a vulnerable Holly who reflects on her past. She is sick of the druggie, show-going lifestyle. Holly represents the hopeful theme of the album. As Finn repeatedly sings the line, "Boys and girls in America" with a backing-chorus, he powerfully convicts the party scene with a pointed finger and a tear in the eye. And incredibly, he only sings the title of the record.

"Boys and Girls in America" is an uplifting album that offers hope to youth who think they are stuck in a world full of colossal expectations. In Craig Finn's world, the sad thing is that even where there is hope, it is hidden behind the typical-ness of the party scene, which leaves people feeling unfulfilled at the end of the day. Hope is ultimately found through the redemption of weathered, experienced characters, like Holly, Gideon, and Charlemagne. Finn wants you to find it yourself.

Masters of comedy

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Correspondent

Despite the fact that Michael Ian Black and Michael Showalter have been working together for well over a decade, they came into Northampton last Friday kicking off their first ever stand-up tour together.

As part of the 11-member MTV comedy show, The State, Black, and Showalter were integral parts to the sketch group's rise to cult heroes. While the fanbase of the group's MTV show has grown over the years, The State comedians have all separated to work on other projects, often involving other troupe members.

Black is likely the most visible member, most recently with his participation in VH1's "I Love The..." series, while Showalter made his directorial debut last year with "The Baxter." The duo most frequently works together as two-thirds of the group Stella, rounded out by fellow State member David Wain. The three have been performing and making short films since 1997, with a bizarre blend of sketch, stand-up, and improv; leading to last year's brilliant, short-lived series on Comedy Central.

While Stella relies on chemistry, Black and Showalter didn't cross paths at all on Friday, showcasing their unique styles. Showalter took the stage first, his too-short set packed in a lot of great material; his deadpan delivery and parody of traditional stand up often involved more internalization then belly-laughs, though no one had a problem with that.

Showalter's enthusiastic character really shined through during a PowerPoint presentation, with tongue firmly in cheek, on variations of "employees must wash hands before returning to work" signs. The biggest laughs came when Showalter played, and talked through, a playlist of "guilty pleasures." Vowing that he would no longer be ashamed of his tastes — claiming he liked Sheryl Crow under Cat Power on his iPod to appear hip — his brilliant commentary on every song garnered constant laughter from the audience — from when he relayed the lyrics of Train's "Drops of Jupiter," adding his own harmonies, to the emotional outpouring brought on by Christina Aguilera's "Beautiful."

The bit climaxed when Showalter put on Creed, bringing the house down when, with straight-faced excitement, he proclaimed that the song "makes me feel like I'm dick-slapping god."

Black then took the stage for an hour-long set of constant laughs. Black also relied heavily on the type of parody and exaggeration that makes The State and Stella so loved, but he was slightly more conventional in approach than Showalter.

Black, however, still operates very much under the alternative comedy banner. The audience was in hysterics as Black explained that, even though he is Jewish, he believes that the Nazi party had a great public relations team, due to the way they emphasized "party" and the root of the name itself. Black said he couldn't resist anything that "combined 'nachos' and 'Yahtzee.'" Indeed, Black seemed to have the most fun when he was pushing controversial buttons, making himself out to be "a bad person." He extrapolated on his profane reaction to a "Jesus Christ is your only lord and savior" billboard he drove by, realizing that he could negate the effects of it if he bought a space that said "Michael Ian Black is your only lord and savior" in front of it.

Black also spent a lot of time relating to the college audience, discussing how much he hated high school, poking fun at himself, and summarizing the bit by succinctly stating, "I fing hated the '80s." Black ended his set by reading from what he claimed where two blogs he posted on Myspace.com, mentioning one had received a lot of negative feedback.

First, "Emotions" parodied the clichéd, hum-filled poetry that is all over blogs, a perfect mockery, down to the simple rhyme scheme and middle-school vocabulary. Next, "If I Had A Slave" was Black's heartfelt expression of dedication, describing all the fun they would have. Black read, "He would drive me around together; he would make me dinner together." Black left it up to the audience to guess which one had garnered hate mail — it was clear by the thunderous applause that it was the far darker one that struck the right notes with comedy fans.

Black and Showalter proved that they are master comedians in any medium — TV, film, sketch, and stand-up. With "Stella" now out on DVD, fans can get their fix at any time, but it will be even more exciting to see where these great comics go next.

Michael Ian Black and Michael Showalter (foreground), seen here with their fellow Stella member David Wain, headlined at Pearl Street last Friday. The two comedians kicked off their first-ever tour together in Northampton.

Umphrey's Mcgee brings another jewel

By Lauren Modisette
Collegian Staff

Umphrey's Mcgee performed at The Palladium in Worcester Friday night, and it was a show to die for.

The band started out playing "Ringo" and slowly moved into "Passing." The chorus of this song brought on the title of their latest record, "Safety in Numbers." During the first set, it was impossible to maneuver to the front and center because the crowd was so condensed.

There is a technique to pushing forward toward the stage... watching for the people who dance with their eyes closed, sneaking in front of them and keeping an eye out for spaces to fit into.

Naturally, as witnessed at most concerts, there was the one guy who took too much and had to be dragged out before the show started. There's always that one guy, and this one had an awestruck look on his face and big, sparkly glasses. The poor guy just couldn't keep his knees locked.

Umphrey's put on a stellar light show that intensified their exuberant selection of songs. The fans in the crowd spent all the transition jam periods trying to predict the upcoming songs. During these periods you could feel the anxiety among the fans, just begging for the next song to explode over them.

During set break, everyone crammed into the pit trying to push to the front in attempts to get closer to the band. Listening to the people around me, a good number of people were observing Umphrey's live for the first time.

University of Massachusetts student Samantha Taft was viewing Umphrey's for the first time this evening.

"[They were] fing amazing," she said. "There are no words to describe it. I wouldn't have expected anything like that just from listening to their records, I'll tell you that much."

The fans were stirring and chatting up fellow music lovers, discussing which of their favorite songs they hoped they would play.

Surprisingly, the majority of the Umphrey's crowd was mostly

See UMPHREY'S on page 8

Stanton Moore headlines the Iron Horse

By Michael Trabert
Collegian Correspondent

Stanton Moore, acclaimed drummer for the band Galactic and veteran of the jazz/groove scene, brought his trio to the Iron Horse last Thursday.

It was a little past 10 p.m. and the dull roar of about 50 people hushed as the lights dimmed. At the same time Stanton Moore, Will Bernard, and Robert Walter ambled up on stage and picked up their instruments. Moore introduced the band, naming himself last before announcing that the first song of the night would be "Aquafresh," a piece written by the guitar player, Will Bernard.

"Aquafresh" is a fun song, with fast breaks and a catchy chorus. It seemed as though they were a little stiff at first, but by the end of the song, the trio had found the pocket. Moore also pulled out a tambourine and used it in his right hand like a drum stick, adding a cool flavor to the drumbeat at some parts in the song. Walter, the organ player, would motion to the sound person to get it all adjusted.

The next song, "Liquorish," was one of the highlights of the show and the band was proud of it. The organ player seemed to be the main part of the song, playing the melody. On occasion, the guitar player would double on the riff, adding a fresh layer. The whole thing came to an end with an impressive solo by Moore on drums.

They played another song, "Catscan," which was more spacey, similar to the theme of "Peter Gunn." The chorus was a build up into a resolution of the epic chorus. From that, they went straight into a two song medley of male. There were a reasonable amount of females in the venue, but they were definitely outnumbered. This was interesting because a significant number of the girls were conversing about how much fun it is to have eye-sex with bassist Ryan Skasik and how they wanted to get into drummer Kris Meyers's pants.

See MOORE on page 9

Umphrey's Mcgee ups intensity

UMPHREY'S from page 7

Considering Umphrey's Mcgee consists of five rather attractive individuals, you would expect there to be a common "boy-band effect," but to the surprise and satisfaction of the audience, it was mainly a crowd who is in love with the music and not the musicians, despite the handful of star-struck groupies who love the bodies and faces behind the masterpieces.

One thing that is appealing about Umphrey's is that their subject matter isn't the typical mainstream material heard on the radio. Their sound is genuine and unique, and Brendan Bayliss and Jake Cinninger are anomalous and distinguishing.

Their lyrics are true and realistic and not all about drugs, sex, and money, like the general pop culture music tends to focus on. Umphrey's music comes from the heart and from experience, not from some hired song writer selling trashy lyrics about getting laid.

Half of the fun of seeing a band of this caliber is watching how they change every time you see them. For instance, this time around there seemed to be a comical moustache motif spreading from Bayliss to Cinninger and even to Stasik and Andy Farag.

Luckily for all the first-timers, Umphrey's expelled their greatest musical accomplishment, "Miss Tinkle's Overture." This song is compositionally impossible to compete with. It is so complex and requires an extensive amount of skill that it wouldn't sound the same if it were played by anyone else.

Unfortunately, this show was one of their last shows on the East Coast before reaching westward to spread their wonder. They are planning a spectacular New Year's event three nights in a row at the Aragon Ballroom in Chicago, Ill. to celebrate the coming of 2007 with their roots.

Vocalist Brendan Bayliss and bassist Ryan Skasik strum their respective instruments during the Umphrey's Mcgee performance in Worcester.

New lecture series tells of anti-war rallies

By Teresa Reilly
Collegian Correspondent

"The War At Home" was shown as part of the 2006 Feinberg Family Distinguished Lecture Series at the University of Massachusetts Thursday. The documentary focused on the riots that college kids created at the University of Wisconsin-Madison in the late 1960s. During the '60s and '70s, college kids across the country stood up against their government and the Vietnam War.

In the late 1970s, Glenn Silber and Barry Alexander Brown spoke to a collection of people who had inside knowledge of the riots that occurred at the university throughout the '60s. They then took these interviews, along with video footage taken from the events, and created "The War At Home."

The documentary tells a story of violence on a large university campus that grew throughout a turbulent era.

"I think it does a really great job of portraying the movement through the years," said Chris Appy, the history department professor who showed the documentary.

In 1965, the United States officially entered the Vietnam War. Shortly afterwards came the draft, followed by protests across the nation. At first, these protests were sit-ins, such as the sit-in that occurred at the Administration Building in Wisconsin. Other protests were students burning their draft cards. These protests, however, quickly became more violent.

"The War at Home" steadily shows how the violence within this campus became increasingly worse, led by Students for a Democratic Society. This student organization created the more radical acts of protest.

On Oct. 17, 1967, the SDS staged a protest against the Dow recruiters coming to their campus. The Dow Company created napalm, which was used in bombs dropped over Vietnam that burned the human body. Dow also supplied the United States with "Agent Orange," which was the lethal defoliation agent used in Vietnam. This protest was just the beginning.

Throughout the documentary, the SDS students and others speak of the riots that took place on campus at this time. Sit-ins turned into brutal attacks by police. The documentary shows students sitting peacefully in a hallway when they are suddenly clubbed by local police.

In 1968, the Democratic Convention was held in Chicago. This riot is one of the most significant throughout the course of the '60s. Thousands of people from the "Redwood Forest to the Gulf Stream waters" joined to voice their opinions.

At this point in the documentary, an eyewitness of the Chicago riot said he witnessed a police take a gun out of his holder and point it into the massive crowd before him. The witness then proceeded to tell that he and his friend then took their guns out, loaded them, and pointed them at the police officer. "He has no idea how lucky he was," said the witness about the decision for the officer to put away his gun without firing it.

The bombing of the Army Math Research Center was one of the most radical and violent of the SDS' movement at the University of Wisconsin Madison. On Aug. 24, 1970, four men who called themselves the New Years Gang set off an explosive that killed a post-doctoral researcher in Sterling Hall on the university's campus. The Army Math Research Center was believed to be helping the government in the attacks against North Vietnam.

The efforts of these radicals may have been extreme, but it may have forced the U.S. government to seriously reconsider their views, leading to the withdrawal of troops. The United States was officially out of the Vietnam War in 1973 after over 58,000 U.S. soldiers died.

IF YOU SAVE A HERO WHAT DOES THAT MAKE YOU?
U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE
More men and women
than ever before for one
U.S. Air Force nurse, you best medical technology on the planet. And whether you're treating Airmen on foreign soil or their families on base
If you're interested in learning visit us online.
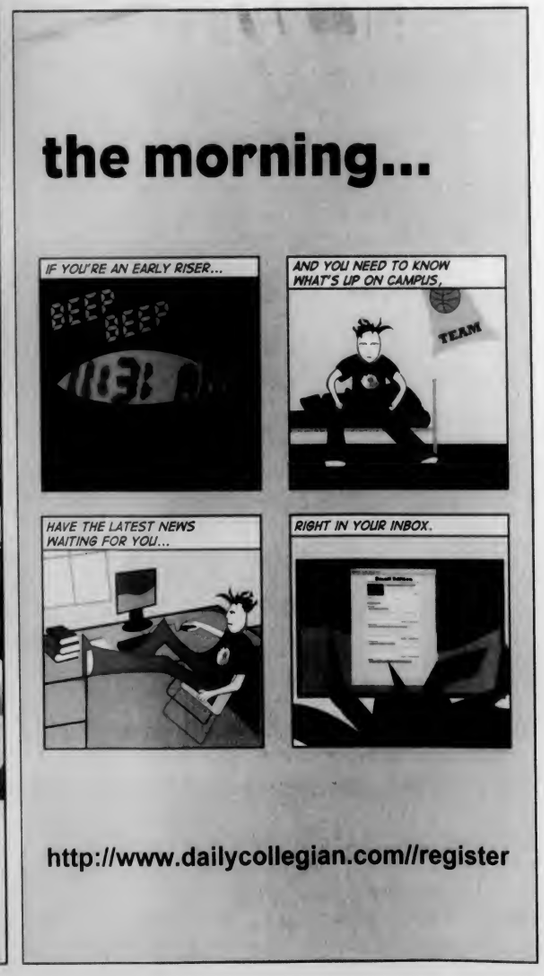
1-800-588-5260 • AIRFORCE.COM/HEALTHCARE



Legendary CBGB's forced to shut doors

By Ethan Sacks
New York Daily News

NEW YORK — For fans of CBGB, "Here Today, Gone Tomorrow" is no longer just the title of a tune by the Ramones.

A performance by punk pioneer and CBGB alumna Patti Smith next Sunday will be the final show at the legendary lower East Side music club before the doors close for good on Oct. 31.

The club is exiting stage left after 32 years, a victim of a rent dispute with the space's landlord, the Bowery Residents' Committee, a not-for-profit homeless services agency.

And in the club's waning days, generations of fans are making their final pilgrimages to what some called "the music institution" at 315 Bowery.

"It may be small but it's a big staple in the city," said Rob Basso, 20, a sanitation worker from Westchester County, N.Y., before attending his first show at the club. "There's a lot of history here."

Dori Sarcone, 33, said she has attended "hundreds of shows" at the club, and she lamented that now she will never be able to realize her dream of getting married onstage.

Harley Flanagan, 39, the heavily tattooed bassist for the hard-core band Cro-Mags, brought his 4-year-old son to CBGB for a recent show so he could experience the vibe.

"CBGB's changed the face of rock in New York City and gave countless bands opportunities they might never have had — to be seen and heard — at the palace of punk," the legendary rocker Lou Reed told the New York Daily News. "It will be sorely missed if it does in fact go into the ether of memories."

Since the club's opening in January 1974, the Ramones, Blondie, Television and the Talking Heads are just a few among the who's who of punk and new wave bands that squeezed through the narrow, dimly lit club on the way to the big time.

Not all of that history, however, is being left behind. Owner Hilly Kristal said he's negotiating to open up a CBGB in Las Vegas, as early as March.

For now, he'll open an office on Bond Street to keep the brand name — CBGB stands for Country, Bluegrass and Blues, the kinds of music Kristal originally intended to offer at the club — going through T-shirt sales.

Wherever the next CBGB ends up, Kristal said he's planning to take everything he can with him: the stage, the bar, the floorboards and assorted memorabilia. The scraps, he said, may be auctioned on eBay.

"We're going to take the urinals," Kristal said. "Joey [Ramone] went to the bathroom there.

"We can charge admission," he said, laughing.

Kristal hasn't had much to joke about recently; the 75-year-old learned he had lung cancer in June.

"I'll be around for a few years. As long as I'm around" CBGB will continue in some form, he said.

The rent dispute began last year, when the Bowery Resident's Committee sent a notice that Kristal owed $91,000 in back rent. Kristal contended the bill stemmed from rent increases he was never told about. He said the terms to renew the lease were double or triple the $19,000 he paid per month.

A deal reached shortly after the lease expired on Aug. 31, 2005, allowed Kristal to stay in the club for 14 more months — in exchange for ending the court battle and attempts to turn the space into a historic landmark.

Representatives from the Bowery Residents' Committee did not return calls seeking comment last week.

In the meantime, CBGB isn't going quietly.

Lyle Preslar, guitarist for Minor Threat, a seminal hard-core band that first played at CBGB in 1980, paid his respects by attending a show headlined by Fishbone.

The 43-year-old said he lamented the loss of a place where people who loved playing music could meet those who loved to listen to it. "I guess it's like a clubhouse," Preslar said. "Only it's much, much louder."

Drummer Moore taps into Iron Horse

MOORE from page 7

a Meters original to a version of "Good Times, Bad Times" by Led Zeppelin. It was amazing to hear a trio consisting of an organ, guitar, and drums pull off a Led Zeppelin song so well.

The next two songs were "(Don't Be Comin' With No) Weak Sauce" and "Dunkin' In The Deep," two fun ones that kept the heads grooving. Stanton announced that the next song was going to be played live for the first time as a tribute to his home state of Louisiana, which is still in the rebuilding stages from Katrina.

It was called "Water from an Ancient Well" and was written by Abdullah Ibrahim, a South African pianist/composer. It was a soft, thoughtful song. Moore pulled out mallets for a softer tone on the kit, so it was a very nice change of pace from the rest of the set.

After the down-tempo moment, they kicked right back into it and played a more up-tempo song, then casually went into their last of the night, a rendition of "When the Levy Breaks" by Led Zeppelin, which completely rocked, proving that they can play any kind of music — and play it well.

They then all walked off stage and pretended to hide, waiting to play an encore. After a little while, they got back on stage and Moore made a joke about how they had nowhere to hide and act like they couldn't hear the audience. It was a serious joke, but Moore said that their last song, "When the Levy Breaks," was what happened in New Orleans.

He then said, "Now this is how they feel," and counted off into an interpretation of "Manic Depression" by Jimi Hendrix. They ended the show on a great highlight, thanked the audience, and finally ended the night.

Stanton Moore tries to keep the time with the Benevento-Russo Duo in a past performance in New York. He led his new trio last Thursday at the Iron Horse Music Hall.

Full speed ahead.
We remove the barriers, so you can accelerate your career. We've created an environment that's conducive to personal and professional growth and success. At Ernst & Young, we're recognized for our inclusive culture that expects everyone to contribute and everyone to grow. Stop just long enough to visit us on campus, or at ey.com/us/careers.
FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2006
NO SPEED LIMIT
Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services
ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

Pair of runners lift UMass

FOOTBALL from page 14

found wide receiver Brandon London (three receptions for 83 yards on the day) on a slant route over the middle.

London was in single coverage and broke a tackle that sprung him free. London stumbled but regained his footing before he was brought down at William and Mary's 24-yard line — a 35-yard gain.

Two plays later, Coen pitched the ball to Baylark who burrowed into the end zone on a 23-yard touchdown run. The first drive: eight plays, 77 yards, 3:09.

"That's the one concern that you have coming off of a bye, that you're a little slow getting back into the rhythm of things," Brown said. "To our teams credit — and it doesn't have anything to do with the coaching, it has to do with the players — the players got themselves ready to play and they played with passion. If you have passion and you execute, good things are going to happen."

Good things have happened to this football team for the last three weeks. On Sept. 23, the Minutemen torched Stony Brook, 48-7, and just rolled over the Pride by the same margin.

The Minutemen scored on their first four offensive drives on Saturday, and the defense didn't allow a point until late in the third quarter, when most of the regulars had been sidelined for the day.

Each of UMass' first four scoring drives were less than 3:10 long. The first: eight plays, 77 yards, 3:09. The second: six plays, 72 yards, 2:36. The third: eight plays, 80 yards, 2:52. The fourth: six plays, 80 yards, 2:35.

Coen went to the air just 17 times, completing 12 passes, but threw for 275 yards and a touchdown. Coen connected with London for 35 yards and 41 yards, J.J. Moore for 44 yards, Kyle Harrington for 30 yards, and Brad Listorti for 24 yards.

"We felt like [the deep plays] were there," Brown said. "I give credit to our offensive staff. They did a great job of getting the guys focused. We were ready to go today. We were ready to go in all phases."

COLLEGIAN MEDIA RELATIONS

Against the Tribe, J.J. Moore recorded his third-career 100-yard receiving day. The junior hauled in five passes for 118 yards and a touchdown.

By halftime, it was no contest. The Minutemen were up 28-0. Nelson, at the 5:26 mark of the second quarter, had notched his second touchdown run of the day, and the UMass defense wasn't budging.

The Minutemen held the Pride to 30 yards rushing. Elijah Brooks, the Pride's No. 1 carrier, got the ball 10 times and ran for just 35 yards. Brown forced William and Mary to go to the air and become one dimensional early in the ballgame, and that stifled quarterback Mike Potts and the Pride offense.

"For us it was the lack of us being able to sustain a drive," Potts said. "We had a couple of plays here and there. The effort was there and everything. When we got past their side of the 50, we had plays here and there, but we couldn't sustain a drive all day."

"[UMass is] a very good team, we knew that going in," Pride coach Jimmy Laycock said. "They executed very well. They made it very difficult for us to get anything going on either side of the ball. It didn't turn out to be a good day for us."

Brown, a defensive guy by nature, was pleased with his team's defensive effort.

"I thought we played very well on the defensive side," he said. "We gave up one defensive touchdown with some of the regulars already country-clubbing it for the afternoon. One thing we did, I thought, better than most, was that we didn't let them run the ball. We felt really good about where we were at in that piece."

All of the pieces came together on Saturday.

MICHAEL DWYER – COLLEGIAN

The UMass running game didn't miss a beat with the ball in Tony Nelson's hands. Here the freshman scores one of his three touchdowns.

Offensive attack leading Minutemen

PELLAND from page 14

and play my hardest. I don't like to predict the outcome," Baylard said. "If it comes it comes. Today I did kind of feel like [I could get 200 yards]

Commenting on the play of Nelson, Baylark said he takes pride in what his understudy does with his limited playing time. As he should when depth is ever so important when the season comes down to the wire.

"Definitely, since Tony has been here I've been telling him if the coaches get on him he's just got to come back and work harder," he said. "It's especially good to have the depth we have. It's good to have Tony back there. In our group we always try to be the best."

It's safe to say the Maroon and White had its way with the Tribe — a team that surrendered only 16 points to Hofstra and lost by just 10 to Maryland.

Jon Pelland is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at

COLLEGIAN – MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

For the second week in a row, James Ihedigbo and the UMass defense held their opponents to single-digit points. He contributed three tackles.

UM picks up exhibition win, gives glimpse of what's to come

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team began its season on the right foot Friday by taking down New Brunswick, 4-2.

Though it was just an exhibition game, UMass coach Don Cahoon used it as an opportunity to see his team play in a game situation for the first time since last March.

Sophomore David Leaderer wasted little time in getting the Minutemen on the board. On a power play just 1:13 into the game, Leaderer fired a shot from the point that sailed by Varsity Reds' goalie Reg Bourcier for the 1-0 advantage.

Again the Minutemen scored on a power play deep in the first period. This time sophomore Chris Davis shot the puck from the point. It got deflected and landed on the ice in front of fellow sophomore Cory Quirk's stick. Quick to react, Quirk immediately shot the puck into the net.

New Brunswick got onto the scoreboard with a goal of its own six minutes into the second period. Sophomore goaltender Jon Quick – who came in for the second period – couldn't stop the puck just as a Martin Nolet penalty expired.

Just 12 seconds later, the Minutemen extended their lead once again. Kevin Maresco scored on a beautiful feed from teammate Zech Klann. Klann gained control of the puck in the neutral zone and skated in toward the New Brunswick net. He then slid the puck across the crease where Maresco one-timed it home.

After the Varsity Reds pulled within one goal at 3-2, freshman Brett Watson capped the scoring with his first goal at UMass. The rookie took a pass from Leaderer at the blue line and skated in on the net before sending the puck past the goalie.

Depth in net

Cahoon made a surprising move to start freshman goaltender Dan Meyers over Quick, the team's No. 1 netminder. Meyers didn't disappoint. He held New Brunswick scoreless in his one period on the ice.

Meyers made two spectacular saves in a shorthanded situation midway through the first period. The first was a blocker save he made stretching his right arm across the crease to knock the puck down. Not long after, he made a sprawling play on his back to stop another shot.

To hang around in the A-10 the rest of the way, the Minutemen must replicate or come close to the performance they had here Saturday. Despite being ahead of Richmond in the conference standings, UMass is still the third-best team in the league behind UNH and the Spiders.

With the weapons they have on the offensive side of the ball, it's not inconceivable that they could do that. Just think — the Minutemen had 278 rushing yards with their No. 2 and 3 running backs on the shelf. Matt Lawrence and Tim Washington both sat out the game due to injury, although Brown did say Washington was available if UMass needed him.

Even if their true test awaits them on Nov. 4 in Durham, the past few weeks have been a testament to what this offense can do in just four minutes, and that's put points on the board — a lot of them.

For starters

Cahoon sent out this line to start the exhibition: Quirk at left wing, Davis at right wing and senior captain Matt Anderson at center with freshmen Martin Nolet and Mike Kostka on the blue line.

He didn't say if that will be the team's first line come Friday for the season-opener, but he will need to find somewhere for Chris Capraro to play. The senior was one of the Minutemen's top scoring threats a year ago but was not dressed for the game.

Mad science

The exhibition was used as a way to experiment some possible rule changes. Some of the differences on the ice were the presence of two referees and icing wasn't allowed on shorthanded situations — because the Mullins Center is too expensive to open for an exhibition, Friday's game was played at the practice rink. Although it was a little cramped, the rink made for an intimate setting with the stands packed with fans. Sitting in the Mullins Cafe gave spectators a bird's-eye view of the action.

KAREN WINSOR – COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Chris Davis notched an assist in Friday's exhibition win over New Brunswick. He helped out on David Leaderer's first-period goal.

find out what's blowing in the wind

If 20 of GE's wind turbines were used to replace the same amount of energy generated in the U.S. through traditional sources, greenhouse gas emissions could be reduced by an amount equal to taking nearly 27,000 cars off the road in the U.S. We call this ecamagination. At GE we invite you to find your answer to ecamagination through a career in engineering, finance, manufacturing, sales and marketing, human resources, or information technology.

Visit gecareers.com
an equal opportunity employer

ecomagination CHALLENGE
Take the challenge
ecocollegechallenge.com

Come see us at the
Engineering and Computer Science Career Fair
October 11, 2006
Campus Center
10 AM - 3 PM

imagination at work

JOIN OUR TEAM.
WRITE FOR SPORTS.
call
(413) 545.0719

UM drops crucial contests

FIELD HOCKEY from page 14

often the victor.

Sunday, against the Saint Joseph's Hawks, the Minutewomen rallied from a 2-0 first half deficit, only to lose 3-2 on a goal just two minutes before the end of regulation.

King notched her fourth goal of the season on a pass from sophomore forward Lauren Gillespie, while junior forward Racheal Mervine tallied her first score of the year on an assist from King.

"We get caught in old habits," Shea said. "They have to make a choice to change something if they're not successful; the hard thing is they have to make those decisions on the field."

Speaking before Friday's 2-1 loss to Temple, Shea stressed that the Minutewomen needed to play smart hockey, cutting down on mental lapses that have too often resulted in goals for the opposition this season.

"[Winning] is about who makes their luck," Shea said. "[It's about] who plays with cleaner skills, who follows their game plan. We need to play smarter, and [we] have the tools to play smarter; they need to be aware of what's happening around them."

Against an Owls team that won six straight, the Minutewomen played a strong first half. Carrying play from the opening minute, the ball was in Temple's end for the majority of the first 35 minutes, resulting in the 6-1 shot advantage and 3-1 edge in corners held by UMass at the break.

"It's probably the best hockey that I've seen them play [in the first half]," Shea said.

The Minutewomen came out flat at the beginning of the second half, while Temple surged ahead with purpose, scoring just 52 seconds into the period. Freshman forward Charise Young tallied an unassisted goal, beating freshman goalkeeper Sarah Williams with a perfect shot just inside the right post.

For much of the second half, the Minutewomen struggled to generate any offensive pressure.

"We didn't make adjustments quick enough," Shea said. "We needed to stop dribbling straight into their sticks."

With 5:37 left in regulation, freshman midfielder Cher King scored amidst a wild scramble in front of the Temple goal.

Williams forced an overtime period with solid play in the net, while her teammates struggled to clear the zone.

The extra period saw the Minutewomen fly around the open field, taking advantage of their team speed in the seven-on-seven format.

After failing to convert on a penalty corner of their own, the Minutewomen gave up consecutive corners to Temple. Junior midfielder Ali Lokey converted the second opportunity into the game-winner.

After the game, both Shea and the Minutewomen were disappointed, but far from dejected by the loss.

"We feel good about this game," Shea said. "The outcome wasn't what we wanted — we deserved to win [this game], but we just didn't make it happen."

CHRISTIAN CARRIZO – COLLEGIAN

Freshman Cher King is second on the Minutewomen in points this season with 10. She has recorded four goals and an assist this season including one of each in Friday's 3-2 loss to Saint Joseph's.

Minutewomen no strangers to overtime

By Kevin Doodey
Collegian Staff

Instead of sudden death, "sudden victory" is the term used for the 15-minute, seven-on-seven overtime period in field hockey games when one goal decides the winner of a hard-fought match, and the loser is defeated in the most grueling fashion.

Yes, even field hockey has fallen victim to the politically correct climate we live in today.

Putting aside our politically correct climate, the Massachusetts field hockey team is much more concerned that it has fallen in "sudden victory" in three of its last five losses. UMass dropped its last overtime game in a 2-1 defeat to the Temple Owls last Friday.

The Connecticut Huskies and Saint Joseph's Hawks have been the only teams in the past five Minutewomen defeats that have made sure the fans at Garber Field didn't have to rearrange their schedules because of overtime.

UMass laid a 6-0 egg to the Huskies in a forgettable home-opener and then avoided the extra session against the Hawks, only to lose 3-2 to St. Joseph's Sunday with just two minutes remaining in the contest after coming back to erase a 2-0 deficit in the second half.

For the Maroon and White, overtime and close games with Temple are an inevitable song and dance the two teams take part in when they square off.

Friday's game was the fourth straight meeting between the two Atlantic 10 foes that was decided in "sudden victory."

To no one's surprise, the four-game overtime series is split 2-2, with the last seven games decided by just one goal.

The last time the dance was an enjoyable one for the Minutewomen was in last year's A-10 semifinal tournament game. UMass sent the Owls packing with a goal by sophomore forward Mary Shea in overtime.

Since then, "sudden victory" has spelt doom for the Minutewomen. The Dartmouth Big Green's Lizzie Bildner sent the Minutewomen back to the Bay State with her overtime goal just half a minute into the extra frame, concluding an eight-game road trip.

The friendly confines of Garber Field proved to be no friend to the Minutewomen. Meg Ryan shut the coffin in OT in a game where UMass had no shots on goal throughout regulation.

So are all the heartbreaking overtime losses going to the team's head? Should the team go see a psychologist? UMass coach Patty Shea isn't scheduling an appointment with Dr. Phil or branding the 2006 Minutewomen fragile anytime soon.

"It doesn't get into the psyche of the team because we know that we're a better team than [how we sometimes play]," Shea said. "It really doesn't go to our head because all three overtime losses have been preventable. It's okay to play a good field hockey game, but we got to start getting something out of it.

"I can say that the Syracuse game we were lucky it got to overtime. This game [against Temple] we fought back to put it into overtime," Shea added. "We had the majority of play in overtime, but that's what the excitement of overtime is, you can have just one ball that can make or break the whole difference."

One of the reasons the Minutewomen have found themselves in overtime so much this year is a result of having to come from behind in games, or simply not being able to generate any offense at all, as was the case with Syracuse.

Except for its win over a hapless Siena Saints squad, the Minutewomen have only had the lead for more than one half of play just one time this year.

Since collegiate field hockey games began to be decided in "sudden-victory" in 1988, the Minutewomen have lost a total of 12 games in overtime before this year's outbreak of extra sessions.

It wasn't until the 1991 season that the Maroon and White got its first taste of defeat in overtime. After that overtime loss, UMass didn't lose another game in OT for another six years.

The 2006 field hockey campaign saw the Maroon and White win five games in "sudden victory," the most in any season for UMass.

The Minutewomen are hoping that 70 minutes of regulation will be all it takes to pull off a win in their next game at home against the Vermont Catamounts this Wednesday.

Until the team can accomplish that task, fans should keep their heart medication close at hand and be prepared for possible heartbreak when heading to Garber Field to catch their Minutewomen in action.

Stoll steps in for injured Rodriguez

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

While fighting for possession of the ball in a game against La Salle on Oct. 1, junior midfielder/defender Tina Rodriguez hit the turf hard, grabbing at her right knee. "T-Rod" — as referred to by coaches and teammates — was immediately attended to by the team's trainers and helped off the field.

After UMass coach Jim Rudy altered the positioning of some of his players, Sydney Stoll entered the game to fill the void left by Rodriguez's departure.

Stoll finished the game, but the Massachusetts women's soccer team lost a very physical contest 3-1.

After the game, Rudy mentioned that T-Rod's injury might mean the first-career start for Stoll — and sure enough, it did.

Rudy had sophomore forward Vanessa Patry and senior defender/midfielder Nadia Villarroel play deeper in their positioning and simply added Stoll in as a third forward.

The Dedham, Mass. native had already made a habit of subbing into the game early, usually for senior Elizabeth Weinstein. The next game, versus the Dayton Flyers, however, marked her first career start.

The 3-1 loss proved to be somewhat uneventful for Stoll, though she did manage to register two shots and Rudy was very happy with her performance.

"It's a good start for her," Rudy said. "She's a very, very dynamic player who can make things happen."

Two days later, on Sunday, Stoll made it two straight with a start against the Xavier Musketeers.

Statistics-wise, it was another boring day for Stoll, but the Minutewomen won an exciting 1-0 game barely three minutes into the first overtime.

Senior defender Stephanie Barrett took a pass and crossed it to junior Britt Canfield. The forward's initial shot deflected off of a Xavier player before she put the rebound past the Musketeers' goalkeeper Kerry Farrell for the win.

And guess who started this game-winning play: Stoll.

Stoll admits that helping the team score such goals is really important, but she refuses to put herself on the back.

"I'm a playmaker — that's what my job is," Stoll said. "But it feels good."

When asked to comment on why many of team-leader Canfield's goals seem to stem from one of her passes, Stoll gave the simplest answer she could think of.

"[The two of us] have a connection. That's just how things go," Stoll commented.

Canfield mentioned that it's nice knowing that such a reliable player like Stoll is on field.

"Syd has been doing an awesome job. She's quick, she's always there. She feeds the ball really well," Canfield said. "It's just helped our team a lot, especially with Tina [Rodriguez] not being there."

Two other people who are very happy to see such a nice transition are the team's co-captains Villarroel and Barrett.

Both captains remember being the young freshmen on the varsity team and they appreciate any contribution to success — even if it's dashing out passes from the midfield line and letting the seasoned veterans be the heroes.

"It's not all about who scores the goal. The defenders and the mid fielders all help," Villarroel said. "Sydney plays a really important part in why we're having so much success this season."

Just a few short months ago, Stoll — like all other freshmen — was a shy and timid newcomer. Since the beginning of the regular season, however, her work ethic has really allowed her to come into her own as a college player.

"I thinks that a very important thing, especially for the future of our program," Villarroel went on. "[It's great] to know that just after this season, when I'm gone, the program is still going to have the same work ethic that Sydney Stoll does."

"It's great [seeing a freshman contribute in the little ways]," Barrett added. "That's what our team is about. From the freshmen and the newcomers to even us old girls, we're really solid and we're closer in skill than anything. There are no star players and I think that's what our major concern is on the team. When there's a freshman a junior, and a senior involved in one play, that's the best thing."

"[All the freshmen] have extreme potential," Barrett continued. "They're all coming in, and they're seeing how we play. They're really adjusting easily. The more they play with us — because we're a very old team that all played together — the better it is and they keep coming in contributing in their own ways."

Despite her much-appreciated play, Stoll has scored only one goal this season — an insurance goal in a 3-1 victory over Boston University on Aug. 30.

Though recording her second tally of the year during this weekend's two games in Philadelphia would be exciting, it will be fairly low on the freshman's priority list.

"I'm looking to connect with Britt more, get a win and just keep going," Stoll said.

Novice four and eight lead crew at Head of the Housatonic

By Kevin Collins
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts women's crew team rowed its way to two more victories Saturday at The Head of the Housatonic in Derby, Conn.

UMass was led by both the novice-four and novice-eight boats, both registering wins. The novice-four consisted of freshmen Samantha Smith, Sarah Albert, Jenna Oelschlegel, and Jessica Romain. Freshman Molly Morgan was the coxswain.

The Minutewomen crossed the finish line with a time of 19:18.72, with Lesley University close behind at 20:50.80. Sacred Heart University rounded out the top three with a 21:13.57 finish.

The UMass novice-eight was also victorious on the day. The boat was made up of freshmen Albert, Oelschlegel, Chelsea Finnegan, Kelsey Olsberg, Smith, Allison Dorozenti, Julie Pulda, and Romain. Morgan again served as coxswain.

UMass finished the course in 18:00.10 and cruised to victory by a margin of over 30 seconds. The Minutewomen pulled away from second place Trinity College, which finished with a time of 18:30.37. The United States Coast Guard Academy rounded out the top three with a time of 18:38.06.

UMass head coach Jim Dietz was pleased with the development of the novices.

"They had a good regatta," he said. "The girls were able to win a couple races and I'm happy with their showing this weekend."

In its first collegiate entry, the UMass lightweight four had a strong showing, finishing in second place with a time of 19:40.24. Community Rowing Incorporated won the race with a time of 18:52.83.

The Lightweight Four was made up of junior Anna Malinkevich, senior Sarah Potts, freshman Brittany Cartin, junior Maria Arcari, and senior coxswain Daria Pulda.

The women's Open Two was won by Northeastern with a time of 19:06.36. However, the Minutewomen placed second in another strong finish. Finishing with a time of 19:27.31 were senior Gabrielle Papineau and junior Ellen Maskry. Amherst College finished in third with a time of 22:04.94, and Lesley University fourth with a time of 23:13.38.

The UMass quad finished in third place behind boats from the New York Athletic Club and the University of Rhode Island. The boat consisted of freshman Haley Fitzgerald, Papineau, junior Kristin Boyce, and junior Tara Guiran. The team rowed the course in a time of 18:07 — 37 seconds behind second-place URI.

"The women's double was absolutely outstanding," Dietz said. "They may have finished in third place, but they were the first collegiate boat across the finish line. They rowed an extremely good race."

Three Minutewomen also competed in the women's Open Collegiate Single. For junior Hanna Brewster it was her first collegiate entry in this event. She finished with a solid fifth-place finish in a time of 19:09.29. The Undine Barge Club's Beth Greene won the race with a time of 18:57.87.

Sophomore Sarah Marsan finished 12th in the Open Single with a time of 20:17.78, while junior Jaime Dicke had a 14th place finish with a time of 21:56.34.

The Minutewomen will take this week off in order to prepare for The Head of the Charles in Boston on Oct. 21 and 22. Dietz is extremely confident in the weeks before one of the most competitive races of the season.

"We are having a good season thus far," he said. "I think our double is set to do something special. I think they should be the favorite to win at the Head of the Charles in two weeks. They are rowing extremely well."

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potters-auto.com
(One mile North of UMass on bus route)
Collision Repair & Gloss Replacement

2X Tuesday
Domino's Pizza
Buy Any Large Pizza...
Get One FREE Delivered!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
Tuesdays Only

"Results you can feel
... without the side effects."
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Participating provider for HMO's student insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, car insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
Most insurance accepted.
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Rollercoaster weekend for UM

M. SOCCER from page 14

We got the win against Dayton, which is good for us because Dayton is a very good team. Against Xavier, we just didn't play our best, and we came out and lost, so it's disappointing."

The Minutemen were on a five-game scoreless skid heading into the weekend. That all changed when freshman Bryan Hogan scored his team-high fourth goal of the season just over two minutes into overtime on Friday night against Dayton.

The last time UMass had scored before then was on Sept. 15 in its 1-0 win over Hartford in non-conference play.

Hogan was the savior in that game as well.

Hogan's goal against Dayton not only got UMass on the board for the first time in over 560 minutes, it snapped a five-game winless streak as well.

The Minutemen have not had the best of times during this five-game road trip, going 1-3-1 in their longest road trip of the year.

"We hadn't scored in a number of games, so that goal was big for us," Cook said. "Morale-wise, that was good for our team to finally get a goal. I think we found out that goals haven't been coming easy for our team this year, so we have to limit the opponents' goals.

We know we just have to find a way to poke one in, regardless if it's pretty or not, or in overtime."

The Minutemen return home for two games against Saint Joseph's and Temple. UMass is now in 10th place (out of 14 teams) in the A-10.

Returning to Amherst for a few games certainly can't hurt.

"We're ecstatic to play at home," Cook said. "The past three weeks have been ridiculous on the road. The past three weeks I think we've been home for three days and then gone for four. The traveling takes a lot out of you, and we love playing at Rudd Field, so hopefully we can get some good results this weekend."

Christian Gomez/Collegian

Freshman Mark DeSantis has logged 880 minutes this season. He has yet to score his first collegiate goal, but has recorded two assists.

Cross country has strong showing in Boston

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

BOSTON, Mass. — The Massachusetts cross country teams raced for the New England Championships on Saturday afternoon. The large meet featured 45 teams from Division I, II, and III at Franklin Park. The Minutemen finished eighth overall and the Minutewomen placed 16th.

The teams will be back in New York next week for the Albany Invitational on Saturday.

The Minutemen had great individual runs from sophomore Jesse Regnier and junior Nils Fischer. Regnier crossed the line first for UMass with a 14th-place finish (25:12). Fischer placed 31st with a time of 25:27.

"I didn't realize I was that high up until I crossed the line, they threw a T-shirt and a certificate at me," Regnier said. "I was looking to place in the top 15, top 20, but when we went on the first mile we were in a huge pack in 60th or 70th place and it was a little nerve racking not being able to see the leaders."

Regnier and the rest of the Minutemen found their way through the pack of over 300 runners.

"We wanted to be in a mix a little further up than we were," Regnier added. "We got squeezed back but after the mile mark we really started moving up quickly."

UMass-Lowell finished first overall with 76 points. It finished with five runners within the top 30. The Minutemen scored a total of 263 points.

Rounding out the top five for the men were junior Ryan Durkin, 70th (25:50), freshman Nicolai Naranjo, 76th (25:51), and sophomore Daniel Moriarty, 80th (25:52).

The Minutewomen have been decimated by injuries of late. Despite those setbacks, this gutsy and talented UMass team still finished 16th with 531 points. Junior Christina DeRosa finished first for the team placing 32nd with a time of 18:30.

"I'm happy with the way my athletes are racing, they are training hard and they're racing just as hard," UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said. "We've yet to have our top five [runners] together. We were missing two of the top five today, which kills us."

Junior Amber Sayer injured her back earlier in the week and was missing in action before the race. Freshman Lauren Liuzzo sprained her ankle during warm-ups, and started the race but could not finish. Luizzo and Sayer have been two of the top runners on the team this year.

"Lauren was very upset because she's very competitive and this is her home course," LaFreniere said. "She wanted to see what she could do today, she's a little heartbroken over it. Her sprain is not that bad but it wasn't okay to race."

For Liuzzo, this race is a homecoming. She raced at Franklin Park when she was in high school at Acton-Boxboro.

"I was really looking forward to running here because I ran here in high school, and I wanted to compare my times," Liuzzo said. "I was disappointed that I couldn't finish but I have next weekend."

LaFreniere would like to see how talented this group is but they haven't been able to be 100 percent healthy.

"I'm frustrated because I would like to see where we would be with everyone healthy at the same time and we haven't had that opportunity yet," she said. "We have to be healthy and ready to go for conference championships."

After DeRosa, the Minutewomen's next five runners were senior Cuisle Kierans, 100th (19:16), junior Taryn Trapp, 110th (19:22), freshman Eilis Kierans, 115th (19:24), and junior Ashley Davidson in 175th, (19:54).

"I got out really strong and tried to hold it a little bit, it was nice running with Christina for a while," Trapp said. "We have a strong pack up in front and I think our team is starting to fall together, we are looking strong. It's really great having girls there every single day pushing you to make sure your trying as hard as you can."

The women's race featured over 300 runners and for some of the new runners it proved to be a big step up from high school. The girls ran aggressively but they struggled to separate from the large pack.

"I've never been around that many people, it was a bit intimidating and I was really nervous," Liuzzo said. "I tried to get out as fast as I could and just go with the pack. Once we got through it was hard because there were so many people everywhere and elbows everywhere."

Canfield salvages UMass' weekend

W. SOCCER from page 14

Our defense helped me out a lot. It's not like [Xavier] was down at our end the whole time. Nobody deserved that goal more than Britt. She works so hard and it's awesome for her."

The rest of the team and Rudy are starting to run out of positive things to say about Canfield, who seems to always be at the right place at the right time.

"I don't even know what to say about Britt because there's so much," senior co-captain Nadia Villarroel said. "She's a great player and a great person. She always works her butt off and that's why everyone likes her."

"You never know what Canfield is going to do," Rudy added. "She could be having the worst game of her life and she'll put it in the net."

Rudy was relieved following the game. He knew it could have just as easily gone the other way.

"We've been on the other end of games like this," he said. "I guess what comes around goes around somewhat. I feel really happy for our kids as we've been going through a tough time. But I feel very fortunate as well. We survived here long enough and got the win. The soccer gods were with us today."

Rudy and his team understood the enormity of the game and how crucial coming out with a win proved to be moving forward.

"This is going to be really important to the rest of our season," Villarroel said. "This is our first win in three games and we're traveling on the road next weekend. It's kind of like a turning point and now we know what it feels like to win again."

"It would have been dangerous losing that game and falling to 1-3 in the A-10's," Rudy said. We're still going through the angst of playing without Tina Rodriguez. It's a process. I think because of the transition we're in now, it was important to get the win today."

The game against Xavier turned out to be a virtual must-win due to the Maroon and White's loss to Dayton (4-3-3) on Friday. Despite taking the lead, 1-0, on Villarroel's third goal of the season, UMass was unable to sustain the advantage for very long and ultimately lost 3-1.

"We're a little discombobulated," Rudy said following the loss. "We have to change things up a little bit. I just didn't feel like we had great performance out of our older players. I thought the younger kids did great. We had some good opportunities and good looks but we fired it right at the keeper. I don't think the score reflected not what should have been, but what could have been."

Senior Stephanie Barrett is a co-captain for the Minutewomen this season. In 12 starts she has recorded three assists.

Engineering
& Computer Science
CAREER FAIR
CO-OP +FULL TIME POSITIONS
WED.
October 11, 2006
10:00AM - 3:00PM
Campus Center Auditorium
06
www.umass.edu/careers ← CAREER SERVICES
UMASS AMHERST Student Affairs & Campus Life Career Services

REMINDER!!!

IMPORTANT NOTICE FROM THE STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION

The Student Government Association (SGA) will be holding a special student referendum on Wednesday October 11th and Thursday October 12th (10am-2pm & 5pm-8pm) on student representation in senate.

The referendum will ask for support in increasing the representation of students from 250 students per senator to 500 students per senator, in order to increase competitiveness and efficiency in the Undergraduate Senate. Be sure to vote at one of the Dining Commons (Berkshire, Hampshire, Franklin, and Worcester) or the Campus Center Concourse.

For further information please contact the Chancellor of Elections, Pryianka Pant, SGA Speaker Peter Barros, SGA President Elvis Méndez

Office Hours: 2-5 p.m. Fridays in the SGA Office
Phone Number: 545-0341
www.umass.edu/sga
sga@stuaf.umass.edu
sga.speaker@stuaf.umass.edu
sga.president@stuaf.umass.edu

We Don't Want Your Comics Anyways
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		6		3	5			2
				7			9
9		5				7		1
						3		6
	8	7				4	5
5		9
8		3				1		7
	6			8
7				3	6		9

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Climb upward
7 UBN cops
10 S-shaped molding
14 Cream-filled dessert
15 Toledo gold
16 College bigwig
17 Everest guide
18 Most despicable
20 Muscat sultanate
21 Attractive individual
23 Poker take
24 St. Catherine's Cardinals
26 Rumpled
28 Typefaces
27 Guitarist Paul
28 Arrange in order
31 Scatter over a surface
33 C.I.A. forerunner
36 Film clips
38 Sticks
40 Sawbuck
41 Ease off
43 Choose by ballot
44 Come out
45 Fiery particle
47 Desert stopovers
50 "We hold ___ truths to be..."
51 Wind dir.
54 Vanity grabbers
56 Comic Wilson
57 Of the highest quality
58 Infuriate
60 12/24 and 12/31
61 Tavern brew
62 Get steamed
63 Kick back
64 Blue
65 Confections

DOWN
1 Fable man
2 Loser
3 Since grip
4 Merit
5 Floppy bite
6 Mythical monster
7 Individual performer
8 Goads
9 Spirit within 10 Hateful
11 Nerdy types
12 Facilitates
13 Way in
19 Unspecified place
22 Beginning
24 Faithful patriots
26 Plump
27 Guided
28 Toward the stern
29 Fish eggs
30 Director Howard
32 Door knocker
33 Taconite or bauxite
34 Min. testament
35 Mach+ jet
37 ___ what?
39 Antlered grazer
42 Led to a seat
44 Abhor
46 Judge the value of
47 Put forward
48 Animated
49 Accumulates money
50 Refrain syllables
51 Raise the spirits of 52 Vision
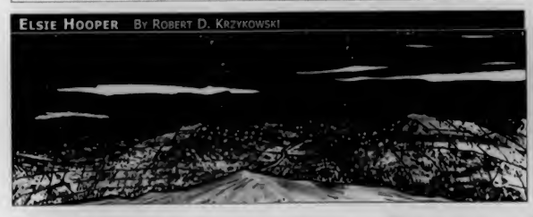
53 Fencers' foils
55 Greek letters
58 Unrestrained
59 Just out

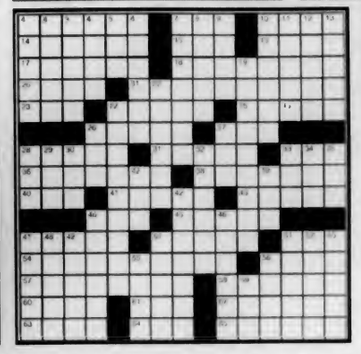
THE HARP
FALL SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
TONIGHT - Trivia Night
WED - 1/2 price apps.
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the river 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate readers poll
163 Sunderland Rd - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-9000 www.theharp.net

Quote of the Day

"Defeat is not the worst of failures. Not to have tried is the true failure."
—George E. Woodberry

Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shaler
Melissa sure sleeps a lot.
She's a cat
When does she sleep?
Early Sometimes, maybe. It depends
Not specific enough. What about hunting habits? Do you know when she hunts?
Why obsess over Melissa's every nuance? I need to learn as much as possible, because one of these days, she will try to eat me





Best Bar Around
Seven O's
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
Friday 10/13:
FLOYD PATTERSON
Student Band Wanted!!
Call (413)658-7116
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-8788
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
Next To Cliffside Apts.

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You are not lazy, but what does it matter if you are. Just relax.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Just because you're beautiful doesn't mean that you can treat people like that.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
If life gives you cattle. Make meat pie.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
In the future you will not be rich, but no one else will either due to the apocalypse.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Things will be a lot better when you are older.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will be quoted as saying, "I ain't never gonna die!" It will turn out to be true.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Every day that passes by is just one less day to procrastinate.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You don't need any advice; everything you need you already have.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Baby, you got it going on.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You're really in the wrong scene; check out what's out there.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
People follow your every move. You should really mess with them.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You're dying from a lack of laughter.

THANK YOU FOR READING
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Our Nurses deserve Respect as Army Officers and call the shots! Guaranteed 2 to 3 ½ year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Apartment for Rent

92 Toyota Camry Station Wagon $850 549-9639

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day. Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Graphic Designer wanted, undergraduate okay. Only requirements, talent and desire to work. Competitive pay. Resume and Portfoli to bob@buenoysano.com

Employment

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

PT Sales Assoc. positions available in the bakery, deli and produce departments. Evening, weekend, and holiday availability required. Call or email Kelly at 253-9528 kelly@atkinsfarms.com

Employment

Female PCA Wanted Nights, Evening, weekends. $10.48/hour. Must have transport. Call Martina at (413) 210-6301

McDonald's Crew Members Needed. Full & part-time openings at Michell Bradley/McDonalds. Competitive wages & salaries plus benefits. Start at $9.62 /hr. Apply at Michell Bradley/ McDonalds office at Bradley Int'l Airport, Terminal A, 2-5pm, M-W, or send resume to EHmichell@aol.com Call 203-223-0153 with questions.

Entertainment

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

Lost & Found

White Palm Pilot lost 921

Services

Pregnancy Testing. HIV Testing. Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Services

Have you been ripped off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Travel

Travel with STS to this year's top 10 Spring Break destinations! Best deals guaranteed! Highest rep commissions. Visit www.ststravel.com or call 1-800-648-4849 Great group discounts

Submit Classifieds online at: www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rookie Nelson leads UMass in rout

Sean Smalls wrestles down William and Mary's R.J. Archer for one of his five tackles on Saturday. The Minutemen's 48-7 victory was the second consecutive game of holding opponents to a single touchdown. Last week they defeated Stony Brook by the same score.

Offense keeps rolling in another blowout

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

Blowouts are becoming routine for the Massachusetts football team.

On Saturday, the Minutemen (4-1, 2-0 Atlantic 10) sent William and Mary packing after a 48-7 dissection decided the game before halftime.

The Minutemen travel to No. 22 Towson next weekend for the first-ever meeting between the two teams.

UMass	48
W&M	7

Backup freshman tailback Tony Nelson had 13 carries for 72 yards and three touchdowns. The 5-3 yards per carry in the win (first-string backs Tim Washington and Matt Lepine — both higher than Nelson on the depth chart — were sidelined due to injury.

"The coaches and players have been telling me all year long that I just have to be patient and keep working from the sidelines," Nelson said. "I feel like it's a reward for me because they helped me to play better. They coach me. I thank God that I have help on the sidelines and that I can play football."

Think about what you can do in four minutes. Nothing much more than brush your teeth. Even if you live on campus, you can't even walk to class in that amount of time (from the North Apartments it takes an average of 10 minutes).

Jon Pelland

On Saturday, the Massachusetts football team didn't take any longer than four minutes to put points on the board in any of its eight scoring drives. By the time you're trying to cross North Pleasant Street, the Minutemen have already marched 80 yards and scored seven.

In its 48-7 blowout of William and Mary, the UMass offense came together for the second week in a row. On Sept. 23, the Minutemen beat Stony Brook by the same score.

Lately it looks the offense is showcasing the kind of eye-popping numbers everyone knew they were capable of entering the season.

Sure they posted 31 points on Villanova and 28 on Colgate in the season-opener, but there was a feeling that this team could do much more than that. Granted their last two opponents weren't exactly I-AH and Richmond but watching the Minutemen the last two weeks you could see all the gears beginning to move together.

Those four-minute scoring drives mentioned above weren't exactly done with a short field, either. The first four consisted of 71 yards, 72 yards, and two 80-yard marches. They earned those 28 points.

Saturday was also the first time all season that UMass coach Don Brown was willing to take chances downfield throughout the entire game. Yes he did it in the beginning the Navy contest, but once that option offense took over, Brown went back to his bread-and-butter rushing attack.

In the two games leading up to Saturday, sophomore quarterback Liam Coen hooked up with wide out Rasheed Rancher for matching 89-yard plays that left fans craving more big plays down the field. There was no question entering the season that the Minutemen had the ability to air it out; it was a matter of willingness.

Then against the Tribe they finally stretched their passing-game legs. Coen completed passes of 44, 41, and 30 yards while backup Scott Woodward threw one for 43 yards.

"They made some adjustments [to the run] and it gave us some big play opportunities," Brown said. "Obviously it gives us an opportunity for some passing lines that maybe you wouldn't normally have."

J.J. Moore's 118 receiving yards was just the second time this season that a UMass player racked up 100 or more yards receiving. Brandon London was the first to do it against the Wildcats on Sept. 16 (104 yards).

You want to talk about an offense coming together? How does 596 yards of total offense sound? Those are Ricky Santos-David Ball-UNH numbers.

Everybody got into the act against William and Mary. Senior running back Steve Baylark rushed for a season-high 187 yards and freshman Tony Nelson had 69 yards in mop up time.

"I like to just go out there

See PELLAND on page 10

See FOOTBALL on page 11

UM ends scoreless streak, splits weekend

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team showed signs of its early-season success for a brief period of time over the weekend. But just two days after its 1-0 overtime win over Dayton on Friday, UMass hit yet another stumbling block in a 2-0 loss to Xavier on Sunday.

UMass	1
Dayton	0
Xavier	2
UMass	0

"On Friday, we really came out with some intensity," junior captain Kenny Cook said. "We played great team defense. We made it hard for [Dayton] to get through us, and we generated some very good opportunities.

"We had two mental letdowns on the goals [on Sunday]," he added. "We didn't play awful on Sunday, but it wasn't one of our best performances, and it showed in the result."

UMass is back in action on Friday when it hosts Saint Joseph's at 3:30 p.m. at Rudd Field.

The Minutemen (7-5-2, 1-3 Atlantic 10) were shutout by the Musketeers on Sunday, marking UMass' fifth loss in Prince Ifesh and the Minutemen snapped their five-game [illegible] with their 1-0 overtime win over Dayton on Friday.

See M. SOCCER on page 11

Minutewomen drop two conference games

By J.M. Hirshman
Collegian Staff

Heading into a weekend of great opportunity, the Massachusetts field hockey team (3-10, 0-2 Atlantic 10) faltered, falling short against two A-10 conference opponents.

Temple	2
UMass	1
St. Joe's	3
UMass	2

Friday, the Minutewomen dropped a 2-1 overtime decision to Temple. Sunday, the Maroon and White fell to Saint Joseph's 3-2. Both losses came at Garber Field.

Blame it on the road.

A season-opening road trip put the Minutewomen in an early 2-6 hole. Blame it on bad luck. Blame it on shaky goaltending, defensive breakdowns and inconsistent offensive output. With 10 losses in 13 games, there's plenty to go around.

Including the contests of this past weekend, the Minutewomen are now 1-4 at home. Over the past four seasons, UMass has posted an 11-25 mark at Garber Field, failing to establish any semblance of home-field advantage.

Regardless of where the games are played, wins are often a direct product of minimizing errors while creating opportunity. In a sport where prime scoring chances are few and far between, UMass coach Patty Shea knows the team that makes the fewest mistakes is

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 11

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

This week's standout athlete is freshman Tony Nelson. The freshman running back rushed for three touchdowns in the Minutemen's 48-7 victory over William and Mary on Saturday. Nelson had sconng runs of four, five, and two yards. The scores were the first of Nelson's young collegiate career. He carried the ball 13 times for 69 yards against the Tribe.

Nelson rushed for 69 yards on the day.

Canfield's overtime goal salvages weekend

By Eli Rosenwaike
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team (8-4, 2-2 Atlantic 10) bounced back from a disappointing loss on Friday at Dayton with a crucial overtime victory against Xavier (7-8) on Sunday to split the weekend's A-10 conference games.

Dayton	3
UMass	1
UMass	1
Xavier	0

Junior Jenny Roehrig has started all 12 games of the season. She assisted on Nadia Villaneda's goal against Xavier on Sunday.

See W. SOCCER on page 12

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

Prior to their 23-20 loss to the Rams on Sunday, the Packers were 40-0 when quarterback Brett Favre did not throw an interception. It was his second game this season without a pick.

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 61 LO: 54 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 11, 2006

THE ATTENS TO PLAY IN NORTHAMPTON PAGE 6

TIDBITS FROM A HECTIC WEEKEND PAGE 10

SGA unveils new referendum

The Student Government Association of the University of Massachusetts will unveil three referendum questions today, one of which could drastically alter their entire legislature process.

In an effort to increase the level of accountability held by student senators, President Elvis Mendez and Student Trustee, Mishy Leiblum, have created a referendum that would lower the number of senators seated in the SGA from 80 to 49.

"We want people that will appreciate their place and feel as though they have to truly represent their constituents," said Mendez in a Collegian interview in September. "A majority of senators failed to be actively involved in student concerns."

Mendez said it was far too easy for students to be elected to Senate in previous years, as evidenced by last year's results that showed many senators wining a seat with as few as one vote.

"Passing this referendum would ensure that the senators that are elected are the senators that will take the seat seriously and will represent their constituents correctly," said Mendez.

Mendez stressed the importance of the SGA to give the power back where it belongs: to the students.

"We have a budget of roughly $1.4 million. We want these funds to be a resource for students, not just Registered Student Organizations," said Mendez.

Mendez understands that the some students may see the decrease in senators as a possible decrease in accessibility to student government.

"I think that once the student body becomes adapted to the new senate, they'll grow to appreciate the fact that those students who work the hardest are the students that get into senate," said Mendez.

Students can cast their votes Wednesday and Thursday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., and 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. in any of the Dining Commons.

SGA members are also asking students to vote on a referendum that supports Liebium to demand the Board of Trustees to freeze tuition fees.

"Realistically, the SGA can't push that motion forward by ourselves," said Mendez. "But if we go to the trustees with an approved referendum that states the majority of UMass student support this, it makes it easier for Mishy to present."

–Matt Bellivean

SGA President, Elvis Mendez (above) and Student Trustee Mishy Leiblum hope to increase Senate accountability through new referendum.

OIT launches new version of SPIRE

By Matt Bellivean
Collegian Staff

The Office of Information Technologies (OIT) at the University of Massachusetts will be launching a new, improved version of SPIRE today. The upgrade, which will take place over the course of a week, will offer numerous enhancements, according to OIT officials, including extended browser support, a more reliable system, and a more user-friendly interface.

In preparation for the upgrade, SPIRE has been off-line from October 5 until this morning.

Under the original program, students were limited to using Internet Explorer 6.x for Windows and Safari 1.x for Macintosh. With SPIRE 3.0 students can now use the latest version of Firefox on Windows XP and Macintosh OS X.

Officials at SPIRE have heard their share of complaints from students and faculty over the program's first few years.

"The old Spire definitely had and has its share of problems," said Steve Madeco, an UMass sophomore. "It's always a hassle signing up for classes or even checking my schedule."

In an attempt to centralize information on SPIRE 3.0, the "schedule of classes" now includes course descriptions on its class detail pages, and the revised "course catalog" will provide class availability information by term, so students won't have to visit as many pages to find what they need.

The new "Student Center" aims to provide students with easy access to their grades, enrollment appointment and class schedule while the Student Services Center plans to allow Academic Records users to access a student's personal and academic profile from one single location.

The new "Faculty Center" will provide instructors with a single-point entry to their teaching schedules, as well as to their class and grade rosters, all listed by term.

Heidi Dollard, director of administrative applications, said that while the new features are significant, most of the features won't be visible to students and faculty.

"The improvements are mostly 'under the-hood', thats immediate visible change," said Dollard. "The majority of the changes are in the architecture of the program. It's better designed, easier maintained, and the user may not see major changes right away."

Dollard said programmers are frequently given suggestions by students and faculty on improving SPIRE, but because SPIRE is a purchase program, they are limited to what changes can be made.

"If there is a specific complaint that we're hearing over and over, we can file a suit with SPIRE. Sometimes they listen, sometimes they don't," said Dollard.

There are some aspects, however, that OIT can fix itself.

"After receiving the first version of SPIRE, we realized we'd have to completely revamp the class search option because the campus would have hated it the way it was originally," said Dollard. "We customized it to meet demands of the campus and streamlined it."

Dollard said that the recent changes may just be the beginning of a revised SPIRE.

"SPIRE 3.0 lays the foundation for future major improvements to be seen within the next one to three years," said Dollard.

New bill seeks to end online gambling

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

United States Congress passed a bill on September 30th to end online gambling in the country and is expected to cause a stir among the 850,000 people, between the ages of 18-22, who use online gambling Web sites at least once a month, according to the Annenberg Public Policy Center of the University of Pennsylvania.

The bill, titled The Unlawful Internet Gambling Enforcement Act of 2006, amends a previous law- The 1961 Wire Act- banning the placement of bets over wire transmissions, both within and outside of the U.S. The new bill expands the law to include the internet, seeking to effectively cut off U.S. gamblers from placing bets via credit cards or banks into accounts in offshore gambling companies.

The ban would go into effect 270 days after being signed into law by President Bush, which is expected to happen within the next week. In that time the Federal Reserve and U.S. Treasury are expected to outline procedures to enforce the law.

"It's ridiculous," said Sean Fraser, a junior, Chinese major, on the new legislation. "We have more important things to worry about."

The effectiveness of the law in preventing U.S. gamblers from playing online is also in question. The bill defines gambling, or wagering, as placing money on a "sporting event or a game subject to chance." Some critics have argued that poker is a game of skill, not heavily subject to chance, and therefore exempts online poker from the ban, according to a Reuter's article published on October 5th.

The Unlawful Internet Gambling Enforcement Act of 2006 passed by Congress on Sept. 30, 2006, hopes to cease online gambling in the U.S.

Though the bill is ambiguous in its definition of gambling, former New Jersey General Attorney John J. Farmer told Reuters that "if people tried to exploit the ambiguity in the language, it would almost certainly end up in court."

Other critics point out that most U.S. credit card companies and banks have already stopped allowing customers to send money directly to offshore gambling companies, according to an article published by the San Francisco Chronicle. Third-party payment processing sites located outside of the U.S., like Neteller, handle much of the financial transactions between gamblers and online gambling sites. If and how the U.S. government would target third-party companies with the new law is also unclear.

Shares in online gambling companies plunged last week, despite questions of the effectiveness of the ban. Online gaming companies, including the operator of Pacific Poker site, "888", and PartyGaming, lost almost 70 percent of their share prices on the London Stock Exchange, according to Reuters. Sportingbet shares fell a full 59 percent after the bill was passed by Congress. Upwards of 70 percent of online gambling companies revenues come from the United States.

"888" has posted a message on its Web site for all U.S. customers saying that the company "deeply regrets the decision of the U.S. Congress to ban gaming sites from accepting bets from U.S. based customers." The message indicates that until the legislation takes full effect, U.S. customers with existing accounts will still be able to play poker with real money. However, new members would be restricted to play money-only accounts.

The legislation was passed as part of a bill for improving port security.

"It's [an individuals] choice if they want to gamble," said Jason Maloney, a senior, Political Science major.

Maloney also expressed doubt that the bill would do anything to address those with a gambling problem, saying "they're going to [gamble], just like with alcohol or anything else."

Smugglers move diamonds despite ban

By Pauline Bax
Associated Press

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast – Smugglers in war-divided Ivory Coast are violating a United Nations-imposed ban on diamond sales, illegally exporting the gems to neighboring countries for overseas sales, according to a draft U.N. report obtained Tuesday by The Associated Press.

The illegal trade in "conflict diamonds" has long fueled African wars and the U.N. Security Council imposed the diamond embargo on Ivory Coast in a bid to keep rebels in the turbulent country from profiting from the gems.

The draft report, which has not yet been published, says $9 million to $24 million worth of diamonds mined in the rebel-held north of the West African country are being sold on the international market each year via brokers in Ghana and Mali.

Ivory Coast has been split in two since fighting erupted in 2002, and rebels control the arid northern half. About 10,000 U.N. and French peacekeepers have been deployed to maintain a fragile peace.

Rebel officials could not immediately be reached to comment on the report's findings.

Earlier this year, U.N. experts compiling the report visited five diamond mining sites controlled by the New Forces rebel movement.

The report identified four major diamond dealers – a Ivorian, a Malian, a Belgian and another whose nationality was not known – in the northern rebel town of Seguela. It also cited two Belgian buyers who relocated to Ghana following the outbreak of Ivory Coast's war.

A 60 percent rise in diamond exports from Ghana since 2000 could be explained by U.N. embargoes on Ivorian and Liberian diamonds, the report said.

Ivorian rebels impose taxes on trucks carrying goods through their territory to finance their activities and admit to smuggling cocoa to neighboring countries.

Porous borders and poor controls are to blame for the illicit diamond trade, according to the U.N. report, which urged Ghana and Mali to take steps to prevent Ivorian diamonds from being smuggled through their territory.

The diamond ban made Ivory Coast part of the "Kimberley Process," established in 2002 to help control conflict diamonds – sometimes called "blood diamonds" – that have fueled and funded wars that killed millions in Angola, Congo, Sierra Leone and Liberia.

The process is designed to track diamonds from mines to jewelry display cases, certifying the origin of each stone.

Five rescued from SoCal border tunnel

By Thomas Watkins
Associated Press

SAN DIEGO, Calif. – Five people trying to sneak into the United States from Mexico became trapped in a narrow tunnel and had to be rescued Tuesday after the largest of them, a nearly 200-pound man, got stuck trying to climb out through a storm drain, authorities said.

Firefighters used jackhammers at the city's border with Tijuana to widen the opening and free the man, who had become stuck at the hips, said James Jacques, a spokesman for U.S. Customs and Border Protection. Then they pulled out the four others who had become trapped behind him in the drainage tunnel.

All appeared to be uninjured, though one woman was taken to a hospital because she appeared to have become sick from the stuffy air, authorities said.

Seven more people who were behind that group managed to crawl back into Mexico through the tunnel, Jacques said.

Asked why one of the biggest members of the party had been put near the front of the line, Jacques said, "I'd tell you that was poor planning."

It took about two hours to free the five people, all in their 20s, said Maurice Luque, a spokesman with the San Diego Fire-Rescue Department.

Two other people who crawled out of the tunnel ahead of the larger man were caught in an industrial section of San Diego just north of the fences that separate the U.S. from Mexico.

Jacques said a tragedy easily could have occurred in the tunnel.

The tunnel, only about 2 feet across, is part of San Diego's storm drainage system. Jacques said it appeared someone on the Mexican side dug a tunnel to reach the U.S. system.

Law enforcement agents stand around the opening of a tunnel at the U.S.-Mexico border after several people were rescued on Oct. 10, 2006.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 26

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sherel Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jamison Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Virginia Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPY EDITOR Sean Duram
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellveau
SPORTS EDITOR Rob Greenfield
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Perez
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Theresa Batha
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smollet
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dollanstis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT SPORTS Danny Picard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jon Pelland
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALUMNI LIFE, BEING THE COLLEGE TAKES IN 1903, THE AMHERST COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN INCORPORATED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL MONDAY'S BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Bellveau

COPY EDITOR
Mathreya Hughes

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sean Duram, Tiffany Van Langen

Bush calls for help in school shootings

BY BEN FELLER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHEVY CHASE, Md.—President Bush urged the nation Tuesday to help prevent deadly school shootings, saying adults should intervene when they notice children are in trouble.

"Hopefully, out of these tragedies will come the sense of communal obligation all throughout our country, for people to take an extra effort to comfort the lonely," Bush said at a summit he ordered in response to recent violence.

Bush seemed most struck by one of the points raised by experts: When students plot violence, they often brag about it in advance to other students. Safety specialists say schools must encourage students to speak up when they notice any ominous behavioral changes.

"The whole purpose of this exercise is to help educate," Bush said at the National 4-H Conference Center, "and if there needs to be a cultural change inside schools, for teachers to become more aware and more active."

There were no new policies nor new money announced. The administration instead touted Web sites of existing resources. Panelists spent the day sharing examples of local programs.

Democrats mocked the event as a photo opportunity with little substance. Democratic senators challenged Bush to reinstate funding that's been cut from school-safety programs.

"It seems every week we learn of yet another school shooting, and all the president is willing to do is hold a summit," said Sen. Frank Lautenberg (news, bio, voting record), D-N.J.

Over the last two weeks, school shootings in Wisconsin, Colorado and Pennsylvania have unnerved the nation. Two involved adult intruders; the other was a student seeking revenge.

The federal role in school safety is limited. It's mainly a local matter. But the White House, sensitive to the concerns of many parents, wanted to show it was doing something.

Education Secretary Margaret Spellings and Attorney General Alberto Gonzales led three panel discussions. Time and again, speakers said schools get safer when they take bullying seriously, practice their crisis plans, and talk to parents about what's happening.

"Our first line of prevention is really having good intelligence," said Delbert Elliott, director of the University of Colorado Center for the Study and Prevention of Violence.

Columbine survivor Craig Scott told the wrenching story of the day his sister died. He was in the Colorado school in 1999 when two student gunmen went on a rampage, killing 13 people, including his sister Rachel. He told Bush that kindness and compassion can trump violence.

"Please take my words to heart today," Scott said. "They were bought at a high price."

Bush applauded Scott's efforts. But when responding to an audience member, Bush challenged an assertion that the school testing he champions has crowded out character education.

"I don't think it's zero-sum," Bush said. "I think you make sure a child learns and you can instill character at the same time."

He also said it was beyond the federal government to change what is in people's hearts.

Education Secretary Margaret Spellings gestures while addressing a conference on school safety, Oct. 10, 2006 in Chevy Chase, Md.

"Government is law and justice," Bush said. "Love comes from the hearts of people that are able to impart love."

The number of deadly shootings has gone up and down over the last 15 years. Overall school violence has trended downward, although it has increased lately.

Students in middle school and high school reported about 660,000 violent crimes in school in 2002 — a 43 percent drop from a decade earlier. But the number rose to 740,000 in 2003.

Four weeks before Election Day, the event gave Bush a chance to emphasize education, the issue at the center of his domestic agenda. The summit comes as Republicans in Congress have been eager to change the subject from a sex scandal involving former House pages.

Boy faces assault charge in Missouri shooting

BY MARCUS KABEL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOPLIN, Mo.—The 13-year-old boy who fired a single shot from an assault rifle inside a middle school was charged as a juvenile Tuesday in the bloodless shooting.

The boy, who entered Joplin Memorial Middle School wearing a mask, was charged with first-degree assault, armed criminal action and making terrorist threats. Officials of the Jasper County juvenile office said they were talking with a prosecutor about possibly charging the boy as an adult.

The student fired one shot into the ceiling of a school entryway Monday after confronting administrators and students, police said. Nobody was injured and he left after his gun jammed.

Another hearing is set for Wednesday, the juvenile office said. If convicted as a juvenile, the boy's sentence could range from in-home detention to incarceration lasting no longer than his 18th birthday.

Nearly all students returned to classes at the school Tuesday, officials said. Police officers and patrol cars were stationed near the school but largely out of sight to avoid frightening the sixth-through eighth-grade students, police Sgt. Curt Farmer said.

The boy's name was not released because of his age. The incident was the latest in a recent wave of school violence, including three deadly shootings in one week.

The student's backpack contained military manuals, instructions on assembling an improvised explosive device and detailed drawings of the school, which has 750 students. The rifle belonged to his parents, who told police they kept it in a gun safe.

Lt. Geoff Jones said the boy's motives were unclear. School officials said the student had no major disciplinary problems.

Superintendent Jim Simpson said police told him the boy had a fascination with the Columbine High School shooting in which 15 people were killed in 1999 near Littleton, Colo. Police declined to comment.

The student was wearing a trench coat — like the student gunmen at Columbine — and had a mask or hood fashioned out of a white T-shirt with two holes cut out for his eyes.

Joplin's schools do not have metal detectors. One full-time safety officer and several drug enforcement officers move between the schools, but none was at the middle school when the shooting happened.

Joplin, which has about 40,000 residents, is in southwest Missouri. It is about 10 miles from the small town of Riverton, Kan., where five high school students were arrested in April and accused of plotting a school rampage.

Members of Springfield Fire Dept. Bomb Squad leave the home of a 13-year-old boy who fired a gun in Memorial Middle School, Oct. 9, 2006.

University Health Services
Mental Health Groups, Fall 2006

Groups are led by Mental Health Services; participation requires an initial screening. Call 545-2337 or come to 125 Hills North, Monday – Friday, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m.

KEEPING IT REAL
Mondays, 3:30 – 5 p.m.
This co-ed therapy group for undergraduates focuses on self-exploration and skill-building for positive relationships.

COLLEGE LIFE AFTER REAL LIFE
Mondays, 1:30 – 3 p.m.
As a nontraditional-aged undergraduate, the transition to college life from 'real' life can be difficult. Come meet others who share your experiences!

BETWEEN CULTURES
Tuesdays, 3:30 – 5 p.m.
For those straddling multiple nationalities, religions or ethnicities, this group aims to dispel confusion and address common stresses and anxieties. Become fully aware of your own complexity and discover how to articulate that identity to others.

SPANISH-SPEAKING ABOUT OUR UMASS EXPERIENCES
Hablemos En Español De Nuestras Experiencias en UMass
Tuesdays, 3 – 4:30 p.m., beginning Oct. 17
Let's get together and talk about our UMass experience. Vamos a reunirnos a conversar sobre nuestras experiencias en UMass. Group will meet for eight sessions. For information and referrals, contact Lynette Bloise, LICSW.

RELATIONSHIP GROUP FOR GRADUATE STUDENTS
Thursdays, 3:45 – 5 p.m.
Explore personal relationships, work, studies and other concerns in this group for graduate men and women having difficulties with, or concerns about, interpersonal connections.

MINDFULNESS-BASED STRESS REDUCTION (MBSR)
Day & time to be announced
Mindfulness is a way of paying attention with intention, in the moment and without judgment. With regular practice, MBSR has the potential to lower stress, anxiety and depression, promote relaxation, improve concentration, raise self-awareness and enhance the immune system. For information and referrals, contact Kathryn Proulx.

Fees for all groups are deducted from the Student Health Fee, Student Health Insurance Plan, GIC or Health New England plan, subject to plan limitations and co-pays.

IT'S YOUR GIG...RUN WITH IT!

learn more at www.newgradnursing.com

Every New Graduate nurse hired between now and June 30, 2007 receives an iPod® nano. And if you think that's cool...just wait.

DARTMOUTH-HITCHCOCK MEDICAL CENTER
New Hampshire's Only Academic Medical Center
Lebanon, New Hampshire

E. Affirmative Action

China: North Korea must be punished for test

BY NICK WADHAMS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS—China agreed Tuesday that North Korea must be punished for testing a nuclear device, but sought to soften a U.S. and Japanese sanctions plan that it said would be too crushing for its impoverished ally.

The debate over sanctions began at the U.N. as scientists and governments suggested that the underground test on Monday was a partial failure, producing a smaller blast than had been planned.

The Bush administration asked the U.N. Security Council to impose a partial trade embargo including strict limits on Korea's profitable weapons exports and freezing of related financial assets. All imports would be inspected too, to filter out materials that could be made into nuclear, chemical or biological weapons.

The United States reiterated that it would not talk with the North Koreans one-on-one, but Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice assured the North that the U.S. would not attack.

Rice rejected a suggestion that Pyongyang may feel it needs nuclear weapons to stave off an Iraq-style U.S. invasion. President Bush, she told CNN, has told "the North Koreans that there is no intention to invade or attack them. So they have that guarantee. ... I don't know what more they want."

U.S. Ambassador John Bolton sounded upbeat after Tuesday's round of talks at the Security Council, but said differences remained in advance of Wednesday's meeting.

"Look, we don't have complete agreement on this yet, that's hardly a news flash, but we're making progress and we're I think at a point we can try and narrow some of the differences we do have," Bolton said.

China, which reacted to Monday's blast with a strong condemnation but considers North Korea a useful buffer against U.S. forces stationed in South Korea, said it envisioned only a limited package of sanctions — not what the United States and especially Japan were demanding.

China and Russia object to plans to interdict shipments and block financial transactions. They also oppose a new suggestion that Japan proposed Tuesday — to include mention of the North's abduction of Japanese citizens in the 1970s and '80s.

"We certainly understand that Japan is close to the country. But I think you cannot ask by this resolution to kill a country," China's U.N. Ambassador Wang Guangya told The Associated Press. He said the Security Council must impose "punitive actions" but that they have to "be appropriate."

Though far less than what the Americans and Japanese seek, even calling for some punishment was significant for China, which usually opposes sanctions, particularly against an ally such as North Korea.

Pyongyang again demanded one-on-one talks with Washington and threatened to launch a nuclear-tipped missile if the U.S. doesn't help resolve the standoff. Bolton dismissed the demand, saying the North should instead "buy a ticket to Beijing," and rejoin stalled six-nation talks over its nuclear and missile programs.

The war of words suggested tough negotiations before the U.N. takes any action against North Korea. In the meantime, scientists and governments tried to determine what exactly happened early Monday, deep below the earth in North Korea's northeast mountains. The North Korean government has released few details.

A South Korean newspaper quoted a North Korean diplomat, whom it did not name, saying that the blast was "smaller in scale than expected.

"But the success in a small-scale (test) means a large-scale (test) is also possible," he said in comments posted on the Web site of the liberal newspaper Hankyoreh, which has good ties with the communist nation.

The diplomat also said the North could take "additional measures" and that it doesn't fear sanctions.

Philip Coyle, at the Center for Defense Information in Washington, a nongovernment think tank, expressed a growing view that "they got a partial result" and not the full-power explosion that they sought. Several Western estimates said the blast was less than a tenth the size of the 12-megaton bomb that the United States dropped on Hiroshima in 1945.

But "for them it was enough ... to say that it was a success. It helps them to claim that they are a nuclear power, and that the world should take them seriously, which is what they want. But I wouldn't be surprised if after several months they don't try again."

The White House said there is a "remote possibility" that the world never will be able to fully determine whether North Korea succeeded in conducting a nuclear test Monday.

Democrats said the test was evidence of a failed Bush administration policy, which White House press secretary Tony Snow denied.

"The Chinese, the South Koreans, the Japanese — they all have more direct leverage over the North Koreans than we do," Snow said. "The people who have the greatest ability to influence behavior are now fully invested in equal partners in a process to deal with the government of North Korea."

Sen. John McCain (news, bio, voting record), R-Ariz., said President Clinton was to blame for his 1990s program to entice the North Koreans toward more cooperation. "The Koreans received millions and millions in energy assistance. They've diverted millions of dollars of food assistance to their military," he said.

After the reclusive regime announced it had set off an underground atomic explosion, the Security Council quickly condemned North Korea's decision to flout a U.N. appeal to cancel the test. The 15-nation council urged Pyongyang to return to stalled talks, refrain from further tests and keep its pledge to scrap its clandestine weapons program.

Diplomats said Tuesday there was a general agreement that the Security Council must pass a sanctions resolution in the next few days. The council's image suffered badly the last time it deadlocked over a major crisis, over the summer when it needed a month to pass a resolution on ending the war between Israel and Hezbollah.

"All I can say is that we are having a very good discussion trying to identify what really we are going to be able to achieve and I think there is general understanding also about the need to get our act together, and fast," Japan's U.N. Ambassador Kenzo Oshima said. "On that we agree."

Despite the positive assessment, familiar fault lines that have plagued past negotiations over North Korea already began to appear.

Japan, which holds the presidency of the Security Council for October, demanded the toughest sanctions of all, possibly including a blanket air and naval blockade of North Korea, as well as a ban on senior North Korean diplomats traveling abroad. In Tokyo, Japan's leader said the country could slap sanctions on North Korea without waiting for confirmation that it did indeed test a nuclear weapon.

Yet China, traditionally an opponent of Security Council sanctions, warned that the world must not focus too much on punishment. China can use its veto power in the council to block any move, and would likely have the support of Russia.

"Instead, the international community and the United Nations should take positive and appropriate measures that will help the process of de-nuclearization on the Korean peninsula," Foreign Ministry spokesman Liu Jianchao said.

One worry for Beijing is that too much pressure could cause economically unsteady North Korea to collapse, sending North Koreans streaming across the border into northeast China and inviting intervention by the American military.

Nonetheless, China was clearly rattled that the North went ahead with the test. Liu vented China's anger against its communist ally over the test for a second day.

"The nuclear test will undoubtedly exert a negative impact on our relations," Liu said. He said Monday's test was done "flagrantly and in disregard of the international community's shared opposition."

The North warned that it would soon be able to put a nuclear warhead on one of its missiles.

"We hope the situation will be resolved before an unfortunate incident of us firing a nuclear missile comes," Yonhap, the South Korean news agency, quoted an unidentified North Korean official as saying. "That depends on how the U.S. will act." Yonhap did not say how or where it contacted the official, or why no name was given.

The news agency quoted the official as saying the nuclear test was "an expression of our intention to face the United States across the negotiating table."

North Korean soldiers gesture from a ship on the Yalu River at Dandong, on China's border with North Korea, minutes after North announced it had conducted a nuclear test, Oct. 9, 2006.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Panda East
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine

Menu...

Sushi:		Chef Specialties:
California Maki	$3.95	Mandarin Chicken	$12.95
Salmon Skin	$4.25	Vegetarian Chicken	$10.95
Alaska	$4.95	Amazing Chicken	$11.50
Salmon Maki	$3.95	Panda's Gourmet Shrimp	$13.95

Ask about our special sushi rolls, vegetarian options, "light and healthy" entrees, and gluten free entrees.

We Bring Chinatown To You!

Monday-Thursday: 11:30am-11:00pm
Friday & Saturday: 11:00am-11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00pm-10:00pm

103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002 Delivery: (413) 549-0077
www.pandaeastamherst.com

NETWORKING...
It's all who you know!
Tuesday, October 17, 2006 • 5:00 p.m. • Memorial Hall
WITH ALUMNI GUEST SPEAKER
Eric Friedberg '90
Eric is a founding partner at Cohen-Friedberg Associates (CFA), a marketing firm specializing in traditional, retail specific and online promotions for national and regional clients such as Gorton's, Jolly Time Popcorn, Pizza Hut and Dunkin' Donuts. Prior to CFA, he founded UniverCity Newspaper and UniverCity.com, which grew into a national college newspaper. He also developed one of the first Fantasy Sports challenges.
FREE PIZZA • FREE POPCORN • FREE SODA
To register for this FREE event, visit the Alumni Association website at UMassAlumni.com/students.
Campus Career PROGRAMS
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
alumni loan consolidation program
www.UMassAlumni.com/studentloans (800) 936-4975

UMass Dining in Partnership with Bilingual Collegiate Program Present:
Latin American Heritage Dinner
Thursday, Oct. 12 in all DCs from 5-9pm

Menu Featuring:
Roast Herb Pork Shoulder
Chicken DeCarlo
Vive (vegetarian) root vegetables
Fried Plantains Hampshire DC only
Rice and Beans
Corn
Green Beans
Cornbread
Sweet Potato Rum Raisin Pudding
Mexican Wedding Cookies

Plus enjoy Latin Music throughout the DCs!

DINING SERVICES

www.umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 11, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Idle hands are the devil's playground

Tucker Merrick

Procrastination: a word many college students know all too well. I myself have had a long relationship with the concept, one that has been filled with underlying abuse and frustration. I often find myself cruising at full pace into the library, pretending like I am some sort of stock-car driver. I weave here, brake and turn there, all the time with my only two thoughts being the four page paper I have to write in an hour, and why I didn't write that paper while I was up till five in the morning watching "Die Hard: Die Harder." (Perhaps it was justified, when else was I going to get the opportunity?)

Cursing myself repeatedly, I speed past "The Procrastination Station" (ironically enough) and skip stairs down into the Learning Commons.

Following its unveiling last year, floods of people began saturating this square study center. Most UMass students soon understood the Du Bois citadel as sanctuary from the distractions of reality.

My room is a place of petty sin, computers, televisions and subsequent video games. The library is a beacon of hope for the studious individual. You think of quiet, comfy chairs, computers and coffee. Everything the mind needs. Yet, this vision is not reality.

To get to the point, as I duck below that rubber ceiling corner on the stairs (I'm tall), sudden flashes of panic spread across my body. No computers are open. I am a fool, for computers are never open. OK, sure there's a Mac, but I'm not a heathen and need the versatility that two mouse buttons can provide.

Refusing to wait in the line for the computers in the front, I race up and down the aisles praying that someone will be getting up, that something will be available, that God does in-fact exist. But to my dismay, it's almost 15 minutes before I am able to get my own workstation.

What is the solution? How can people like me get something done in the Learning Commons when they need to? Some would say UMass should buy more computers, or that OIT needs to fix the ones that have been broken for a week. This is partly true, but the main problem goes deeper. People need to be considerate of others.

Let one, stop procrastinating at the library.

Everyone knows when you are looking for a computer, you see at least six you want to steal, with a vengeance. Sometimes the user is just sitting there, reading a book and idly talking on AIM, or lazily browsing Facebook.

I am a fool, for computers are never open. OK, sure there's a Mac, but I'm not a heathen and need the versatility that two mouse buttons can provide.

Other times the person isn't there, and the screen's black. We all know this to mean they haven't touched its plastic for at least 10 minutes. Unsure if they are perhaps in the bathroom or getting food, another 10 minutes passes by without their return and your rage becomes justified.

But this isn't the only problem. The Learning Commons is not the Dining Commons, the Boston Commons, or the Procrastination Station. It's a place where people go when they need to get things done. People need to silence their loud cell phones, ignore their sociable friends, and show some mutual respect; the same attitude they would expect when they have to crank out a compromised work in an hour or an evening.

The Learning Commons which coaxed me from my former isolation in the nose-bleed levels of Du Bois and into the proverbial light, is beginning to lose its flare. It has become popular, and every night it is packed with people. People who are talking, people who are procrastinating, people who are distracting others with work to do. I'm no Malthusian and see a very simple solution: everyone has to make sacrifices for others.

If you are reading a book, you don't need to be hogging a workstation talking on AIM. If you actually manage to get a glass room, please don't assume other people can't hear you and your group members talking about funny "yo mama" jokes we can. If you are on Facebook, then the answer is you do innately look like a stalker.

Of course, nobody is perfect. Sometimes you have to break from your work to talk to a friend, or get a coffee, or read about super villains. Right now I am sitting in the library finishing up this column, and I admit to looking up quotes from Bruce Willis movies. But let your room be the source of your procrastination, and understand that when you are at the library, it's a place of purpose, where people have some actual work to do.

If about everyone having a certain amount of restraint and respect. If we can all do that for others under stress, maybe we'll feel the weight of a paper leaving our souls, we will have the favor returned. Be kind, be courteous and respect. One student leaves, another one fills. Fair trade.

Tucker Merrick is a Collegian editor.

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

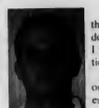
RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT!

(550 WORD LIMIT AND INCLUDE YOUR NAME)

VOICE YOUR OPINIONS TO THE WORLD!

Send an e-mail to: editorial@dailycollegian.com, or go to: dailycollegian.com.

Correcting Harvard



Andy Smith

They were the best of times, they were the worst of times. No, I don't mean "A Tale of Two Cities." I was referring to college applications.

When you were done filling out those forms and writing those essays, how great did it feel? It was momentary euphoria, but what followed was the most agonizing part of senior year of high school: waiting for the responses. If you applied for early action, you had your decision made around February, which was ahead of most of your peers.

Now, imagine if you didn't have the option of applying early. Instead of being one of a few thousand, you suddenly become one of about 20,000. Your chances of acceptance shrink immensely. That could be what it's going to be like for most people who want to go to college in the future.

Harvard, the first institute of higher learning, demolished its early-action process on September 9, effectively killing the dreams of so many aspiring patriarchs of our great country. As a result of this revolutionary idea, other colleges are following. Princeton decided, as a result of Harvard's announcement, they too will no longer carry an early admission decision. If the Ivy Leaguers are doing it, the other colleges will follow.

Now, in the admissions process, future applicants are forced to wait patiently in the back of the line so that everyone can "place their order" together.

I don't know if anyone realizes how much of a monumental decision this was. Harvard has singlehandedly taken the already-tough-on-teenagers college admission process and made it much more difficult.

What's their highly scientific reason for doing it? I'm still wondering about that. Derek Bok, the interim president of Harvard, believes, according to The Boston Globe, "the early admissions process benefits more privileged students, and skews students' decisions by making them believe they must rush to pack a first choice in order to take advantage of the higher rates of acceptance for early applicants at most schools."

What privileges? Being proactive and prepared to make a choice about their future? Everyone has the ability to fill out an application, even those who aren't ready to make a college choice yet. Those who are ready, willing and able to make that choice shouldn't have to wait. Those who aren't ready should wait.

I'd like to compare college admissions to a fast food restaurant. Say you walk into a restaurant knowing what you are going to order and how much it costs to buy it. However, there is someone already there waiting in line staring at the menu above because they have no clue what they want. When all is said and done, you both might end up getting the same thing, but are you going to have to wait until that person is ready to make their own order before you can make yours? No. That person graciously moves out of your way so you can make your order (at least they should). You aren't forced to stand patiently behind them while they decide between the cheeseburger and the spicy chicken sandwich. Why? You came prepared.

Now, in the admissions process, future applicants are forced to wait patiently in the back of the line so that everyone can "place their order" together.

Here is another example of why this is a bad precedent. Ray Ray McElrathbey is a 19-year-old football player at Clemson University. His mother is addicted to crack cocaine, and he grew up never knowing his father. He gained temporary custody of his 11-year-old brother, Fahmarr.

Right now, it is those two against the world. Ray Ray's teammates and coaches' wives all help in making their life as easy as possible. They give Fahmarr rides from Ray Ray's apartment to his elementary school and from his elementary school to Clemson's practice field. Once at the practice field, Fahmarr is instructed to sit in a coach's office and work on his homework until Ray Ray gets out of practice. On the weekends Ray Ray has games, Fahmarr often stays at the home of a coach until the team gets back in town.

Can you imagine how tough it must be for that 11-year-old? If Ray Ray didn't have an athletic scholarship, things would be so much different for the both of them. He would be just another average Joe facing the difficult task of working full-time to pay for college by himself, while trying to support his brother. At the same time, he would be trying to outperform thousands of well-rounded applicants who want to go to the same college as he does. Luckily, Ray Ray has the athletic talent to help him live his dream.

It's people like that who benefit the most from the early-action process. It may give applicants an advantage by allowing them to get ahead of the competition, but that's not a bad thing. What Harvard did was take away the route to college that a non-athlete like Ray Ray would benefit from. Without an early-action process, that same student might not ever have the opportunity to go to college. What a shame.

Andy Smith is a Collegian columnist

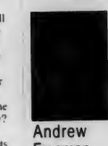
ED/OP POLL

Do you smoke cigarettes?

A. Yes, I started smoking in college.
B. Yes, I began before I started college.
C. Yes, but I only smoke socially.
D. Yes, but I want to quit.
E. Yes, and I don't want to quit.
F. No, I quit.
G. No, I never have, and I never will.

Submit your answers at dailycollegian.com.

Reforming the election



Andrew Freeman

Another fall, another substance-free campaign in Massachusetts. Four talented individuals are running for governor, but from the way the race is presented, one will never learn what their proposals are. As a result, when polls open on November 7, people will be voting with their guts, their hearts or their wallets, but all too rarely with their brains.

The environment is not right for informed debate, and much of the responsibility for this falls upon the media. Journalists covering elections often reduce it to a horse-race: which candidates are doing well in the polls, which are stumbling. Polls matter to the campaigns and candidates, but voters should vote on issues, not on the popularity of candidates.

The media also affects elections by focusing on subjects that are largely irrelevant to the campaigns. For example, over the past week Democratic candidate Deval Patrick has come under fire for his advocacy on behalf of Benjamin LaGuer. LaGuer was convicted of rape in 1984, and allegations of racism in his trial rallied many to his defense, including Boston University President John Silbur and Holocaust survivor Elie Wiesel. Patrick wrote letters to the prisoner's parole board, urging his release, and he contributed money for a DNA test. After the 2002 test showed LaGuer to be guilty, Patrick ceased these efforts.

The LaGuer fiasco makes for a great story, one that distracts us from the issues of the campaign. It offers no information about Patrick's policies or how he would govern. Voters would be better served by learning the specifics of his crime proposal – such as increasing state aid to towns so they can hire 1,000 more police officers. Instead, the media focuses on the candidate's actions over four years ago.

Candidates are far from blameless, however, in the dumbing-down of elections. Oftentimes, candidates avoid discussing specific issues in detail, for fear of losing the support of people who disagree. In the case of Patrick, this means proclaiming a message of hope that is long on rhetoric and short on details.

Kerry Healey, the Republican nominee, focuses on the hot-button issues of states not named "Massachusetts," like illegal immigration. Illegal immigration was the most important issue to only three percent of state residents, while 22 percent cited education and 19 percent taxes as the most critical issues, according to a September 30 Boston Globe – WBZ poll. Nevertheless, she presses this issue, hoping to appeal to the emotions of those who hate illegal immigrants and bolster her image as being tough on crime.

This focus on image rather than substance demeans political campaigns, inviting candidates and their supporters to engage in ferocious mudslinging.

The need for candidates to construct an appealing image is a key failing of modern campaigns, making the appearance more important than the reality. Healey strives for the mantle of toughest on crime, with her campaign assailing Patrick on LaGuer and, in a recent ad, for defending a "cop killer," while he was an attorney and getting his client's death sentence reduced. Rather than attack Patrick on the grounds of his crime policies, Healey's ad attacks his image. This focus on image rather than substance demeans political campaigns, inviting candidates and their supporters to engage in ferocious mudslinging.

Thankfully, there is something voters can do to inoculate themselves from the stupidity that composes so much of modern campaigns. All of the gubernatorial candidates – Healey, Patrick, Grace Ross of the Green-Rainbow party and independent Christy Mihos – have Web sites, which detail the politicians' platforms and positions. Another resource online is www.ontheissues.org, which compiles quotes from political candidates illustrating their stances. These provide a far better idea of what the candidate would attempt as governor than sound-bite television ads or horse race journalism.

Ultimately, it is the responsibility of the voter to inform him or herself – although candidates and media should endeavor to portray the competitors fairly and to fully discuss the relevant issues. All too often people enter the polls with only the vaguest ideas of what is at stake and where their favored candidate stands.

Voting without proper information is harmful. A vote should be a rational act because it forms the basis of our democracy. If you vote for irrational reasons, or without basing your decision on sound information, your vote dilutes the whole process. When candidates are elected by whimsy or emotion, the potential for poor leadership is great, as the electorate has not sufficiently evaluated the candidate's credentials.

For those unwilling or unable to investigate their candidates, there is an excellent option: stay home. Leave democracy to those who put some effort into it, and it will be a better experience for everyone.

Andrew Freeman is a Collegian columnist

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?

WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU!

THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS EDITORIAL COMIC ARTISTS!

GET YOUR ARTWORK PUBLISHED!

Send an e-mail to: editorial@dailycollegian.com.

Local food could improve

Michael Cartwright

I have officially grown sick of almost every eatery in Amherst. "The Sub and the Pizza" recently made me a buffalo chicken sub in less than 30 seconds. I found this to be impressively careless. Did it actually take more effort to name the restaurant than it did to make the sandwich?

A general statement to sub shops of a similar mold: when people request buffalo chicken, they expect buffalo chicken. Setting a bunch of plain breaded breasts in front of a firing squad of Super Soakers filled with Frank's Red Hot is a highly unacceptable procedure, and we really can't deal with that kind of thing any longer.

I've even grown tired of the legendary "Wings" because, as I recently surmised, so many DC-10s on a weekly basis, and visitors [illegible] delivery on a list of dozens, the fries that come with your wrap will inevitably seem more like noodles.

It also bothers me that "Wings" no longer delivers to [illegible] Amherst. This allegedly stems from an [illegible] last semester, in which a delivery boy was mugged [illegible] a tray of After Burner (Level 5) wings in front of [illegible] residential complex. Rumors indicate [illegible] assailant stole everything but the bleu cheese, deeming it unnecessary. Evidently, "Wings" is still [illegible] stacking up from this.

[illegible] once provided worthy eats, but it too suffered a [illegible] related tragedy, and things sadly haven't been the same since. It's now located inside "Delano's" and the [illegible] menu will unavoidably feel like bar grub [illegible]. It's also uncomfortable seeing employees [illegible] at a 4 x 4 window. They more or less [illegible] are trying to sell pizzas out of a stationary ice [illegible].

[illegible] with the "Route 9 Diner," you're disappointed. Everyone knows the "Route 9 Diner" is [illegible] and only it, you're so drunk, you're [illegible].

The only [illegible] is The Berkshire Dining Hall.

[illegible] students. I paid a visit to the Berkshire [illegible] the first week of the semester. Unlike [illegible], I was far too overwhelmed by its freakishly

Unless you're the first delivery on a list of dozens, the fries that come with your wrap will inevitably seem more like noodles.

[illegible] anything. So, yesterday, I coughed [illegible] a closer look at its "Jenny Jones" style [illegible].

[illegible] area of the dining hall entrance-[illegible] a loud crowd of extraordinarily eager individuals. [illegible] illuminated tube lights ran alongside the [illegible]. I wasn't sure if I was about to walk into a [illegible] Space Mountain.

[illegible] greeting Ken Toong's renovated interior, [illegible] woman served me a bowl [illegible] along with a set of chopsticks. A lovely [illegible] woman served me a plate of pasta along [illegible]. I loved Mr. Toong's new touch of [illegible]. Unfortunately enough, the cafeteria was now a miniature EPCOT Center.

"Welcome to Disney World!" All we need now is MGM. Maybe the business-savvy Ken Toong intends [illegible] the W.E.B. Dubois Library into the Tower of [illegible].

[illegible] probably, but it did happen, you can be sure [illegible] of the opening, the 27-story ride would run [illegible] long time. I can live with EPCOT for now.

[illegible] I don't own a Mickey Mouse wristwatch or overnight sets of Fantasia hologram collector's [illegible] in anticipation for Experimental Prototype [illegible] of Tomorrow. In other words, Mr. Toong and [illegible] are the future.

[illegible] Berkshire Dining Commons now [illegible] a sushi bar and on-site bakery. But, like [illegible] recent comeback, Mr. Toong took home the [illegible] Dining Award in 2005. His home presumably [illegible] trophy room accentuated by rows upon [illegible] platinum plaques.

[illegible] though, I wish I approached my life [illegible] the effort Mr. Toong obviously puts forth [illegible]. The majority of dining hall food is of better [illegible] than garbage we request by phone every other [illegible].

[illegible] complain about the quality of their cuisine should at least acknowledge and appreciate the [illegible] Mr. Toong takes in providing it for them. [illegible] a taste of what we eat around Amherst, it's safe [illegible]. Mr. Toong cares a lot more about what is going into [illegible] we do. So, next time you're in the DC, [illegible] corny as it may sound, remember to bow [illegible], then chow down, because around here, Ken [illegible].

Michael Cartwright is a Collegian columnist

?

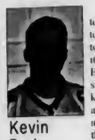
This could be you!

Become a columnist!

Stop by our office in the Campus Center basement today!

Or send an e-mail to: editorial@dailycollegian.com

The 'Mark Foley fiasco'



Kevin Dooley

I let us all think back to 1998. Furby, the toy that let kids talk to a machine, was on its way in, and Beanie Babies were on the slow decline. You know, when you think about it that really was marketing genius how they got boys to buy those things.

And of course, who could forget in 1998, when then President Bill Clinton introduced, as a result of his affair with Monica Lewinsky, the term oral sex to all of us in elementary, middle school, or in my case, intermediate school?

My friends and I spent many a day at the beach and at sleepovers that summer of '98 wondering just what oral sex was. You're world just isn't quite the same when you find out what it means is it?

Ah, these were truly the good old days. Instead of having to worry about North Korea detonating a nuclear bomb, or terrorists blowing themselves up to get wasted and go have some fun with virgins in fantasyland, all the American public had to worry about was whether Clinton got sexual favors from an overweight intern.

Now we fast forward to 2006 and there is a brand new sex scandal rampaging through Washington. And frankly, it's not as fun as the Clinton circus.

Two weeks ago, it was revealed by ABCNews.com that Rep. Mark Foley, a congressman from the state of Florida had been sending e-mails and instant messages in a desperate pursuit to hook-up with underage pages for quite some time. In case you don't know, a page is someone who basically kisses the ass of congressmen for free. In other words, it's an internship.

If you haven't read the instant messages yet between Mark Foley and Jordan Edmund, please put down your copy of the Daily Collegian (I'll forgive you) and go take a look at them. They're highly entertaining, and you will indeed "lol."

So now what are we to think of the whole Mark Foley fiasco and the alleged cover-up by Speaker of the House Dennis Hastert and friends? Well, there are a few things to consider.

First off, what's so hypocritical and ironical is Congressman Foley was one of the leading lawmakers in getting tough child protection laws passed in Congress. Now Foley could be tried on the same laws he so vigorously, as a pillar of virtue, got passed into law.

By the way, why is it every celebrity, musician and congressman gets to scurry off to rehab every time they encounter a problem? That's right, Mark Foley claims he made the now public instant messages to one of the underage pages right before he was about to make a vote while drunk. So what did he do when it was revealed he had written illicit sexual messages? He hitched a ride with Mel Gibson and they ran off to rehab together.

Why can't I do that every time I have a midterm and a research paper due in the same week? Does UMass have a rehab center other than passing out on couches at the Campus Center?

But I think what is so great about this sad scandal is Republicans are getting a taste of what they did back to Clinton in 1998. Led by a Republican controlled House Judiciary Committee, Republicans did everything in their power to make sure the Lewinsky scandal would be the downfall of Clinton. As we all know, the House used the fact Clinton lied about his affair while under oath to impeach him.

The Republicans so desperately try to paint themselves as social conservatives (who are dumb enough to vote for them), and they made sure the near pornographic description of sexual encounters between Clinton and Lewinsky were fed to an eager public.

If you aren't familiar with Dennis Hastert, go take a look at his voting record. This guy is truly the poster child for the religious right. There isn't one issue he hasn't voted on that is in opposition to the Bush administration. Yet, when it comes to protecting young adults who come to work as pages in Congress, Hastert turns a blind eye. It's a very idiotic universe we live in.

It goes without saying that news of Foley's attempted hook-up session couldn't have come at worse time for Bush and company as they fly across the country trying to convince everyone that Republicans are keeping us safer by fighting the endless war on terror. There is no doubt the Foley scandal will influence voters who need that one issue to decide their vote. Here's one Democrat hoping Foley's big boo-boo will serve as a catalyst in Democrats hopefully regaining some seats in Congress in November.

The only way this could be worse for Republicans right now would have been if Bush was the one who had been making lurid instant messages to underage pages. Whoa. Democrats would be having a simultaneous orgasm all across this great nation of ours.

Kevin Dooley is a Collegian columnist

Blah! Don't let me catch you drinking!
JUDGE
Oh man, what do we if this old hag judge catches us drinking on campus?
Easy we drank off-campus!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

TAKE ACTION

I am a UMass alumnus and have been a police officer for 32 years. When I read of the sentence imposed on this student to be humiliated in public, I felt it was bizarre on a college campus, my college campus.

After reading your editorial in the Collegian and how your entire staff was against it, a question came to mind; Why just write about your outrage? Why didn't you and the staff don togas and go stand with him? It's a public place. You could have alleviated the humiliation and actually taken action instead of just thinking and writing about it. If you were arrested for doing so it would have made a great story/article.

Arthur P. Ahl
UMass alumnus

DINING COMMONS NOT SO BAD

I resently read Caroline Moretti's rant about how bad campus dining is. We are very fortunate to have one of the hardest working food service directors in the country. Ken Toong has worked effortlessly since his start here at UMass in making our dining experience the absolute best in the country.

During my first visit to the brand new Berkshire Dining Commons, I spotted Mr. Toong and approached him to express my admiration of the new building. Instead of just thanking me, Mr. Toong decided to show me around the Dining Commons with a big smile on his face.

This is clearly a man who takes immense pride in his job and will not be satisfied until we are. He is one of the best things that has happened to this University in a long while and deserves the utmost respect for his work.

Brian Peters
UMass student

SICK AND TIRED

To reference the 1976 film Network, "I'm mad as hell and I'm not going to take this anymore." I believe I'm a reasonably tolerant person, even more patient than most. I'll put up with a lot of obnoxious things around UMass.

But what I'm sick and tired of having to endure is the noise of construction and broken equipment. It's beyond the point of annoying; now it's just plain embarrassing and shameful. Here's why: my frustrations boiled over after I went to hear Tim O'Brien, the author of "The Things They Carried," speak as part of the semester-long Feinberg Lecture Series on politics and protest in the 1960s and today.

For the entire duration of his talk, I had to try to ignore the horrendously abrasive, buzzing sound of some type of metallic saw, as well as the loud thumps and bangs of some other busy work happening in and around the Student Union. I endured the stifling heat, which O'Brien commented on numerous times, but the noise was too much.

This is not an attack on the hard-working team of maintainers who work for UMass, but I found it embarrassing and utterly disrespectful to the distinguished guest to have to compete with those distractions.

Unfortunately, this is all too typical of this campus. I've lost count of how many times, and there's certainly plenty of blame to go around. I'll blame faculty, staff, the Chancellor, the entire UMass hierarchy of bureaucrats and the legislature.

But this time, the students are not at fault. We've paid our fees, now we're due what we deserve. We sit in the uncomfortable desks day in and day out, without caring that they're so unpleasant, meanwhile blocking out the constant beeping of trucks in reverse and all the irritating industrial sounds of construction that disrupt our concentration when taking an exam.

The obtrusive and malfunctioning air circulators/heaters/ACs (especially in Herter) drown out our professors' lectures. It's come to the point where these distractions are inhibiting our academics. The administration really needs to reexamine what kind of environment really fosters learning. And I didn't even mention the shoddy overhead projectors or even the lack of chalk. I'll leave the faculty to take up that issue.

Francis Murphy
UMass student

POOR EDITING

The story "SDT Remembers Molly," which you published on October 6th contained mistakes and inaccuracies. The quote about Malvika, which I wrote, was poorly edited and lines were omitted entirely. Also, I was identified incorrectly as Monique Thomas Philbin (I am Kate Philbin, Class of '06). There were also many typos in the article. In a time of great sadness and mourning your carelessness and unprofessionalism only added to our grief. Malvika was a wonderful person and deserved much better.

Kate Philbin
UMass student

Vengeance not the answer

John Gruenenfelder

We all handle devastation in uniquely different ways, and though learning from tragedy might seem cliché at times, I find it hard not to admire the Amish community's response to the recent shooting. Along with their strong sense of fellowship, much of the focus seems to be on forgiveness. This forgiveness flows not only to the dead gunman, but also, to the family he left behind.

Perhaps it is admirable because forgiveness often seems so foreign to our vengeance minded society. This is all too apparent in the response to the other two recent school shootings. After the immediate task of helping the victims and trying to prevent this from occurring again, people want revenge. And often those out for vengeance have no connection to those wronged. Blame is assigned to easy targets such as guns, alcohol, drugs, broken homes, violent video games and so on, regardless of how likely such an issue really is a problem.

Because people so often take the easy path, the angry path, fewer and fewer doctors are entering the fields of medicine with high mortality rates.

Forgiveness does not mean rolling over, nor does it mean lack of justice or lack of a solution. It does, however, go a long way in preventing people from making knee jerk decisions after a tragedy. The trouble is forgiveness is a very hard course to pursue.

I wonder what sort of impact a little forgiveness would have on our all too litigious society. With hordes of lawyers always nearby to talk you into a lawsuit, that voice of reason can become lost in the commotion. The only reminder of the better side of human nature you might receive can come from your own conscience.

A little forgiveness can keep something unfortunate from becoming truly tragic. If we were more willing to accept that people and professionals are capable of mistakes and show some understanding, society would be a bit more civil.

Disturbingly, a critical lack of forgiveness seems to be directed at some of those professionals we all depend on at one time or another. A few years ago, I had a relatively uncomplicated surgical procedure. At first, all was well, but I started to feel bad, and upon going back to the hospital it was discovered that I had gotten a raging abdominal infection from the surgery. The recovery from that was most unpleasant and far outweighed that of the original surgery, not to mention it led to me missing a semester of school.

I was certainly upset by what had happened, and the surgeon was extremely apologetic, however I wasn't angry. It was a mistake, and he took responsibility, but it came about not from malice but rather the human capacity for error even when attempting to do your best. Forgiveness was called for unless I had some definite reason to act otherwise.

I later learned just how worried he had been. He didn't know me well enough, and in his line of work lawsuits are all too common. He confided in me just how damaging and a burden malpractice insurance has become. Because people so often take the easy path, the angry path, fewer and fewer doctors are entering fields of medicine with high mortality rates. When grief clouds judgment people can hurt others in their quest for vengeance, and that person might be somebody who was doing his job and failed despite doing nothing wrong.

There are, unfortunately, all too many examples of how lacking enough compassion or understanding to forgive somebody can cause even more trouble later on. Stopping that angry response before it begins is by no means easy. It's human nature to react that way, but it's our rational selves that allow us to see honest mistakes for what they are, if we allow ourselves that chance.

We all have various sources to draw upon when we need the strength to be a better person. Being very religious, the Amish draw upon that to forgive. In a nation with so many Christians, it seems like it should be a more frequent act. Still, religion certainly isn't the only source of strength, and those of us with a more secular bent have perfectly valid moral compasses. It's time to put them to use.

Forgive and forget doesn't work. We need not, and should not, forget. Whether it's as serious as a school shooting or as relatively minor as a surgical mistake, remembering will hopefully help us to prevent the same from occurring. But we should forgive when we can. It helps us avoid anger clouded decisions, and it allows the healing to begin just a little bit sooner.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist.

Do you have something to say?
Write a submission for Ed'Op!
Tell the entire campus what you think!
(650 word limit)
Send submissions to:
editorial@dailycollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 11, 2006 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Melvins to play Noho

By Dave Master
Collegian Staff

Other than having a most ridiculous band name, the Melvins are at the forefront of sludge, metal, avant-garde noise, and any other musical genre for that matter. With front man Buzz Osborne and drummer Dale Crover, the most consistent backbone of the 23-year-old band, there is no limit to the musical styles consistently obliterated by these Los Angeles transplants.

With humble beginnings in hyper-rural Gray's Harbor, Washington, these country boys began their existence as a band playing 100-mile-per- hour hardcore in the vein of their heroes, Black Flag, Flipper, and the Dead Kennedys.

Their inauspicious first appearance on the 1985's "Deep Six" compilation, which showcased the grungy northwest sound in its fetal stage, exhibited the Melvins in all of their teenaged, beer-soaked glory. However, it was their 1986 landmark debut LP, "Gluey Porch Treatments," that established the definitive sound of the Melvins – thundering drums, merciless bass implosions, and heavily distorted tuned-down guitar riffs.

In the early 80's, Buzz Osborne formed the Melvins with his hometown friends Matt Lukin on bass and Kevin Dillard on drums. Dillard would be replaced by Dale Crover, who drummed in the band Fecal Matter, along with Buzz and Dale's mutual friend, Kurt Cobain (Crover's drumming can be heard on the tracks Paper Cut and Floyd the Barber on Nirvana's debut album, Bleach). Lukin would be left to his own devices after the Melvin's move to San Francisco in the lat 80's. His devices proved worthy when he formed Sub Pop's first flagship band, Mudhoney. Currently, Sub Pop's flagship band is the Shins, but the Melvins would eat the Shins in a tuna casserole before headlining a show with them. After Lukin's departure and the band's arrival in San Francisco, Lorrie Black, the estranged daughter of Shirley Temple, joined the band on bass. The band would still see bass players come and go like the four seasons.

This past summer the Melvins merged with the band L.A.'s Big Buisness. This merger has given the band a second drummer.

The early years would see them relocate to San Francisco, sign an ill-fated deal with Atlantic Records, a revolving door of bass players, and few opening shows for their heroes, KISS. Due to their radio-unfriendly sound (and band name), the band would never achieve the commercial success of their contemporaries – Soundgarden, Pearl Jam, and Nirvana. Results speak for themselves as the Melvins continued to fearlessly evolve and rearrange the face of heavy music, into something like a demonic jack-o-lantern.

Their 2004 collaboration with noise anarchist, Lustmord, was a diseased blend of creepy ambient noise along with their trademark Melvins sound. The name of their conglomeration would be dubbed Pigs of the Roman Empire. But don't be mistaken – the Melvins stay clean on this one. It's Lukin's job to roll around in the mud, honey. The album includes the temporary guitar addition of Tool's guitarist and long-time friend, Adam Jones. The song titles displayed their Beefheart adulation, with such gems as "////Best" and "Idolatrous Apostate." The record is full of stark melodic interludes, sometimes sounding like musical air, bells ringing in the background. Eyes must remain closed while listening to this album – it sounds like the boogieman lurking behind while the Melvins artistically paint pictures with raunchy and spacey din.

In summer of 2006, Melvins merged with L.A's Big Business, a duo composed of Coady Willis on drums and Jared Warren on bass and vocals. With this current incarnation, the Melvins now play with two drummers, which can be deceiving – sometimes it sounds like the band is playing with an entire orchestra of percussionists. Their first album with this current lineup, "Senile Animal" was released yesterday on Ipecac Records.

Whether or not this is a temporary fix for their bass player dilemma or if Warren and Willis are permanent additions to the band is yet to be known. One thing is certain – the Melvins are going to rain down hell-fire on our quiet New England hamlet tonight at Pearl Street Club, Northampton, along with opening acts Ghostigital and Big Business.

The Melvins are one of the last bands of the early 1990s rock scene.

Fey believes her new show will be a success this season

By Rick Porter
Zap2it.com

Let's just get this out of the way: Tina Fey has seen "Studio 60 on the Sunset Strip."

"I watched the first one," Fey says of Aaron Sorkin's backstage-at-a-sketch-comedy-show show. "I think it looks very fancy, and Bradley Whitford is cute."

"Studio 60" is of interest to Fey, a former head writer and performer on "Saturday Night Live," because she has her own backstage-at-a-sketch-comedy-show show on NBC as well. It's called "30 Rock," and it premieres at 8 p.m. EDT Wednesday.

That NBC has two series with similar subjects has been a popular discussion topic among professional TV watchers. Fey understands why, but she's confident viewers will get the difference between her show, a straight-out comedy, and Sorkin's, a drama laced with humor.

Fairly confident, anyway. "I think in time they're going to be very different but yes, old people will be confused," she jokes. "Look for Alec Baldwin. If you can find Alec Baldwin, you know you have us."

Baldwin stars in "30 Rock" as new NBC executive Jack Donaghy, whose motto is "Sometimes you have to change things that are perfectly good just to make them your own." That's not good news for Liz Lemon (Fey), the creator and head writer of a sketch-comedy series called "The Girlie Show."

In his first week on the job, Jack pressures Liz into taking a meeting with mentally unstable movie star Tracy Jordan (Tracy Morgan), who then proceeds to storm the live broadcast and save a sketch that's circling the drain. Tracy's presence makes "The Girlie Show's" erotic star, Jenna Maroney (Jane Krakowski), even more agitated.

"I think Tracy's character is one of the freshest we've seen written on TV, and I love his character so much," Krakowski says. "We've done so many fun scenes together. We're such opposites, our characters, that the hilarity that can ensue when we're together is great fun."

Krakowski wasn't in "30 Rock's" original pilot, which featured another ex-"SNL" player, Rachel Dratch, as Jenna (Dratch is still part of the show and will pop up as a number of different characters throughout its run). But after filming that version, which played up the fake sketches in "The Girlie Show" more, Fey rethought what she wanted to do.

"I see sort of canned sketches within the body of the show didn't really feel right," Fey says. "I saw it was going to be more of a straight acting part and wanted to rewrite it. Rachel and I are both very excited about this new direction – it's a different way to use her range. She's so delightful when she's deep in character."

Having seen the original pilot, Krakowski ("Ally McBeal") knew more or less what she was getting into as well.

"I came in as a fan, and I just really didn't want to mess it up," Krakowski says. "I wanted to fit in as much as I could and bring as much as I could to the program. It was very interesting to kind of see what the product is before joining it. ... Because I loved it so much, I just wanted to do the best job I could."

Shows about show business have a pretty spotty record in the recent past in fact, "Studio 60" is drawing only so-so ratings early in its life. Fey, however, hopes viewers see that TV business in "30 Rock" is pretty much a back drop, much the way that "Mary Tyler Moore" wasn't really about a local newscast.

Fey hopes that viewers will understand that her new show is more of a comedy. Fey's show is known to be similar to Studio 60.

Fey is not so bold as to compare the quality of her show with the 1970s classic ("We should be so lucky," she says), but she does think the framework of the two shows is similar.

"You're not really going to see the sketches on the show," she says. "You'll see the lives of these characters that work at the show."

Pitt and Jolie chased throughout India

By Jeeja Purohit
Associated Press

Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie, in India to shoot scenes for a movie about the slain journalist Daniel Pearl, went on an auto rickshaw ride with their 5-year-old son on Sunday.

The celebrity couple were chased by photographers, cameramen and reporters forcing them to turn back after a 20-minute ride that took them past shops and department stores in downtown Pune, in western India.

Several traffic signals slowed their short rickshaw ride. At every red light, security men traveling in a rickshaw behind jumped out and surrounded the three-wheeler to prevent the media from snapping pictures of Pitt and Jolie.

They then returned to the Le Meridian hotel where they have been holed up since arriving on Thursday.

Security for the star couple has been tight since their arrival in Pune by private jet along with their children Maddox, 5, Zahara, 18 months and 4-month-old Shiloh Nouvel Jolie-Pitt.

On Saturday, one of Pitt's and Jolie's bodyguards manhandled a British photographer as he tried to take their picture at the hotel, an incident caught on video by an Indian television station.

When Pitt and Jolie tried to leave the hotel, a security guard caught the photographer trying to take their photo, grabbed the man by his neck and verbally abused him.

Video of the incident was broadcast on India's CNN-IBN news channel, and the Hindustan Times newspaper identified the photographer as Sam Relph of Barcroft Media.

The newspaper reported that the security guard had shouted at photographers to stop shooting the couple and moved for Relph when he refused to put down his camera.

"He said if I took his pictures he would kill me," the Times quoted Relph as saying. "I couldn't breathe. He had his fingers on my windpipe and he knew what he was doing."

Two Indian journalists also complained that they too had been threatened by the same security guard, who was not identified in the report.

A weekend call to the office of Pitt's publicist in Beverly Hills, Calif., was not immediately returned.

The couple are reportedly scheduled on Monday to start shooting scenes for "A Mighty Heart," in which Jolie plays Pearl's widow, Mariane

As Pitt and Jolie went for a ride around India with their 5-year old son Maddox on Sunday, they were bombarded by the paparazzi.

Soldier breaks silence

By James Temple
Contra Costa Times

During his 11-month tour of duty in Iraq, Sgt. Brian Turner regularly described his experiences, some harrowing, some sad, in poetry. But the Fresno, Calif., native adhered to the war zone's unofficial code of stoicism, keeping compositions like "The Hurt Locker" to himself.

"Nothing left here but the hurt," writes Turner, now a part-time professor at Fresno City College. "Believe it when you see it. Believe it when a twelve-year-old rolls a grenade into the room. Or when a sniper punches a hole deep into someone's head."

Turner is one of many soldiers who served in Iraq or Afghanistan now breaking the battlefield silence, sharing experiences and feelings about the wars in "Operation Homecoming: Iraq, Afghanistan and the Home Front, in the Words of U.S. Troops and Their Families."

Released last month, the book collects nearly 100 accounts from soldiers and their families of heading into battle, losing limbs, picking up body parts, caring for the wounded, interacting with locals and missing loved ones.

Turner has published a separate book of poetry, "Here, Bullet," which won the 2005 Beatrice Hawley Award and other recognition. But most of the contributors are amateurs, much of the writing originating from e-mails, letters and journal entries.

The first-person, personal and often unvarnished tone breathes life into battle scenes, humanizes otherwise abstract statistics of death and injuries and underscores the extent of the sacrifices being made.

The project arose from an unprecedented request: The National Endowment for the Arts, a body of the federal government, asked soldiers and their families to write candidly and publicly about their experiences with an ongoing war. It orchestrated a series of workshops on U.S. military bases, led by authors such as Tom Clancy, Tobias Wolff and Mark Bowden, to aid and encourage prospective writers.

Bowden, author of "Black Hawk Down," the best-selling account of the 1993 operation in Somalia that left 18 U.S. soldiers dead, conducted a two-day seminar at Miramar Marine Corps Air Station in San Diego two years ago.

He taught soldiers the basics of storytelling – creating characters, scenes and action and took them through a series of exercises, such as writing about their first day in uniform and describing a significant moment in their lives.

"I have in my life received great benefits by telling the stories of military people," said Bowden, in explaining why he signed on for the project. "I think I owe them something."

The NEA asked Andrew Carroll, editor of "War Letters," a best-selling collection of correspondence from past American conflicts, to edit "Operation Homecoming." He nearly turned them down.

Carroll doubted there would be enough submissions, owing to the same resistance to displaying battlefield emotions that kept Turner from sharing his poetry within his division. He also was skeptical that the NEA would allow soldiers to openly criticize the war or paint authentically gruesome scenes from battle.

He was wrong on both counts. In fact, he was deluged with submissions, thousands of pages that he and others had to cull down to under 400. And the NEA's only guidelines for inclusion were good writing and a diversity of voices.

In the end, the book is less about policy than survival. There is plenty of rah-rah sentiment expressed, particularly in stories about first heading overseas or going into battle. On the other hand, even the most hawkish are likely to feel queasy reading the starker scenes of death and carnage.

Carroll himself declined to state his position on the war. He said the project had three goals, none of which was political: providing a form of catharsis for the soldiers and their families; capturing history at its most raw and authentic; and helping civilians, whatever their feelings about the war, to understand the sacrifices being made.

"These aren't just soldiers, they're somebody's parent, somebody's child, somebody's spouse," Carroll said. "These are human beings that we ask to do these extraordinary things."

60's inspired dresses premier in Paris

By Joelle Diderich
Associated Press

The dress is the star of next summer's wardrobe, and Paris designers on Saturday offered a dizzying array of options ranging from tunics to baby dolls and sweeping floor-length gowns.

French label Chloe, one of the hottest tickets in town, sent out richly embroidered '70s-style shifts that paid homage to American heiress Gloria Vanderbilt.

Kenzo went African with brightly printed muumuus and matching turbans. A floor-length sleeveless fuchsia goddess gown with a jeweled Empire waistband recalled the hothouse glamour of Elizabeth Taylor in the 1960s.

At Hermes, singer Janet Jackson and other front row guests lounged in orange-canvassed deck chairs as models ambled over a set evoking a giant ocean liner in airy long chiffon sundresses printed with sunflowers or polka dots.

After several years of frilly, feminine styles, fashion is swinging toward minimalism with a focus on volume and cut. Dresses are flaring out into trapeze shapes, often with sculpted balloon sleeves, the better to show off long tanned legs.

Chloe is largely to credit for the austere styles that began flooding department stores this fall.

For next season, it stuck to clean lines with prim schoolgirl coats and Peter Pan collars. Short A-line shifts featured patchwork detail while tunics came embroidered with circular patterns of sparkling stones or more subtle wood and gilt beads.

"I loved it, it was so beautiful," actress Kate Bosworth told The Associated Press. "(There were) bolder prints than I've seen Chloe do before, which is really exciting."

Retailers adore the label, whose sales more than doubled last year. Closely watched as an indicator of trends, it is under even more intense scrutiny since its designer Phoebe Philo resigned in January to spend more time with her family.

Chloe said it would announce a replacement next week, amid reports that it has tapped Paolo Melin Anderson, a little-known designer previously at Italy's Marni label.

The last two collections have been conceived by an in-house team under Yvan Mispelaere, who bid farewell to friends backstage before his impending departure for Milan, where he will design for Gucci.

Robert Burke, head of the luxury consulting firm Robert Burke Associates, said the minimalist trend required skillful presentation on the part of retailers.

"It's a more intellectual sale, as opposed to an impulsive sale. It's all in how it's displayed, how it's merchandised, how it's shown in the windows," he told the AP.

"It's always a balance of making sure that you don't have too much of a sea of black in your store, that you still have color and you still have some embellishment, because while the fashion world moves very fast, sometimes the consumer doesn't move as fast."

Even John Galliano has succumbed to the new mood of sobriety.

The British designer is famous for staging theatrical catwalk displays featuring stylized versions of the more wearable outfits that customers will later find in stores.

No more. The only excitement at Galliano's show was the paparazzi crush around Hollywood couple Demi Moore and Ashton Kutcher, and the barreling late entrance of celebrity stylist Rachel Zoe in a long, white fringed gown.

The creations on show were pallid literally and figuratively, with only a few shots of purple, green and electric blue to cut through the sea of white suits and nude chiffon gowns.

Draped dresses in wet-look silk jerseys featured rolled sleeves that merged into a thick tube of fabric framing a bare back. Bold black and gold brushstroke and dot prints vaguely evoked the paintings of American pop artist Roy Lichtenstein.

Huge wire mesh hats by milliner Stephen Jones left some members of the audience nostalgic for the days when the fantasy extended to the clothes.

Madonna plans to adopt

By Raphael Tenthani
Associated Press

Madonna visited another orphanage in Malawi on Saturday amid persistent rumors that she plans to adopt a boy who lost his parents to AIDS.

It was the pop star's third visit to an orphanage in as many days. She arrived in the impoverished country Wednesday and Malawian government officials have said repeatedly she was planning to adopt a boy there. But Madonna's spokeswoman has denied the rumors.

Madonna has visited Malawian three times in three days.

Madonna and her husband, film director Guy Ritchie, traveled Friday to the small village of Mchinji near the Zambian border where she distributed copies of her book "The English Roses" and listened to children sing.

Alick, a boy of about 12, said it was the second time Madonna had visited the Home of Hope orphanage. Several residents said they heard she was going to adopt a boy named Davie and had been in discussions with the boy's guardians to take him to the U.S. But there was no confirmation of that.

Officials at the church-run home refused to speak to journalists, who were kept away from the brick building by bodyguards. Madonna was whisked away in a convoy of sport utility vehicles after the visit.

Malawi government officials have said they have been informed Madonna plans to adopt a boy in the country. But they say she has not yet filed any papers yet.

Madonna's spokeswoman, Liz Rosenberg, has denied the rumors, saying the visit to Malawi is motivated by humanitarian aims to set up orphanages.

Malawi is among the poorest countries in the world, with rampant disease and hunger, aggravated by periodic droughts and crop failure. Just over 14 percent of the 12 million population are infected with HIV, and an estimated 1 million children have been orphaned. In many villages, grandparents or older siblings struggle to feed orphans.

Madonna's visit has been shrouded in secrecy and she failed to show up for a scheduled meeting Friday with a top government minister, apparently because she was tied up visiting another orphanage.

Security officials indicated she was planning on staying for a while.

"We are not leaving soon," said Madonna's chief bodyguard, who gave his name only as Steve. "We are here for a while."

Madonna and her entourage have taken over a posh guesthouse called Kumbali Lodge, situated on a cattle and horse ranch in a well-to-do part of the capital, Lilongwe. It is near the presidential palace and not far away from poor settlements of mud huts, which are home to the vast majority of Malawi's population.

Madonna was seen jogging around the lodge early Saturday before traveling to meet representatives of a local charity that is working with Madonna's own organization, Raising Malawi.

The project aims to set up an orphan care center to provide food, education and shelter for up to 4,000 children. It will have projects based on Kabbalah, Judaism's mystical sect, which counts the 48-year-old singer among its devotees.

Madonna and Ritchie have a son, Rocco, 5, and the singer also has a daughter, Lourdes, 9.

'Fantasy' to be released after long wait

By Rob Dehlak
Detroit Free Press

The long wait is almost over. Gamers in the United States can now count the days until "Final Fantasy XII" is in their hands, ending the years of excitement that began in 2003. However, for RPG fanatics who need a sneak peek, we've got some impressions directly from the latest playable English version of the game.

Because it is such a radical shift for the series, the battle system in "Final Fantasy XII" is what has been attracting the most attention. All actions occur in real time as players move through large areas with freely roaming enemies – elements that often appear in the massively multiplayer online genre.

Now that we've delved into the game's Gambit system (which manages your allies' artificial intelligence), we can say that the similarities to massively multiplayer games don't stop there.

Gambits do more than tell your companions to auto-attack; they can be used to program an ally into a particular role. If you'd like, you can manually enter each command. But this kind of micromanagement is impractical.

'Final Fantasy XII'
Playstation 2
Square Enix
RPG

Like a good leveling party in "Final Fantasy XI," the Gambits ensure that no one deviates from duty. Although this efficiency-focused system makes enemy encounters go smoothly, it has the potential to take away the sense of achievement from major battles. In those encounters, success feels less dependent on the actions you take personally and more dependent on how well you automate your party.

"Final Fantasy XII" does appear to deliver big in one area where massively multiplayer online games never can: the story. The pacing feels deliberate, building characters and events slowly against a compelling backdrop of political unrest.

The attempts by "Final Fantasy XII" to bring certain massively multiplayer online conventions into a single-player framework is certainly a daring endeavor.

The latest Fantasy changes it's style to a multi-player game.

Gibson apologizes again for his anti-semetic remarks

By Sandy Cohen
Associated Press

Mel Gibson's redemption tour is heading to TV. The embattled 50-year-old actor-director, whose high-profile drunken-driving arrest and subsequent anti-Semitic tirade made international headlines over the summer, is set to appear on "Good Morning America" next week.

This follows other efforts by Gibson to mend his personal and professional life, including participating in a recovery program, attending court-ordered alcohol-rehabilitation classes and meeting privately with Jewish leaders to understand the source of his "vicious words," as he described them.

These steps will be followed by the Dec. 8 Disney release of Gibson's new film, "Apocalypto."

Gibson spoke with Diane Sawyer somewhere in Southern California recently for a two-part TV interview scheduled to air on Disney-owned ABC's "Good Morning America" on Oct. 12 and 13. This is the first time he has talked to the media since his arrest.

The interview "will be a segment in the show," said ABC news spokeswoman Bridgette Maney. "It's not going to be the entire 'Good Morning America'."

As for what to expect during the discussion, Gibson's publicist, Alan Nierob, would only say, "We'll have to wait and see."

Gibson has made few public appearances since his July 28 arrest in Malibu, when he told the arresting officer "The Jews are responsible for all the wars in the world," and asked him, "Are you a Jew?" He also made sexist comments to a female deputy. Gibson later apologized for what he called "vitriolic and harmful words."

Media outlets have clamored for access to the "Lethal Weapon" actor since his arrest. Maney would not address the significance to the show of the interview or how it was secured. Sawyer interviewed Gibson in 2004 about his controversial movie "The Passion of the Christ."

Gibson quietly stepped back into the public eye late last month. He attended two screenings of his new movie in Oklahoma on Sept. 21 and 22. He arrived at the first wearing a mask and wig. He did not speak to reporters.

The actor-director also appeared at a film festival in Austin, Texas, on Sept. 22 where he showed footage from "Apocalypto." He answered questions from fans, who did not ask about his arrest or recovery.

Disney spokesman Dennis Rice would not offer specifics about Gibson's or the studio's plans to market the movie, which chronicles the decline of the Mayan civilization. The subtitled film features a cast of unknown stars speaking in an ancient Mayan language.

"We look at each movie on its own merits and devise a plan from the ground up," he said. "Hopefully it is the best plan that will maximize the opportunity of each picture, and 'Apocalypto' is no different."

Some have criticized Gibson, who issued two apologies for his conduct following his arrest, for not doing more outreach toward the Jewish community especially in light of his recent promotional appearances.

"You would think that he would also find time to say that he wants to address his terrible statements," Rabbi Marvin Hier, dean of the Simon Wiesenthal Center in Los Angeles, told The Associated Press this week. "His remarks were so anti-Semitic and so hurtful to Jews. You can't make amends for that by talking on the phone to 12 Jews you know from Hollywood."

Nierob said Gibson has met privately with several Jewish leaders, who have been "welcoming and supportive."

Gibson is still apologetic for his remarks he said this past July.

Veteran Hollywood publicist David Brokaw said that if Gibson is "really convincing and engaging" during the Sawyer interview, "he could turn it around."

"Mel Gibson, in some form or another, will always be a big star," Brokaw said. "The question is how properly, facts-he can or should be about what's happened."

Gibson pleaded no contest to charges of drunken driving on Aug. 17 under a deal in which he'll serve three years' probation, pay a fine and attend alcohol rehabilitation classes. He also volunteered to make a public-service announcement about the hazards of drinking and driving.

He is scheduled to appear in court Jan. 17 for a progress report.

'Lost' cast faces fear of characters death

Josh Holloway, who plays sexy con man Sawyer on "Lost," sometimes worries that the ABC show's twisty, secretive plot will put him out of work.

"Everybody in the cast worries about being killed off, and we wouldn't know until they handed us the script three days before shooting," the 37-year-old actor says in the November issue of Men's Journal magazine.

"It's a sensitive issue. People have houses here, kids in school. Most of us aren't in our twenties anymore."

Holloway's Sawyer has developed into both a villain and a fan favorite.

"It still shocks me how people love him," he says. "But my take on guys like him is they're just dudes who have a different perspective on how to survive. Truth is, there's a little Sawyer in all of us, and that's why people get into him."

He'll play another bad boy, a kidnapper in the thriller "The Whisper," slated for release next year.

"It's a fun movie, but I'm looking to do a really different role next, more of a character who maybe even keeps his shirt on most of the time."

Associated Press

The Bar Guide, comming Thursday, Oct. 19th, 2006!

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

SCHOOL OF GRADUATE STUDIES
OPEN HOUSE
ADANTI STUDENT CENTER
SOUTHERN CONNECTICUT STATE UNIVERSITY
THURSDAY
OCTOBER 26, 2006
3:00 - 7:00 PM
• Meet with graduate faculty from more than 40 areas of study
• Find out about financial aid and graduate assistantships
• Get details on career services and living on campus
• Choose from 55 graduate programs, including master's degree programs, sixth year certificates, and the Ed.D
SCHOOL OF ARTS & SCIENCES
SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
SCHOOL OF COMMUNICATION, INFORMATION & LIBRARY SCIENCE
SCHOOL OF EDUCATION
SCHOOL OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICES
Southern Connecticut State University
501 Crescent Street • New Haven, CT 06515-1355
Register for the Open House at www.gradstudies.SouthernCT.edu • 1-800-448-0661 or 203-392-5240

Engineering & Computer Science
CAREER FAIR
CO-OP + FULL TIME POSITIONS
WED. October 11, 2006
10:00AM - 3:00PM
Campus Center Auditorium
06
www.umass.edu/careers ← CAREER SERVICES
UMASS AMHERST Student Affairs & Campus Life Career Services

Sights and sounds of McGuirk

FOOTBALL from page 10

on the team.

SUDDEN SCARE

With 12:48 left in the fourth quarter, the Minutemen were up by a significant margin. Woodward had replaced Coen at quarterback and most of the starters were sidelined for the day. But Baylark continued to carry the ball, and after a 30-yard run up the left sideline, a William and Mary cornerback laid a clean, hard hit on the UMass tailback that sent him flying face down on top of the ball. He rolled over in pain and was slow to get up but survived the hit without injury.

"The one thing that I was really concerned about when [Baylark] had fallen is that [the trainers] thought maybe it was his ribs," Brown said. "And when I got over there he was tweaking at his neck. But we realized that he had just fallen on the ball. That's why when people say to me, 'You have a lot of tailbacks on your roster,' I tell them that when you run the ball like we run the ball, you need to make sure that you have a stable of guys that can do it."

MCGUIRK MUSCLE

It was Band Day on Saturday at McGuirk Stadium. Fifty-eight high school bands from Massachusetts were invited to the UMass home game. They performed "The Little Mermaid" with the UMass band at halftime after all 58 bands had gathered on the turf. The total attendance for Saturday's game was 15,822, the 19th-largest crowd in McGuirk Stadium history. Sophomore UConn transfer Courtney Robinson had his first career interception on Saturday at the 1:57 mark of the fourth quarter on a lob pass into the UMass endzone. He is averaging 30.4 yards per kick return in special teams duty, ranking first in the A-10 and eighth in the nation.

Senior tailback Steve Baylark rushed for 187 yards on Saturday against William and Mary, scoring two touchdowns in the win.

Junior backlielder Erin O'Brien has six points on the season with three goals on 12 shots. O'Brien has recorded one hat trick this year.

UMass running short on luck

FIELD HOCKEY from page 10

yet in a do-or-die situation, (they did make the A-10 tournament with a 4-3 record last season), Shea knows that her team is in a bit of a hole.

"We've made it a lot more difficult for ourselves," Shea said. "But it's nowhere we haven't been before."

Heading into a pivotal stretch of four straight conference games, the Minutewomen can build momentum and wash away the bitter taste of the last three losses with a victory over Vermont.

"We've made the bed that we're laying in right now," Shea said. "But they are still in control of their own destiny."

If the Maroon and White are to get back on the winning track, it will need to work as a team.

"The more we keep the ball moving, and [pass effectively], the more successful we will be," Shea said.

Time has not yet run out for the Minutewomen, but the hour is certainly drawing near. Tonight at 5 p.m., UMass gets another shot at turning its season around.

Saint Louis drops out of Top 30

A-10 SOCCER from page 10

Colleen Gibson scored the game-winning goal in just the fourth minute of play. The Flyer defense was solid for the second straight game, allowing only four shots. Oddly, all four of those shots occurred during a 13-minute period of the second half.

Dayton looks to continue its success in A-10 play this coming week with home matches against Duquesne and Saint Louis.

PLAYER OF THE WEEK

The Atlantic 10 named junior forward Kristin Hextall of La Salle (6-7-0, 3-1-0) the Women's Soccer Player of the Week. Hextall contributed to every Explorer goal in the past week, recording two goals and three assists.

She scored the first Explorer goal against Charlotte (8-4-2, 3-1-0) on Oct. 10 in a 2-1 victory. Two days later, Hextall tallied the game-winning goal in a 3-0 victory over Richmond (1-10-2, 1-3-0). She is first on the team in points this season with 10.

ROOKIE OF THE WEEK

The Atlantic 10 named Dayton freshman forward Caitlin Proffitt the Women's Soccer Rookie of the Week. Proffitt scored the game-winning goal against Massachusetts on Oct. 6 and scored again two days later in the team's 2-0 win over Rhode Island. Elsewhere in the Soccer Buzz Magazine rankings, Boston University (11-2-2) became the first team from the Northeast to crack the Top 10 this season BU defeated America East rivals Albany and Binghamton last week to improve its record. No. 24 Stanford and UMass are the only two schools to have beaten the Terriers this season. BU's cross-town rival Boston College (8-4-1) is the only other team from the region ranked in the Top 30. The Eagles sit at No. 26, after winning and tying a game this past week.

Charlotte remains atop A-10

A-10 M. Soccer

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After another week of Atlantic 10 matchups, the Charlotte 49ers are in first place with 12 points. The 49ers (8-3-2, 4-0-0 A-10) defeated La Salle (5-7-1, 1-3-0), 1-0, and also shutout George Washington (4-6-1, 1-2-0), 2-0. Richmond (6-5-2, 3-0-0, A-10) is the surprise team that remains unbeaten, although it has yet to play a team with a winning record. Xavier (6-6-0, 3-0-0 A-10) had lost three straight non-conference games going into A-10 play. Since then it has gone 3-0, recently defeating UMass (7-5-2, 1-3-0), 2-0, and handing Rhode Island (6-4-3, 3-1-0 A-10) its first conference loss, 2-1.

St. Louis (7-3-1, 3-0) continues to play well into conference play, as they remain unbeaten. The No. 22 ranked Billikens took down the previously unbeaten and No. 12-ranked Fordham Rams (6-2-1, 0-2-1), 1-0. The Billikens's goaltending has been a key to their success, led by freshman goalkeeper Ross Kaufman, who has tallied five shutouts.

UNBEATEN NO MORE

Last week the Fordham Rams had a small slip-up against the winless St. Bonaventure Bonnies (0-10-1, 0-2-1), tying them, 0-0. This week the No. 12 Rams lost two conference games. In conference play the Rams are 0-2-1 and have yet to score a goal. They lost their first game of the season to Duquesne (7-4-1, 2-1), 3-0. The Rams look to rebound against two teams with losing records, La Salle and George Washington.

PLAYERS OF THE WEEK

Duquesne University senior goalkeeper Zach Varga is the Atlantic 10 Co-Player of the Week. He stopped four shots in a 3-0 shutout victory over No.12 Fordham. On Sunday, he had three saves in a 1-0 win over St. Bonaventure. For the season, Varga has four shutouts and a 1.14 goals-against average that ranks him eighth in the A-10.

Xavier senior forward Toni Skudrzik is the A-10 Co-Player of the Week and led his team to a 2-0 record over the weekend. He led Xavier to its first two-win weekend since 2003. Skudrzik scored the game-winning goal and added an assist in the 2-0 win against UMass. He also scored the team's first goal in a 2-1 victory over Rhode Island. Skudrzik leads his team with eight points (three goals, two assists).

ROOKIE OF THE WEEK

Charlotte 49ers freshman goalkeeper David Martin earned the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week honors for the second time this season after recording consecutive shutouts last weekend. Martin's honor will make it three straight weeks that a 49er freshman has received this award. Freshman forward Andre Lee has won the award the last two weeks. Martin earned his fourth shutout of the season by stopping three shots in a 2-0 victory over George Washington. The two shutouts lowered his goals-against average to 0.87, which ranks him 3rd in the A-10.

KEY A-10 MATCH-UP

The Charlotte 49ers will put their perfect A-10 record up against the unbeaten Richmond Spiders on Saturday. This is the first A-10 team that the Spiders will play with a winning record.

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers' Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

"Results you can feel ... without the side effects."
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Participating provider for HMO's, student insurance, Blue Cross, GIC, car insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
Most insurance accepted.
549-1500

Live It Up...Go Bowling!
UMASS College Night
SPARE TIME
EVERY THURSDAY
Unlimited Bowling
9pm-12am
Only $10
also featuring....
Grandstands Bar
Live Bands
Every Saturday night
Spare Time Northampton
(formerly Northampton Bowl)
525 Pleasant St 584-4830

READ ABOUT YOUR FAVORITE SPORTS BARS IN THE UPCOMING DAILY COLLEGIAN BAR GUIDE

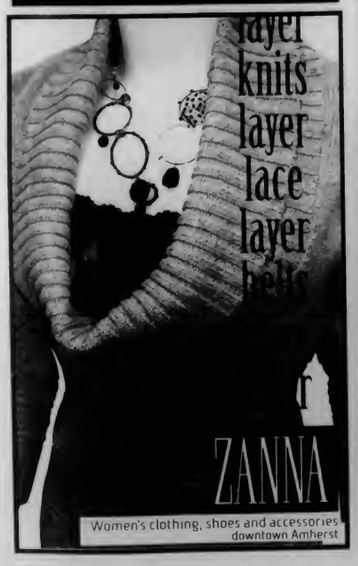
Attention First-Year Students:
Have you completed MyStudentBody? It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, October 16th. For instructions, go to the University Health Services website,
www.umass.edu/uhs
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

FRUSTRATED? PUZZLED? DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu



555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911

Submit Your Comic Anyway You Want
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

			5		3
		1				3
8	3						2	4
		3	9		5	7
7	6						8	9
		4	7		1	2
1	9						3	2
		2				6
			1		6

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Region's plants
6 Aussie birds
10 Ovine cries
14 Mechanical man
15 Alda TV series
16 In a log
17 Royal decree
18 As soon as 19 Approximately 20 Treats after eats
22 Riot squad's quarry
24 Highlander's negative
25 Prevailing weather
26 Game emporium
30 Comic King
31 Thermometers' reservoirs
32 Besieged
37 Biblical twin
38 See dogs
39 Tipper or Al
40 Fasters
42 Smooth fabric
43 Like venison
44 Wall or Walnut
45 Pop pistols
49 Old French coin
50 Sounded stridently
51 Dressed, in a way
56 Verdi heroine
57 Uh...pardon me
59 Accustom
60 Stiefel
61 Fertile soil
62 Register var.
63 Falco or McGuigg
64 Agree
65 Wet thoroughly

DOWN
1 Mr. Mertz
2 Mineral bonanza
3 Geishas' sashes
4 Mythical birds
5 Goes to
6 Ham it up
7 Stefa
8 Trojans of sports
9 Tint vanishes
10 Put forth flowers
11 Main artery
12 Portfolio pus
13 Mail unit
21 Arctic explorer John
23 Sty sound
25 Colaguises
26 Assist a crook
27 Anifica
28 Extended family
29 Lie adjacent to
30 Backsheet
32 Aromatic salves
33 Culture medium
34 Be too kind
35 Pennsylvania city
36 Fender mishap
38 Tabloid material
41 Chills and fever
42 Examined in detail
44 Male offspring
45 Degrade
46 Homeric epic
47 Diameter halves
48 Test result
49 Slemish Snead
51 Paul Bryant's nickname
52 ... Domini
53 Ashram figure
54 Love god
55 Eat out
58 Short trip

THE HARP
FALL SPECIALS!
Honey Brown, Molson
$2.00 a pint / $6.50 a pitcher
THURS • Scrambled Porn
FRI • Irish Seisiun
SAT • Full Tilt Boogie
Dance Night with DJ Sha Gg!
Pizza 'til midnight 7 days a week
Voted best Neighborhood bar East of the river 2005 & 2006
Valley Advocate readers poll
OCMP & All Credit cards accepted
163 Sunderland Rd. N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-0000 www.theharp.net

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"In waking a tiger, use a long stick."
—Mao Tse-Tung

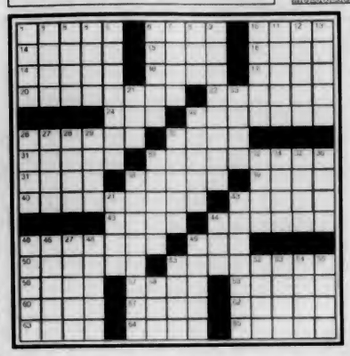
WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY JOSH SHALEK

What do you do on your breaks, Dee?
DO
Sit and look
Desert air is soothing, especially with a breeze
DO
The landscape is bright, intelligent
Problem is, when people see something they like, they feel the need to build on it
Let it be

ECOLOGY BY JEN FELL

ZOOMASS BY RYAN SENECAL

ELSIE HOOPER BY ROBERT D. KRZYKOWSKI



HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You will be added to the millions of people that die every year from not smoking.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Eat a banana before you sleep and you will have nightmares. What are you scared?

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
He wants to know what love is, and he wants you to show him.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Never interrupt your elders—they're in the middle of dying.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
The truth shall set you free; unless whoever said that was lying, then you better not.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Splitting wood is good exercise; splitting hairs over who's splitting wood is not.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
(Cut this out and try selling it on Ebay) There you go that's your horoscope.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Keep an eye on those "friends" of yours who eat grape nuts.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
The secret to macaroni and cheese is chilli powder. Shh! ... keep it down.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Your hair smells lovely.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Where's your lexus? Loser.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You can forget following your dream if it's to be an online gambler.

BEST BAR AROUND
Seven O's
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
Friday 10/13:
FLOYD PATTERSON
Student Band Wanted!!
Call (413) 658-7116
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-8788
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

THANK YOU FOR READING
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal Party Weekends Includes Transportation, Hotel and More $115 Complete Montrealexpress.net

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Be and Do something Bigger than yourself. Learn, Lead, and Succeed with Army ROTC Full Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly. Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

AUTO FOR SALE

92 Toyota Camry Station Wagon $850 549-9639

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day.

EMPLOYMENT

Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

McDonald's Crew Members Needed. Full & part-time openings at Michell Bradley/McDonalds. Competitive wages & salaries plus benefits. Start at $9.62 /hr. Apply at Michell Bradley/McDonalds office at Bradley Int'l Airport, Terminal A, 2-5pm, M-W, or send resume to EHmichell@aol.com Call 203-223-0153 with questions.

EMPLOYMENT

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

PT Sales Assoc. positions available in the bakery, deli and produce departments. Evening, weekend, and holiday availability required. Call or email Kelly at 253-9528 kelly@atkinsfarms.com

ENTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing. Birth Control. and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

HOUSE FOR RENT

THE BAR GUIDE IS COMING!

The Daily Collegian is publishing it's first ever Amherst Area Bar Guide.

DON'T MISS IT.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 11, 2006

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Tidbits from a hectic weekend

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

UMass coach Don Brown has a plethora of running backs at his disposal. Steve Baylark is the Minutemen's annual 1000-yard rusher. Tim Washington transferred from Syracuse for one extra year in maroon and white. Matt Lawrence sat out last season with a knee injury but has returned to action this year after a full recovery.

And freshman Tony Nelson showed everyone this weekend that he belongs in the rotation. Nelson carved through the William and Mary defense for three touchdowns and 69 yards on the ground, good for a 5.3 average per carry. His three touchdowns marked the second time a UMass back has notched three scores in a single game this season.

UMass Football

Nelson took more snaps than usual due to injuries to both Washington and Lawrence. Brown said that Washington was available if the Minutemen needed him, but Nelson's solid performance allowed Brown to rest his tailbacks and let the rookie have his day.

"We could've gone to Timmy [Washington] if we needed to," Brown said. "But when we got into that situation late in the ball game, there was really no need to."

Nelson, after running his first play from scrimmage at the 13:33 mark of the second quarter for an eight-yard gain, extended the Minutemen's lead to 21-0 with his first career touchdown just two minutes and 21 seconds later. It was a four-yard run up the middle that capped an eight-play, 80-yard UMass scoring drive that took just 2:52.

The freshman's second touchdown of the day came in the same quarter after a 50-yard run by Baylark – the longest of his career – put the Minutemen inside the Tribe's five-yard line. Nelson ran it in from there on a pitch left to make it 28-0 UMass with 5:26 left in the first half.

With 13:23 left in the fourth, Nelson ran it in again for his third score on the day, the most in a single game this season.

Freshman tailback Tony Nelson led UMass with three touchdowns on 13 carries in Saturday's 48-7 win over William and Mary.

Running after history

Baylark tore through the William and Mary defense on Saturday for 187 yards on the ground and two touchdowns, both in the first quarter. It was Baylark's 11th career game with two touchdowns or more.

In the midst of UMass' fourth consecutive scoring drive, Baylark took the ball from quarterback Liam Coen on a run up the middle. The offensive line cleared a path for the fourth-year tailback and Baylark ran 50 yards nearly untouched before Tribe cornerbacks dragged him down inside their own five-yard line. The run was the longest of Baylark's career, edging a 49-yard run against Connecticut in 2004. On Saturday, Baylark recorded his 10th career game with more than 100 yards rushing. He also took third place on the all-time list for rushing yards, bringing his total to 3,867 in a UMass uniform. Baylark now has 32 career rushing touchdowns, 36 total touchdowns, and has cracked the endzone in 10 of UMass' last 11 games.

London Town

Senior wide receiver Brandon London had three receptions for 83 yards on Saturday, bringing his career catch total to 110, fourth all-time at UMass. London also moved up to seventh all-time in receiving yards with his Saturday performance, which included 35- and 41-yard strikes from Coen.

Three 15-yard penalties were assessed in the first half of Saturday's game, including a roughing-the-kicker penalty by UMass' Demarcus Roberson and a late hit by the Minutemen on a William and Mary punt return. Another 15-yard penalty went to the Minutemen on a block in the back on a 43-yard pitch and catch from backup quarterback Scott Woodward – he went 1-for-2 on the day in garbage time – to Ke'Mon Bailey in the fourth quarter. It was Bailey's first career reception. ... Roberson had two roughing-the-kicker penalties on the day.

Kicker Chris Koepplin only got two field-goal attempts on Saturday. 11 02 in the third and 7:24 in the fourth – but knocked both of them through the uprights. ... One UMass drive on Saturday went for just two plays and lasted 36 seconds. Coen hit J.J. Moore on a fade route in the corner of the endzone for a touchdown to end the drive.

Rancher injured

Wideout Rasheed Rancher had no receptions and limited playing time in Saturday's game, and it is possible that the wide receiver is hurting. Rancher was heard telling an inquiring Brown that X-Rays were scheduled for Sunday. The recovery timetable for his injury is uncertain. Rancher has six receptions for 189 yards on the season, including an 89-yard touchdown catch against Stony Brook on Sept. 23. His 31.5 yards-per-catch average is the best

See FOOTBALL on page 8

Sophomore Connecticut transfer Courtney Robinson had his first career interception in Saturday's 48-7 win, UMass' fourth of the season.

Ball breaks receiving record in Durham

By Mike Walsh
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 was in full force on Saturday as six conference games yielded some surprising upsets and one record-breaking performance.

New Hampshire senior wide out David Ball's pursuit of Jerry Rice's I-AA record of 50 touchdown receptions is finally over. Ball caught nine passes, one for a touchdown, and tallied 60 yards in what is sure to be a game he will never forget.

A-10 Football

Ball's teammates were also successful on Saturday as the Wildcats improved to 5-0. They are now the only remaining unbeaten in the A-10.

Wildcats Come Through With Strong Second Half

No. 7 Richmond (4-1, 1-1 A-10) came out ready to play on the road against No. 1 New Hampshire (5-0, 2-0 A-10).

The Spiders built a 14-6 halftime lead and looked to be in prime position to pull off the upset. However, junior quarterback Ricky Santos and the rest of his Wildcats were not about to go down without a fight. In fact, behind Santos's superb play, the home team outscored its foe, 21-3, in the second half on its way to the 27-7 victory. Santos finished the day with 25 completions and only six miscues while throwing for 181 yards and two touchdowns.

UMass and James Madison Looking Tough

Already surviving two scares in its last two games, New Hampshire's pursuit of an undefeated season will only get tougher as they will host No. 13 James Madison (4-1, 2-0 A-10) and No. 8 Massachusetts (4-1, 2-0 A-10) over the next two weeks.

After falling behind by two points going into the fourth quarter against Rhode Island (2-3, 0-2 A-10), James Madison reached back and came up with two crucial scores to tally the last 14 points of the game on its way to a 35-23 win.

Massachusetts once again roared right out of the gates as the Minutemen manhandled William & Mary (1-4, 0-3 A-10), 48-7. Senior running back Steve Baylark ran the ball 22 times for 187 yards and two touchdowns and freshman running back Tony Nelson also added 69 rush yards and three scores to lead the Minutemen to victory.

UMass will take on No. 22 Towson (4-1, 1-1 A-10) next week.

Upset Specials

Coming into its game on Saturday, Towson was undefeated, ranked No. 17, and looked to keep climbing up the charts. However, they were in for a surprise as unranked Maine (3-2, 2-0 A-10), behind senior quarterback Ron Whitcomb's two rushing touchdowns, defeated the Tigers 28-7. With the win, the Black Bears jumped into the Top 25 for the first time since 2004.

No. 18 Delaware (2-3, 1-2 A-10) must have been a little out of sorts after its near-upset victory against New Hampshire, as it fell to Northeastern (2-4, 1-2 A-10), 27-24, on a 35-yard field goal as time expired. The loss booted the Fighting Blue Hens from the Top 25.

Villanova (2-3, 1-1 A-10) won its first conference game of the season, 20-16, on the road against Hofstra (2-3, 1-2 A-10).

In the loss, the Pride's senior wide receiver Shaine Smith collected six receptions for 152 yards and a score. The senior has over 600 yards on the season and five touchdowns and is looking to follow in the footsteps of last year's teammate Marques Colston, who is doing quite well for himself this year playing for the New Orleans Saints.

Lowe and Ampim suspended in wake of Thursday arrests

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

Chris Lowe, the starting point guard for the Massachusetts men's basketball team, and reserve player Nana Ampim were arrested last Thursday outside of the Amherst Starbucks.

Athletic Director John McCutcheon and UMass' coach Travis Ford announced through a press release last night that Lowe and Ampim "have been suspended from several team competitions" in light of the arrests.

Ampim and Lowe will not be allowed to participate in Midnight Madness – the annual preseason event at the Curry Hicks Cage this Friday – and have been suspended from the Minutemen's exhibition game against Bridgeport on Nov. 4 and the regular season opener against Dartmouth on Nov. 11.

Team practices officially begin on Friday and, according to the statement, both Lowe and Ampim will be allowed to participate.

These arrests and suspensions, though ugly, will not affect the UMass team all that much.

Lowe has the bigger impact of these two suspensions. He started at point guard last season and averaged over 30 minutes per game after Maurice Maxwell and Art Bowers both slated to play the guard positions last season ... were no longer with the team by the regular season.

While there are some new faces in UMass uniforms in this campaign, and it will take game experience for Lowe to gel with the transfers in their first year of eligibility. Luke Bonner, Gary Forbes, Etienne Hinwer, Tiki Mayben – losing those two games will not affect Lowe come the regular season.

Lowe averaged 31 minutes per game last season and played 40 minutes in a game for the first time in his collegiate career against St. Bonaventure on Feb. 19, 2006. Lowe finished the season on 47-for-134 shooting from the field, a 35 percent pace. He went 5-for-18 from the three-point line.

The freshman point guard finished the season with 137 assists, the most on the team, coupled with 90 turnovers, also a team high.

Lowe started the last 13 games of the 2005-06 season after coming off of the bench for the first 13. He drew Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week honors for the weeks of Dec. 25 and Jan. 22. In his first collegiate start against Fordham last year, Lowe played 39 minutes, tallied 14 points, and dished out seven assists.

Ampim played in only four games last season.

Mayben will share the point guard duties with Lowe this year, and with Lowe sidelined for the exhibition on Nov. 4 and the regular season opener on the 11th, Mayben could have an opportunity to showcase his talent.

As long as Lowe is practicing, however, he won't miss much, and it shouldn't affect his playing time or place in the rotation over the long term.

Minutewomen running short on luck

By J.M. Feldman
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team (3-10, 0-2 Atlantic 10) will face off against Vermont tonight at Garber Field.

October has not been kind to the Minutewomen. Looking back at the calendar, September was not much better. Recently though, things have gotten particularly rough. The last three games were decided by one goal, and two of those matchups required an extra period to determine the victor. All three contests ended in disappointment for the Maroon and White.

Furthering the aggravation for UMass has been the way it has lost those games. Mental lapses, missed opportunities, lack of execution at critical moments, the Minutewomen have been in prime position to win their last games, only to fall just short.

Junior midfielder Kara Murphy has five points on the season, with one goal and three assists on six shots on goal.

Against crucial A-10 opponents, there is little room for error. High stakes conference play translates to closely contested battles on the field. Perfection, however, is not something UMass coach Patty Shea expects from her players.

"Everybody makes mistakes in the game," Shea said. "[Winning] is about who makes the fewest mistakes, and who can overcome [the mistakes that are made]."

Shea has been preaching simplicity throughout the season. After an overtime loss to Temple on October 6, Shea articulated this belief.

"We have to be determined to keep the game simple...the simpler it is, the more right it's going to be"

Taking on an up-and-coming Catamount team this evening, the Minutewomen will again try and keep the game simple to achieve victory.

After posting a dismal 39-109 record over the past eight seasons, head coach Nicki Houghton has the Green and Gold (6-5, 1-1 America East) headed in the right direction, already matching their win total from last year with seven games still to play. Before a 3-2 loss at Maine this past weekend, the Catamounts had won five of their previous six games, including a victory at Syracuse, an opponent that completely shut down the Minutewomen at Garber Field two weeks ago.

Leading the way for Vermont is the returning tandem of junior forwards Danielle Collins and Kelly McClintock. Together, Collins and McClintock accounted for 19 of Vermont's 37 goals last season.

This season, the pair has already combined for 18 goals and nine assists. The emergence of sophomore forward Megan Luce along with her nine goals and four assists has given the Catamounts three top-tier scoring threats.

Shea has high praise for an opponent that has yet to beat the Minutewomen in seven meetings.

"Vermont, tactically, is probably better than the two teams we played [referring to Saint Joseph's and Temple]," Shea said. "They have great team speed. They pass the ball well, and they play a good zone defense in the midfield, while playing more of a man [defense] in the backfield."

Shea stressed that the play of the midfielders will be key against Vermont and throughout the remainder of the season.

"We need more consistent performances from a lot of people on the field," Shea said. "Our midfield has to be more powerful than they've been ... [they] need to help the ball enter the shooting circle at different angles."

While the Minutewomen are not

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 8

Billikens plummet after reaching plateau

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

The Saint Louis women's soccer team is no longer a member of the Top 30 National rankings. The Billikens (7-2-2, 2-1-0 Atlantic 10) plummeted from No. 17 after being shut out by Fordham (8-4-0, 2-1-0), 2-0, on Oct. 8. Saint Louis was the only Atlantic 10 representative in the rankings produced by Soccer Buzz Magazine.

A-10 W. Soccer

The school improved its standing during each of the first six weeks of the season and set a program record for highest ranking each week in the process. Saint Louis was poised to improve even further until stumbling against the Rams. The loss comes after having defeated St. Bonaventure (1-10-1, 0-3-0), 3-0, earlier in the week.

In the Fordham game, sophomore goalkeeper Elizabeth Roald , who hails from Oslo, Norway, needed only two saves to seal the victory. In addition to the two shots on goal, Saint Louis mustered only four others. Attempting six total shots in a game is uncharacteristic of the Billikens this season. They lead the league in shots per game by a significant margin, averaging just over 15.

Saint Louis will attempt to charge back into the rankings while the team closes out its regular-season road schedule with matches against Xavier and Dayton. The Billikens have not played a home game since Sept. 18.

Undefeated Flyers

The Dayton (5-3-3, 3-0-0) women's soccer team has enjoyed success thus far in league play. The Flyers are in first place in the A-10, sporting the league's only undefeated record.

The team notched two conference road victories last week, defeating Massachusetts (8-4-0, 2-2-0) and Rhode Island (7-7-0, 3-1-0). The victories are a part of the team's four-game overall winning streak and three-game conference winning streak.

On Oct 6, Dayton defeated the Minutewomen 3-1, scoring two second-half goals. Freshman goalkeeper Tasha Dittamore led the Flyers with six saves on seven shots. Senior defender/midfielder Nadia Villarroel scored the lone goal for UMass.

The Flyers earned the second victory of their road trip on Oct. 8 when they defeated Rhode Island, 2-0. Freshman forward

After reaching a No. 17 ranking, the Billikens have dropped significantly.

See A-10 SOCCER on page 8

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

The New York Yankees suffered the longest playoff scoreless streak since the 1919 Chicago Black Sox, when the Bombers went 20 innings without a run against the Tigers.

The Insomniac | Collegian exclusive with Dave Attell

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 69 LO: 40 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 2006

Universities share students info with bank companies for profit

By Jenna Spataro
Collegian Correspondent

The scene is a familiar one to University of Massachusetts Students: credit card company gofers hunting down students with paperwork, free gifts and card offers at the Campus Center. While this practice is a common one at UMass, other schools are making it even easier for companies to track down students.

The largest four-year universities have been disclosing student contact information to credit card issuing banks, earning millions in annual fees by allowing banks the right to market on campus, according to a report by USA Today.

"Universities are getting less revenue from state governments and looking at everything they can to raise revenue," Jacqueline King of the The American Council on Education told USA Today.

While UMass refuses to give out student information to credit card companies, they have joined with credit card company MBNA to produce two styles of cards that contain the symbols and logos of the school.

The Alumni Association places the money earned through the MBNA card into a royalty fund for University programs and services. Approximately 100 scholarships are given to students every year. The Alumni Association uses $40,000 annually from the credit cards and other corporations to fund other activities.

"We don't market through students," said Cristina Geso, executive director of the UMass Alumni Association. "The only way [credit card companies] get their information is if they come to campus and table on their own."

Gesco states that credit card companies are welcomed to promote their credit card on campus, provided the companies follow all the policies and tabling rules.

Some universities are able to receive more than $2.5 million through marketing deals with only one credit card company, Robert Manning of Rochester Institute of Technology said in the USA Today report. With these deals, the schools usually give the banks contact information of both the alumni and students. Some are even allowed to solicit college events.

Over three-quarters of all college kids have a credit card, according to a recent study published by the student loan firm Nellie Mae.

Consumer groups worry that universities' disclosure of student information compromises the student's privacy, and that it encourages credit card companies

See CREDIT CARD on page 4

ISOM hits Princeton Review

By Steve Stafford
Collegian Staff

"Explore. Discover. Succeed," reads a bulletin board outside the Flavin Auditorium in the Isenberg School of Management (ISOM) building at the University of Massachusetts, and that's exactly what ISOM students there are expected to do. Apparently, the newest Princeton Review publication says that they are doing it pretty well.

UMass' ISOM was recently named one of the nation's best business schools.

The publication, a list of "The Best 282 Business Schools," places UMass's MBA program as the 10th hardest to get into in the country.

"I just got in," says sophomore Mateusz Hindzel. "I had a lot of stress trying to get that 3.8 GPA last year, but I'm glad I did it."

Apparently all the difficulty is worth it. UMass took second place for Princeton Review's "Best Overall Academic Experience," and most students tend to agree with that claim.

"This is my first semester in the School of Management and so far I love the teachers," said Hindzel. "They've been really insightful and friendly; they treat us like adults, and students really respect that."

In the 2007 survey, the Isenberg School ranks second place in the category "Best Overall Academic Experience," fourth in "Greatest Opportunity for Women," and 10th in "Toughest to Get Into."

"The professors have a lot of real world experience," said senior Sam Horenstein, an accounting and marketing major. "A couple are still consulting or still working on the side. They're businesspeople. I think that's the most significant thing."

"I think it's accurate; this is definitely a good place. The

See ISOM on page 4

Plane crashes into N.Y. high-rise

Yankee pitcher Lidle, one of two dead

By Colleen Long
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A small plane carrying New York Yankee Cory Lidle slammed into a 50-story skyscraper Wednesday, apparently killing the pitcher and a second person in a crash that rained flaming debris onto the sidewalks and briefly raised fears of another terrorist attack.

A law enforcement official in Washington said Lidle — an avid pilot who got his flying license during last year's offseason — was aboard the single-engine aircraft when it crashed into the 30th and 31st floors of the high-rise on Manhattan's Upper East Side. Mayor Michael Bloomberg said both people aboard were killed.

It was not clear who was at the controls. But the Washington official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Lidle's passport was found at the scene.

Federal Aviation Administration records showed the plane was registered to Lidle, who had repeatedly assured reporters in recent months that flying was safe and that the Yankees — who lost catcher Thurman Munson in the 1979 crash of a plane he was piloting — had no reason to worry.

"The flying?" the 34-year-old Lidle told The Philadelphia Inquirer this summer. "I'm not worried about it. I'm safe up there. I feel very comfortable with my abilities flying an airplane."

The crash came just four days after the Yankees' humiliating elimination from the playoffs, during which Lidle had been relegated to the bullpen. In recent days, Lidle had taken abuse from fans on sports talk radio for saying the team was unprepared.

The law enforcement official said the plane had issued a distress call before the crash.

The FAA said it was too early to determine what might have caused the crash. The National Transportation Safety Board sent investigators.

"This is a terrible and shocking tragedy that has stunned the

See NEW YORK on page 4

Smoke is seen billowing from a New York building after a small plane crashed into it.

Cosby to speak to UMass students

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

Bill Cosby, left, and the Rev. Jesse Jakeson talk at a ceremony at the U.S. Capitol on March 24, 2004.

University of Massachusetts Amherst alumnus Bill Cosby is coming back to Amherst.

Cosby is scheduled to speak to UMass students about teaching and performing community service in underserved communities on Monday, Oct. 16 at 7:30 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall.

UMass students who are enrolled in the School of Education and Commonwealth College, the campus's honors program, have been invited to attend a screening of the movie "Akeelah and the Bee" at 6 p.m.

The film tells the story of an 11-year-old African-American girl from south Los Angeles whose prowess with words and coaching by a professor earns her the chance to compete for a spot in the national spelling bee.

Following the movie, Cosby will lead a discussion of the film and the role of teachers and other mentors in promoting academic success. Cosby earned a doctorate in education at UMass in 1977.

Cosby has spoken on campus numerous times within the last few years.

Last year, Cosby spoke of students suffering with learning disabilities, or, as he calls it, a "learning difference."

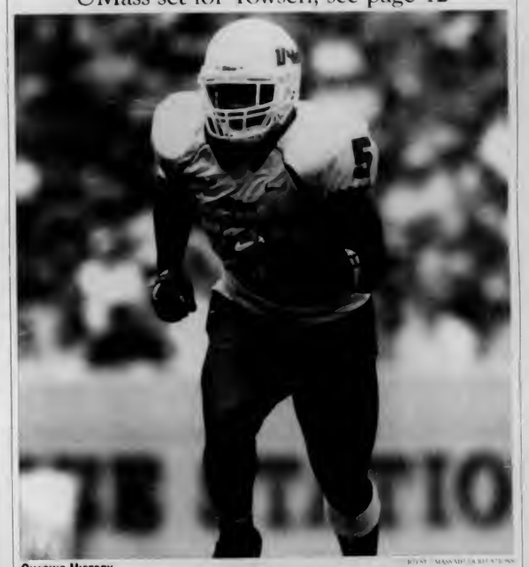
In 2004, Cosby performed at the Mullins Center to benefit public school students from across the state.

The proceeds from his performance "Cosby Comes Home," as well as several large contributions from corporate sponsorships, raised over $1.5 million, which was given to scholarship funds, according to University officials.

An initial endowment of approximately $340,000 from Cosby's Friday performance, as well as a 50 percent state match, will jump-start the new Cosby Commonwealth Challenge Fund, which the University announced Friday afternoon.

Chancellor John V. Lombardi will introduce Cosby and serve as master of ceremonies.

UMass set for Towsen, see page 12



Chasing History

UMass running back Steve Baylark needs 73 yards to reach the 4,000 yard plateau for his college career. Baylark has totaled 555 rushing yards on 99 attempts in the first five games of the season.

Bush refuses talks with N. Korea

By Jennifer Loven
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush unapologetically defended his approach to North Korea's nuclear weapons program Wednesday, pledging he would not change course despite contentions that Pyongyang's apparent atomic test proved the failure of his nearly six years of effort.

Bush rejected the idea of direct U.S.-North Korea talks, saying the Koreans were more likely to listen if confronted with the combined protest of many nations.

The president said he was not backing down from his assertion three years ago that "we will not tolerate nuclear weapons in North Korea."

He said the United States "reserves all options to defend our friends and our interests in the region against the threats from North Korea," a stance he said includes increased defense cooperation, especially on missile defense, with Japan and South Korea.

But he added, "I believe the commander in chief must try all diplomatic measures before we commit our military."

The president appeared at a news conference in the White House's Rose Garden in an effort

See BUSH on page 4

President Bush speaks during a news conference in the Rose Garden of the White House in Washington yesterday.

MULLINS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST

November 19 at 7pm

Tickets on Sale Friday, October 13 at Noon

Tickets: Mullins Center Box Office and any ticketmaster center location (including Filene's, HMV and Tower Records), and on the web at www.ticketmaster.com or Charge-by-phone at (413) 733-2500.

disturbed1.com stonesour.com flyleafmusic.com nonpoint.com

WWW.JOEFLETCHERPRESENTS.COM

Marijuana may improve memory

By Megan Chuchmach
The State Hornet (Cal State-Sacramento)

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — "Pay attention and vote" is the message of a new campaign from the Advertising Council, a nonprofit organization based out of New York and Washington, D.C., that aims to raise awareness about the upcoming midterm elections among young adults.

With only 26 days remaining before the elections on Nov. 7, the race is on to encourage citizens to register to vote.

Campaigns are in place, nationally and locally, to increase voter participation among 18- to 24-year-olds, the largest group of non-voters in America, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. Less than one in five citizens in this age bracket voted in the last midterm election in 2002, versus more than half of those aged 25 and older.

"Young adults have the opportunity to cast nearly 43 million ballots during this midterm election, yet many don't realize how easy it is to register, get information about the candidates and vote," said Polli Brunelli, director of the Federal Voting Assistance Program, in a written statement. The program is an agency dedicated to providing U.S. citizens with nonpartisan information to encourage participation in the democratic process.

"Young voter turnout has lagged for the past 35 years," Brunelli said. "But young adults have the ability to make a dramatic difference in 2006 by showing up at the polls and casting their ballots."

The "Pay Attention and Vote" campaign intends to get young people to the polls through a series of comedic public service advertisements, which illustrate the potential consequences of not voting.

"If you're not voting, then who are you electing?" the ads ask. The ads are followed by political advertising for mock candidates, such as "Spoiled Yappy Dog" and "Frozen Peas," among others.

"Young adults need to realize that their votes matter in every single election," said Peggy Conlon, president and CEO of the Advertising Council, in a written statement. "This campaign tells them to have an opinion and get out to vote."

Barbara O'Connor, a Sacramento State University communications studies professor, said many factors contribute to low young-voter turnout in the campus environment.

The common belief among students that they don't know enough about policies and issues is a huge factor, O'Connor said. Mobile college populations and a lack of voting booths on campus are also factors, she said. But, she added, with Sac State's close proximity to the state Capitol, there's no excuse to not be engaged.

"Most of the policies really do dramatically affect students," O'Connor said. "Quality and accessibility of education, student fees, light rail initiatives and global warming are just some of the issues."

The importance of voting this year cannot be underestimated, said Steven Maviglio, a political communications professor at Sac State.

"Every election is important," said Maviglio, who has been a political strategist in many political campaigns and is currently the deputy chief of staff for Assembly Speaker Fabian Nunez. "But this year is a watershed year in California politics. There's a lot at stake."

It's important for students to vote in the midterm elections, Maviglio added, because there are many issues that are directly related to them.

"State issues are sometimes more important than general issues, and we're looking at the control of the Legislature and governorship," Maviglio said. "For instance, fee increases at Sac State will be tied to the outcome of this election. One candidate says he will support fee increases while the other says he won't."

U.S. indicts American in al-Qaida

By Jeremiah Marquez
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The charge of treason was used for the first time in the United States' war on terrorism Wednesday, filed against a California man who appeared in propaganda videos for al-Qaida.

Adam Yehiye Gadahn, 28, could be sentenced to death if convicted of the charge, which has been used only a few dozen times in U.S. history and not at all since the World War II era. He also was indicted on a charge of providing material support to terrorists.

Gadahn "knowingly adhered to an enemy of the United States, namely, al-Qaida, and gave al-Qaida aid and comfort ... with intent to betray the United States," according to the indictment, handed up by an Orange County grand jury.

These undated photos provided by the FBI show Adam Gadahn, who is suspected of attending an al-Qaida training camp and working as a translator.

The suspected al-Qaida operative has been sought by the FBI since 2004. Based on the indictment, the FBI added Gadahn to its list of most wanted terrorists and offered a $1 million reward for information leading to his arrest or conviction.

Gadahn, who is believed to be in or near Pakistan, is suspected of having attended the terrorist group's training camps in Pakistan and serving as one of its translators. He has become known by his nom de guerre, Azzam al-Amriki, or "Azzam the American."

Election ads aim to interest young adults

By James Hoggan
Iowa State Daily (Iowa State U.)

AMES, Iowa — It seems sacrificing your memory now could lead to saving it in the future.

A new study, published in the journal Molecular Pharmaceutics by researchers at the Scripps Research Institute in California has found that the active ingredient in marijuana may prevent the progression of Alzheimer's disease.

The link between marijuana and Alzheimer's disease lies in the active ingredient, said Dr. Robert Bender, geriatrician at the Johnny Orr Memory Center and Healthy Living Institute, who specializes in diseases of old age with an interest in memory disorder.

"What various studies around the world are starting to show is that the basic ingredient in marijuana, the cannabis, may actually increase the level of a neurotransmitter called acetylcholine, which we need to form new memories," Bender said. "It also may block the formation of something called amyloid plaques."

Amyloid plaques are very common in the brains affected by Alzheimer's disease and may be a key to why patients develop the disease, Bender said. Plaques result when the brain cannot breakdown amyloid normally. The resulting build-up of plaques impair brain function and nerve transmission.

He also said researchers have found that the cannabis may decrease inflammation in the brain of patients who have Alzheimer's disease.

"Inflammation is something that results from whatever is going on in the brain to lead to Alzheimer's disease and there is some feeling that if we can decrease the inflammation, the process may be slowed down, that is the process of deterioration that patients experience," he said.

In Bender's opinion, since this research doesn't get at the cause of Alzheimer's, it will probably lead to a treatment, rather than a cure.

"Even in the most optimistic view, it probably will not be a cure. It may be something that leads us to develop another way of slowing the progress down," he said.

If you're wondering how the active ingredient in marijuana promotes memory, but you still can't remember where you put your keys, Bender has some insight.

"It's probably because of, as far as I can tell, the sedating effect of the drug, the way that people take it. When you're sedated, you're not alert and when you're not alert, you don't remember things as well," Bender said.

For those of you on your way to go smoke some pot in the name of neurological health, Bender would suggest you put down the bong.

"We certainly would never recommend that people smoke marijuana to prevent Alzheimer's disease," Bender said.

Smoking marijuana will not be the solution for treatment of Alzheimer's disease in Bender's opinion. What he expects is that there will be much work to refine and isolate chemicals in order to get the positive effects without the intoxicating side effects.

"The cannabinoid that is in marijuana will probably have to be refined and people would have to find ways to make sure that the side effects don't outweigh the potential benefits," he said. "I feel confident that we will not be prescribing for people to smoke marijuana, but it may be that they can isolate chemicals, perhaps after them a little bit that are in marijuana and eventually use them therapeutically."

This study will lead to more research in trying to harness the active ingredient in marijuana in a medication form rather than medical marijuana use, said Rep. James Kurtenbach, R-Nevada.

"What I would expect to happen is if the active ingredient that impacts marijuana can be isolated that can be used in a form such as a tablet or pill or chemical injection then the research would try to harness that active ingredient," he said.

Kurtenbach does not believe public support for the use of marijuana medically will not change either.

"Alzheimer's is an extremely terrible disease," he said. "Any medication that will less the impact or delay the impact of Alzheimer's will drive public support towards increased funding, however I don't believe that it would drive public support simply for licensing for medical marijuana."

Rep. Beth Wessel-Kroeschell, D-Ames, said there have been other medicinal uses of marijuana, and this may shift the way marijuana is used and viewed in society.

"I know people have seen the benefits of using marijuana for these purposes, have really struggled to get approval for that from the FDA," she said.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 27

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Eric Arbas
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sherd Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jamison Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Editorial Production Virgina Nickers
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Sean Duram
Editorial Editor Kristen Lacasse
News Editor Matt Bellbruno
Sports Editor Rob Greenfield
Circulation Manager Jeff Pentz
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Theresa Portela
Assistant Business Phil Sneiffer
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Alex Barber
Assistant News Anna Dolianitis
Assistant News Nicole Boongakuloid
Assistant Sports Dunns Picard
Assistant Sports Jon Pelland
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN publishes Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is independently owned and operated by an elected board of undergraduate students. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aleph Lin. In 1948 the College Signal, in 1961 the Index, Collegian, in 1974 and The Daily Collegian in 1958. Printing since 1967 by Hadley Printing. Publication office: Room 113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01003. Periodicals postage paid at Amherst, MA 01002. Subscription rate $50.00 per year.

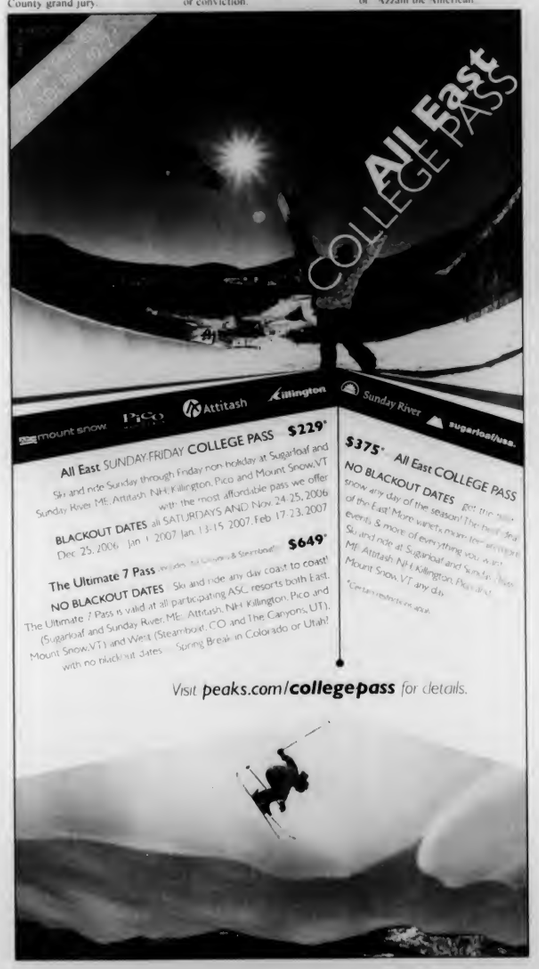
Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

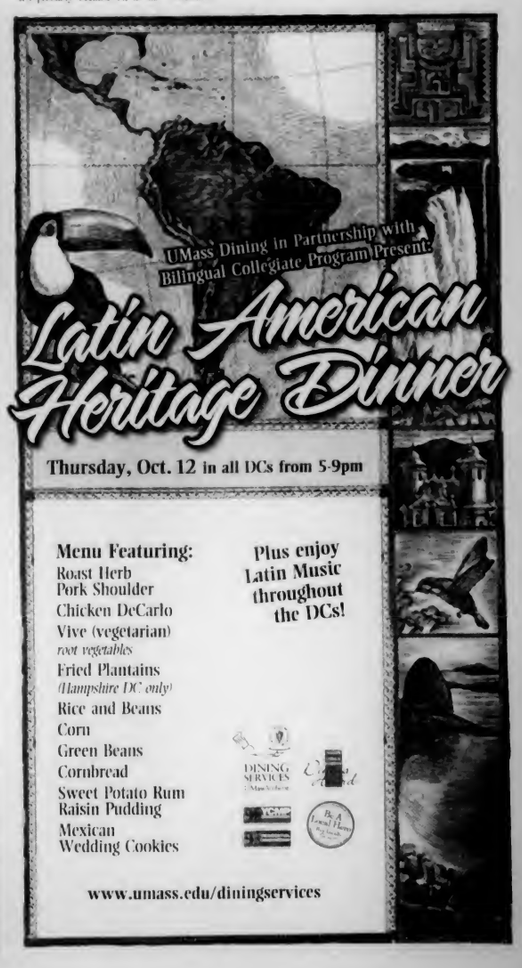
COPY EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Ginny Nieben

PRODUCTION STAFF
Sarah Belanger, Colin Nelson



All East
COLLEGE PASS
mount snow
Pico
Attitash
Killington
Sunday River
sugarloaf/usa
All East SUNDAY-FRIDAY COLLEGE PASS $229*
Ski and ride Sunday through Friday non-holiday at Sugarloaf and Sunday River, ME; Attitash, NH; Killington, Pico and Mount Snow, VT with the most affordable pass we offer.
BLACKOUT DATES all SATURDAYS AND Nov. 24-25, 2006 Dec. 25, 2006 Jan. 1, 2007 Jan. 13-15, 2007, Feb. 17-23, 2007
The Ultimate 7 Pass $649*
NO BLACKOUT DATES Ski and ride any day coast to coast! The Ultimate 7 Pass is valid at all participating ASC resorts both East (Sugarloaf and Sunday River, ME; Attitash, NH; Killington, Pico and Mount Snow, VT) and West (Steamboat, CO and The Canyons, UT), with no blackout dates. Spring Break in Colorado or Utah!
$375* All East COLLEGE PASS
NO BLACKOUT DATES Get the most snow any day of the season! The best ski of the East Mount value's non-terrain events & more of everything you love on Ski and ride at Sugarloaf and Sunday River, ME; Attitash, NH; Killington, Pico and Mount Snow, VT any day.
*Certain restrictions apply.
Visit peaks.com/collegepass for details.



Students scramble to secure personal info

CREDIT CARD from page 1

to target young, financially inexperienced adults.

"Student credit is easier to be qualified for. That's why they go to colleges," said a representative from the Bank of America.

Jarrett Waldner, a member of the UMass Fraternity Alpha Epsilon Pi conducted, a fundraiser for the fraternity a few years ago, working with City Bank. The participants traveled around campus asking students to fill out an information form with as the person's name, social security number and address to give to the specific bank. The bank would then send the student a card in the mail, leaving the student with the option to activate the card.

The brothers received $5 for every person they signed up, leaving them with approximately $1,400 in five hours.

"It was never binding, but it was good advertisement for their card," said Waldner.

The brothers of Alpha Epsilon Pi of were not contacted by City Bank. They got in touch with them through the Web site www.campusfundraising.

Waldner actually signed up for the card himself but he ended up throwing it away.

"I already had a credit card and I didn't need another one. I just filled out the form for the fundraising," said Waldner. "I think students are appealing to the companies because we are a whole new market of young kids, so they want to get them real fast."

Yanks pitcher, Lidle, dead in N.Y. crash

A small plane with New York Yankees pitcher Cory Lidle aboard crashed into a 50-story condominium tower yesterday in New York, killing two people.

NEW YORK from page 1

entire Yankees organization," Yankees owner George Steinbrenner said in a statement. He offered his condolences to Lidle's wife and son.

The crash rattled New Yorkers' nerves five years after the Sept. 11 attacks, abut the FBI and the Homeland Security quickly said there was no evidence it was anything but an accident. Nevertheless, within 10 minutes of the crash, fighter jets were sent aloft over several cities, including New York, Washington, Los Angeles and Seattle, Pentagon officials said.

The plane came through a hazy, cloudy sky and hit The Belaire – a red-brick tower overlooking the East River, about five miles from the World Trade Center — with a loud bang, touching off a raging fire that cast a pillar of black smoke over the city and sent flames shooting from four windows on two adjoining floors.

Firefighters put the blaze out in less than an hour.

Large crowds gathered in the street in the largely wealthy, New York neighborhood, with many people in tears and some trying to reach loved ones by cell phone.

It wasn't until I was halfway home that I started shaking. The whole memory of an airplane flying into a building and across the street from your home. It's a little too close to home," Sara Green, 40, who lives across the street from The Belair. "It crossed my mind that it was something bigger or the start of something bigger."

On Sunday, the day after the Yankees were eliminated from the playoffs, Lidle cleaned out his locker at Yankee Stadium and talked about his interest in flying.

He said he intended to fly back to California in several days and planned to make a few stops. Lidle discussed the plane crash of John F. Kennedy Jr. and how he had read the accident report on the National Transportation Safety Board Web site.

Lidle, acquired from the Philadelphia Phillies on July 30, told The New York Times last month that his four-seat Cirrus SR20 plane was safe.

"The whole plane has a parachute on it," Lidle said. "Ninety-nine percent of pilots that go up never have engine failure, and the 1 percent that do usually land it. But if you're up in the air and something goes wrong, you pull that parachute, and the whole plane goes down slowly."

Lidle pitched 1 1/3 innings in the fourth and final game of the Division Series against the Detroit Tigers and gave up three earned runs, but was not the losing pitcher. He had a 12-10 regular-season record with a 4.85 ERA.

He pitched with the Phillies before coming to the Yankees. Began his career in 1997 with the Mets. He also pitched for Tampa Bay, Oakland, Toronto and Cincinnati.

The guarantee language of Lidle's $6.3 million, two-year contract, signed with the Phillies in November 2004, contained a provision saying the team could get out of paying the remainder if he were injured or killed while piloting a plane. Because the regular season is over, Lidle already had received the full amount in the deal.

After the Yankees' defeat at the hands of the Tigers, Lidle called in to WFAN sports-talk radio two days before the crash to defend manager Joe Torre, and said: "I want to win as much as anybody. But what am I supposed to do? Go cry in my apartment for the next two weeks."

Lidle was an outcast among some teammates throughout his career because he became a replacement player in 1995, when major leaguers were on strike.

Among the baseball stars killed in plane crashes were Roberto Clemente, Pittsburgh Pirates outfielder, killed Dec. 31, 1972, at age 38 while en route to Nicaragua to aid earthquake victims; and Munson, the Yankee catcher killed Aug. 2, 1979, at age 32 in the crash of his plane in Canton, Ohio.

"It's just sadder than sad," said New York Mets pitching coach Rick Peterson, who was Lidle's pitching coach in Oakland. "It's horrific. It's almost unbelievable. It's a surreal moment."

Young May Cha, a 23-year-old Cornell University medical student, said she was walking back from the grocery store down 72nd Street when she saw something come across the sky and crash into the building. Cha said there appeared to be smoke coming from behind the aircraft, and "it looked like it was flying erratically for the short time that I saw it."

The plane left New Jersey's Teterboro Airport, just across the Hudson River from the city, at 2:30 p.m., about 15 minutes before the crash, according to officials at the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, which operates the airport. But they said they did not where the aircraft was headed.

Former NTSB director Jim Hall said in a telephone interview he doesn't understand how a plane could get so close to a New York City building after Sept. 11.

"We're under a high alert and you would assume that if something like this happened, people would have known about it before it occurred, not after," Hall said.

Mystery writer Carol Higgins Clark, daughter of author Mary Higgins Clark, lives on the 38th floor and was coming home in a cab when she saw the smoke. "Thank goodness I wasn't at my apartment writing at the time," she said. She described the building's residents as a mix of actors, doctors, lawyers and writers, and people with second homes.

N.Korea: The U.S. has declared war

BUSH from page 1

to rescue a diplomatic drive to contain North Korea and to rebut charges he had been distracted by the Iraq war from the developing threat in Asia.

Aftershocks of North Korea's claimed nuclear test continued reverberating around the world.

At the United Nations, the United States and Japan pushed China and South Korea to support a sanctions resolution that would deliver what Bush called "serious repercussions" for Pyongyang, including cargo inspections.

Japanese officials, fearing for their nation just across the Sea of Japan from North Korea, took action on their own to choke off an economic lifeline for the impoverished communist nation, barring lucrative North Korean imports, most entries into the country by North Koreans and the presence of North Korean ships in Japanese ports.

South Korea, which fought a war with the North in the 1950s and like Japan regards Pyongyang warily, checked its readiness for nuclear warfare. The defense minister said Seoul could expand its conventional arsenal and the Joint Chiefs of Staff recommended improved defenses.

North Korea, in its first formal statement since Monday's test announcement, warned that new sanctions would be considered an act of war that would bring unspecified "physical corresponding measures."

North Korea's No. 2 leader Kim Yong Nam said more nuclear tests are possible. And while the Demilitarized Zone dividing the two Koreas remained calm, North Korean troops tried to provoke guards on the southern side by spitting across the line, making throat-slashing hand gestures and flashing middle fingers, according to a U.S. military spokesman.

In Washington, Democrats contended that Bush has mishandled North Korea by pursuing a strategy that led to a 400 percent increase in the nation's nuclear capabilities under his watch.

"President Bush tries to talk tough, but he doesn't act smart," said Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev. "He insists on stubbornly following policies that don't work, and it is time for a change."

ISOM praised in Princeton Review

ISOM from page 1

teachers are good and it's a pretty nice building," says junior accounting major Zach Maurice.

The Isenberg School's number-four ranking in "Greatest Opportunity for Women" and its number-10 ranking in "Toughest to Get Into" marked the first time that the school had been ranked highly in both categories.

Princeton Review also listed UMass Amherst as the most violent school in the country, as well as the seventh biggest party school last year. The Review also placed UMass on the list for "Long Lines and Red Tape."

2006 Princeton Review of "The Best 282 Business Schools"

UMass Results

2nd "Best Overall Academic Experience"
4th "Greatest Opportunity for women"
10th "Toughest Business School to get into"

WHERE IMAGINATION MEETS INNOVATION

UMass Amherst Fine Arts Center Series 2006-2007 Season

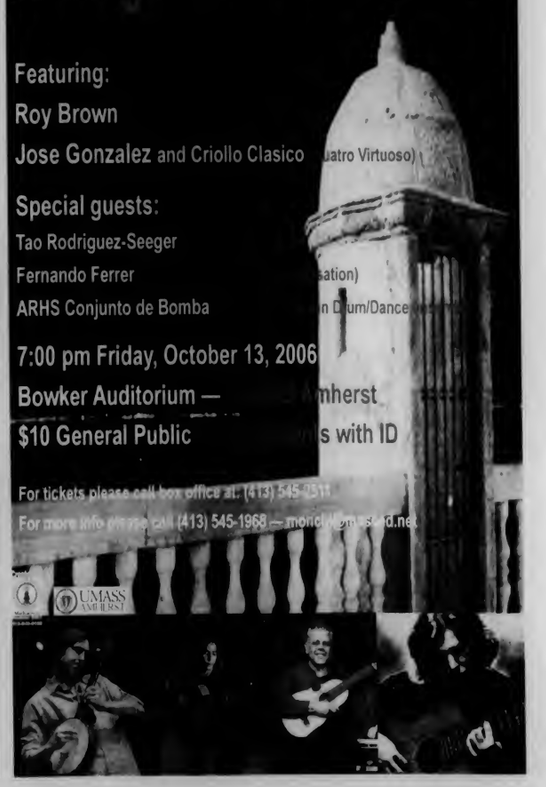
Sean Jones
Thursday, October 19 at 7:30 pm
Jones is steeped heavily in 21st century modern bop. He is joined by his quartet for this performance. Dont miss this hot, new trumpet sensation.
Bowker Auditorium
sponsored by
Yale Genion, Fathers & Sons, WFCR 88.5
Part of the Ninth Annual Billy Taylor Jazz Residency

Luma Theater
Friday October 27 at 8:00 pm
UMA creates a "technofreakus" that is born in the shadows and has audiences sitting on the edge of their seats with google eyes and slack jaws. $15 FOR YOU THE 17 AND UNDER!
Concert Hall
Sponsored by
Valley Advocate, Gazette
Post Performance talk back immediately following performance

Niyaz
Friday November 3 at 8:00 pm
An exciting new fusion of traditional Persian music and modern electronics. The group performs the Farsi and ancient Indian Urdu to a hypnotic, ecstatic, and eminently dancecable beat.
Bowker Auditorium
sponsored by
Valley Advocate, Apple
Presented in collaboration with the Asian Arts & Culture Program

TICKETS ARE ON SALE NOW!
TICKETS ARE ONLY $7, $10, $15 FOR FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS
UMass Amherst FINE ARTS CENTER
CALL 545-2511 OR 1-800-999-UMAS WWW.FINEARTSCENTER.COM

Sponsored by Center for Student Development - Latin American Cultural Center
Student Government Association - Office of ALANA Affairs - UMASS Amherst



Featuring:
Roy Brown
Jose Gonzalez and Criollo Clasico
Special guests:
Tao Rodriguez-Seeger
Fernando Ferrer
ARHS Conjunto de Bomba
7:00 pm Friday, October 13, 2006
Bowker Auditorium — $10 General Public
For tickets please call box office at: (413) 545-2511
For more info please call (413) 545-1968 — monic

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A reflection: Looking for rage

S.P. Sullivan

In case you were wondering why you haven't been able to understand anything the Pope has said in the past few weeks, it's not because he's speaking German.

No, about a month ago, Pope Benedict found himself with his foot wedged in his own mouth.

At a speech he made at Regensberg University, Pope Benedict XVI quoted a 14th-century Byzantine emperor, Manuel II Paleologos in saying the following:

"Show me just what Mohammed brought that was new, and there you will find things only evil and inhuman, such as his command to spread by the sword the faith he preached."

This was in a speech about faith and reason, and of course the Pope was quoting a 14th century demagogue. By Western standards, this constitutes more or less an absolution of guilt on part of the Pope. Not so by Middle Eastern standards.

"Context" proved to be a triviality to Islamic leaders. They took it and ran. The Pope is a hate monger, they told their people. It was the nature of what he said, and not the context in which he said it, that mattered.

We Westerners — Americans especially — take free speech and a separation of church and state for granted. Even an individual with the shortest of attention spans can read far enough into our constitution to get to the first amendment before they get bored.

We are, after all, a country founded by deists. It was a no-brainer for the Founding Fathers to keep God out of government; as far as they were concerned, He didn't want to be there anyway.

Not so with Islam.

The separation of Church and State we take for granted makes it easy for Westerners to take what the Pope said at face value. We saw it for what it was: verbal diarrhea — a stupid mistake, no worse than when Al Gore claimed he invented the Internet or when Howard Dean made that horrible guttural sound.

Is the Pope against Islam, or is this simply a statement blown out of proportion to stir up trouble?

The condemnations issued by various religious and state leaders in the Middle East would have been valid, had they been directed at the right person.

Certain Islamic leaders saw it differently; they saw an opportunity. They warned Benedict's head on a stick — literally. There were protests in many major Arab cities. Effigies of the Pope were burned and beaten with sticks. Hadn't these people heard of context? No, they were listening to the condemnations of their leaders.

Word to the wise for the average Muslim: stop telling the West that Islam is a religion of peace; we believe you. Try telling your religious leaders and state officials — they seem to have missed the memo.

I honestly don't believe that the average Muslim is as militant and backward as the Mid-eastern firebrands who took advantage of a quote the Pope used. Likewise, I don't believe that the average American is as militant and backward as George Bush. The difference is that I — along with many, many other Americans — am willing to say George Bush is an idiot, and do so often. The question I ask of the peaceful, reasonable Muslims the world over is this:

Where is the outrage over this outrage?

The condemnations issued by various religious and state leaders in the Middle East would have been valid, had they been directed at the right person. Why is no one holding Manuel II Paleologos responsible?

It was obvious in the context of his speech that Pope Benedict XVI was quoting the Byzantine emperor to illustrate what not to say. He was speaking out against hate speech — not Islam. And although it was perhaps not the most tactful way to go about things, it was not the sort of oratory faux pas that constitutes beheading.

"Violence is incompatible with the nature of God and the nature of the soul," said the Pope a little bit later in the speech. By then, however, Pakistan's National Assembly wasn't listening; they were busy writing up a condemnation. So were The Organization of the Islamic Conference, the Muslim Brotherhood, Palestinian Prime Minister Ismail Haniya and a slew of others.

Taking things out of context and using them for political clout among one's constituency is not a practice exclusive to Islamic leaders. In fact, these days it seems the West probably invented it. But regardless of the speaker's background, it is a dirty trick. Worse yet, it's easy.

"Violence is — the nature of God."

That's an aforementioned quote by Pope Benedict, taken out of context. An ellipsis here, a missing attribution there and you have yourself a clash of civilizations. It's miscommunication that causes conflict, and the exploitation of it that causes real strife.

The culture war between Mideast and West rages on, but not because of any stark differences between the two. Rather, it rages on because a demagogue is a demagogue and a sucker is born every minute. Tensions between us aren't going to ease until everyone — Muslims and Westerners alike — stops listening to what our heads of state and religious figures tell us about each other. These people aren't sociologists or anthropologists, they're liars and idiots. I quote Bob Dylan:

"Don't follow leaders, watch yer parkin meters."

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian columnist.

Faults of our system

Marxist communist implementation may have failed, but his critique of capitalism still remains true today.

Chris Reardon

Students are among the many victims of an American economy, an entity that pays little attention to individual citizens and benefits a tiny upper-class. Every time tuition is increased, or a new edition of a textbook is published, capitalism is at work taking advantage of every available dollar on the market.

Capitalism is an economic system that is supposed to run independently of the government, most production and distribution is privately owned and operated, leaving the state of the economy in the hands of the public. As more goods are bought and sold, more money is available, and standard of living increases along with the gross domestic product. This is how capitalism is supposed to work.

True capitalism does indeed have its benefits when implemented properly. The whole idea is that an individual in a capitalistic society has unlimited economic potential based on work ethic and business savvy.

Over the last century, the possibility of achieving this "American dream" has dwindled to near hopelessness. Economic potential is a fallacy. The United States is now too large a country for capitalism to work. The reason for this is as population grew, the percentage of wealthy elite shrank while the middle and lower classes expanded. The biggest companies in the nation applied the cut-throat tactics of capitalism and managed to nearly demolish small business.

Capitalism itself is not an evil economy, but when large sums of money are in the hands of the wrong people they can use the principles of capitalism to perform various evils. Economic exploitation is the most common of these vices. Karl Marx, thought of capitalism as an economy based on exploitation, insisting that while most of the world's money is in the hands of a wealthy elite, the underprivileged, with few resources to sell off, must market services and labor to the upper-class in order to survive.

College students, for instance, are supposed to be the future of the economy... Yet we are also one of the most preyed upon groups of consumers on the market today.

With wealth comes power, and in the interest of maintaining or increasing capital assets which can be used to produce more wealth, the upper-class work to enforce this unequal distribution of wealth. They set wages which have a minimal impact on capital but a huge impact on standard of living. Prices rise because of inflation, but unless wages increase alongside prices, commodities suddenly become unavailable to the underprivileged.

With the principles of capitalism being applied this way, economic potential is no longer determined by work ethic and business savvy, but purely by demographic. It is nearly impossible for members of the lower and lower-middle classes to move up in society. It is also becoming increasingly difficult to maintain an adequate standard of living at the current wage settings, forcing underprivileged people to look to other means of survival like government help (which, in turn, has a negative impact on the middle class) and illegal business like drugs and prostitution (which decreases standard of living for everyone and increases prison population).

In his article "Socialism vs. Capitalism: Which is the Moral System," Ashland University Assistant Professor of Political Science C. Bradley Thompson said, "Capitalism is the only just system because the sole criterion that determines the value of thing exchange is the free, voluntary, universal judgment of the consumer. Coercion and fraud are anathema to the free-market system." Well, it's no secret that coercion and fraud are commonplace in today's market. Therefore, while Thompson is a proponent of capitalism over socialism, his argument for it actually proves that it doesn't work.

A capitalistic system depends on economic growth, which makes it easy for its practitioners to fall to greed. They forget that they're actually dealing with humans, thinking only of dollars and cents. College students, for instance, are supposed to be the future of the economy. We're supposed to leave school, get high-paying jobs, and work to increase the amount of money being exchanged on the market. Yet we are also one of the most preyed upon groups of consumers on the market today.

Textbook publishers care little for the number of students who must take out loans just to afford a semester's worth of new editions (because of course, last year's edition is unacceptable regardless of the fact that it contains all of the same information). Credit card companies pounce on students who have little experience with credit to exploit their ignorance, raking in hundreds of dollars in interest. The average U.S. college student leaves school with more than $2,000 in credit card debt. Add that to student loans for tuition and an extremely competitive job market. All in all, the "future of the economy" is looking more like a generation of young adults struggling to survive.

Chris Reardon is a Collegian columnist.

Make new dirt, but keep the old

Adam McGillen

As I stumbled around campus over the last few weeks, taking the long route to all my classes because all the short routes have become gaping holes in the ground, I suddenly had an epiphany. Maybe it was the intoxicating smell of fresh tar in the morning, or the sound of machinery churning up the ground. Whatever the reason, it got me wondering. What's going to happen to all the Old Dirt, the very foundation the University of Massachusetts was constructed on?

Are we really just going to toss all the Old Dirt aside and just replace it with newer, ritzier dirt? Forgetting all that the older and wiser dirt has done for us? At a school that is focused on recycling, I propose we do just that. We can put Old Dirt to use, make it work for the students in order to make our lives easier.

With the constant construction around campus, there has to be an almost infinite supply of now used dirt. The first thing we should do with all that dirt is obvious: build a giant network of overpasses, raised walkways that eliminate the problem of infuriating and ever-changing detours. No longer will we have to worry about having our legs shattered when a driver is in too much of a rush to pause at a crosswalk. The commute to class will not be marked by constant fences, blocking every reasonable path and seeming to force everyone into a bottleneck that leads to the Campus Center, and ultimately the overpriced University Store (I will train myself to knit and make you a UMass hooded sweatshirt for less than $80).

Like true intellects, we will literally rise above the construction and pass right over it. In order to make the trip across campus even faster, the overpasses should be equipped with motorized walkways, similar to those used in airports. Not only will this eliminate a great deal of time wasted on walking, it will also eliminate the need for the current mode of public transportation, gas-guzzling buses.

This will not only serve to recycle all the Old Dirt, but it will make the campus a much cleaner and happier place. Students will be more efficient and productive because they will not have to waste so much energy dodging heavy machinery on the way to class.

That is not all that can be done. One thing that peeves me about going here is the inability to get anything to eat after 12 p.m. at night. Honestly, with the amount of money I put into the unlimited meal plan I should not feel so limited about when I can and can't eat. What this campus needs is a centralized DC that is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Imagine the possibilities: you could pull an all-nighter of studying, or even throw a LAN party and never have to worry about the time of day when you suddenly feel the urge to pound burgers and french-fries. When I've spent a long night of intense reading, mixed with some Madden and maybe thinking about writing a column, I always find myself hungry at about midnight or 1 a.m.

With the constant construction around campus, there has to be an almost infinite supply of used dirt. The first thing we should do with all that dirt is obvious: build a giant network of overpasses.

A 24-hour DC would be a great service to the students of UMass, and it would also create jobs on campus, a necessity for students like me who are struggling to foot the bill of going here and only being able to eat between 7 in the morning and 12 at night.

Some of the faculty and staff may ask how we would ever fund these projects. Well, I argue that what this campus really needs is a good casino. Rhode Island is doing it, so why not UMass? I know the upper-management is wishing they had thought of this. A casino on campus would be a major attraction to students across the nation, and it would also bring in tremendous revenue for the school, money that could be put towards the excavation of more Old Dirt and maybe some importation of flashy New Dirt. There really is no valid argument for not having a casino, so I say let's do it and we can all live out our dreams of being Scarface, and maybe a few of us can win our tuition and fees back.

All I'm really trying to say is that this campus is caught up with the New Dirt phenomenon, and it's getting out of control. I have now seen two trucks around campus, loaded with fresh dirt, hooked up to a hose from which the dirt is simply being spewed onto the small grassy hills that surround the Campus Center. C'mon, you have got to be kidding me, it seems like they just want to cover the entire campus in New Dirt.

So, let's ease up on this drive to create a Big Dig on campus and let's start thinking of new ways to make the Old Dirt better. We shouldn't reject Old Dirt, but rather cherish it and let it continue to be the cornerstone of UMass. Because no matter how old the dirt gets, it's still strong enough to hold us up to a higher standard of living.

Adam McGillen is a Collegian columnist.

"What are they doing?"
They're roping off an area that allows them to build the scaffold that allows them to repair the library.

Gregory Klecka '07

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

CHECK OUT THE NEW WEBSITE WHILE YOU'RE AT IT!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 2006 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Stand-up comedian Dave Attell (above) has been a professional comedian for the past 18 years and has written for shows such as 'The Daily Show' and 'Saturday Night Live.'

Attell to perform in Chicopee

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Comedian Dave Attell, best known for the Comedy Central show "Insomniac" in which he traveled from city to city to seek out late night fun, makes a stop at The Comedy Connection Hukelau in Chicopee, Mass tomorrow night for two shows starting at 7:30 p.m.

In a phone conversation Wednesday, Attell spoke about his career, drinking, the future of "Insomniac" and his Myspace page

RYAN MCASKILL: What drove you to do stand-up?

DAVE ATTELL: When you're a fan of comedy you want to try it. I was a shy kid growing-up and wasn't a performer. I just tried it out at open-mic nights to see if it would stick

RYAN MCASKILL: Your material has been called blue collar and very adult. How does it relate to college students?

DAVE ATTELL: I drink a lot and college people drink so that helps. I mean, college people put Comedy Central on the map because of shows like South Park and The Daily Show. it's just a matter of getting them out to the comedy clubs. In this era of YouTube where you can sit at home with no pants on and watch a guy jump into a bucket of AIDS, it's about getting people out to the clubs. Not so much for me but for the guys that are just starting out

RYAN MCASKILL: Speaking of Comedy Central, are we going to see any more "Insomniac with Dave Attell"?

DAVE ATTELL: No, that's done.

RYAN MCASKILL: Was it your decision to stop doing the show or the networks?

DAVE ATTELL: Mine. I wanted to keep doing longer specials but they wanted a TV series.

RYAN MCASKILL: Drinking, sex and smoking are a huge part of your material. Do you have any advice for college student on those topics?

DAVE ATTELL: Do them in order. Drink, have sex then smoke. Other than that I don't have any advice. I'm not a Dr. Phil type. I learned everything the hard way. Wear a condom and if it feels good, it's broken

RYAN MCASKILL: Has a joke ever gotten you into hot water?

DAVE ATTELL: Yea. Comics in general are going to do stuff that's inappropriate and politically incorrect. That's comedy

RYAN MCASKILL: I very comic seems to have that story of an awful set or a bad night. What's yours?

DAVE ATTELL: I have a lot of bad nights. There is a video on my Web site of a guy throwing a bottle at me. Some of them are my fault I didn't read the room right or shouldn't have pushed that drunk as hard. The verbal conflict is fine It's when they stand up and there is the moment of "Oh, this could get violent" when things go bad. No one in the audience is rising to help the comic either. They want to see what happens. It's like "Lost," who's in control?

RYAN MCASKILL: I was poking around your Web site and saw that you have a Myspace page. Do you actually look at it and run it?

DAVE ATTELL: I do. I look at and try to respond to all the messages. Sometimes you sit down and realize you just wasted a day. It's good to spread the word and get your name out there but I think it's time we start using Myspace again for what it was originally intended — hooking up

RYAN MCASKILL: You write a column for Stuff magazine now called "Liquid Wisdom"?

DAVE ATTELL: Not anymore. I did that for eight months and it was cool. I'm not a writer so this was like writing a college term paper again. Just kept putting it off and putting until the editor would call the day before the deadline and say, "Hey, where's your column?" "Oh, I just have to e-mail it over," then I'd put coffee on and write what ever was on my mind.

See ATTELL on page 7

New documentary shows bias

BY ALEX BUTLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ever since the events of Sept. 11, 2001 took place, the religion of Islam has been under the microscope. Politicians turned to religious scholars in an attempt to figure things out. The Middle East and its culture were completely foreign to many Americans. Now we have a war in Iraq, and still too few know about their society. But in order for us to begin to understand Afghanistan, Iraq, and this fuming Middle East, we need to understand Islam.

Instead of reading countless books and journals about this ancient religion, Gregory M. Davis and Bryan Daly want Americans to turn to their new DVD documentary, "Islam: What the West Needs to Know." In 98 minutes, the two producers/directors try to cram in an explanation of the beliefs of Muslims everywhere, right from the source, the Koran.

Now, obviously, the selected pieces of the religious text are translated. And, as we all know, with translations come opinions and biases. The Koran is no exception to the rule — and it is very clearly visible in the workings of the documentary.

The documentary starts off with the events of Sept. 11, George Bush, Tony Blair, and various other leaders are seen commenting on Islam as a peaceful religion and reassuring citizens everywhere that it was not going to be under attack. It would not be a target of our war on terrorism. Soon, the message of the documentary emerges. Islam is not a peaceful religion at all, and is much more violent at its core.

The movie relies not only on the translations of the Koran, but also dips into several interviews from scholars. Robert Spencer, director of the Jihad Watch online, historian Serge Trifkovic, Jewish author Bat Ye'or, and former PLO terrorist and author of "Why I left Jihad" Walid Shoebat. Shoebat reveals his one-on-one account of being recruited to set off a bomb in a public market in Israel.

When looking at a documentary, the first aspect to inspect is reliability. Considering the movie looks at one translation of the Koran and guides every scientist down the same road, it's hard to take seriously. It follows a strict interpretation of the Koran, one that paints it as a world-dominating idea. The audience is told the Prophet Mohammad was a blood-thirsty murderer of roughly 800 infidels. Also, another translation reveals that Muslims are encouraged to hunt infidels, ambushing them whenever possible on the months not dedicated to rest and prayer.

All well and good — except that the information is not challenged at all throughout the entire documentary. The scholars seem to all agree ever-so-nicely that Islam is murderous at the core, and only when everyone is Islamic will it be peaceful. If the other side was presented at all, it would've made it credible. It doesn't.

So, if you want to pick up a slow-moving, one-sided view on how violent Islam is, pick up Davis and Daly's new documentary.

The DVD documentary will be released nationwide Oct. 17.

Documentary fails to get information from both sides of topic.

Ying Mountain Spring Band cure long weekend blues

BY LAUREN MODISETTE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Pearl Street night club in Northampton was packed with Yonder Mountain String Band followers from all over the country Saturday, Oct. 7, despite a small turn out by University of Massachusetts students.

The audience was dancing and stomping to the familiar songs that they all know the entire time. The temperature increased so dramatically there wasn't a dry shirt left in the house.

Several persons were politely asked to refrain from continuing the inhalation of marijuana cigarettes that were being sparked across the dance floor. Security was gracious enough not to kick out any of the perpetrators but let them slide with a "Please don't do it again or you're out."

Four students from Green Mountain College in Vermont noted that this was the best show they have seen as they tour with the renowned bluegrass band.

One Connecticut resident, Keith Antaya, noted that he thought the band was alright, but wasn't too impressed with the hippy crowd it attracted.

Yonder played an amazing lineup of songs such as "At the End of the Day," "No Expectations," and "By the Dawn's Early Light." They were the first band in a while to play at Pearl Street that didn't have an opener or two, and they completely filled the intimate venue.

After the set break, the house filled up again and the band started playing "Too Late Now." After a couple of songs, bassist Ken Kauffman told a brief tale about a time when he got pulled over by the infamous Massachusetts State Police and continued to play a song composed after the incident called "Mother's Only Son," followed by "Deaf Trip."

It was impossible to make it to front and center of the venue to get a good look at the band. But it's just as well, since the venue is small enough so everyone can see them from where they stand. As their show ended, the band said, "We're gonna rage the streets of Northampton."

Even after the band left the stage, the crowd didn't stop yelling and screaming. All of the energy was focused on begging them back out on stage, and it didn't take very long for Yonder Mountain to take the hint and reemerge for their encore performance.

They gave the audience one last taste of their Colorado finger-picking with "Troubled Mind," which drove the crowd wild. Yonder didn't take the audience's energy and enthusiasm lightly. When they announced they would play one more number, the crowd erupted and released a tremendous roar that felt loud enough to make the building shake.

It was a great show and as the tired, sweaty crowd filed out, many who have been following them compared this concert to the band's many others and concluded that this was the best show they had performed on the East Coast. If you missed Yonder Mountain String Band, you haven't completely missed your chance to see them. They will play Oct. 13, in Providence, R.I., Oct. 14 in Wallingford, Conn., and Oct. 15 in Boston for their last show on the East Coast before heading back out west. Don't miss them.

Fans from all over New England gathered this past weekend in Northampton to attend the Ying Mountain Spring Band concert.

Schwarzenegger has star appeal

DONNA FREMKIN
ASSOCIATE EDITOR

Want to know who's ahead in the California governor's race? Follow the celebrities. Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger's double-digit edge in the polls makes him the favorite in November, but he's already clobbered Democratic rival Phil Angelides in another very public measure: Star wattage.

Consider a recent election-season week: One day, the actor-governor signed a bill with George Clooney on hand. The next, he was hanging out with the Dalai Lama. A day later, he signed more legislation with British Prime Minister Tony Blair looped in on video.

On Wednesday, the governor returns to NBC's "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno," the same platform where he launched his campaign for governor in 2003.

"I think Angelides has a better chance of trying to arm-wrestle Arnold than he does trying to match him for celebrity attention," said Jonathan Wilcox, who teaches a class on celebrities and society at the University of Southern California.

When it comes to attracting glitz and glitter, the former champion musician has a built-in edge, even in Democratic-tilting Hollywood. His education has made lavish use of his show-biz credentials as he pursues a second term, routinely rolling out entertainment, political and business endorsers to attract publicity and remind voters that he's nothing like that other guy on the Nov. 7 ballot.

His red carpet supporters include Hollywood heavyweights Steven Spielberg and Jeffrey Katzenberg. His old pal Danny DeVito pops up. He gave a speech last month at a women's conference organized by his celebrity wife, Maria Shriver, where the guest list ranged from Martha Stewart to the spiritual leader of Tibetan Buddhists.

Backers also include "The Terminator" director James Cameron, Interscope Records chief Jimmy Iovine and producer Jerry Bruckheimer.

Angelides, the state treasurer and a former developer, has shared stages with prominent Democratic politicians, including former President Bill Clinton. And he was joined at recent events by actors Ed Begley Jr. and Daniel Stern.

Angelides supporters also include Barbra Streisand, basketball legend Earvin "Magic" Johnson, actor Warren Beatty and TV producer Norman Lear.

"Phil Angelides has considerable support in Hollywood and the entertainment community," said spokeswoman Amanda Crumles. "Hollywood support continues to grow."

Hollywood and politics have long been entwined, particularly in California, where Schwarzenegger is not the first former movie star to run the state. The deep pockets in the entertainment industry are a rich source of political dollars for both parties, and the governor's race is no exception.

But the fact that A-list celebrities are not flocking to Angelides reinforces what polls are showing that the challenger has yet to stir widespread excitement among Democrats.

Finding Oscar-winner Clooney, a self-proclaimed liberal, at the governor's shoulder is another reminder of Schwarzenegger's ability to align himself with issues that cross party lines.

Andy Spahn, a spokesman for Spielberg and Katzenberg, said both men have years-old relationships with Schwarzenegger. And the governor sought their endorsements, although they did not support him in the 2003 recall election.

There is a "comfort level with the less-partisan approach he's taking to the office," Spahn said, citing the governor's recent policies on the environment and education.

As an incumbent in the nation's largest state, Schwarzenegger already has a platform to attract big names. But his handlers have been careful to enlist celebrities for consequential events, such as signing legislation to withdraw state investments from war-torn Sudan, which Clooney attended.

His wife, a member of the Kennedy clan, has been active in lining up Democratic support, too. She called Spielberg and introduced the governor to the Dalai

Schwarzenegger not only has the support of Hollywood, but he also has a wide lead with potential voters for upcoming November election.

Relationships: love like you've never been hurt

Jasmine Monteiro

The first love tends to happen at a fairly young age. Almost everybody in college will claim to have been in love at some point. However, love has often been misunderstood, and sometimes even confused with its immediate cousins, lust and infatuation. So how do you know the difference?

As cliche as it may sound, you trust your heart and don't ignore your instincts. Because love isn't something that we are all blessed with at birth. It is a gift we receive from the people who love us. Eventually, we learn from them how to give it in return. That is when we decide to share it with the people we feel strongly for. This is often difficult for people because the feeling of loving and losing is one that can't be ignored. As difficult as it may be, the result will be the most rewarding.

Love isn't the butterflies you get in your stomach when you hear their voice. Or the goose bumps that accumulate during a kiss. It's more than that. It's accepting strengths as well as weaknesses. It's admiring their failures as well as their triumphs. It's realizing that even their imperfections can be perfectly conjoined into everything you need. It starts with learning how to compromise and knowing how to become selfless in order to strengthen your relationship. After all, you can only expect to get out of it, what you put into it. No one wants to feel as if their efforts have been taken advantage of or pushed to the side. Undoubtedly, along with that you have to take the good with the bad, and the bad with the ugly.

Of course, the ugly is when you fall in love and you can't make it work. However, if things don't work out, you should never stop loving that person. Believe it or not, it's true that love never really dies. Even if you are no longer in love with someone, you can still have love for them.

There is a difference that many people fail to see. And as hard as it may be, we shouldn't be afraid to let go of somebody who we are no longer in love with. But we're terrified. We convince ourselves that no one will love us the way they did. Not because we think we aren't worth it, but when we love someone we put everything we have into this person. So when the relationship diffuses, we feel weakened, as if we have nothing left to give. We do, though; we have plenty. Once you are strong enough to realize that, everything will begin to make sense again. As long as you understand that love is never lost, we keep it buried in a safe haven where it can continue to help us grow and mature.

There will always be something to learn if you open your mind to it, no matter what the situation may be. So when you're ready to try and love again, don't be afraid to let somebody in. You'd be surprised how much more you can learn, and how much you can change. When we fall in love, we don't love everyone the same, but we can love just as strongly. We can take everything we've learned about relationships, as well as about ourselves, and structure it into a connection we won't ever forget.

A broken heart is never easy to mend, but it's not impossible. True love is one in a million and not as easy to find. Don't hesitate to love someone, and don't fear losing them. When you find the right one you'll realize why you spent all that time with the wrong ones.

Attell to begin work on movies

Attell credits teenagers and college students with the rise of the network Comedy Central. He thinks that YouTube will take control of the TV market with its own original material.

ATTELL from page 6

RYAN MCASKILL: You were a writer on Saturday Night Live back in the early '90s. You were relatively green still as a comic back then. What was that like?

DAVE ATTELL: I only did it for one year [1993-1994] and I'm glad I did. It showed me a lot about the TV world, like if you get something on the air, for the next week, everyone wants to talk to you, buy you drinks, have sex. If you have nothing on, no one even notices you.

RYAN MCASKILL: Who makes you laugh?

DAVE ATTELL: I like a lot of under-the-radar guys. Also, friends of mine like Ron White and Greg Giraldo. The funniest guy I know is Doug Stanhope. His act is what stand-up should be. Saying really inappropriate things and bringing the room to a very uncomfortable level.

RYAN MCASKILL: Some of them you have linked to your Web site, and I noticed that the links on it are all comedy except for one. What is The Wounded Warrior Project"

DAVE ATTELL: It's a group that arose from veterans of past wars like Vietnam and Korea and they set it up to help soldiers in the military today that come back and have lost a limb or something. Our government helps treat them and helps with rehab, but after that they are basically on their own. Some of these guys don't have support systems. I'm not an expert on the project but I know they provide basic things like clothes. I've done USO shows in Afghanistan, Kuwait and Germany, and any time in Washington I visit the Walter Reed Army Medical Center. I'm not Britney Spears walking in there, but I do what I can. The Wounded Warrior Project is a great thing and everyone should donate to them.

RYAN MCASKILL: Where do you see yourself in five or 10 years?

DAVE ATTELL: Probably in rehab — no. I'd love to keep doing specials. I have some movie projects coming up and some TV stuff even though I'm not an actor. Most people don't realize that "Insomniac" was a reality show. If it was raining or no one was on the street we had to make things happen. Whatever I'm doing, I just what to be in control.

RYAN MCASKILL: Anything you want to add to get people out to see you on Friday?

DAVE ATTELL: Come out and have a great time and don't drink and drive.

Chase returns to TV

Art will imitate celebrity life on NBC's "Law & Order."

In an episode that begins filming this week, Chevy Chase guest stars as a TV celebrity who spews religious epithets after being pulled over by police for drunken driving, the network said Tuesday.

The episode, titled "In Vino Veritas," is scheduled to air Nov. 3.

Although there are similarities between the episode and Mel Gibson's recent legal troubles, a spokesman for NBC noted that the long-running "Law & Order" drama series "is completely fiction."

Chase, 62, was a member of the original cast of NBC's "Saturday Night Live." His screen credits include roles in "Caddyshack" and "Fletch."

Gibson pleaded no contest Aug. 17 to a charge of drunken driving in Malibu. He volunteered to do public-service announcements on the hazards of drinking and driving, and to immediately enter rehabilitation.

During the arrest early in the morning of July 28, the 50-year-old actor-director made anti-Semitic remarks to the arresting deputy. He later apologized.

Gibson's latest film "Apocalypto" is slated for release in December.

Associated Press

WRITE FOR ARTS!

COME DOWN TO THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT AND GET MORE INFO NOW!

Star with power

LOS ANGELES — Argentine actress Mia Maestro, who played a lethal spy on TV's "Alias," is lending her fame to fight a real killer. She is trying to bring awareness about Chagas disease, which infects about 12 million people in Central and South America.

Chagas disease can cause high fever, swelling, enlargement of the spleen, liver and lymph nodes, and inflammation of the heart. Most people infected do not get sick, but the disease can be fatal.

It is little known in the United States, where about 100,000 residents have been infected. Also called American trypanosomiasis, Chagas disease is an infection caused by the parasite Trypanosoma cruzi, according to the Centers for Disease Control Web site. Blood-sucking Triatomine bugs that live in cracks and holes of substandard housing from the southern United States to southern Argentina spread the disease. Worldwide, it is estimated that 16 to 18 million people are infected with Chagas disease, of those infected, 50,000 will die each year. It is also one of the illnesses to which Charles Darwin's mysterious lifelong ailments have often been attributed.

"Chagas is a disease that I grew up hearing about because my mom is from the north of Argentina," Maestro told The Associated Press on Saturday. "I'm very familiar with it, but I had no idea few people know about it. So whatever I can do to raise awareness, I'll do it."

Maestro, 28, has appeared in "The Motorcycle Diaries," "Frida" and "The Poseidon Adventure."

She attended Saturday's screening of the documentary "Chagas: A Hidden Affliction," which opened the Los Angeles Latino International Film Festival.

"I call Chagas the AIDS of the poor," said Ricardo Preve, the film's director. "It's a silent killer and we're not doing anything about it because of a lack of education."

Associated Press

Donna Buffalo comes to Noho

BY LAUREN MODISETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This Saturday, Donna the Buffalo is coming to Northampton for a performance at Pearl Street at 8:30 p.m. This concert is the perfect opportunity to break away from exams, the complexity of PVTA bus routes and the illness that appears to be spreading throughout campus.

Donna has been at it for 17 years now, has sold over 100,000 records and is racking up about 100 shows a year these days. They began in 1987 when Miller, Puryear, and Nevins would sit around and improvise on their guitars, banjos, and fiddles while Nevins came up with some original tunes.

They describe themselves as an eclectic upstate New York band. To them, the fame and money is the last thing on their mind, and they simply aren't interested in being overplayed on the pop culture radio stations that seem to hypnotize the modern music listeners.

"We just do what we do. And it's a very natural thing. It's a thing we find joy in, and it's a lifestyle that we've pursued forever," says guitarist/vocalist (and songwriter) Jeb Puryear. "We don't manipulate any of our circumstances for the market."

Songwriter Tara Nevins also provides skills on the fiddle, accordion, scrub board, guitar and vocals.

"[Our music is] simple, straight-forward, melody-oriented and easy to take in," said Nevins.

Donna Buffalo has sold more then a hundred thousand records and toured the United States several times since their inception.

The band consists of five members, each with their own expertise in a variety of instruments. Along with Puryear and Nevins, there is Tom Gilbert on drums, Kathy Ziegler on keys, and Bill Reynolds on bass. Together, they have constructed a band whose goal is simply to fill the desire of the audience and provide them with music it will remember.

"It's hard to say if we make such and such amount of money then we'll be successful," Nevins says. "I think you have different successes along the way. You feel you've done something meaningful and that's a success right there — you've played a great show or you've made a record that you really like, the band is continuating great and is in a beautiful place together."

Their latest album, "Life's a Ride" was released in April 2005, and the band suggests that this album has marked many firsts for the group. They produced the record themselves and in their own personal home studio.

Founding member of the band Jim Miller contributed to the making of this record, but removed himself from the band shortly after it was finished. Since then, Donna has found themselves in an awkward state with their new line-up.

Donna the Buffalo currently has 11 records out on the market and is planning to keep it going. Tickets for Saturday's show are $16 in advance and $19 at the door.

Biblao home to more then wine

Already boasting the Guggenheim in Bilbao, Spain's Basque region has unveiled its second work by world-renowned architect Frank Gehry, a fanciful display of glimmering and cascading titanium ribbons, housing a hotel at the center of one of the country's oldest wineries.

"It's a marvelous creature, with hair flying everywhere, which launches itself over the vineyards," the daily El Pais newspaper cited Gehry, 82, as saying on Monday to describe the complex that cost $88 million and eight years to build.

The building at Marques de Riscal, the oldest winery in the town of Elciego within the heart of the northern Rioja wine region, was inaugurated by King Juan Carlos.

Since 1997, the Basque port of Bilbao has been home to the Guggenheim Museum, designed by Gehry and considered one of the world's great modern buildings and among Spain's most popular tourist attractions.

At first, the American architect did not want to tackle the small winery project because it would have required many flights from his base in Los Angeles. Then the winery owners took Gehry to the oldest cellar, called "the cathedral," where bottles dating from 1862 are stored. After a 1929 vintage Gehry's birth year he warmed to the project.

At Marques de Riscal, Gehry used a canopy of pink, gold and silver titanium ribbons to shade a sandstone hotel building, a radical departure from the winery's existing architecture, which includes two structures dating from the 19th century.

Besides a hotel, the complex includes a wine therapy spa, an exhibition area, wine tasting rooms and a restaurant.

Associated Press

AMHERST HAIRSTYLISTS
Caren's Place
Mon-Fri 10-6
Sat 10-4
253-1200
40 Main St
Downtown Amherst

New in Town?
Come in and get the attention you want!

- Students Always $22 shampoo & cut
- Hair Services for both men & women
- We specialize in Multi-Color Highlights using three to four complementing and blending colors
- Free Haircolor consultation
- Facial and Body waxing available
- Walk-ins Welcome

WWW.CARENSPLACE.COM

$2 OFF HAIRCUT OR 1/2 PRICE FACIAL WAXING
WITH COUPON

stop in.

ZANNA
Women's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst

Panda East
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine

Menu...

Sushi:		Chef Specialties:
California Maki	$3.95	Mandarin Chicken	$12.95
Salmon Skin	$4.25	Vegetarian Chicken	$10.95
Alaska	$4.95	Amazing Chicken	$11.49
Salmon Maki	$3.95	Panda's Gourmet Shrimp	$13.95

Ask about our special sushi rolls, vegetarian options, "light and healthy" entrees, and gluten free entrees.

We Bring Chinatown To You!

Monday-Thursday: 11:30am-11:00pm
Friday & Saturday: 11:00am-11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00pm-10:00pm

103 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA 01002 Delivery: (413) 549-0077
www.pandaeastamherst.com

NETWORKING...
It's all who you know!
Tuesday, October 17, 2006 • 5:00 p.m. • Memorial Hall
WITH ALUMNI GUEST SPEAKER
Eric Friedberg '90
Eric is a founding partner at Cohen-Friedberg Associates (CFA), a marketing firm specializing in traditional, retail specific and online promotions for national and regional clients such as Gorton's, Jolly Time Popcorn, Pizza Hut and Dunkin' Donuts. Prior to CFA, he founded UniverCity Newspaper and UniverCity.com, which grew into a national college newspaper. He also developed one of the first Fantasy Sports challenges.
FREE PIZZA • FREE POPCORN • FREE SODA
To register for this FREE event, visit the Alumni Association website at UMassAlumni.com/students.
Campus Career PROGRAMS
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
alumni loan consolidation program
www.UMassAlumni.com/studentloans (800) 936-4975

Cargile teaches lessons for all

By Mark Stryker
Detroit Free Press

DETROIT — Everybody knows that classical music is dying, young people don't care for orchestral music and minorities in particular aren't interested. Right?

Looks like Ozric Cargile didn't get the memo.

Cargile, a 25-year-old African American who grew up in Detroit and graduated from the University Michigan with a degree in composition, has created a new orchestra from scratch. The Psalm: 150 Symphony gave its inaugural concerts Saturday and Sunday at Wayne State University.

Cargile, a spiritual man, named his group for the 150th Psalm because it speaks of praising God through trumpets, stringed instruments, flutes and crashing cymbals. But it also provides a metaphor for his evangelical zeal for promoting classical music to his peers and preaching the gospel of contemporary music. "Unfortunately, there's some truth to the statement that a lot of young people and young African Americans are not interested in classical music," he said.

"It's one of our goals, with me as the face of the organization, to attract people of my generation."

Last Wednesday, Cargile, tall and slender with a soft voice, gap-tooth smile and a baton in his right hand, led about 45 musicians through a rehearsal in the basement of the musicians' union hall in Southfield, Mich. Almost all of the music was his own, colored by big-tune melodies redolent of film scores. One piece grooved to a Latin beat, another was a concerto for strings and alto saxophone. Also on the docket was a concerto for electric guitar penned by a friend, James Witcher, with whom he used to play in a rock band.

Cargile is a work in progress on the podium, and the playing by the orchestra split about 50-50 between local freelance musicians and students from area colleges was still ragged. But the energy and enthusiasm in the room was contagious.

"We're presenting orchestral music and maintaining the integrity of that, but some things will not sound like Brahms," Cargile said. "Maybe some things might sound like John Coltrane."

Cargile, who makes his living teaching piano and playing Sunday services at his church, said it has always been his dream to start an orchestra. At this point, he remains the group's president, conductor, chief composer, marketing staff, grant-writer and personnel manager. His budget for this weekend's concerts is $15,000; he's paying the players the union rate for community orchestras, from $45-$70 per rehearsal or concert.

He rustled up a grant from Comerica Bank, and he's prepared to invest $2,000-$3,000 of his own money in the project. About 60 percent of the costs are to be covered by ticket sales. His hope is to build an organization infrastructure and launch a series.

He found his musicians by announcing his intention in a mass e-mail sent through the union. A bunch of local pros responded and word of mouth did the rest.

Violinist Faith Demorest, the personnel manager of the Plymouth Symphony, said she was intrigued by the orchestra's name and impressed by Cargile's organizational skills and vision. His wide-eyed optimism is charming, she said.

"The whole thing is very appealing and very fresh, and those of us who are here believe in him and the vision."

Cargile, 25, credits God with his success as a teacher and conductor of his new orchestra Psalm 150.

Politics not always humorous

By Mario Tarradell
The Dallas Morning News

Politicians are a joke. And the electoral process isn't all that trustworthy, either. Those are the messages director and screenwriter Barry Levinson sends during "Man of the Year," the sometimes piquant comedy-drama starring Robin Williams.

The film's plot alone is a slap upside the head or at least a hard nudge to every typical career politician who spends countless hours perfecting his or her public image, speech-giving tactics and substance-free sound bite rhetoric. Williams plays Tom Dobbs, a late-night TV comedian and pundit who on a lark suggestion from an audience member throws his name as an independent presidential candidate.

He generates enough notoriety and raises enough eyebrows to get on the ballot in several key states, making him a solid competitor to the Republican and Democratic nominees. Do you hear the echoes of Kinky Friedman?

Anyway, Dobbs takes to the campaign trail accompanied by manager Jack Menken (Christopher Walken) and head writer Eddie Langston (Lewis Black). A televised debate becomes his calling card. Dobbs commandeers the platform, not letting his opponents get a word in edgewise, and rants and raves in a series of hilarious yet fact-based one-liners about war, national security, health care and several other hot-seat issues.

The Dobbs campaign trail literally splashes before the cameras. Levinson films the public appearances as rock concerts characterized by flashy lights, screaming fans and loud, large-and-in-charge performances. Politics is equal to showmanship, which in the end is nothing more than momentary entertainment.

Dobbs is the most unconventional candidate. For one, he's completely honest. He fesses up to past drug use, a failed marriage and his single status. And while he's short on political experience, he strikes a chord with many tired of the same old.

Eleanor Green (Laura Linney) inadvertently crashes into Dobbs' life. While at work, she discovers a computer glitch in the electronic voting software the nation's about to use. That glitch could, and eventually does, alter the results of the election. After she warns her superiors, particularly the company's lethal lawyer Alan Stewart (Jeff Goldblum), she's fired, persecuted, drugged and even run-over in attempts to stifle her information.

This is when "Man of the Year" morphs from manic comedy to moody political thriller. For many, the switchover might be too abrupt. Especially since Williams tones down the voracious stand-up prowess and turns serious, a concerned man searching for truth that may render him a footnote.

It's all well handled. In fact, the only clunky aspect of the movie comes with a forced romance between Dobbs and Eleanor. Thank Williams for that mostly seamless flow. The Oscar-winner commands dramatic acting powers almost as strong as his funny-man muscles. And Levinson, who also satirized politics in 1997's acclaimed "Wag the Dog," directs with confident ease.

Plus, his point blazes through. At a time when politicians are most in question, Levinson feels no qualms about depicting the process as a hilarious and yet dangerous farce.

Avid swimmer Cox refuses to see the movie 'Jaws'

By Connie Ogle
McClatchy Newspapers

Long distance open water swimmer Lynne Cox has never seen the movie "Jaws," but don't even think about inviting her over to watch it on DVD. "I've never seen it, and I will never see it," she says firmly.

If you had spent as much of your life in the water as Cox has, you probably wouldn't choose to think about voracious great white sharks, either. Cox, 49, swam the Catalina Island Channel in 1971 and the English Channel in '72 and '73, twice holding the record for fastest crossing. She was the first person to swim the Straits of Magellan in Chile and the Cook Strait in New Zealand.

In 1987, she swam from Little Diomede Island in Alaska to Big Diomede in the then-Soviet Union, earning praise from Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev for easing Cold War tensions. She also swam around Cape Point in South Africa, guarded by spotters who had to shoot a 12-foot shark with a spear gun when it went into attack mode.

"Its mouth was wide open," she says, now safe at home in Los Alamitos, Calif. "The spear went into its fin, and it pulled out the spear. ... That swim was just a little too hairy to repeat."

Cox wrote about her adventures in the bestselling "Swimming to Antarctica," and has now followed up with the slim, inspirational "Grayson" ($16.95, Knopf), a true-life fable about an experience she had at 17 while training off Seal Beach in California. A baby gray whale, disoriented and separated from its mother, began trailing her during her morning workout. If she swam to shore, the baby would follow her and die. Cox, who was growing tired and chilly and awfully hungry, had one choice: to somehow find the mother in the cold, dark sea.

"It was one of those amazing days in life," she says. "That sense of realizing that these are other beings, and they're happy to see you. ... It seems sacred or spiritual, coming close to marine mammals out there. You realize you have entered a different place. You feel so privileged to see them."

Q: The experience you describe in "Grayson" happened when you were 17. Why did you wait until now to write about it?

A: I had to get a book published first, and that took 21 years. Twenty-one years of rewriting and revising. It was a very long process. But I also wrote "Grayson" now because I wanted to tell the story but add depth and dimension. By looking at it 30 years later, I could add philosophy and talk about things that are important in life instead of just the question of "Will we find the baby whale's mother?"

Q: How does writing affect your swimming?

A: One helps the other. While I'm swimming, I'm writing. Ever since I was in school and training, I was writing things in my head. I had an English professor who had encouraged me to take his class in college. He's a poet and a swimmer so he understands the time you have to yourself when you're swimming. When you're warming up, there are so many thoughts running through your mind. And I was trying to put the reader in the water beside me so I'd also be observing important things like the way color and light change when you're in or on the water. There's a physics change that goes on as you go deeper. You reduce the color spectrum that you're in. When I was writing about diving deep with "Grayson," I wanted to make sure I was accurate.

Q: Have you always been interested in marine life?

A: I wanted to be a marine biologist, but I looked at the schedule and saw all that chemistry and math you have to take. ... And really, deep down inside I always wanted to be a writer so I figured I'd study history to see how people create change. It's been wonderful to combine the things I love.

Q: At one point in the book, you sense a large creature swimming under you and wonder if it's a shark. Do you worry about sharks?

A: I was asked to do a "Snorkel with the Sharks" thing down in the Keys. I thought it sounded scary, but I said I'd do it. I had an 8-foot bull shark hanging out underneath me while these reef sharks were feeding off the chum. ... I had thought, "This will give me an appreciation. I'll understand sharks better," but I was deluding myself. I wanted to get out of the water absolutely right now this moment.

Q: What's harder, writing your first book or spending 25 minutes in the waters off Antarctica?

A: I don't know, but it took actually swimming in Antarctica to finally get that book published. The publishers were interested, but when I said I was also going to swim in Antarctica they said: "Yeah!"

Q: What do you see as the most important message in "Grayson"?

A: I think what I'd like people to come away with is a sense that they are important in this world, that they have an impact and what they touch touches them back. That we are all interconnected with the animals on the planet and the environment as a whole. It sounds philosophical, but it's true. This whole experience taught me that there are moments in life where you're challenged, where you have a choice of helping or influencing what's going on, but to do that you have to stretch yourself. You can step back, or you can move forward. This whole story was about moving forward, pushing myself, realizing that I am strong, and I can help this other being. There is hope. Good things are possible.

'Capote' and 'Infamous' differ

By Colin Covert
McClatchy Newspapers

The first shot fired in the battle of the dueling Truman Capote biopics hit the bull's eye. Last year's "Capote" was a tense, powerful drama focused tightly on the reporting of "In Cold Blood." Now comes the new Truman show, "Infamous."

Douglas McGrath's film provides a broader portrait of the author and his circle during the six years he spent investigating the murders of a Kansas farm family for his true-crime novel. In its own, very different way, it also is quite good, encompassing both the horror of the Clutter family's killing and the malicious wit that earned Capote his rank as confidante to New York society's smart set.

Unlike "Capote," whose supporting players were deferential to Philip Seymour Hoffman's Oscar-winning work, "Infamous" boasts a luminous cast (including Jeff Daniels, Gwyneth Paltrow, Peter Bogdanovich and Daniel Craig) and an unknown (English actor Toby Jones) in the leading role.

It remains a compelling story, even on the second telling. A promising young writer immerses himself in a once-in-a-lifetime project, forms an intense emotional bond with a killer, and emerges as a literary superstar and a damaged human being. In the movie, Capote's childhood friend, novelist Harper Lee (played by Sandra Bullock), observes that writers "die a little, getting it right."

"Infamous" shows Capote, an intimate of celebrities and royalty, unable to get drab dirt farmers and apron-wearing housewives to open up to him. Jones, who has Capote's diminutive physique and mimics his distinctive nasal drawl precisely, is wonderful in these scenes. Frustrated and a bit insulted (the locals initially call the eccentric, androgynous dandy "lady"), he seduces some sources with gossip about Humphrey Bogart, unbuckles his armor with others to share his own insecurities, flatters some and lies to others.

Chief among those he deceives is imprisoned murderer Perry Smith (Craig). Capote must persuade the wary killer to open up in order to make him a lifelike character in his book. He uses their similar backgrounds of childhood neglect to create a sense of trust, one misfit to another.

It's a one-sided relationship, with the biographer retaining the upper hand, promising help in the effort to commute Smith's death sentence in exchange for his cooperation. But without Smith's execution, the book has no climax. Capote, despite his empathy for Smith, is willing to make that sacrifice. After all, through the book he'll be immortal.

'Infamous' shows Capote shows his role with celebrity culture.

McGrath, who co-wrote "Bullets Over Broadway" with Woody Allen, finds a satisfying balance between the story's tragic and comic elements. The film has more bounce in its step than the slow, grim "Capote," but it is honest about the wasted talent, alcoholism and personal disintegration that followed the bestselling triumph.

Far from vanishing in its Oscar-winning predecessor's wake, "Infamous" demonstrates how a potent story can inspire distinctly different interpretations.

RAISE YOUR GLASSES FOR THE BAR GUIDE!
Coming soon!

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
Teacher, roomate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
...or any other University related problems?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course)
Serving the students, faculty, and staff of the Umass Community
823 Campus Center
Office Hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413 - 545 - 0867
fax: 413 - 545 - 9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Attention First-Year Students:
Have you completed MyStudentBody? It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, October 16th. For instructions, go to the University Health Services website,
www.umass.edu/uhs
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

VISIT THE NEW AND IMPROVED DAILY COLLEGIAN WEBSITE!
www.dailycollegian.com

Food is Fun! Potato cannons, trebuchet & lots more.
JULIA!!
MikesMaze 2006
Rt. 47, Sunderland
www.mikesmaze.com
Weekends & Holidays 11am-5pm now thru Oct.

Towson on tap for UMass

FOOTBALL from page 12

Many times that means a coach has to go on what he knows. In this game of deception, coaches don't share their secrets with one another.

"Obviously that banner between coaches is sometimes detrimental. I just go on my own instincts and watch the tape. I've been doing it a long time," Brown explained. "As a staff that's our philosophy: Let's look at the tape and let's evaluate what they're doing. They coach too, so you know you're going to get some wrinkles, but you adjust on the run."

UMass enters a tough situation this weekend at Johnny Unitas Stadium. On top of this being the first meeting, it is also Towson's homecoming weekend, which is sure to raise the intensity. Not to mention both teams are ranked in the Top 25 — the Minutemen are No. 8 while Towson comes in at No. 22.

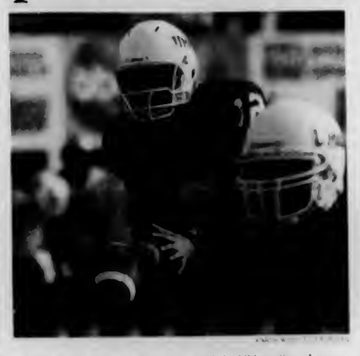
The Tigers are fresh off a disappointing 28-7 loss to Maine last weekend that dropped them in the polls. Their No. 17 ranking was the highest in school history.

Maine was all over Towson on the defensive side of the ball. In addition to holding the Tigers to 41 yards on the ground, the Black Bears sacked quarterback Sean Schaefer nine times on the day. The pressure forced the Tigers to turn the ball over three times — once on an interception and twice on fumbles.

But Schaefer and the Tigers' offense are not to be taken lightly. Towson's passing game is the highest ranked in the conference for yards per game. On average, the Tigers gain 296.2 yards through the air.

The return of wide receiver Andrae Brown is sure to increase that number. Brown missed the first four games of the season with a broken finger after being selected to the preseason All-Atlantic 10 team. He made his presence felt against Maine by catching six passes for 89 yards and scoring the Tigers' lone touchdown.

NOTES: The Minutemen will be without linebacker George Byrd for the foreseeable future. He suffered a concussion on a kick return against William and Mary last week. "Anytime you lose a guy that has been productive and on the field on a week-to-week basis it does throw a little bit of a wrench in it," Brown said. UMass will get running backs Tim Washington and Matt Lawrence back this week. Both are coming off injuries. ... The Atlantic 10 announced yesterday that senior safety James Ihedigbo was added to the Buck Buchanan Award watch list, which means he is one of the 16-best defensive players in the nation.



Sophomore quarterback Liam Coen and the UMass offense have outscored their opponents 175-63 in 2006. They average 35 points per game.

Midnight Madness to be held on Friday

Senior guard James Life finished last year as the Minutemen's second-leading scorer. He averaged 11.3 points per game in 681 minutes.

MIDNIGHT MADNESS from page 12

Dartmouth.

And while fans won't see Lowe or Ampim tomorrow night, Stephane Lasme, Rashaun Freeman, Brandon Thomas, Dante Milligan, and James Life (a prime candidate to win the three-point contest) will all be in attendance.

"The more we can do to really interact with the student body and fans, the more we want to do," Lord said. "That's something that we want to make a special emphasis on this year. We want to make ourselves available for the fans and the students, to get them excited about the season."

Tomorrow night will be a good start. Midnight Madness is always a student favorite. Even if basketball isn't your favorite sport, a get together with a couple thousand other students (the majority will be inebriated) on a Friday night to see the men's basketball team for the first time this year should be a popular event.

And though the Minutemen will have their fun tomorrow night, official season practice starts on Saturday, and it will be all business until the season opener.

Practice will not be a new ordeal to the team this season. Scheduling the Bahamas trip allowed Lord and the Minutemen 10 days of practice before the Aug. 23rd tournament. Lord put in all of his offensive and defensive sets, and — in five games in the Bahamas tournament — the second-year coach got to try out some different combinations and see where the transfers fit in with the lineup from last season.

Yankees pitcher dies in tragic plane crash

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Cory Lidle put together a successful career as a major league pitcher by living on the edge.

Not the hardest thrower, he worked to the corners. He also drew admirers for the way he won.

"Cory was a gambler. He always tried to take chances," Oakland coach Ron Washington said Wednesday before the Athletics faced Detroit in the AL playoffs.

Lidle was presumed killed along with a second person Wednesday when his small plane crashed into a 50-story skyscraper in Manhattan.

The 34-year-year-old Lidle, who began his career in 1997 and enjoyed moderate success, recently completed perhaps his most troubling season in the majors. He got into spats with the two teams he played for, the New York Yankees and Philadelphia Phillies.

Once the Yankees were eliminated from the playoffs, Lidle had something to look forward to — he planned to fly himself home to California, making several stops along the way.

Lidle got his pilot's license last offseason, bought his own plane and had made flying his passion.

"Yeah, it's risky, but no more risky than driving a car," Lidle said in August when the Yankees played at Seattle.

Lidle said he was sure the Yankees weren't happy about the plane, but added that no one in the organization had said anything to him about it.

The topic of players flying airplanes is a troubling one for the Yankees. Team captain Thurman Munson was killed flying his own plane during the 1979 season in Ohio, and his catcher's gear still hangs in a special spot in the Yankees' clubhouse.

Lidle played in high school with Jason Giambi, and they became teammates on the Yankees this season.

"Right now, I am really in a state of shock, as I am sure the entire MLB family is," Giambi said in a statement.

"My thoughts are with Cory's relatives and the loved ones of the others who were injured or killed in this plane crash. I have known Cory and his wife, Melanie, for over 15 years and watched his son grow up. We played high school ball together and have remained close throughout our careers. We were excited to be reunited in New York this year and I am just devastated to hear this news."

Lidle had a 6-year-old son, Christopher.

Lidle said he liked to fly around in the offseason to see family and friends, especially his brother, a former minor league player, in Florida.

He got into a spat with the Phillies when they traded him to the Yankees in July 30, criticizing his ex-teammates for not trying hard enough, and ended the season with the Yanks on bad terms.

AP Sports Writers Gregge Bell in Seattle, Janie McCauley in Oakland and Ron Blum in New York contributed to this report.

New York Yankees pitcher Cory Lidle died yesterday after crashing his plane into a New York City high-rise. The Yankees squirted him on July 30.

Baylark looks to put name in history books guard David Thompson made their 40th starts for UMass on Saturday, and the NCAA recently named Miller to the preseason All-America first team.

BAYLARK from page 12

A mammoth offensive line combined with Baylark's talent has made things easier for Brown, who would, if he could, call Baylark's number until he turned blue. Brown likes to control the clock and move the chains, and he inherited Baylark when he came into the program in 2003.

Brown had seen Baylark before coaching against him from the Northeastern University sidelines — and though he knew of his talent, Baylark has continued to surprise the head coach over the years.

"I didn't know how fast he was," Brown said. "The one thing that has changed for me in my evaluation of him over the years — he's still very solid, fast, physical — is that I think he's faster than he's ever been. I think that [can be attributed to] his preparation, his dedication to the position. And if he had any weaknesses he's certainly turned to them into strengths at this time."

One glaring improvement for the senior tailback, as cited by Brown, has been his breakout speed. Baylark took the role of a workhorse, power runner in the past, and took the ball up the middle for short gains until the defense tired and folded.

But Baylark has shown increased speed this season, which has led to big-play possibilities. Baylark displayed his new attribute on a 58-yard run against the Tribe when he hit the hole in the left side of the defense and shed several cornerbacks with pure foot speed.

"Guys had angles and they were surging in and [Baylark] split them," Brown said about Baylark's longest rush of his career. "He wouldn't have probably done that two years ago. He's put himself in position where — he's always had that ability to make yards, to be that guy that can move the chains now I think you can see the difference. He doesn't need 30 or 40 carries to get it done. He's getting [yards] in big chunks."

As a freshman in 2003, Baylark was a second team All-Atlantic 10 selection and led the Minutemen with 268 carries for 1,177 yards and 10 touchdowns. In his sophomore campaign Brown's first year as head coach Baylark averaged 103.5 yards per game on the ground and made the Atlantic 10 First Team after finishing the season with 1,138 rushing yards.

His junior year was much of the same. Atlantic 10 First Team, 1,057 yards rushing, Northeast All-Region Third Team. For Brown, it's Baylark's toughness that separates him from the running backs that might have the talent to succeed in the long term but lack Baylark's longevity.

"To stay healthy and get it done is really quite an achievement," Brown said. "I can only go by when we've been here, and [Baylark has] gotten better each year. And that's hard to do when you're a quality back because you can sit on your laurels. I don't think he has ever done that.

"He's driven. He works hard. On a week-to-week basis, there are enough dings and sprains to go along, but he just shakes them off and finds a way to be at his best on Saturday afternoons."

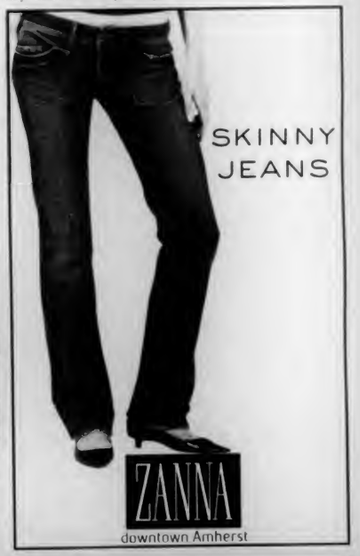
He's been at his best for more than three years now. And Don Brown will surely miss this tough-as-nails tailback once graduation steals him from the backfield.

Baylark now needs 73 yards to get to 4,000 for his career, and Towson allows nearly five yards per carry. Will Baylark tack on another accolade to his acclaimed resume?

"I think," Brown offered, "that he's playing the best football of his career."

ARE YOU AN R.S.O?
Please contact us at 545-3500 or come down to 113 Campus Center Basement to discuss advertising plans for your organization.

comedy CONNECTION HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
THIS FRIDAY!
Host of Comedy Central's "Insomniac"
DAVE ATTELL
OCT. 21ST
From NBC's "Studio 60 on the Sunset Strip" and host of Comedy Central's "Weekends at the DL"
D.L. HUGHLEY



555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911

Vermont defeats UM in Amherst

FIELD HOCKEY from page 12

proved to be the opposite of the first. The Minutewomen stepped up their attack, controlling possession in the Vermont zone. That early pressure led to penalty corners for UMass, and, given the opportunity, it capitalized.

Mervine scored off a rebound stickstop from the penalty corner under two minutes into the second half to tie the game at two. The Catamounts would come right back, as Cox tallied her second goal of the game.

UMass responded with offensive pressure of its own, scoring two goals in less than four minutes off of penalty corners.

Mervine commented after the game on the success of the penalty corners, an area that has been lacking in production for the Minutewomen.

"We were executing our penalty corners very well [in practice]," Mervine said. "Execution has been the biggest issue with us."

Trailing by a goal with just over 20 minutes remaining, Vermont took a timeout.

"We knew they were going to play high-pressure after they called their timeout," junior back Paula Verma said.

The Minutewomen failed to make the necessary adjustments, surrendering three goals in a six-minute span.

By the end of the seesaw battle, Luce and Collins had each notched a hat trick, as the Minutewomen were handed their fourth loss in a row.

Junior forward Rachael Mervine scored two goals in UMass' 6-4 loss to Vermont last night at Garber Field. She now has three goals on the year.

Turnovers costly for UMass

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Offense gets the glory but defense wins the game. You've heard it all before. But never was it more apparent than Thursday night when the Massachusetts field hockey team (3-11) watched a lead evaporate almost as quickly as it came about.

The Minutewomen looked to end their third losing streak of at least three games this season when they took a 4-3 lead with just under 17 minutes remaining in regulation. But defensive breakdowns and a general failure to maintain possession led to an offensive explosion from the Vermont Catamounts.

Vermont scored three goals in a six-minute span to snatch any hopes of victory away from the Maroon and White. And as the game ended, the Minutewomen found themselves on the wrong side of a 6-4 score.

The Minutewomen's struggles to maintain possession were a direct result of poor passing. Too often were their passes in the neutral zone off target. Selfish play also caused many of their turnovers. Players often dribbled into two or three defenders, inevitably being knocked off the ball.

"We need to pass sooner," junior defender Erin O'Brien said. "Instead of dribbling because when we pass, we are more successful."

Turnovers plagued the Minutewomen on Wednesday and although they took the lead midway through the second half, they soon went back to their old devices. Poor passes in the neutral zone led to odd-man rushes and more often than not, quality scoring chances for the Vermont attackers.

"Because of the turnovers," O'Brien said. "Our deep defender had two people coming at them and it was hard to know whether or not to pressure the ball."

Aside from poor pass execution, the Minutewomen were also troubled by making the wrong pass. Several times throughout the contest, a UMass player would accept a pass cleanly only to immediately encounter a Catamount defender.

"We need to focus more on stick-to-stick passing and passing into space," O'Brien said.

The Catamounts' team speed brought the Minutewomen's turnover problems to the forefront. Whenever a UMass player lost possession or made a poor pass, a Vermont fast-break inevitably followed.

"When we look at the stats, it'll probably show that we were tackled 11 times," UMass coach Patty Shea said. "That is a lot and that gave up a lot of attacks to [Vermont]."

The Minutewomen adjusted their game plan before Thursday's game, keeping only three defenders in the backfield as opposed to their standard four. The Catamounts exploited this with their high-pressure offense. Even when Vermont got possession by means other than a turnover, it found itself with odd-man rushes.

"By putting three in the back we have more opportunities in our offensive end," junior defender Paula Verma said. "But then defensively we need our whole team get back so there's no open man."

The Minutewomen are at their best when they make smooth passes in the neutral zone to properly establish their offensive sets. At times on Thursday they executed this well, recording 14 shots on goal and seven penalty corners.

Junior Erin O'Brien and the UMass defense gave up 25 shots and six goals in Wednesday night's loss to the Catamounts.

"We did a good job of creating a lot offensively," Shea said.

However, they did not execute this enough and haven't all year. Even in games when they played four their backfield, they have encountered numerous fast breaks and yielded far too many penalty corners.

"There were times where we just let the player get in front of us," Shea said. "But when we got caught ball-watching that's when they snuck right out behind us and got those balls. They exposed us."

The Minutewomen also did a horrendous job of preventing second and third chance scoring opportunities. Freshman goalkeeper Sarah Williams stopped many initial shots on goal, three of Vermont's six scores came when they were able to maintain possession and pepper Williams with shots.

"Almost every goal we gave up came off a deflection or a rebound," Shea said. "It very easily could have been 5-0 if Sarah didn't play the way she did."

On-field execution is still one of the team's biggest concerns. However, Shea firmly believes that the team also needs to make more of a cerebral adjustment.

"The players have to the confidence to go out and dictate a game," Shea said. "And not fall back and feel out the game. Part of it is mental."

The word around Garber Field

BY KEVIN DOOLEY

Our [Massachusetts field hockey opponent's (5-0, 0 Atlantic 10) has been [doing] out of the gate this season. [In] its games, the Minutewomen [have] been [outscored] 19[5]. Five [of] those [goals] [were] [scored] in the first half of [UMass] [game]. however, scor[ing] [only] one [goal] in the final 35 [minutes] of [play].

[The] [Maroon] and White has come [out] with a vengeance in the second [half] [of] [each] [game], however, scoring [10] of its 25 goals in the final 35 minutes of play.

"[It's] the first thing we're trying [to] [work] on," UMass coach Patty [Shea] said on the team's slow starts [during] [games]. "[I] don't [know] if we have to [go] [down] [a] goal to feel [the] confidence to [play] [our] [game] but [we] do [need] to feel out the [game] [a] little [more]."

TAKING ADVANTAGE OF OPPORTUNITIES

[Capitalizing] on penalty corners has been a problem that has plagued UMass all season. The Minutewomen came into Wednesday's game against Vermont looking to convert on field hockey's version of the corner kick in soccer, and did just that, scoring three goals after a penalty corner was rewarded in their 6-4 loss to Vermont yesterday.

"In practice we were executing [penalty corners] very well, and we've been trying to focus on our penalty corners because it's basically a free shot on goal," junior forward Rachael Mervine said, who inserted the ball on all three of the team's goals off penalty corners last night. "It starts out with our push, my push has to be fast and exactly where the stopper wants it."

COUNTING ON KING

UMass freshmen are counted on to contribute right away to the team's offensive attack. Sophomore forwards Erin Parker and Katelyn Orlando led the team in goals last season with five apiece.

This year it has been freshman midfielder Cher King picking up the workload as a rookie, playing in all 14 games this year and starting in 12 of them.

King has contributed four goals and two assists, giving her 10 points, which is second on the team only behind sophomore forward Lauren Gillespie. King notched the only goal against the Temple Owls in a 2-1 loss last Friday.

King also leads the teams in shots with 38, and 20 of those shots have been fired on goal.

WILLIAMS STANDING ON HER HEAD

Freshman goalkeeper Sarah Williams has been thrown right into the fire and is beginning to make a name for herself among the top A-10 goalies.

Williams has started in six games and has made 52 of the Minutewomen's 77 saves on the season, including 10 stops in a barrage of balls blasted by Vermont on Wednesday.

Williams made her first career start this year when she was asked to tame the Connecticut Huskies prolific offense. The Huskies launched 24 shots at Williams, and she handled 18 of them. The 18 saves were the most any A-10 goalie has had to make this year in one game.

Rudy fills injury void in lineup

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The injury sustained by junior defender Tina Rodriguez has put the Massachusetts women's soccer team in an unfamiliar position. The dependable Rodriguez had started in all but one game in her career at UMass before she was hurt. Her experience and steady performance has been missed in the two games played without her.

Despite Rodriguez no longer being able to play on the field this season, senior co-captain Nadia Villarroel sees her fallen teammate still contributing to the team as an "unofficial" coach.

"I'm trying to help out," Rodriguez said. "I don't have a great coach's eye just yet, but any way I can give my input and help the team will be good. I need to contribute to the team or otherwise I'll go crazy."

UMass coach Jim Rudy has been forced to shuffle his lineup around in order to fill the void left by Rodriguez. In doing this, he has a few players in unfamiliar positions. The Minutewomen are proving their versatility with Villarroel, Vanessa Patry, Christina Nunes, and Elizabeth Weinsten all playing in different spots than they are accustomed to.

Patry and Villarroel are now asked to help a bit more in the defensive backfield for the team, causing a different scheme to form offensively. To balance the attack for the Minutewomen, Rudy has summoned freshman forward Sydney Stoll into the starting lineup to provide a spark and a consistent offensive attack to go along with leading scorer Britt Canfield.

The injury to Rodriguez has allowed the quick and dynamic Stoll to display her talents on a more regular basis. Previously she was relegated to coming off the bench, but now she's able to play longer in each game, which has provided a lift on offense.

In Sunday's 1-0 victory over Xavier, Stoll was all over the field, creating a plethora of scoring opportunities. The goal scored by Canfield to win the game was assisted by senior co-captain Stephanie Barrett, but it was Sydney Stoll who got things started on a great pass to Barrett.

"She's dynamic," Rudy said about Stoll. "It's a good start for her. I thought she was exciting and hard to handle."

"Sydney did awesome," added redshirt junior goalkeeper Kristin Walker. "She came out with high pressure and took it to the extreme. She basically made her defenders look foolish. She's a great player."

In addition to Stoll, other freshmen have been able to capitalize on increased playing time. Forward Christina Adams and midfielders Katie Ruggles and Meghan Gould have made solid contributions off the bench for the Minutewomen.

"Ruggles is a speedy player," Rudy said. "She will run the left flank as a defender or attacker. She has a high work rate. Adams has an attacking personality with flair and grit. She seems to attract the ball around the penalty area. Gould has superb passing skills. She's good in the air around the goal and sees the field well."

One thing that remains the same for the Minutewomen is the solid play from Walker. Last season she was voted to the All-Conference First Team and this year is much of the same. In 12 games so far, she has recorded four shutouts and has only allowed 13 goals. She has made 57 saves and has a save percentage of .814. Her most recent effort may have been her best as she shut out Xavier with 10 clutch saves.

"Every time she [Walker] makes a big save it inspires me," Villarroel said. "I fight harder and try and get the ball out of our defensive end. She has been terrific all season for us."

Jackson charged with felony

BY CLIFF BRUNT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — Indiana Pacers guard Stephen Jackson was charged with criminal recklessness Wednesday following last week's confrontation outside a strip club.

Jackson was charged with the felony and misdemeanor counts of battery and disorderly conduct by the Marion County prosecutor five days after he fought with another group of men at the club.

Teammates Jamaal Tinsley, Marquis Daniels and Jimmie Hunter were also at the club, but were not charged.

Jackson was hit by a car, and police say he fired a gun in the air at least five times. He originally told police he was punched, but later said he was not, prosecutors said.

On Tuesday, Jackson apologized for the fight, saying he was "happy to be alive." His comments came hours after police arrested another man on several charges in connection with the fight.

Jackson was expected to turn himself in Wednesday or Thursday, prosecutors said. He was scheduled to be in court Thursday morning to face the charges. The felony count carries a prison term of six months to three years.

The Pacers said they hope for a quick resolution to the case through the judicial system.

"As we have stated, we regret the incident," the team statement said. "The Pacers are strong advocates of anti-violence campaigns as they have been throughout the franchise's history."

"We're monitoring the situation and we'll be doing our own investigation," NBA spokesman Tim Frank said. "But until we get all the facts, I think it would be inappropriate to comment on it."

In September 2005, a judge in Michigan ordered Jackson to serve a year's probation for his role in the brawl with Detroit Pistons fans at the Palace of Auburn Hills in 2004. But the court ordered him to serve an extra year of probation because he did not complete the terms of his sentence, prosecutors in Michigan said.

Marion County Prosecutor Carl Brizzi said Jackson could be ordered to serve three months in jail if authorities there determine the new charges violate his probation.

Police on Tuesday charged Deon Willford, 23, in the fight. He faces felony counts of criminal recklessness and leaving the scene of a personal injury accident, and a misdemeanor count of driving without a license.

Willford drove a car that hit Jackson, sending him tumbling over the hood, police Sgt. Matthew Mount said. Police said Jackson fired a gun in the air during the fight about 3 a.m.

"Firing the shots in the air at that point is criminal recklessness," Brizzi said. "Those bullets, once they come up, have to come down, and they come down at least 90 miles per hour, and they do absolutely have the ability to take someone's life."

Brizzi said between 30 and 35 people were in the parking lot. Jackson returned to training camp Tuesday with stitches in his lip and scrapes and bruises. Prosecutors say the injuries were all caused by the car hitting him.

Officers said they found a small amount of marijuana in the passenger-side door of point guard Tinsley's car. But no arrests were made at the time because there were three others in Tinsley's car and police could not determine who had the marijuana, authorities said.

None of the other players were charged but were listed as witnesses for the prosecution.

Tinsley and Hunter told investigators they heard gunshots, but did not see who was shooting, according to an Indianapolis police report.

Daniels told police he saw Jackson struck by a car, but was not sure if he heard any gunshots.

Jackson returned to the Pacers' training camp on Tuesday with stitches in his lip and other scrapes and bruises. The Pacers were to open the preseason Wednesday night against the New Jersey Nets, but Jackson was not expected to play.

In charging information, prosecutors said Jackson kicked a man who police said has a deformed arm. Jackson told police that the man, Quentin Willford, started the brawl.

Another man, Raymel Mattox, was charged with misdemeanor counts of battery, disorderly conduct and marijuana possession. Police say he also hit Quentin Willford.

Sports @ Dailycollegian.com

SCHOOL OF GRADUATE STUDIES
OPEN HOUSE
ADANTI STUDENT CENTER | THURSDAY
SOUTHERN CONNECTICUT | OCTOBER 26, 2006
STATE UNIVERSITY | 3:00 - 7:00 PM
SCHOOL OF ARTS & SCIENCES
SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
SCHOOL OF COMMUNICATION, INFORMATION & LIBRARY SCIENCE
SCHOOL OF EDUCATION
SCHOOL OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICES
Southern Connecticut State University
Register for the Open House at www.gradstudies.SouthernCT.edu • 1-800-448-0661 or 203-392-5240

Get Published
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

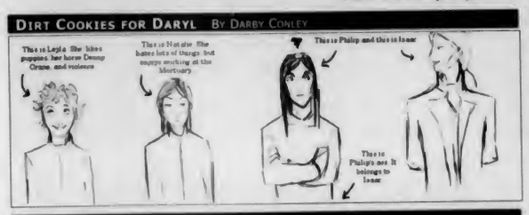
	2				9
3								7
8		7	9			1	6
	6			5		8
4			7		6			5
		5		9			7
	1	8			7	5		4
2								6
		4					8

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"In nuclear war all men are cremated equal."

—Dexter Gordon

DIRT COOKIES FOR DARYL BY DARBY CONLEY



This is Leyla. She hates puppies, her horse Denny Crane, and violence.
This is Natalie. She hates lots of things, but enjoys smoking at the bleachers.
This is Philip and this is Isaac.
This is Philip's axe. It belongs to Isaac.

ECOLOGY BY JEN FILL

ZOOMASS BY RYAN SENECAL

ELSIE HOOPER BY ROBERT D. KRZYKOWSKI

ACROSS
1 Tribal healers
8 Short choral work
15 Capital river
16 Cage for tots
17 Go away with 18 Quirky
19 Scholarly book
20 Goddess of death
22 B&O stop
23 Minty drink
25 God of Islam
29 Vigilant
34 Brit. Conservative
35 Actress Black
36 Singer Denver
38 Smallest bill
39 Bedecked
42 Bess who was Miss America
44 Puppy bark
45 Keyed up
47 Ms. Rogers St. Johns
48 Writer Bagnold
50 Prairies
53 Condemn
55 Map book
56 Singer Jams
58 Elver's parent
59 "M*A*S*H" star
63 Hired
67 Before now
68 Stone near Cork
70 Prevent by anticipatory
71 Stateless, in botany
72 Boss'n for boatswain, e.g.

DOWN
1 Lovers' quarrel
2 Vagabond
3 Minute particle
4 Pigmented nexus
5 Arhus to Aarms
6 City on the Merrimack
7 Actor Maximilian
8 Naval noncom
9 Landon and others
10 U.S.-Mex. Can union
11 "Romeo and Juliet" role
12 Mimic
13 Ceylon export
14 Picnic invader
21 A Cobb
23 Actress Elman
24 Spring format
26 Unlike
27 Eddy or Tom
28 Seemingly carnivores
29 Cleared
30 Novelist Gardner
31 Equatorial
32 That girl
33 Old pronoun
37 Schon and Heft
41 "___ the Explorer"
43 Woman lefties
46 Entryway
49 Paint additives
51 Takes a nap
52 Fray
54 New Age pianist
57 Yuletide carol
59 Writer Waugh
60 VIP's entrance
61 Star of "Sleepy Hollow"
62 Comic Johnson
63 Recipe abbr.
64 Pub pour
65 Egyptian sous
66 Bill or Louis
68 Stimpy's buddy

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Your Room Smells Like ASS!
Call Odor Removal Services Now!
A Division of The Vac Store
Rte 9 Hadley, MA
(413) 585-0822
Ask About Student Specials
1-87-ROOM-AIR-9

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Do what your mother says.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Grab what you can and squeeze.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Be all that they say you can't.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Quit scratching at it and it will get better.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Don't forget about the things you love.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Always say "we're here" when you get there. Maybe no one noticed yet.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Do not always say "no" to strangers, because it really depends on the question.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Just wait until it's perfect.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Don't forget what your father used to say.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
It's really about time that you... well you know... do the deed...

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Kill your look-a-likes.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
If loving everyone for who they are is too corny, try just not hating anyone instead.

Chicago Pizzaria Yes, We Deliver!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES... LIKE NO OTHER!
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 3pm-2am
Thurs-Sat: 3pm-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES
Montreal Party Weekends Includes Transportation, Hotel and More $115 Complete Montrealexpress.net

ANNOUNCEMENTS
Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Minor in Leadership and get paid for it! Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly, Be an Army Officer full time/part time after college www.umass.edu/armyrotc

AUTO FOR SALE
92 Toyota Camry Station Wagon $850 549-9639

EMPLOYMENT
Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day. Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

EMPLOYMENT
Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

PT Sales Assoc. positions available in the bakery, deli and produce departments. Evening, weekend, and holiday availability required. Call or email Kelly at 253-9528 kelly@atkinsfarms.com

EMPLOYMENT
McDonald's Crew Members Needed. Full & part-time openings at Michell Bradley/McDonalds. Competitive wages & salaries plus benefits. Start at $9.62 /hr. Apply at Michell Bradley/McDonalds office at Bradley Int'l Airport, Terminal A, 2-5pm, M-W, or send resume to EHmichell@aol.com Call 203-223-0153 with questions.

ENTERTAINMENT
DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

SERVICES
Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and

SERVICES
Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street. Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

TRAVEL
Travel with STS to this year's top 10 Spring Break destinations! Best deals guaranteed! Highest rep commissions, Visit www.ststravel.com or call 1-800-648-4849 Great group discounts

BAR GUIDE
THE BAR GUIDE IS COMING!

Start looking for the Daily Collegian's first ever Amherst Area Bar Guide.

DON'T MISS IT.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 2006 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen look to tame Tigers

Sophomore quarterback Liam Coen has thrown for eight touchdowns and 1,106 yards in five games for UMass this season. He has a 66.3 completion percentage, and averages 221 yards per game.

Senior running back Steve Baylark has a chance to become just the third player in UMass history to rush for 4,000 yards this weekend. He has rushed for 555 yards on 99 attempts, and averages 5.6 yards per carry.

UMass takes on No. 22 Towson

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

In many circumstances, football is a game of feel. When a team has never faced its competition, preparation is not always easy on the coaching staff. Usually when a coach is familiar with a certain team, they have a certain feel for their opponent.

When the Massachusetts football team (4-1, 2-0 Atlantic 10) squares off against Towson this weekend, it will be the first time in history that the two teams meet on the football field. The Tigers just joined the A-10 in 2004.

UMass coach Don Brown doesn't have that familiar feeling entering the weekend trip back to Maryland. Even during his time at Northeastern, Brown has never seen the Tigers (4-1, 1-1 A-10) play football.

"You just don't have a great feel for personnel, in person against your guys, so that's always a difficult process," Brown said of facing a team for the first time. "Matchups are so critical in this league and I just don't feel like I have a good handle on it. You got to get in there and kind of figure it out as the first quarter moves along."

There's no doubt Brown has been poring over Towson game film for the better part of this week, breaking down what he sees and deciphering schemes. But that's all he has to go by.

"In terms of scheme, we've got all the tape so that's not a difficult process," he said. "Their skill looks really fast on both sides so you just try and get a handle on it because you have not played them on an annual basis."

Usually during the week, the scout team is set up to mimic the weekend's opponent as best as possible. That too is difficult when you've never faced a team and don't know what each player's skill sets are.

"But it is nice when you can say, 'Okay, I'm going to put Victor Cruise where No. 9 plays because he embodies [similar skills]," Brown said, talking about a luxury he doesn't have this week. "It's difficult when you just don't have your own feel for it."

Game film is everything to a football coach. There is no better way — short of actually facing a team — to learn about a team. Film tells the coach what plays the opponents run and in what situation. By watching film of a team, coaches pick up on what its individual scheme is.

See FOOTBALL on page 9

Baylark tries for 4,000 yards

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

By now, you're used to it.

Liam Coen takes the snap and hands it off to No. 5, the man who rushed for 1,000 yards in each of his first three seasons in maroon and white.

It's Steve Baylark, staple of the UMass backfield for the last three and a half years — and the runner who has a chance to become just the third player in UMass history to rush for 4,000 yards when he suits up against Towson on Saturday.

Baylark turned in a 187-yard rushing performance against William and Mary last Saturday, which included a 50-yard dash up field for the longest run of his career.

Former UMass coach Mark Whipple — now quarterback coach of the Pittsburgh Steelers — recruited Baylark out of high school before Brown took over in Baylark's second year as a Minuteman.

"Coach Brown is a run-game type guy," Baylark said after the UMass sports luncheon yesterday. "He likes to pound the rock. Over the years he always talked about, 'Can you carry the load? Can you take control of the game?' And I always told him that I was going to run hard no matter what."

And he's run through opposing defenses with cold efficiency over the first month of the 2006 season. In the season opener against Colgate, Baylark ran 21 times for 84 yards and one touchdown, and against Navy a week later he turned in the exact same line, minus the touchdown.

Game 3 was on the road at Villanova, where Baylark took the ball 23 times for 104 yards and one touchdown. Against Stony Brook on Sept. 23, he pummeled the Seawolves for 95 yards and two touchdowns on just 12 carries.

Last Saturday, against William and Mary, his 187 yards on the ground pulled him within 73 yards of history.

"[The milestones] have just come with how hard I've been playing and how hard I've been working out," Baylark said. "It's never been my mindset to make it to 4,000 yards. I came into this season just to work hard, run hard, and do whatever it takes to win. Whatever I do, it's all because of my teammates."

Baylark has had his share of help from the offensive line. Senior captain Alex Miller and

See BAYLARK on page 9

Let the madness begin for UM

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

The college basketball season is upon us.

Hardwood coaches and cagers are gearing up for another year of madness. For the Massachusetts men's basketball team, tomorrow night is the beginning.

At the Curry Hicks Cage, the Minutemen will participate in the annual preseason promotional event called Midnight Madness. The doors open at 9 p.m., and many students will head to the Cage after the hockey team's opener at the Mullins Center that starts at 7 p.m.

For UMass coach Travis Ford, the busy offseason full of promotions and the continuation of his public relations blitz will be put to its first test on Friday night, when the presence of an enthusiastic student crowd is needed for a good atmosphere.

"We're excited about this upcoming season and Midnight Madness is always a great way to kick it off," Ford said. "I think it's incredible for the fans to have a chance to get to look at the new team."

And it is a new team. Four transfers that sat out last season — Gary Forbes, Etienne Brower, Luke Bonner, Tiki Mayben — because of NCAA regulations, will join the Minutemen on the court for the first time on Nov. 4 in UMass' first exhibition of the year.

For the students, Friday night will be the first chance to see these guys in action. Promotional events, including 5-dollar and 10,000-dollar giveaways, as well as a chance to win a Ford Fusion car, will precede the basketball events.

Both the men's and women's teams will be in attendance and are set to compete against one another in a three-point contest.

"I'm too scared to predict that outcome," Ford joked.

Then there's the dunk contest, where the Minutemen will squate off against each other ("The guys have been practicing," Ford said), for this year's title. Brower won last year's contest and Ford picked him to hold off the new guys and defend his title.

After the festivities, the men's team will scrimmage and allow the fans to watch the team up close in its first public appearance in Amherst. For Ford, the season couldn't come sooner. In his second year at the helm, Ford spent the offseason preparing a schedule for the upcoming season that includes playing Kentucky, Louisville and Pittsburgh on the road. Ford is also trying effortlessly to garner student and fan support for the men's team.

It has been a hectic summer that included a team trip to the Bahamas, and Ford hopes that the start of the actual season will take away some of the craziness from off-court activities.

"We had a very busy summer and a very busy recruiting season," Ford said in a phone interview last night. "When you get into the rhythm of practices, it does give you a chance to get away from everything and do what you most enjoy, and that's being on the court. I'm excited to work with a group of guys that are very hungry. We are very anxious for Friday to get here and for our first practice on Saturday."

The recent news for the men's squad has not been good. Chris Lowe, the starting point guard last season who averaged 31 minutes per game as a freshman, was arrested last Thursday for disorderly conduct outside of the Amherst Starbucks. Athletic Director John Mc[illegible]chon and Ford suspended Lowe and Nana Ampim — a reserve arrested with Lowe on Thursday — from participation in Midnight Madness, the first exhibition game, and the regular-season opener against

See MIDNIGHT MADNESS on page 9

Coach Travis Ford (above) enters his second season at UMass. Senior Rashaun Freeman (below) and the Minutemen begin practicing on Saturday.

Minutewomen lose fourth straight game

By J.M. Friedman
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team (3-11, 0-2 Atlantic 10) lost a wild 6-4 contest yesterday, falling to Vermont (7-5) at Garber Field.

With the lights turned on for a raw, overcast evening, the Minutewomen stumbled out of the gate, while the Catamounts quickly displayed their potent offensive press.

UMass struggled to maintain possession of the ball at midfield and in its own defensive zone. A fast break by Vermont created a 2-on-1 opportunity that lead to the first of three goals for the Catamounts' leading scorer, junior forward Danielle Collins.

Collins received a perfect crossing pass from sophomore forward Maegan Luce, and put the ball past freshman goalkeeper Sarah Williams.

The first period saw Vermont own a 17-3 shot advantage, along with a 3-0 edge in penalty corners. If not for the stellar play of Williams, the Minutewomen would have been out of the game.

"It very easily could have been [5-0] if Sarah hadn't played the way she did," UMass coach Patty Shea said.

Leading by a goal only 4:32 into the first half, and creating several sparkling scoring opportunities, it seemed only a matter of time before the game got out of hand.

However, the Minutewomen would not go down easily, battling back against the Catamounts. After shoring up possession in its own end, and moving the ball through the midfield into the offensive zone, UMass seemed to find a rhythm against a suspect Vermont defense.

Once the Minutewomen started making better passes, they manufactured scoring opportunities.

"When we pass the ball [effectively], we can move through teams," Shea said.

The Maroon and White would trail for less than four minutes, evening the score when junior forward Rachael Mervine redirected a shot from sophomore midfielder Katelyn Orlando.

It became obvious to the 284 in attendance that this would be a back-and-forth event. Play alternated between the offensive zones of UMass and Vermont, with little battling at midfield.

For most of the first half, the Catamounts controlled play, taking a 2-1 lead into halftime.

The start of the second half

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 10

Sports Fact of the Day

UMass senior Steve Baylark is on pace to become the third UMass running back with 4,000 career rushing yards. Marcel Shipp (5,383) and Rene Ingoglia (4,624) each have over 4,000 yards on the ground while playing for UMass.

MASS ATTACK RETURNS TO ACTION PAGE 10

INDIGO GIRLS HEAD TO THE CALVIN PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SUNNY : HI: 57 LO: 33 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, OCTOBER 13, 2006

College graduates in great demand

By Steven Stafford
Collegian Staff

College graduates are at the highest demand in five years, says a Bureau of Labor Statistics Employment Report.

"This is a reflection of an improved economy," said Tom Joyner at Career Services at the University of Massachusetts. "Employers are more comfortable, and that makes them more willing to take risks."

"When the economy was bad, they couldn't afford to take those necessary risks to hire young people," Joyner continued. "Inexperienced workers often require a certain amount of training, and even the interviewing process means lost time and lost productivity for the company."

Joyner also pointed out there are benefits to hiring inexperienced workers.

"Young workers won't be expecting high salaries and benefits in the way older, experienced professionals do. We're seeing more and more companies at our job fairs and we're expecting this to continue this year," he said.

Although this important fact may be encouraging to current undergraduates, there are a number of consequences for students.

"Students need to be prepared. They need some level of experience. Internships and co-ops should be paramount, and this is true across all majors," Joyner said. "Since college graduates are getting hired, that means that students need to be ready to compete. They need to know how to present themselves and stand out, on their resumé, in interviews, and even cover letters."

UMass will be holding a number of career fairs in the coming weeks, such as the Information Technologies fair on Oct. 24 and the Graduate School Fair on Oct. 25.

The trends are positive, but that doesn't mean students have things easy. There are other trends at work. As employers look closer and closer to college graduates, they have also changed the way they look at applicants.

"Employers generally have switched from subject-specific interviews to personality-based interviews," Joyner said. "This means that students need to take it to the next level and have certain skills like communication, organization, analytical, leadership and critical thinking."

"A college degree prepares students with exactly these skills, especially nowadays, where students do more and more research and public speaking in class. A college degree shows an employer that you potentially have these skills," he continued.

So how should students prepare for their future right now?

"One of the best places that they can go is right here in Career Services," Joyner said. "This is what we're here for. Ideally, we'd like to see students come in and see us as early as freshman year."

Career Services in Goodell Hall offers help for students with writing resumes, tips for interviews, and writing cover letters.

Anti-piracy system could hurt YouTube

By Alex Veiga
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — A technology designed to detect copyright material could give YouTube a needed dose of legal legitimacy and calm any concerns Google Inc. has about spending $1.65 billion on the Internet video site. But that same technology could hurt YouTube's edgy appeal.

While YouTube is known as the place to find almost any kind of video clip, recent agreements with high-profile content creators require YouTube to deploy an audio-signature technology that can spot a low-quality copy of a licensed music video or other content. YouTube would have to substitute an approved version of the clip or take the material down automatically.

Analysts said that stepped-up monitoring by entertainment companies raises the likelihood that YouTube fans won't find what they're used to getting — and will go searching for the next online video rebel.

"There's very little that holds YouTube's audience to YouTube except the belief that whatever they want to see, there is a very good chance YouTube will have it," said Joe Laszlo, senior analyst with Jupiter Research.

"If the video migrates to other places, I fear the audience will too, so YouTube needs to be really careful about how it does this," he said.

YouTube offers a gold mine of clips depicting all manner of amateur hijinks and tons of unauthorized commercial videos. Kevin Davis, a 16-year-old from Torrance, Calif., likes to peruse YouTube for music videos by R&B singer Chris Brown and rappers Lil Wayne and The Game.

"I find what I'm looking for most of the time," he said.

YouTube, based in San Mateo, Calif., has licensing deals with CBS Corp. and three major recording companies — Warner Music Group, Vivendi's Universal Music Group and Sony BMG Music Entertainment. The entertainment companies will get a cut of YouTube ad revenue each time someone views a video licensed by them.

YouTube stressed that it won't be filtering content itself.

Instead, the technology it's developing will allow copyright owners "to identify their content, locate it and then make a decision based on whether they want to remove it," said spokeswoman Julie Supan.

The new technology will be designed to scan a digital audio file, such as an MP3 or video, and compare the electronic "fingerprints" to databases of copyright material.

But copyrights can be tricky on sites like YouTube. Even a homemade video can run afoul of the law if it has a professional song playing in the background. Amateur concert footage and other video may be pulled from sites as a precaution simply because it's unclear who owns the rights.

"We're going to probably see

See YOUTUBE on page 2

YouTube, a web page that shares digital videos, was bought for a $1.65 billion stock deal this week by Internet titan, Google.

Students use networking sites as new political forums

By Matt Donnelly
The Daily Free Press (Boston U.)

(U-WIRE) BOSTON — Facebook.com, the popular social Web site that began as a student-only network, is offering a chance for students to branch out into the world of political and social activism, and a surprising number have taken the call seriously.

Chris Keenum, a Harvard Law School graduate in Los Angeles, said he is optimistic about the flooding of messages he has received in response to a group he started called "Join to support Breast Cancer Awareness Month."

"People who take interest in prosocial causes, regardless of their vocation, have profound effects on refocusing society on what's really important," he said, elaborating on his personal experiences with the disease.

"One of my best friends during our first year of law school came out of remission," he said. "She had breast cancer two years before but thought it was gone after bouts of chemo and a year and a half of time."

"Those three weeks when the doctors were in the process of re-diagnosing her and developing a treatment plan were the hardest weeks of my life," he continued. "Ever since then, I have been looking for a way to strike back at the disease. This group will be the first of my many attempts at winning the fight that the disease started."

Through the group, which has more than 100,000 members, Keenum said he hopes to raise awareness and encourage donations to fight breast cancer.

"Those tools allow information and therefore emotion to pass more fluidly through our community, and therefore are great organs for the dispersal of prosocial messages," he said.

Christopher Davis, a University of North Alabama freshman, created an AIDS/HIV research Facebook group that had 23,033 members as of last night. Davis said he saw the issue surrounding HIV and AIDS as one that had been underrepresented on the Facebook community.

"In 2005 alone, there was an estimated death toll of 2.4 to 3.3 million in the world and between 33.4 and 46 million people are currently living with HIV," he said.

Additionally, Davis said he is hoping to promote the Operation Get Tested tour through his group.

"Six HIV positive youth ages 19 to 26 will board a 45-foot, 12-person sleeper tour bus to travel to 33 different colleges across the U.S. to present a 90 minute forum about living with HIV," he said.

Additionally, Facebook — along with MySpace — has groups specifically focused on political issues including those revolving around the 2006 political campaigns, same-sex marriage, and abortion.

University of Kentucky student Matthew Colm Bailey created his Facebook group Government + Religion = Disaster to voice his own concerns.

Although the group has received wide support, Bailey said he is always sure to take the success with a grain of salt.

"People have different ideas about things, and they love to voice their opinions," he said.

"How could I deny them the right to contest? It's what this country was built on. So my name as the creator is not hidden, I enjoy the letters, keep them coming."

Christian Witt, a University of North Dakota senior and creator of "Democrats in 2006," agreed with Bailey's about the importance of the voice of current collegiate voters.

"The message I want to send is that young people are capable of organizing themselves to make an influential change in the current American political system," he said.

"Considering I am your typical 'starving student,' I have little money to donate," he said. "I rely heavily on alternative methods to advocate my cause, including starting 'Democrats in 2006' on Facebook, painting 'Vote Democrat in 2006' on the back windshield of my '87 Honda Accord and word of mouth. Money helps, but so does free advertising."

MySpace's "Rock for Darfur" group has given students opportunities to reach out and help in an appealing way, concerts.

"In its most ambitious humanitarian campaign to date, MySpace is enlisting the support of musicians and members like you to help the people of Darfur [by sending] a message to the world that the crisis can and must end now," according to the site.

More than 50,000 MySpace members have joined the group.

Building robots: more than meets the A.I.

By Ryan Richardson
Collegian Staff

Popular science fiction allows people to believe that artificial intelligence springs forth fully-formed, capable of grandiose feats of calculated evil, dictated by inhuman logic. Although, for science fiction writers and movie producers, artificial intelligence is something entirely alien from normal thoughts and feelings, but they couldn't be farther from the truth.

Research into the development of artificial intelligence can have profound implications on what people know about human intelligence and learning, according to George Konidaris, a graduate student in the Autonomous Learning Laboratory, or ALL. Building a robot that can think and learn like a human requires a profound understanding of human processes of learning but can also yield insight into how the human mind works.

"Sometimes we have a stronger connection to neuroscience than we do to the rest of computer science," Konidaris said. His research has concentrated on using "reinforcement learning" to build artificial intelligence for robots. Reinforcement learning, one of the primary areas of interest at the Autonomous Learning Laboratory, is essentially building up skills and behaviors by creating a reward for certain behaviors, like when a child learns to pick up a pot by its handles after learning that picking it up by the base will burn.

"You tell it what's good and what's bad so it learns. It's an agent interacting with an environment," Konidaris said. Konidaris has worked with robots in a number of contexts, including building a robot that used reinforcement learning to figure out how to navigate a maze while at the University of Edinburgh. For Konidaris, creating autonomous robots has a much higher purpose than vacuuming floors, like the Roomba. It is about "understanding the nature of intelligence by attempting to synthesize it."

Reinforcement learning has several advantages over other forms of machine learning, primarily it allows artificial intelligences to develop a greater degree of flexibility and autonomy than simply programming fixed skills. Research into this area has led to a number of interesting questions, and as much as researchers at the ALL turn to neuroscience and psychology for inspiration, they have answered questions and brought new insights into those fields through the trial and error inherent in building new intelligences.

"Thought is very complex from the outside," said Konidaris. "And by starting from the inside the ALL isn't just teaching computers to learn but learning how our own brains function."

Man pleads guilty in U.S. bombings

Dhiren Barot, shown in an artist's impression above, said that he plotted to murder people in terrorist outrages in Britain and the United States.

By Jill Lawless
Associated Press Writer

LONDON — A British man identified by U.S. officials as a senior al-Qaida figure pleaded guilty Thursday to conspiracy to murder in a plot to bomb high-profile targets in the United States including the International Monetary Fund headquarters in Washington and the New York Stock Exchange.

"I plead guilty," Dhiran Barot, 34, said in a clear voice at London's high-security Woolwich Crown Court.

Prosecutors said the plot involved targets in both Britain and the United States. Other alleged targets included the World Bank headquarters in Washington, the Citigroup building in New York and the Prudential building in Newark, N.J.

Barot, a British citizen who was raised a Hindu before converting to Islam, was arrested in August 2004 amid a heightened security alert for financial institutions in the United States. Seven other men are due to face trial next year.

Prosecutor Edmund Lawson said Barot planned "to carry out explosions at those premises with no warning. They were plainly designed to kill as many people as possible."

U.S. officials claim Barot is a senior al-Qaida figure, known variously as Abu Issa al-Hindi, Abu Musa al-Hindi and Issa al-Britani, who scouted prominent financial targets in the United States at the behest of Osama bin Laden.

He was indicted last year in New York, along with two others, on charges of plotting to attack the buildings.

Under British law, domestic legal proceedings take precedence over a U.S. extradition attempt.

In Britain, Barot planned to pack three limousines with gas cylinders and explosives and detonate them in underground parking garages, Lawson said.

The "gas limos" plan, found on a computer, was "described by Mr Barot as the main cornerstone of attacks planned to take place in the U.K.," Lawson said.

He said the "back-to-back" attacks involved three other projects, including "the rough presentation for radiation or dirty-bomb projects."

A dirty bomb combines radioactive material with conventional explosives, though prosecutors did not offer detail on the components of the planned device.

Lawson said the dirty bomb was designed to cause "injury, fear, terror and chaos" although it was unlikely to kill anyone.

"The radiation project was designed, among other things, to affect some 500 people," Lawson said.

The clerk of the court told Barot he was charged with conspiracy to murder "the particulars of the offense being that on diverse days between Jan. 1, 2000 and Aug. 4, 2004, you conspired together with other persons unknown to murder other persons."

Barot, wearing a gray zip-up sweater and dark trousers and sporting a closely trimmed beard, stared intently ahead but betrayed no emotion as he entered his guilty plea.

By pleading guilty, Barot "makes no admission with regard to the involvement of any of his seven co-defendants in the conspiracy," Lawson said.

Lawson said plans outlining details of the attacks had been found on a computer after Barot's arrest in August 2004. He acknowledged that no funding had been received for Barot's projects, nor any vehicles or bomb-making materials acquired.

Judge Neil Butterfield deferred sentencing to a later date.

The judge ordered that 12 other charges faced by Barot — one of conspiracy to commit public nuisance, seven of making a record of information for terrorist purposes and four of possessing a record of information for terrorist purposes — be suspended.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVII
ISSUE 28

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Eric Athas
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Conti
PRODUCTION MANAGER Amanda Allen
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Sheryl Wolnik
ADVERTISING MANAGER Jamison Porter
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Virginia Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Morgan Rousseau
COPIES EDITOR Sean Duram
EDITORIAL EDITOR Kristen LaCasse
NEWS EDITOR Matt Bellistri
SPORTS EDITOR Rob Greenfield
CIRCULATION MANAGER Jeff Pentz
FINANCE MANAGER David Valade
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Theresa Furbis
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Phil Smoller
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Tim McCall
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alex Butler
ASSISTANT NEWS Anna Dollinitis
ASSISTANT NEWS Nicole Boonjakuakul
ASSISTANT SPORTS Danny Picard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jon Pelland
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Tucker Merrick
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Team Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC YEAR. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALLIE LIFE, AND THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1903. THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE BI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADCAST SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 1:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Eric Athas

COPY EDITOR
Kristen LaCasse

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Ginny Nichen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Chris Martin, Colin Nelson

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Correction:

On Oct. 11, 2006, the Collegian mistakenly reported that the Princeton Review listed UMass Amherst as the most violent school in the country in the article, "ISOM Hits Princeton Review." But the Princeton Review does not, in fact, have such ranking list category in any of its 200 books.

Also, the Collegian failed to report that the Princeton Review ranked UMass Amherst fourth on the list for "Best Professors."

Please Recycle your Daily Collegian Newspaper

U.S. unveils U.N. resolution on North Korea

BY EDITH M. LEDERER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS—The United States on Thursday introduced a new draft resolution in the Security Council to punish North Korea for its reported nuclear test and said it wants a vote on Friday.

Russia urged the United States not to rush the vote, saying Moscow still had differences and the United States should wait for the results of a flurry of high-level diplomacy. China backed Russia's call, saying Beijing would welcome more talks so the Security Council can send a united and forceful message to Pyongyang condemning the test.

After formally introducing the resolution in the Security Council, U.S. Ambassador John Bolton told reporters that Washington wants a vote Friday.

"I think the council should try to respond to a nuclear test within the same week that the test occurred," he said. "We're certainly in favor of keeping all the diplomatic channels open, but we also want swift action, and we shouldn't allow meetings, and more meetings ... to be an excuse for inaction."

The United States and Japan had initially hoped for a vote Thursday. But if Washington wants to get China and Russia — the two countries closest to North Korea — on board, a vote is likely to be delayed until next week.

China appeared to shy away from backing U.S. efforts to impose a travel ban and financial sanctions on the North, saying any U.N. action should focus on bringing its communist neighbor back to talks.

In Beijing, Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Liu Jianchao said North Korea should understand it had made a mistake but "punishment should not be the purpose" of any U.N. response.

U.N. action "should be conducive to the denuclearization of the Korean peninsula ... and the resumption of the talks," he told reporters. "It's necessary to express clearly to North Korea that ... the international community is opposed to this nuclear test."

Japan is imposing its own new sanctions against North Korea. The ruling Liberal Democratic Party approved several harsh measures Thursday, including limits on imports and a ban on all North Korean ships in Japanese waters.

Russian U.N. Ambassador Vitaly Churkin said a high-level Chinese representative was en route to Moscow for talks Friday and Saturday, and Russia's deputy foreign minister is in the region.

"So there is a lot of diplomatic activity going on and we hope it will produce a good product," he said.

A special envoy of Chinese President Hu Jintao met President Bush in Washington on Wednesday, and South Korean President Roh Moo-hyun is due Friday in Beijing for talks with China's top leaders, he said.

Like the original U.S. draft circulated Monday, the new one would condemn the nuclear test, demand that North Korea immediately return to six-party talks without precondition and impose sanctions for Pyongyang's "flagrant disregard" of the council's appeal. It adds new words demanding that North Korea "not conduct any further nuclear test or launch of a ballistic missile."

The new draft remains under Chapter 7 of the U.N. Charter, which includes a range of measures to deal with threats to international peace and conflicts from breaking diplomatic relations to imposing naval blockades and taking military action.

While China says North Korea should face tough action, it wants sanctions to be limited primarily to the North's nuclear program.

South Korean protesters stage an anti-U.S. rally, demanding talks between the United States and North Korea, near the U.S. embassy in Seoul, yesterday.

Wang reiterated that sanctions should be limited to the nonmilitary measures authorized under Article 41 of the U.N. Charter, which include economic penalties, breaking diplomatic relations or banning air travel.

The revised U.S. draft makes no mention of Article 41, and maintains some military sanctions.

It again requires all member states to prevent the sale or transfer of arms, luxury goods, and material and technology which could contribute to North Korea's nuclear, ballistic missile or other weapons of mass destruction-related programs. In a new proposal, the items subject to sanctions would be set out in an annex to the resolution, or come from a country's own list, or be determined by a new Security Council committee to monitor implementation of sanctions.

The new draft would impose a travel ban on people supporting North Korea's nuclear, ballistic missile and other weapons-related programs – a Japanese proposal.

The North will consider increased U.S. pressure "a declaration of war," RI Kong Son, vice spokesman for North Korea's Foreign Ministry, said in an interview with AP Television News in Pyongyang. He said North Korea would take unspecified "physical countermeasures."

Song Il Ho, a North Korean envoy to Japan, gave a similar warning to Tokyo. "We will take strong countermeasures," he told Kyodo News Agency.

Since Pyongyang announced it conducted its first test Monday, there have been daily South Korean and Japanese news reports that the North is preparing another.

On Thursday, the South Korean newspaper Munhwa Ilbo quoted an unidentified source familiar with North Korean affairs as saying a second test would occur in two or three days.

South Korean scientists have been scrambling for signs of radioactivity that would confirm Monday's underground test. Han Seung-jae, an official at the Korea Institute of Nuclear Safety, said experts were still unsure the North had tested a nuclear device.

"So far, we have not detected any abnormal level of radioactivity" in South Korea, he said.

Japanese military planes have also been monitoring for radioactivity in the atmosphere but have reported no abnormal readings.

North Korea has been demanding direct talks with the United States, but Bush refused to agree to such a meeting in a news conference Wednesday, arguing that Pyongyang would be more likely to listen to the protests of many nations.

Bush added that the United States was ready to defend its allies in the region, but that it would also try to use diplomacy to deal with North Korea.

Images released of missing University of Vermont student

The video still image (above) shows Michelle Gardner-Quinn who was last seen in Burlington, Vt. on Oct. 7, 2006 with an unidentified man.

BURLINGTON, Vt.—As the investigation into the disappearance of a University of Vermont senior entered its sixth day, police on Thursday released still video images of the woman and the man she was last seen walking with, saying he is a "significant focus" of the investigation.

Michelle Gardner-Quinn, 21, of Arlington, Va., was last seen Saturday shortly after 2:30 a.m. walking back to campus after a night out at downtown bars with friends. Police said she was walking with a man whose cell phone she had borrowed.

Police Chief Thomas Tremblay said investigators had questioned the man and searched a home near Richmond. He declined to identify him and would not say whether he was a suspect.

"He still is a significant focus because we are not satisfied," Tremblay said. "We have no evidence at this time that suggests a criminal offense. We're not close to an arrest."

Police on Thursday requested information from anyone who may have seen them together. The images were from a camera on the building of a nearby jewelry store.

Gardner-Quinn was reported missing Saturday night when she didn't show up for dinner with her parents, who were visiting.

Police searched elsewhere but would not disclose the locations.

Associated Press

YouTube faces trouble with copyright materials

YOUTUBE from page 1

a lot of instances like that," said Michael McGuire, a technology analyst for Gartner Inc. "It's going to be a constant game of cat and mouse."

YouTube did not provide further details on the technology, which it expects to roll out by the end of the year.

Some analysts doubt the screening technology will be foolproof. For example, detecting someone singing a copyright song on a homemade video could be difficult because the sound would not exactly match the original recording.

"It's impossible to be completely effective," said Josh Bernoff, a digital video analyst with Forrester Research. "The devil's in the details."

YouTube's final product could resemble a system developed by Audible Magic Inc., which has compiled electronic fingerprints for more than 4 million recordings to compare to content posted on iMesh, an online file-sharing application.

Another video-sharing site, Guba LLC, which hosts user-generated videos as well as Hollywood movies that can be streamed or downloaded for a fee, uses a different content filtering technology dubbed "Johnny" that has been endorsed by major film studios.

The application tracks the transition of images in a video, like a series of snapshots, to build a signature used as a basis for comparison.

Banned content can be matched against Guba's video database and flagged, regardless of whether its format, resolution or file size are different than the original, said Bart Myers, Guba's senior vice president of product development.

"The beauty of Johnny is that Johnny doesn't care," he said.

The company claims the technology is more than 90 percent accurate with video clips that exceed three minutes. But the shorter the clip, the harder it is to spot a match.

Some sites such as Microsoft Corp.'s video-sharing hub Soapbox don't use any technology to filter what gets uploaded. But that appears to be changing.

In a statement, Rob Bennett, general manager of MSN's entertainment and video services unit, said the company is developing technologies to protect content owners.

Other sites figure to follow.

"We expect that all of our partners in this space are going to implement state-of-the-art content-filtering technology," said Michael Nash, a senior vice president at Warner Music Group.

Wikipedia's credibility is debated

BY WES SPICER
THE AUBURN PLAINSMAN (AUBURN U.)

(U-WIRE) AUBURN, Ala. — Wikipedia, a free Internet-based encyclopedia, has grown immensely during the past few years. With nearly 1.5 million articles in its English version, the user-run encyclopedia is making its way to college students who are using it as a research tool for class assignments.

However, some professors doubt Wikipedia's credibility as an information search engine.

"I think it varies as to what the professors do or don't like," said Jimmy Wales, founder of the Wikimedia Foundation, which runs Wikipedia.

"By and large, we get overwhelmingly positive responses from most professors," he said. "There are a few (who don't like it), but I think the real key is using Wikipedia appropriately as you would use any other resource appropriately."

Wales graduated from Auburn University with a bachelor's degree in finance before moving on to the University of Alabama for his master's degree in finance.

Time Magazine named Wales to its "Top 100," an annual list of the most influential people in the world.

Wikipedia was started from scratch. It is run by volunteers who submit roughly 6,000 articles a day. Because 3,500 are deleted immediately for various reasons, Wales estimates only 1,000 survive to be added.

Wikipedia's reliability and credibility is often a topic of debate because users don't have to register with the site or need any special qualifications to edit articles or create their own.

Judith Sheppard, associate professor of the department communication and journalism, said she doubts Wikipedia's legitimacy.

"That automatically says to me there's no quality to it at all. Why would anyone trust this?" Sheppard said.

"I've seen some pretty good stuff (on Wikipedia)," Sheppard said. "I've seen some things that looked like they were submitted by experts ... everything seemed pretty accurate in most cases. But 'most' doesn't cut it when you're looking for a research tool or a source."

Sheppard told students in her advanced reporting class not to use Wikipedia as a source because she believes it is not trustworthy.

In December 2005, the science journal "Nature" compared Wikipedia with Encyclopedia Britannica. The journal used scientists to compare some of the two encyclopedias' articles on natural sciences.

The journal concluded that the "difference in accuracy was not particularly great," although Britannica is now debating the validity of the study.

Sheppard said she sees the enjoyment in Wikipedia, but still wouldn't rely on it as a credible source.

"I consider (Wikipedia) fun but never anything I would rely on for journalistic work where I'd be held to the fire for having inaccuracy in my sources," Sheppard said.

"It's an open community. There are several, hundreds really, active users that are constantly monitoring the site," Wales said.

Wales said when someone begins posting malicious things on pages, Wikipedia blocks that person's IP address — a number used to identify specific computers — and that person can no longer post information on the site.

"It's really not much of a problem," Wales said. "Most people don't do malicious things. People may goof around once or twice, but in terms of really, full-scale malicious entries, that's very rare."

Aside from Wikipedia, Wales has created a new project that only universities can access. The project, which is now up and running on the Internet, is called "Students Wikia," where students at universities gather online to submit articles.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

THE CAMPUS SCENE

A WEEKLY LOOK AT THE UNIVERSITY LIFESTYLE

MELISSA D'AMICO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The average woman is 5'4" tall, weighing about 145 pounds, and wears a dress size of 11 to 14. So why then, do so many young women aspire to obtain the unrealistic 6'0" tall, 101 pound, size four body of the widely know Barbie doll?

In an attempt to achieve what they perceive to be the perfect body, many women turn to dieting and exercise. In some cases this focus can lead to the development of an eating disorder, and even death. Research documented by Anorexia Nervosa and Related Eating Disorders Inc. (ANRED), a collection of eating disorder recourses, said about 1 percent of female adolescents have anorexia, 4 percent suffer from bulimia, and about 50 percent of people who have been anorexic develop bulimic patterns.

As described by Nova Online, anorexia nervosa is described as "the incessant pursuit of thinness, an intense fear of gaining weight, a distorted body image, and a refusal to maintain a normal body weight."

Nova Online describes bulimia nervosa as "episodes of binge eating and purging that occurs an average of twice a week for at least three months. Binge eaters devour an excessive amount of food in a short period of time, during which they feel a general loss of control." Bulimics may then vomit, exercise or use laxatives to get rid of the calories they just consumed.

Although anorexia and bulimia are the more widely known forms of eating disorders, they are not the only ones. One of the most common eating disorders includes binge eating disorder (BED). BED is a more recently described disorder in which a person binges similarly to bulimia but does not purge to avoid gaining weight. Like bulimics, those suffering from BED experience a lack of control and binge on an average of twice a week.

Although many people believe the majority of those suffering from an eating disorder suffer from anorexia, both bulimia and BED are more common than anorexia. According to ANRED, about 5 to 8 percent of the obese population suffers from BED.

Women are not the only ones who suffer from eating disorders. The number of men suffering from eating disorders appears to be increasing. In the 1980s it was determined that for every 10 to 15 women with anorexia or bulimia, there was one male. However, the American Journal of Psychiatry has new research findings that show for every four females with anorexia there is one male, and for every eight to 11 females with bulimia, there is one male.

A study released by the University of Central Florida in May 2004 said men who watched television commercials with muscular actors felt unhappy about their physiques. Researchers suggested that the need for muscularity within society could have a significant effect on eating disorders and steroid abuse in men.

ANRED discusses that much like the Barbie doll image targeted toward young girls, there are now many more action figures, such as Wolverine, whose images are targeted toward young boys. However, if Wolverine were life-size, his biceps would be 32 inches around, while the average male bicep measures 13 inches around.

Athletes, many of which appear to have lean, in-shape physiques, may actually suffer from eating disorders. ANRED describes athletes with eating disorders in saying "a person who wants to lose weight, get fit, excel in his or her sport, but then develops obsessive thoughts about food, and training, and ultimately losing control and ends up with a body and spirit ravaged by starvation, binge eating, purging, and frantic compulsive exercise."

Participants in sports which emphasize appearance and lean bodies have a greater risk of developing eating disorders than sports which require muscle mass and bulk said ANRED. These sports include ballet, gymnastics, running, rowing and horse racing. Even wrestlers, who may be seen as strong and bulky, may starve themselves to reach a lower weight class, and then binge on carbohydrates before a match, after they have made weight.

In a study recorded by ANRED involving 695 male and female athletes, it was found that many athletes showed signs of bulimic attitudes and behavior. One-third of the group was preoccupied with food. Approximately one-quarter binged at least once a week. Fifteen percent thought they were overweight, despite the fact they were not. Almost 12 percent feared losing control, or actually did lose control, when they ate. More than 5 percent ate until they were gorged and nauseated.

In this same study, 5.5 percent vomited to feel better after a binge and to control weight. Almost 4 percent abused laxatives. Twelve percent fasted for 24 hours or more after a binge, and about 1.5 percent used enemas to purge.

"Another research project done by the NCAA looked at the number of student athletes who had experienced an eating disorder in the previous two years. Ninety-three percent of the reported problems were in women's sports. The sports that had the highest number of participants with eating disorders, in descending order, were women's cross country, women's gymnastics, women's swimming, and women's track and field events," according to ANRED. "The male sports with the highest number of participants with eating disorders were wrestling and cross country track."

Disordered eating can have significant negative health effects for many athletes.

According to a study published in the 2006 American Journal of Sports Medicine, "female athletes who restrict calories to keep weight down seem to be vulnerable to leg pain, stress fractures, and other injuries that cause people to miss practice and competitions."

For many female athletes, a significant decrease in body fat can lead to the absence of menstruation, which may result in caloric deficiencies, and decreased bone mass. If severe enough, this pattern can lead to what is known as the "female athlete triad," a group of three related problems that include "eating disorders and low energy, menstrual disorders and absent periods, and weak bones or even osteoporosis, which until recently was seen primarily in post menopausal elderly women," reported ANRED.

In a May 1997 Newsweek report, Exercise Physiologist Lew Lyons reported that "Women with well-defined belly muscles may have as little as 6 percent body fat. The healthy range is 15 to 23 percent. Menses stop when fat falls below 10 percent. The associated low levels of estrogen can lead to osteoporosis, even in 20-year-olds."

Within the past 20 years, with the expansion of computers and the Internet, an entirely new aspect in the world of eating disorders has been created.

This is the world of pro-eating disorder communities and Web sites.

Simple searches on the Internet will reveal numerous pro-eating disorder Web sites. Many of these Web sites have warnings before you are able to enter the Web site which claims they are not trying to make people develop eating disorders, and they are simply a support community. Despite this caution, many of the sites contain tips for fasting, purging, how to trick others into thinking you don't have an eating disorder, and lists of "safe foods." These foods include things that are low in calories and fat, which they believe to be OK to eat.

Pro-eating disorder Web sites frequently contain links to what members refer to as "thinspiration." Thinspiration may include photos of skinny and/or anorexic models, celebrities, song lyrics and quotes. Many pro-eating disorder Web sites create personas for their eating disorders, as an attempt to identify their disorder more like a person or a friend, rather than a disease. Names such as Ana and Mia are given to the terms Anorexia and Bulimia, and are frequently used by members while discussing their disorders.

In order to make their Web sites more of a community, many people who are pro-eating disorders began to wear specific colored bracelets to signify to others they have and support eating disorders. A red bracelet signifies anorexia, and purple signifies bulimia. Although each separate community may produce their own variation of bracelets, they are all basically the same, and are all meant to create a type of eating disorder pride.

A 2005 study conducted by Dr. Rebeka Peebles of Stanford University found that 40 percent of teenagers with eating disorders have visited pro-eating disorder Web sites. The study also found that 25 percent visited the sites regularly, and only 34 percent visited the sites to discuss how to overcome their disorder.

In an attempt to work against the media's presentation of models as having the ideal bodies and to protect the health of models, the regional government of Madrid, Spain, which sponsors a "Fashion Week" show, has developed restrictions that will ban many models from walking the runway for the show. "Fashion Week" is a fashion industry event which lasts four to 10 days and is used to showcase designers' fall or spring collections.

These restrictions were introduced after a 22-year-old Uruguayan model, Luisel Ramos, reportedly died of heart failure after coming off the runway during Fashion Week in Montevideo. The restrictions say that in order for a model to walk the runway, they must have a body mass index (BMI) of at least 18.

BMI is an indicator of the percentage of body fat on a person, and can be calculated using a person's height and weight. As a result of this restriction, over 30 percent of models have been denied working at "Fashion Week." The Center of Disease Control and Prevention indicates that a BMI of 18 is still considered underweight, and a normal BMI for adults is 18.5 to 24.9.

Although in the past eating disorders were viewed as a choice, they have come to be recognized and defined as diseases within the medical field. Without treatment, eating disorders can lead to severe medical and psychological complications, and even death.

Some of the more significant medical complications include cardiac arrest, kidney damage, loss of muscle mass, permanent loss of bone mass, anemia and low blood sugar. BED, which may lead to obesity, can also increase the risk of diabetes, cardiovascular disease and bowel, breast and reproductive cancers.

Psychological problems that can result from eating disorders include depression, anxiety, compulsive and obsessive behaviors, feelings of isolation and extreme fear of discovery.

Many treatment options are available for people of all ages who suffer from eating disorders. Treatment options may include hospitalization to prevent death and other severe medical problems, therapy, group counseling, nutritional counseling and support groups.

If you or someone you know is suffering, or believes they may be suffering, from an eating disorder, treatment and information is available through the Mental Health Department at University Health Services.

The average woman is 145 lbs., 5'4", and wears a size 11-14 dress.	A life sized Barbie would be 101 lbs. 6'0", and would wear a size 4 dress.	1% of adolescent females are anorexic. 4% of adolescent females are bulimic.	5-8% of the obese population suffers from BOD.	For every 4 females with anorexia there is 1 male.	For every 8-11 females with bulimia there is 1 male.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 13, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." - Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

CASUAL FRIDAY

Weekend laws to live by

Chris Eckel

So it's Friday morning, or more likely, Friday afternoon. You're probably skipping classes right now because you're feeling less than spring-fresh after last night. Hey, I'm not judging – you're reading the words of a guy who never schedules Friday classes because he knows better.

We're barely a month into the school year, but the uptown scene is definitely going strong. Wednesday is the new Thursday, and so on. People are up there every night looking for something special. They want liquor, loving, maybe a bit of both.

Yet high hopes for a good time are often dashed by a blatant misunderstanding of what constitutes the night series of moves uptown. Uptown is a choose-your-adventure, and if you make the wrong choice, you'll probably be hung-over, lonely and broke. With that in mind, as a public service for you first-timers, or even you longtime veterans who are a little rusty, here's the quick and easy guide to uptown.

First off, enough with the popped collars and sideways hats, fellas. You are not Pharrell. In case you're confused: he has supermodels, an airplane, a deal with Louis Vuitton, and has made a few records. You have model airplanes, torn jeans from American Apparel and couldn't make a legit mix CD to save your life. Dress accordingly.

We all know "Antonio's" has the best, funkiest toppings of any pizza place – ever. I swear by the steak quesadilla, and I know you all have your own favorites. It's pretty much in the Bible that it's a sin to get a slice of plain cheese.

However, just like the "I before E except after C" rule, there is an exception to this law. Definitely do not get anything too crazy after a full night at the bars; neither cilantro, nor pesto, go too well with alcohol. This rule won't keep you from a nagging headache the next morning, but your stomach will definitely thank you.

If you're planning on going to "ABC Upstairs" at some point in the night, go there first. The beer there is more expensive and a bit better, and it's always good form to get started with the good stuff. Once your taste buds are drunk you won't be able to tell the difference between "Natty Ice" and "Cristal."

Plus, as anybody who has seen the evidence on Youtube can tell you, drunks do not make good ping pong players. Best case scenario, you get destroyed in front of the cute girl from Sociology 100. Worst case, you need to explain to the staff why your flying paddle took out half the Grey Goose bottles and why you shouldn't have to pay for them. Good luck with that argument, especially considering one of the bartenders teaches in the UMass Legal Studies department.

Uptown is like any casino: you're better off leaving your credit card at home. The only thing worse than waking up with a hangover is waking up and realizing you bought everyone in the bar a round because you "loved them all, man," even those of them you had never met before. Just bring enough cash for drinks and dining, and you'll be all set. The only plastic you need uptown is your ID.

Thinking about driving home drunk? Think again. There are far too many cops cruising up and down Amherst Center just waiting to bust anybody who gets in their car and drives away. On the other hand, if you want to rob a bank or streak across town, (not that I would condone either, of course) the weekend is the best time to do it: every cop in the Happy Valley is too busy uptown to notice.

I'm going out on a limb here, because I know there are a lot of Bud Light fans, but why on earth is anybody ordering Bud Light in a bottle uptown? Bud Light is good for pitchers, good for kegs and good for barbecues. Bud Light at the bar for $4 a bottle is not so good. If you're going to spend that kind of money on a bottle, step up your game, pony over another quarter, and get a Killian's or some other decent beer.

Follow these tidbits of advice, and you should essentially be fine. There are many other lessons to be learned, of course, but I don't want to give them all away; half the fun is discovering them yourselves. The other half of your uptown experience is up to you: make the most of it.

Chris Eckel is a Collegian columnist

On the other hand, if you want to rob a bank or streak across town, (not that I would condone either, of course) the weekend is the best time to do it: every cop in the Happy Valley is too busy uptown to notice.

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?

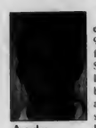
WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU!

THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS EDITORIAL COMIC ARTISTS!

GET YOUR ARTWORK PUBLISHED!

Send an e-mail to: editorial@dailycollegian.com.

Friday morning hangover



Andy Smith

I left my dorm room bright and early last Friday morning for my 9 o'clock class. As I was waiting for the elevator my neighbor, Jen Sullivan, came around the corner, looking more dead than alive. The bags under her eyes were as noticeable as a mustard stain on a white shirt. Her hair was messily thrown back in a ponytail, but it didn't look like she cared. She was dressed in a black sweatshirt and grey sweatpants on a day the temperature was supposed to be in the 70s.

"Long night?" I asked her.

"You have no idea," she responded.

"Did you go out last nigh?" I asked.

"Yeah, I got back really late," she said.

"How late is late?"

"Four in the morning."

My jaw dropped. She proceeded to tell me her adventures from Thirsty Thursday. Apparently, she went to three different dorms in Southwest, and all of them had alcohol. The original plan was to go spend time with some friends, have a few drinks, then end the night and get some rest. She explained how she didn't want to drink heavily, but it just ended up that way. Her friends told her she almost passed out in the last dorm, so they brought her back to her room.

When people ask you why you are eating so much all of a sudden, just say, "I'm drinking tonight." They should understand you then.

"So how do you feel this morning?" I asked.

"Like I got hit by a bus," she replied. "That was such a stupid thing to do. I'm never gonna drink again. At least not on Thursday nights."

Thirsty Thursday is a staple around college campuses. It is a way to celebrate the semi-completion of a tough academic week, or it can be the pre-game celebration for Friday and Saturday.

The problems with starting the weekend early: having a class early Friday morning and having an exam the next day. Those two occurrences could take the fun out of anyone's Thursday night. If you have one of those, stay in. Do something productive, like read, study or even watch a movie. Maybe you can do some physical activity, like go to Boyden and work out or run around campus.

If you do go out drinking on Thursday nights, here's what you should do:

1. Eat lots of food. However, do it at least an hour before you go out. This is your one legitimate excuse to eat like a pig. Go to Berkshire, Franklin or one of the other dining halls and consume food like you have starved yourself for a week. When people ask you why you are eating so much all of a sudden, just say, "I'm drinking tonight." They should understand you then. The food will increase the time it takes for the alcohol to effect you. That way, you can still go out, have a few drinks and not regret it in the morning.

2. Invest in Powerade or Gatorade. This is for the morning after. When you wake up feeling like the dirt on the bottom of a shoe, Powerade and Gatorade will help you. They both have electrolytes that can decrease those pesky hangovers. Speaking from personal experience, both of those help a lot when you wake up the next day after spending the night out having fun. I drink a Powerade right when I wake up, and two hours later I feel like a million bucks. It's definitely worth the investment.

3. Unless you have a designated driver who can drive you home, try to stay around where you live. It might be fun to walk to Sylvan from Southwest to party with some friends and have a good time, but the walk back is a pain, especially if you are drunk. That has bad news written all over it.

If you know you are going to get trashed, stay in your dorm area. Then, if by the end of the night you can't walk, your friends won't mind walking you back to your dorm. If you were on the other side of campus and you couldn't walk, your drunken friends might be more inclined to leave you on their floor or on their couch until the morning. If you have class early the next morning, you're screwed.

I guess the moral of the story is: don't end up like Jen Sullivan. If you have no classes on Friday, or classes late in the day on Friday, by all means go out and have a great Thirsty Thursday. However, if you have an early morning class on Friday, be smart about the choices you make.

It might mean that you stay in while your friends go out and have fun. So what? Out of 24,000 students, I'm sure you won't be the only one doing it. In a worst case scenario: you can always go out on day and Saturday night.

Andy Smith is a Collegian columnist

Words of wisdom

Debra Capellari

There's a fact I know most of us college students hate to admit; our parents actually might know something. For real, we're out on our own now, living the student life, following no curfews, skipping a lot of classes and drinking a lot of questionable liquids. We have absolutely moved past the high school dramas of suffering through endless questionings of our whereabouts, our actions and our, sometimes, abysmal grades.

We've made it – we're finally free. However, the recent long weekend could have proved to be very interesting, as I'm sure a good deal of students returned home for a needed break from campus life.

So back to the 'hood some of us went, mainly for home cooked meals, a chance to do laundry in a washing machine that actually works and our own beds to sleep in. And I don't know about the rest of you, but I definitely got more than I bargained for.

Upon my arrival there, I came face-to-face with the parental wisdom I had to face everyday during high school. I realized: I have no problem admitting that, while I still think I know everything, my parents do have some good advice every now and then. So I figured, why not share the parental wisdom with the rest of you know-it-alls?

If nothing else, it's a nice trip down memory lane, back to the days where you had to pretend you were listening while you were really focusing your eyes on the wall behind your parents and thinking about what you and your friends were going to do during the upcoming weekend. So here are some of the basic life lessons that we should all remember, no matter if we know everything or not.

1. The gas pedal is on the right and the brake is on the left. The clutch is on the far left. Confusing your pedals leads to dangerous situations. Make sure you know which is which.

2. Just paying a speeding ticket doesn't make it go away. Massachusetts has something called insurance points. Sure, you can pay your ticket, and then enjoy the rise in costs on your next bill.

3 Excessive use of profanity is unnecessary, except when watching sports or discussing the present political administration. Only in those cases are you allowed to swear like a sailor and not get reprimanded for doing so.

Listen to your elders. That way you have a good argument when it's your turn to speak.

4. Doing something right the first time really undermines the phrase "practice makes perfect." Disproving a phrase that's been around since before you were born apparently isn't an accomplishment.

5. Listen to your elders. That way you have a good argument when it's your turn to speak. If you don't pay attention to what they say, you won't be able to fight back competently.

6. If it's not broken, don't worry about it. If it is broken and you can't buy a new one, make a friend who knows how to fix things, and do whatever is necessary to keep that friend in your life.

7. If no one else is laughing, it's probably not funny. Actually, you're quite possibly making a fool of yourself. You probably should have quit while you were ahead.

8. Excessive talking doesn't make you sound smarter. Really, it makes you sound like you talk excessively. Keep things clear and concise. Usually, people who talk less have better things to say when they do speak.

9. If you don't have something nice to say, honesty is just as good. Honesty is usually the best policy, as a matter of fact. If you can be gentle about it, that's even better. But tact isn't a necessity.

10. Don't use the phrase "life's tough, get a helmet." It's inconsiderate, and in most situations, a helmet won't do much. Sometimes, you just have to crash and burn to learn something.

Don't get me wrong – these aren't all of the lessons my parents have taught me over the years, just a few of my favorites. I'm betting that other parents out there have taught a few good lessons as well. Keeping a running list keeps me on my toes and on the lookout for more lessons to add.

Chalk it up to doing something to pass the time, and laugh at the lessons your parents tried to teach you. Of course, you still know everything, but it couldn't hurt to allow for the possibility, that just maybe, parents do get through to their children.

Debra Capellari is a Collegian columnist.

YOU CAN'T EVEN FEED YOUR OWN PEOPLE! WHY THE HECK ARE YOU DOING NUCLEAR TESTS?
S KOREA
OH, YEAH? WHAT IF SOME SEXUAL PREDATOR CONGRESSMAN IN WASHINGTON GETS HIS FINGER ON THE BUTTON?
N.KOREA

Enjoy single status

Caroline Moss

You know what really grinds my gears? That "campus couple;" the boy and girl who frequently make out in front of the doors to your first class. You know who I'm talking about. He goes by the name Baby Cub Cutsie-Wootsie and she's Cutie-Monkey-Pie. Their away messages are overwhelmed with "<3"s and Coldplay lyrics, dates of anniversaries and countdowns until the next time they see each other. My friends are guilty and so are yours.

Don't get me wrong, I'm a firm believer that what the world really does need now is love (sweet love). In no means am I insulting the art of a great relationship, but double-you-tee-eff? Is it really necessary to embrace each other the way you would before sending your boyfriend or girlfriend off to war when you part ways for class? I think not.

This serves as a painful reminder for those of you who have no one to text message 90 times a day, that when Akon sang "Lonely," he was calling you out.

Maybe I sound it, but I'm not bitter. I cringe at the time in my life where I chose to offend and abuse my own pet peeve. But when you're single, the young and in love stand out like the girl who wears black on Valentine's Day and runs in her LJ (live journal, duh).

Here at the Zoo, it seems as though relationships are everywhere we turn. On Facebook.com, the reputable source that documents every move you make and every breath you take, over 500 people at UMass are "in a relationship."

The 50th and last search page stops at the letter "L" meaning that people in relationships whose last names begin with M-Z aren't counted when you conduct an alphabetical search. Which means a bunch of people are getting some. This serves as a painful reminder for those of you who have no one to text message 90 times a day, that when Akon sang "Lonely," he was calling you out.

Besides the obvious perks of having a significant other, the college relationship surely must have its downfalls. Whether long-distance or the distance between Baker and Grayson, each has its set of problems.

They're never there, or they're always there. They don't care what you do, or they care too much. You're too far to ever go out on a date, or your dates have been reduced to a guest swipe at the Oak Room. Can you take a picture with a member of the opposite sex without Mr. Baby Cub seeing it and starting a brawl? How about balancing time between your friends and time spent alone as a couple? Unnecessary drama lurks.

Yet, even though we cringe at the affluent PDA's on campus, I think at one point or another, we have wished to be one of the 500-plus people in a relationship. But like everything else, there are two sides to the single life as well.

For one, it's college, and this happens to be a college with a lot of other people in attendance. As that old saying goes, why share your uncomfortable twin sized bed with one person when you could share it with everyone? Why tie yourself down while you're here when it's likely that we'll be tied down to someone for the rest of our lives?

Maybe it's because I've never been in love that I'm allowed to so easily detach myself from the idea behind the intensity I see in some of the couples on campus. Maybe it's the fear of putting myself in a situation in which I am wholeheartedly committed to something meaningless.

Relationships, and love, can be great things, but people who are single should enjoy the status and the fact there's no one to answer to. We shouldn't just latch on to the idea of love unless it really is love, and be content with our lives regardless of the absence of someone in our beds.

Life shouldn't be about the time you spend single waiting around for your next true love to show up. Until it's something real and sober standing in front of me, I won't be looking for something or someone to bide my time. The way I see it, this is my four year bachelorette party, and the night is still young.

Caroline Moss is a Collegian columnist.

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT!

(550 WORD LIMIT AND INCLUDE YOUR NAME.)

VOICE YOUR OPINIONS TO THE WORLD!

Send an e-mail to: editorial@dailycollegian.com, or go to: dailycollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 13, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Punk show rocks NoHo

By Dave Master and Sam Rosenberg
Collegian Staff

Upon entering Pearl Street's downstairs showroom on Wednesday night, the multicolored lights reflected off of the golden gong that rested behind dual drum sets. As the audience waited for the first band to begin, loud droning drove into the audience's eardrums like an ambulance headed for hell.

After an eternity of waiting, a guitarist straight from ZZ Top (just bearing more tattoos) and a bass player vaguely resembling some high school math teacher, took to the stage. They tuned their instruments and played a few loud, nonsensical notes as if in a musical séance. They provoked a spirit known by many all over the world. His name was Elvis, and on this night he inhabited the body of drummer Dale Crover. The band was a Melvins side-project known simply as PORN.

As Crover entered the stage after the rest of PORN, he picked up a rather large mallet, leading the ceremonial séance at gong-point. He wound up and hit the gong in unison with the band as the crowd cheered with evil in their eyes. Legend has it that Crover purchased the gong to console himself after the suicide of his good friend, Kurt Cobain.

While PORN may not be the most musically interesting band, their oh-so redundant stoner-rock attack and technical difficulties gave Crover the perfect opportunity to demonstrate his God-like drumming prowess. The whole set was thoroughly punctuated with extended drum solos, where Crover's PORN band mates took the back seat and watched in awe as the drums thundered.

When PORN finished their set, Crover took the mic and revved the audience with, "Do you like rock 'n' roll?" The crowd cheered, and for the rest of the night the performing bands gave them what they came for.

Next to take the stage was Reykjavik, Iceland's Ghostigital, a two-piece electronic combo, who made attendees regret arriving at the show sober. The social comment of the group's set was impossible to miss, as the singer delivered monologues in his frenzied, broken English.

"Ask before you put your ass in my face," demanded the spastic front man, acting as a mouthpiece for the sofas of the world. Behind the microphone he convulsed, making the audience bite their tongues. Though the lyrics were simply spoken over heavy loops, the front man's utterances were a melodic and rhythmic speech, like nothing Northampton had ever heard before. By the end of Ghostigital's set, they had made a few enemies in the crowd, an uprising quickly smothered by Big Business' entry.

Big Business is composed of Coady Willis on drums and Jared Warren on bass/vocals. Both have histories in well-known Seattle bands, such as, the Murder City Devils and Tight Bros From Way Back When. Willis inhabited the drum-set next to Crover's, which further increased the anticipation of the empty drum-set.

Big Business was able to inspire a minor mosh pit mid-set, thanks to their heavy, alcohol-friendly grooves and ruthless rhythms. When the set began to lag, Crover grabbed his axe and chopped away through a few of Big Business' otherwise uninteresting songs. Sweat dripped from Warren's rag of hair as his fingers ripped through the strings of his bass, as he melted in his black, monk robe.

Warren and Willis had not even finished their set as Big Business before being joined by Buzz Osborne and Crover, to become the Melvins. Crover and Willis began simultaneously hammering quarter notes on their respective kick drums, then pummeling full-throttle into a unison drum-groove. Osborne stalked about his side of the stage, marching in place, his wild shock of gray hair standing feet above his head in electrified glory.

After a few minutes of the dual-drum intro, the band kicked into "The Talking Horse," the opening track on their new LP, "Senile Animal." The ultra-distorted, grooved-out and bass heavy kick-off indicated what would be coming in the remainder of their set. Osborne handed vocal duties to Warren for the first song, swiftly reclaiming his lyrical throne for most of the night.

The stand-out song of the performance was "Revolve," from 1994's "Stoner Witch." The hard rockin' tour de force was reanimated like Frankenstein with the addition of a second drummer. Crover and Willis switching off on fills with perfect ease, never dropping or missing a beat.

Osborne's feet never once touched the ground as he ripped through his trademark extended solo during the song's final bridge. At the end of the song, the crowd smoked like fire as they cheered at the cinders left behind by "Revolve."

The climax of the night hit when drummers Crover and Willis took the stage in a drum duel – a battle where the fate of the world rested on the sticks in their hands. They conversed between drum sets, through ruthless double-bass drum kicks and rapid-fire snare drum hits, pelting the audience with their fury.

Though it may not have rained hell-fire, it did rain. As the crowd converged on the outside street, pelted by rain drops, most stood in a Melvins-induced stupor, brains rattled as their minds tried to remember the way home.

Buzz Osborne of The Melvins strums away in a past performance. The Melvins performed at Pearl Street on Wednesday night.

A Musical Weekend

Indigo Girls head to Calvin

By Stephanie McPherson
Collegian Correspondent

1985 marked the beginning of an incredible journey for Amy Ray and Emily Saliers of Atlanta, Ga. This was the year they came together to form the Indigo Girls. Twenty years and 10 albums later, the beautiful harmonies, earthy acoustic guitar and social commentaries of the Girls are yet again on tour, promoting their newest album "Despite Our Differences." And on Saturday night, they will be appearing at the Calvin Theatre in Northampton.

"It's all about living in the moment that you're in and trying to make it better than the moment that came before" says Amy Ray on the Indigo Girls' longtime success. In 1989, the Girls released their first album, and with it came their first hit on MTV, "Closer to Fine," a sort of anthem for all those who are attempting, one step at a time, to make their lives that much better, singing that "the best thing you've ever done for me is to help me take my life less seriously, it's only life after all."

Many of the Girls' songs deal with spiritual issues, such as "Closer to Fine" or "Galileo," a song about reincarnation, contemplating how long it will take "till all souls get it right." However, they do not limit themselves, singing about love, prejudices, social issues (they collaborated with Pink for a commentary on President Bush in the song "Dear Mr. President"), and life in general.

Falling into the category of folk music, acoustic guitars and keyboards make up the background while the almost angelic voice of Emily Saliers is contrasted by the rougher, but still lovely, voice of Amy Ray, combined and blended into perfect harmony that is characteristic of, and fairly unique to, the Indigo Girls.

Along with making great music, the Indigo Girls are highly into activism. Their Web site, IndigoGirls.com, has links detailing their involvement in many groups and causes, including Honor the Earth, whose mission is to "create awareness and support for Native environmental issues and to develop needed financial and political resources for the survival of sustainable Native communities."

The Girls' are also actively involved in raising awareness and funds for the reparation and clean-up of Hurricane Katrina. Also on their site are the URL's and summaries of many groups dedicated to help New Orleans and all those affected by Katrina.

"Despite Our Differences," released on September 19, 2006, their first album recorded under their new contract with Hollywood Records, was recorded in a month and a half in Santa Monica, Cali. All those who contributed to the album were in the studio at the same time, which contributed to the at-home, comfortable feel of the album.

The songs on this new album are reminiscent of the familiar Indigo Girls with a new twist, which comes from the Girls' growing and expanding. A second collaboration with Pink is heard in the song "Rock and Roll Heaven's Gate." As said in the biography section of their Web site, this album is "plainspoken yet rich with literary detail... they address the growing unrest in the world, as well as the smaller push-and-pull that takes place every day between two people."

The Indigo Girls head to Northampton Saturday night, performing at the Calvin Theater with a small number of tickets still available.

The tour for "Despite Our Differences," in which they play some of their older songs along with some from "Differences," began on Aug. 31 in Georgia with a night to raise money for Janet McLaughlin, a local Georgian, to pay for medical bills after a brain aneurysm. The second night of the tour, Sept. 1, was dedicated to raising money for the Georgia Network to End Sexual Assault (GNESA). Both nights were successful, the former earning $4,710.00 and the latter raising $7,681.38.

On Saturday, Oct. 14, the Indigo Girls will be playing at the Calvin Theater in Northampton at 8 p.m. Advanced tickets are sold out, but a limited number of first come first serve tickets will be available. On Oct. 16, the Girls will stop in the Orpheum Theater in Boston before moving on with the rest of their tour, which ends in California on Nov. 14.

'Old San Juan' comes to UMass

By Ted Powers
Collegian Correspondent

Tonight, Friday Oct. 13, legendary Latin American singer-songwriter Roy Brown and cuatro virtuoso Jose Gonzalez headline an outstanding ensemble of Puerto Rican musicians. These artists will be coming together for "A Night in Old San Juan," a concert that promises to be a unique celebration of Latin music and culture. It will be held at 7 p.m. in the Bowker Auditorium.

Roy Brown is the main act of the night. He was influential in the 1960s Nueva Trova movement. This musical genre mixes classic Spanish folk music with progressive lyrics that often have socio-political undertones. Brown was one of the most famous protest singers of his day, and protest songs make up the body of his musical repertoire.

Brown was born in Orlando but schooled at the University of Puerto Rico. There he picketed and protested social injustice, and became actively involved in promoting the independence of Puerto Rico.

During the early 1970s his activism caused him to become alienated from his family, lose his job and get harassed by police. His perseverance in troubling times paid off. Since then, he has released 17 discs and has been playing his music all over the world for over 35 years. His strong sense of nationalism and undeniable talent has helped him sell millions of CD's and sell out massive stadiums.

Also on tonight's bill is Jose Gonzalez, a distinguished guitarist and master of Puerto Rico's national instrument, the cuatro. The cuatro is a four-stringed instrument that resembles a ukulele or guitar, but it has a Spanish-influenced sound all its own. His compositions have appeared on multiple Putumayo World Music compilations. Most recently he appeared on the new soundtrack to the PBS TV special "Visions of Puerto Rico."

There are a few special guests attending the festival. Fernandito Ferrer and Walter Mercieglia will be playing a set. They are a pair of up-and-coming songwriters who paid their musical dues right in San Juan's Nuyorican Café; their sound is derived right from the streets of the city. While their musical template is softer and incorporates more soul than its predecessors, influences of musicians such as Roy Brown and Jose Gonzalez are clearly evident.

Tao Seeger will also be performing a set rooted in folk traditions. He is well known for his work with The Mammals, an Appalachian folk band that came to UMass last year as an opening act for Arlo Guthrie. Seeger has also gone on world tours with his grandfather, Peter Seegger, a famous folk singer and political activist. Those attending will also get a taste of local flavor with Amherst Regional High School's Conjunto de Bomba. The group is an Afro-Caribbean drum dance ensemble.

Roy Brown will perform alongside other Puerto Rican musicians at the Bowker Auditorium tonight at 7 p.m.

By virtue of housing a variety of talents, both young and old, "A Night in Old San Juan," has created a timeline of Latin American music. Here, you can listen to some of the most influential musicians in Puerto Rico back-to-back with their predecessors, creating a full scope of Latin American talent.

The event is only $5 with a student ID. If you have any interest in a different culture, or simply need a change of pace in your Friday night, head over to Bowker Auditorium for "A Night in Old San Juan."

Jenny Lewis appearing Saturday

By Allie Roth
Collegian Staff

Jenny Lewis, the vioce of Rilo Kiley, will be headlining at the Academy of Music in Northampton on Saturday night.

Jenny Lewis has made quite a name for herself as the front-woman of whimsical indie-rock band, Rilo Kiley. As a whole, Rilo Kiley enjoys winning success, substantiated by the release of four acclaimed albums (three full length and one EP), numerous national and international tours (as both a headlining act, as well as opening for acts like Coldplay and Death Cab For Cutie) and towering applause from prominent music critics and music fans alike.

But sometimes there is an urge to strike out on your own. Blake Sennette, who shares songwriting and vocal responsibilities with Lewis, already found success in his side project – a more subdued rock band called The Elected. Lewis collaborated with The Postal Service (the side project of Death Cab for Cutie's Ben Gibbard and Jimmy Tamborello of DNTL) for their 2003 release "Give Up." Drummer Jason Boesel lent his drumming skills to Bright Eyes for several recording sessions.

In addition, Lewis began to write songs in the intermediate period after the completion of Rilo Kiley's album "More Adventurous." She felt more relaxed with her solo songwriting and wanted to write music with a more personal and lyrically-driven aesthetic.

According to the biography on Jenny Lewis's Web site, she was not even going to record these songs until a pep-talk, of sorts with her friend, Conor Oberst. A couple of years ago, Oberst requested that Lewis record some of her songs to be released for his new record label, Team Love.

In between her obligations with Rilo Kiley, she enlisted the producer Mike Mogis to assist her in the recording process and M. Ward to join her in some musical collaboration. At the moment she started laying down tracks in L.A., and traveling to Portland to record with Ward, she found the songs came out organically and genuinely. The finished product released earlier this year was called "Rabbit Fur Coat."

The album "Rabbit Fur Coat" is unique from those recordings with Rilo Kiley. It reflects a gospel-country sound with a greater emphasis placed on exhibiting her skills as a talented storyteller. The construction of the songs drew on influence of soul classics of the past.

She recruited her famous friends and the Watson Twins (two Kentucky-born sisters with a knack for harmonies) to enhance the album. Songs like "The Charging Sky," "The Big Guns" and "You Are What You Love" reflect themes of religion, family, materialism and life in general. "Rabbit Fur Coat" is a sort-of haunting rags to riches story. The random appearances of her famous friends, like Conor Oberst, Ben Gibbard and M. Ward, convey a feeling of togetherness and family cohesion.

Rilo Kiley front-woman Jenny Lewis will perform at Northampton's Academy of Music on Saturday night.

All of Lewis's songs suggest a little more country (and a little less rock-n-roll) than one might expect from the front-woman of Rilo Kiley. But, this album shows her talent as a confident songwriter with a point-of-view all her own.

This fall, Lewis ventures out on a tour with the harmonic support of the Watson Twins. They bring their gospel-country infused sounds to the Academy of Music in Northampton on Saturday, Oct. 14. The show begins at 8 p.m. and tickets cost $20.

Hockey action returns to the Mullins Center else. UMass has never had that many home games so hopefully that plays out to be a positive for us."

HOCKEY from page 10

The only action the Pioneers have seen thus far was a 3-3 tie against Ottawa in exhibition play. Eric Giosa, Dave Grimson, and Bear Trapp each scored a goal in the draw. The trip to Amherst is Sacred Heart's season-opener.

Cahoon explained the match-up with Sacred Heart was actually supposed to take place in Bridgeport, Conn., but a change of venue had to be made.

"The deal was that we were going to play in the big building in Bridgeport [Conn.] where the AHL team plays and it was supposed to be an event," he said. "If they could have put the contract together to play that game in Bridgeport we would have done that. The agreement was that if they couldn't put that together then we'd host the game here, which I'm happy is the case."

UMass' first win of a season ago was in the form of a 4-2 victory over the Golden Knights in Potsdam, N.Y. The game was the first collegiate start, and win, for goaltender Jon Quick.

The Minutemen have never lost to Clarkson, but this year's version of the Golden Knights is slightly different. They enter the season with high expectations of entering the playoffs and possibly the national tournament. They come to the Pioneer Valley with two wins already under their belt, and are moving up the national rankings.

Clarkson enters the weekend fresh off a 7-3 win over Niagara last Friday, and a 4-2 win over the Rochester Institute of Technology on Saturday. Both David Cayer and Dan Tuttle scored two goals apiece in the opening weekend. David Leggio backstopped both games for the Golden Knights stopping 52 of the 57 shots he faced.

"Clarkson is potentially a terrific team, a nationally ranked team," Cahoon said. "They present all the challenges in the world."

Other non-conference games for the Minutemen this season include visits from Connecticut on Nov. 18 and Niagara on Dec. 1. The Minutemen will also make trips to play at Union on Nov. 25 and participate in the Dodge Holiday Classic – also known as the Mariucci Classic – in Minneapolis from Dec. 29-30.

After beating No. 3 Colorado College during the Thanksgiving weekend last season, the Minutemen look to continue their holiday success when they travel to Schenectady, N.Y. to face the Dutchmen.

Last Friday, sophomore Cory Quirk skated on the top line in the Mass Attack's 4-2 exhibition win over New Brunswick.

Senior Chris Capraro will be the Minutemen's No. 2 scoring threat this season. In his return last season he scored eight goals with 11 assists.

"It was all a matter of scheduling. The Union game came about as a result of trying to fill the Thanksgiving weekend," Cahoon said. "They were a team that made sense to us to travel to after Thanksgiving just because of the proximity to our campus. [And it] will allow the kids a little bit of space after the holiday and UVM game and get them here to practice and get them off to an away contest."

The Mariucci Classic will be a big test for the Minutemen just before New Year's. According to Cahoon the tournament is one of the most respected holiday tournaments in all of college hockey. Along with UMass, other participants include Minnesota, Ferris State, and Alabama-Huntsville – all are top hockey programs in the country.

"We open up with Ferris State," Cahoon said. "[Ferris State coach] Bobby Daniels is a good close friend of mine. He's been coaching for years, a very confident guy. It will be a challenging tournament but a great experience as well."

Success at the Mariucci Classic is nothing new to Cahoon. While coaching Princeton, the Tigers competed in the tournament and came out winners.

"We beat Minnesota in the opening round and BU in the championship game," he said. "I've got good memories of this tournament and I'm hoping I can keep this tournament in a positive light."

It's no secret that Hockey East is one of the top conferences in the nation year in and year out. The league has five teams in the top 20 of the USCHO.com poll, including Boston College checking in at No. 1.

Playing with the level of competition that exists in the conference, the Minutemen see it as both an advantage and disadvantage. The positive is that playing the top teams in the country can invariably make UMass a better team.

"I like to tell people we think we're a good hockey team who plays in a great league so we're going to be better than good," Cahoon said. "The mindset is that we've got to be working to get better all the time. The last two years have been difficult for everyone coming off some pretty good success in the previous seasons and then having to go through the struggles and tribulations of putting the program back into a competitive state."

After going a combined 26-44-4 over the last two seasons, Cahoon feels he and his staff have returned the program to where it was when the Minutemen reached the Hockey East Tournament championship game in March of 2004.

"We think we're back and now we need to perform. It's a long run because every game sets up a challenge in and out of the league," he explained. "In the league we know the level of play is that much higher, but college hockey in general has an awful lot of parity."

Quick takes over as featured goaltender

POSITIONS from page 10

ing eight saves. Meyers is slated to be Quick's primary backup.

"Right now we see Meyers as being that player," Cahoon said. "He has an athleticism that is distinct in its own right. He's demonstrated in practice, preseason, and in the period he played last week that he's confident and capable of playing the position, and we just feel he's a little bit ahead of Jaime right now."

In his third year with the team, Gilbert has struggled to gain ice time, despite earning the respect of his coach.

"Jaime has been a good member of our team," Cahoon said. "He's a great citizen on the team, but he hasn't been able to consistently perform at the level to be able to take ice time away from the guys ahead of him.

"Right now I see Meyers as an integral part of the goalie tandem. Jon Quick is definitely the guy, but he's going to see some action, and he's going to see it relatively soon."

DEFENSEMEN

With Marvin Degon now playing for the Hartford Wolfpack, the Minutemen have a big pair of skates to fill.

"We've got a host of talented players," Cahoon said. "Some have been recruited and some are returning. They're more mature, and they've done the prerequisite work to offset Marvin's loss."

One area of concern is the power play, an area where Degon shined. Cahoon is confident his new players can pick up where Degon left off.

"We think that we have some skill players that can grow the power play situation throughout the year," Cahoon said. "We're hoping that we're more productive on the power play this year than we were last year. If it weren't for Marvin on the power play we would have been totally inept a year ago. Now we're hoping that some other people are going to be able to pick up the pieces and have some success in that area."

Senior Mark Matheson is likely going to be the defensive leader for the Minutemen, despite splitting time between the blue line and forward last season. He tallied 14 points on three goals and 11 assists. Two of his goals came on the power play.

Junior Mike Kostka, last year's Most Improved Player, will also be a force in the back for the Minutemen. He scored two goals last season and added six assists. He was first on the team with a +2 rating.

"Mark Matheson is definitely a key player there," Cahoon said. "Mike Kostka is certainly ready to step in. We think we've got a couple of young kids in [Martin] Nolet and [Justin] Braun that have ability on defense."

Also returning are juniors David Leaderer and Patrick Dineen, and sophomores Topher Bevis and John Wessbecker.

"It's early in the season," Cahoon said. "We're still looking at all possibilities and based on how guys are performing and what their confidence level is. That's a big part of it, power play, and special teams. They'll be inserted [into the game] accordingly."

FORWARDS

On the front line, Matt Anderson will lead the pack after back-to-back 20-point seasons. He was third on the team last year with seven goals and 13 assists. Cahoon expects Anderson to have plenty of help offensively.

"I hope that Matt has a great year offensively," Cahoon said. "But I hope that we distribute the offense a little bit more than we have in the recent past. I've got guys like [Chris] Capraro, [PJ:] Fenton, [Chris] Davis, and [Cory] Quirk. We've a couple young guys in Brett Watson and [Will] Ortiz that look like they're going to have some offensive capabilities."

Capraro was UMass' fourth leading scorer last year with eight goals and 11 assists. He came up big late in the season, scoring a goal in each of the Maroon and White's playoff losses against BU.

"He's the single-best playmaker we have in our program," Cahoon said. "Chris is the most adept at slowing the game down and making the needle-thread pass and finding the sticks where you'd least expect to find them. The game comes easy to Chris."

Kevin Jarman is one player to watch for this season. After tallying 21 points on seven goals and 14 assists with a plus-2 rating as a sophomore, Jarman disappointed as a junior. He notched just a single goal with six assists and a -5 rating.

"Kevin Jarman is playing the best hockey of his career right now in the preseason," Cahoon said. "He's that much quicker and seems to be that much more confident."

Graduations pass role of premier scorer on to Anderson

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

Matt Anderson, Stephen Werner, and Marvin Degon were all part of the 2002 recruiting class brought in by Massachusetts hockey team coach Don Cahoon. The three were always grouped together as the main scoring threats on the Minutemen. Now, with Werner and Degon lost to graduation and the pros, Anderson finds himself alone atop a UMass team that needs a premier scorer.

He too should have graduated last spring, but during off-season shoulder surgery before 2003-04 season the year UMass reached the Hockey East championship game – Anderson was redshirted while he recovered. For the first time he finds himself without his two running mates.

"College hockey is all about that. There's change taking place on every campus," Cahoon said of his recently departed. "Who's going to replace Marvin Degon? Probably no one specifically, but by committee we hope we'll be able to make his loss a minimal loss. [The case] with Stephen Werner is the same thing. We don't have quite anybody out there that has the same skill set that Stephen had."

Although he wishes his former players well, Cahoon says it's time for the program to move on and focus what's ahead, not behind.

"[Werner and Degon have] moved on, they've had a whole new world open up to them in pro hockey," he explained. "We're working hard here to make sure that we continue to make this program grow."

The way the Minutemen have done that is to bring in a host of young talent to bring depth to the ice and build toward the future. With that comes inexperience and the need for a central leader – enter Anderson. The senior is no stranger to that. He's worn a "C" on his maroon and white sweater for the past three seasons.

In his time in Amherst, Anderson has been through the highs and many of the lows, sometimes in the same season – 2003-04. Cahoon says the veteran is just what his team needs.

"I think [Anderson's leadership] will be pivotal in being able to deal with adversity and we'll be dealing with adversity right from the get go, that's just part of the struggle," the coach said. "College hockey is a six-month season so it's impossible to make go the way you want it to from start to finish. To have someone who's experienced, who has dealt with this ... it's really useful in helping a group of young guys stick together and end up succeeding."

Anderson came to UMass after playing for the New England Junior Coyotes. He immediately made an impact in his freshman year on campus.

That season he posted 31 points, checking in at fifth on the team in scoring. He tallied 16 goals to go along with 21 assists – good for second on the team. Those numbers were also good to place him second on the team in scoring among freshmen behind Werner.

Against Dartmouth, he racked up a career-high four points by scoring two goals and assisting on two others.

Then shoulder surgery caused him to miss his sophomore campaign.

Trying to live up to his freshman form, Anderson returned in 2004, but only played in 18 games before injuring his leg in December. He missed a significant amount of time, but was still fourth on the team that season with 20 points.

Entering last season, expectations were set high for the captain. He was completely healthy and poised to lead the Minutemen alongside Werner and Degon.

As it was for most of the team, 2005-06 turned out to be long season for Anderson. Though he played in more than twice as many games as the year before (27), he recorded just 20 points once again. His seven goals and thirteen assists checked in at third on a team that struggled to score all season long.

This the spotlight of the UMass offense turns to Anderson. He will be the main scoring threat on a team depleted in the offensive zone. Cahoon says he expects senior to finish off his career at the Mullins Center in a big way.

"Matt is old enough to handle what ever pressures or attention that comes his way," he said. "I think he'll do a real good job of being able to lead by example being the great student he's always been, and he'll be very productive this year. This is going to be Matt's best year here for sure. You can just see it in every way because of his maturity and because of his preparation and who he is and how he goes about his business."

With the graduation of Stephen Werner and Marvin Degon, senior captain Matt Anderson become's the Minutemen's top scoring threat. This season Anderson looks return to his freshman-year form.

peek-a-boo
If it's in fashion, it's at Zanna.
1. Low wedge, open toe suede beauty by Steve Madden. Black and animal print
2. Platform wedge available in black and brown suede by Steve Madden
3. High wedge, stacked heel with peep toe by Steve Madden
ZANNA
Women's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst

New role for Kostka this season

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

It is not very often that an athlete who was named the Most-Improved Player a year ago also earns the title assistant captain for his team and becomes a leader on the ice and in the locker room. Mike Kostka has done just that for the Massachusetts hockey team.

The 6-foot-2, 210 pound defenseman is now in his third year with the Minutemen, and he has certainly impressed his teammates and coaches, especially UMass coach Don Cahoon.

"Mike's an interesting young guy," Cahoon said. "He's wise beyond his years. He's got a maturity level that most of the guys in the locker room would love to be able to have."

Kostka showed marked improvement statistically in every aspect of his game from his freshman season to his sophomore campaign. As a freshman he entered the year being named the Ontario Hockey Associate Top Prospect. He followed that up by quickly becoming one of the Maroon and White's top defensemen. During the regular season, he tallied six points, scoring one goal and five assists in 32 games.

As a sophomore, he picked up his game, notching two goals and six assists for eight points in 36 games. He also showed he can come through in the clutch by picking up his first career game-winning goal on Feb. 4. Kostka tallied a goal and an assist that night against UMass Lowell. He also scored his first shorthanded goal last season in a loss to New Hampshire.

However, what Kostka demonstrated is value to the team by becoming one of the most efficient men on the ice last season, leading the team with a +2 rating. He was at his best in the games that counted, with an astounding +7 rating against Hockey East opponents.

"Mike's [skills] are centered around his ability to think the game through and to make good decisions and move the puck," Cahoon said. "If he keeps it that simple and just makes the plays that are available to him he'll string a lot of good plays together and have nice performances."

While Kostka's improvements in the areas you can measure have been obvious, the intangibles are what have earned him the respect of his teammates. Kostka's mental sharpness and leadership have made the most impact for the Minutemen.

"That's where he's grown the most, just the way he goes about his business," Cahoon said. "He tends to the detail and the nuance of the sport. He makes sacrifices. He's a terrific student."

Kostka was named to the Hockey East All-Academic team two straight years by earning a grade point average of 3.0 or higher.

When Mike came here, he recognized that his foot speed and his quickness were the liabilities that he had to develop" Cahoon said. "I think he's done great work on that front."

Kostka's self-awareness is a large part of what has made him an assistant captain. He is constantly improving himself and addressing what he feels are his weaknesses.

"He's gotten himself a lot stronger and therefore, more explosive," Cahoon said. "I think that those past liabilities are not going to be liabilities any longer and in some instances will become strengths." Kostka's coach has had nothing but praise for him here in the preseason. And it is no doubt that Cahoon is happy to have him skating for the Mass Attack.

"He's just a mature guy," Cahoon said. "There's not a team in college hockey that wouldn't like to have Mike Kostka, just because of the way he handles himself."

After recording a +2 rating a year ago, Mike Kostka was named UMass' most-improved player and given the role of assistant captain.

Astroturf an unfamiliar surface for UM

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team (8-4-0, 2-2-0 A-10) heads to Philadelphia for two conference games this weekend. The Minutewomen face Saint Joseph's (5-7-0, 2-1-0 A-10) today and Temple (3-9-0, 0-3-1 A-10) on Sunday.

UMass coach Jim Rudy said that St. Joe's, which is 3-1 at home and 2-5 on the road, has a distinct home-field advantage due to the fact it plays on Astroturf.

"It's an incredible home advantage for them because it plays so fast," Rudy said. "It's light years faster than what we play on at Rudd Field. It just creates a pressure-packed environment where the ball is always bouncing and it's in the air a lot."

"[Hawks coach Jess Reynolds'] philosophy, according to one of my coaching friends in the A-10, is 'We will put you under so much pressure that you can't play with skill,'" Rudy continued.

Having lost the 5-0 game to end the 2003 season, Rudy was displeased with the last time his squad played on the menace known as Tinnesey Field.

The Hawks' Michelle Ford scored unassisted within the first 10 minutes, opening up the floodgates and setting the tone for the rest of the game. She netted two more goals, recording her first-career hat trick, while Nancy Cook and Megan Schutt also registered a tally each.

The Hawks' roster no longer boasts Ford, but Cook and Schutt, both senior forwards, are still big ingredients in the SJU recipe.

Cook has racked up four goals and two assists for 10 total points this season, while Schutt has accumulated seven points of her own with two goals and three assists on the season.

Fellow senior forward Ali Wean, however, is the team's juggernaut, recording six goals and three assists for 15 points. She is notorious for her physical, card-drawing play and is coming off a one-game suspension as a result of receiving five yellow cards.

The pace of the game will increase Sunday when UMass heads just down the road from Tinnesey Field to take on Temple.

The Owls have a dismal season record, but Rudy reassures that the numbers can be misleading.

"[URI coach Zac Shaw] said it's the best Temple team that he has ever seen," Rudy said.

Temple, too, bested the Minutewomen in their last meeting – UMass lost a tough 2-1 double-overtime contest.

With a last minute first-half goal by Katie Louth, the Owls grabbed a hold of the lead and didn't let go until less than a minute to go in regulation.

As the final 60 seconds ticked away, senior midfielder Michelle Luttati took a pass from senior defender Erin Muir and punched it into the back of the net, tying it up at 1-1.

After one scoreless overtime, Temple's Stephanie Vietry put an end to the battle with a game-winning tally in the seventh minute of the second overtime.

The Minutewomen haven't had an opportunity to match up against any Temple squad since then. Rudy would never underestimate the new roster that he says has been "fairly consistent."

The Owls don't have any standout players this season, but rather get contributions from numerous players.

Freshman defender/midfielder Natalie Mell, sophomore forwards Wendy Halina and Charisma Wright, senior forward Kelly Lare and senior midfielder Elena Hekimian have scored the team's only goals this season, as they have been shutout four times thus far.

The Owls will have to take on the URI Rams today, but in two days time, it's the first clash between UMass and Temple since 2003 – and revenge is a dish best served cold.

Freshman Sydney Stoll has made two starts since Tina Rodriguez went down with an injury. The forward has two points on one goal this season.

Cross country returns to Albany Invitational

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts cross country teams will travel to New York, as Albany hosts the 40th Annual Cross Country Invitational. The Minutemen will run on the eight-kilometer course and the Minutewomen will race a five-kilometer course.

This year's field includes 28 men's teams and 26 women's teams. The New Hampshire Wildcats won both the men's and women's team competitions a year ago.

UMass has not run in Albany since 2004; in that race the men placed fifth and the women placed 6th overall. Five of the women who ran in the Albany race that season are still on the team: junior Christina DeRosa, senior Cuisle Kierans, senior Erin O'Donnell, junior Ashley Davidson and junior Amanda Bodette.

As a freshman, DeRosa finished ninth at Albany and first for the Minutewomen. Running at Albany for the Minutemen as freshmen were junior Matthew Klypka, who placed 33rd, and Fischer, who finished 40th overall.

The Minutemen are a very young group, and most of the team was still in high school when the team ran this course in 2004.

Last weekend both teams ran well at the New England Championships. Some of them were honored by the Atlantic 10 for their performances. Junior Jesse Regnier was named the A-10 Men's Performer of the Week. He placed 13th overall at New England's with a time of 25:12. It's the second time he finished first overall for the team; he placed first two weeks ago at the home meet against Boston College and Maine.

Freshman Nicolai Naranjo earned A-10 Men's Rookie of the Week after the New England's. This is the second time he received this honor. He is one of the core runners for the young team, placing within the top five in every race he has ran. Last weekend Naranjo placed 76th overall and ranked sixth among all freshmen in the race.

DeRosa continues her great season as she was awarded A-10 Women's Performer of the Week. At the New England's she posted her best time of 18:30, good for a 32nd-place finish. For DeRosa it is the 18th-consecutive race she has finished first for the Minutewomen.

For the Minutewomen to improve UMass coach Julie LaFreniere would like her top five runners to inch closer with DeRosa.

"DeRosa is running pretty well, she's out front, but the rest of the pack, they're running in a tight pack. We just need to close that gap a little bit more," LaFreniere said.

Injuries are one of the reasons the Minutewomen cannot move the pack closer to DeRosa. Each week a top-five runner is injured in the race or before the race.

The list of injuries this season include junior Amber Sayer's battle with the flu, and then her hurt back the next week, freshman Lauren Liuzzo sprained her ankle before a race last week but should be ready to run this week. Bodette battled knee tendonitis the first month of the season and freshman Shiyi Zan from Ottawa, Ontario is injured and has missed the entire cross country season.

Critical conference games this weekend

M. SOCCER from page 10

UMass score and not win the game, a 1-1 double-overtime tie against Boston University.

"The thing we have to worry about most is making sure that we do our jobs," Koch said. "We have to get behind their defense and create chances. I feel very confident that if we create the chances, we're going to start finishing better than we have. The law of averages says that the ball's going to start going in, and we'll find out this weekend."

Returning home should prove a positive change for the Minutemen, who played the last five games on the road. At the end of the trip, the players seemed to be affected by the long trip.

"I think they played very, very well on Friday and then on Sunday, we just ran out of gas," Koch said. "Mentally we weren't there. Physically we were OK, but mentally we just didn't make the right decisions. We were mentally tired."

The Minutemen will also be glad to be playing on their own field, a natural grass surface that Koch feels plays to the team's strengths.

"It's nice to play on a real surface," Koch said. "Playing on a grass surface, which is not as quick, helps us. I definitely think we're better on our home field than we are on other fields."

Sophomore Mike DeSantis' two goals rank him second on the Minutemen in scoring. He trails only freshman Bryan Hogan.

UMass hits the road

W. SOCCER from page 10

Louis, Rudy is worried how his team will play on the Astroturf where the Hawks play their home games.

"It's tough to prepare for," he said. "It plays much faster than the field turf we play on. It's very unforgiving and the ball bounces extremely high. We trained on Garber Field to simulate what it will be like and we had a hard time adjusting to it and connecting on our passes. If you miss someone by three inches the ball is gone."

It's a great home field advantage for them since no other team uses that surface anymore," he added. "They play so well on it and they pressure their opponents so high that the other team can't use any skill or technique. It can also be very exhausting to play on that surface."

Sunday's game against Temple (3-9, 0-3 A-10) will provide UMass with a reprieve of the Astroturf, but not in competition.

"Despite their record, Temple has the best team they've had in some time, Rudy said. "They come and bring their game and put the pressure on. It can be tough to win at their place."

UMass has held the upper hand in the lifetime series, winning 10 out of 13, including the last time they met in two years ago in a 3-2 victory in overtime. Junior forward and leading scorer, Britt Canfield, was once again the star in the game as she recorded two goals, including the game-winner off a pass from senior midfielder Elizabeth Weinstein.

"It was a frustrating game," Rudy said. "We dominated much of the match fairly well. But we kept plugging away and it ended up as a nice win."

"This year's team is very similar to Xavier, except for technical play," he added. "They have two really good frontrunners, especially sophomore forward Charisma Wright."

These conference games will go a long way in determining how the rest of the A-10 shapes up as it pertains to the Minutewomen.

"I'm expecting two tough games this weekend," Rudy said.

Sophomore Vanessa Patry has been near the top of the scoring charts all season. This weekend the Minutewomen travel to Philadelphia.

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911

ARE YOU AN R.S.O?
Please contact us at
545-3500 or come down to
113 Campus Center
Basement to discuss advertising plans for your organization.

Minutewomen face crucial test

By J.M. Friedman
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team (3-11, 0-2 Atlantic 10) faces the Saint Louis Billikens this afternoon at Garber Field, beginning a four-game stretch against conference opponents.

Last season the Minutewomen qualified for the A-10 tournament, posting a 4-3 conference record. With five inter-conference games remaining this season – including one against nationally ranked Richmond on Sunday – the Maroon and White will need to win its matchup today to have a realistic shot at playing beyond the regular season.

UMass coach Patty Shea rebuffed the assertion that today's game was a must-win.

"Every game's a crucial game at this point in the season," Shea said. "The players know what they have to do and how they have to come out, there's nothing more [to say], they just have to execute."

Coming off a loss to Vermont that saw the Minutewomen allow 16 shots on goal, six that settled in the back of the cage, the Maroon and White will need to shore up its defense heading down the stretch. Lack of execution and turnovers at critical times have been backbreakers for UMass this season.

"The way that other teams absolutely [take advantage of] our mistakes, we have to start to do that to other teams," Shea said after the 6-4 loss to the Catamounts. "We try and get too pretty [when what we need to do] is smash it down their throats, say thank you, put it in the back of the net, and run back to the 50-yard line."

Scoring opportunities may be harder to come by against a defensively skilled Billikens team. They're tied for first in the conference with the fewest goals against, having given up 17 on the season for an average of 1.55 per game. SLU has posted five shutouts, tied for first in the A-10, with junior goalkeeper Amy Wasserman anchoring the backfield.

Conversely, Massachusetts is second to last in the conference with 36 goals against for an average of 2.77 per game.

While the Billikens excel at keeping other teams off the scoreboard, they struggle offensively, scoring only 18 goals this season.

For the Minutewomen to be successful today, they will have to come out of the gate strong, something they have failed to do so far this year. They've scored first in only two of 14 contests this season.

"Tomorrow's game is about [doing] what we need to do, and doing that for 70 minutes," Shea said. "We have to be the aggressors. We have to dictate the tempo. We have to play our game and make them adjust to us."

That's something the Maroon and White have struggled to do this season, often getting away from its game plan and falling into one-on-one matchups instead of playing a passing, team-oriented style.

"[We struggle] at the times we lose our ball movement and flow," Shea said prior to the Vermont contest. "When we get away from what works for us as a group is when we try and get to the end result in one pass instead of two passes, when we dribble into defensive players instead of passing around them."

For the Minutewomen to garner a win off the stingy Billikens defense, the forwards will need to step up and capialize on the opportunities they create,

"We need to do a better job with our frontline...we got the ball into the circle, now we need a little better balance and skill work to get something out of it," Shea said.

New season begins

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's swimming and diving teams begin their seasons today at the UConn Invitational in Storrs, Conn. After five weeks of intense training, the Maroon and White will look to see how they compare against the swimmers and divers from Southern Connecticut, Stony Brook and UConn.

Just the swimmers will be in action at the invitational.

Since team scores aren't kept at the meet, gaining experience in a competitive setting are both teams' goals going into the event. In fact, today's meet, the regular season and all of the hours invested in practice and training by the players and coaches are ultimately in preparation for the Atlantic-10 Championships. The tournament is held at the end of the season in February, featuring all of the A-10 schools that maintain swimming and diving programs (nine for men and 10 for women).

UMass women's coach Bob Newcomb prefers starting the season with an unscored event.

"To me it's the best way to start out," he said. "I can swim everybody in everything, and I can see where we are with a lot of people. With this, and most of the dual meets, I look at it as a rehearsal for A-10's in February."

The women's team is picked to finish third in the conference by the league's coaches. They have improved at the A-10 Championship's each of the last three seasons – finishing fifth, fourth, and third, respectively.

Newcomb believes his team has strong senior leaders, especially in captains Meg O'Connell and Liz Lovejoy.

"Senior leadership is definitely one of our strengths," he explained. "We have a group of seniors that are committed to what we are doing and I think that's been great for the underclassmen to really make sure they're doing what they need to."

The divers are the team's other strength. The Minutewomen return four athletes, including seniors Mary Jenkins and Melissa Pond, along with sophomores Karen Upperco and Sarah Horstmann. Jenkins set the UMass record for the three-meter dive when she finished in third place at the 2005 A-10 Championships.

In the pool, the strongest events will be the individual medley and the butterfly. The Minutewomen have depth in these strokes at each distance from all four classes. Senior sprinter Nicole Lebarge looks to build on her success from last season in the 50-yard freestyle and the 200-yard freestyle medley.

The men's team is no stranger to success. They have won eight of the last 11 conference championships. The program had a winning streak of five tournaments until last season when they lost to St. Bonaventure by nine points.

The Minutemen appear to have another strong team this year. The league's coaches picked them to win the A-10 Championship. They only lost one swimmer to graduation and return the majority of the swimmers of each event from last season.

They were also able to add nine talented freshmen, including local product Mike Berthaume of Hampden, Mass. The freshman earned All-American status during his senior year of high school at Minnechaug Regional. Berthaume adds depth to the backstroke and individual medley events.

"We've got the bulk of point scorers back and that, coupled with the newcomers – the freshmen – I think we have a well balanced team with good senior leadership and experience," UMass men's coach Russ Yarworth said. "When you're trying to put together a championship squad in swimming, balance is important."

Sophomore Nate Bromage was the A-10 champion last season in the 100-yard fly as a rookie. Yarworth expects Bromage to have a breakout season. The 100-yard fly, the 200 and 400-yard individual medleys should be the team's strongest events.

Senior Mike Herald and sophomore Mike Prout have been inspirations to the team. Herald recovered from open-heart surgery in time to participate in last year's season. Prout – who hails from West Springfield, Mass. – won gold medals in both the 200 and 400-meter freestyle events at the 2004 Paralympics in Athens, Greece.

Senior Jake Hogue and junior John Weaver captain the swimming squad for the Minutemen. They are joined by junior captain and diver R.J. Rappe, who looks to improve on last year's success. He beat the UMass three-meter board record at last season's A-10 Championships by over 50 points.

Yarworth attributes some of his program's success to the integration of his swimmers and divers.

"It's a swimming and diving team and I stress that a lot to of recruits and the kids on the team," he said. "We're one group, and I think we're unique in some aspects of that because a lot of programs will have some conflict between the swimming and diving coaches and the teams."

Today's UConn Invitational will provide both teams with excellent experience for the regular season, regardless of the outcome. But neither the coaches nor the players will be satisfied unless they finish in first place at the season ending A-10 Championships.

COURTESY MASSMUTUAL.COM

Both men's and women's swimming and diving teams have a history of success. This season the men are picked to finish first with the women third.

Injury affects UMass in more ways than one

By Kevin Dooley
Collegian Staff

Any New England sports fan is well aware that injuries can decimate a team. One doesn't need to look any further than the 2006 Boston Red Sox, who had steady stream of injuries ravage their roster, or the New England Patriots struggling to uphold a dynasty while being hampered with injuries during the past few years.

You can add the Massachusetts field hockey team to that list of local teams dealing with the injury bug.

The Minutewomen had a 3-2 lead early in the second half against the Dartmouth Big Green. That 3-2 advantage would dissipate quickly, and so did the services of sophomore forward Erin Parker.

Parker went down when she fractured a bone near her right ankle early in the second half of the Minutewomen's 5-4 loss to the Big Green. The injury is responsible for sidelining UMass' leading point-getter from last season for the remainder of the regular season. Should the Minutewomen make the A-10 Tournament, she'd most likely be unavailable.

Parker remembers vividly the injury that cut her season short.

"I just remember when I went to get the ball, I was purposely trying to change my direction fairly quickly to eliminate the defender, and in the midst of trying to change my direction, the defender was trying to get the ball and stuck her stick in at my feet," Parker explained. "I just remember my foot coming out from underneath me and it felt like I stepped on her stick so those two things kind of led to it.

"I heard it snap. I was obviously in tears and [UMass coach] Patty [Shea] was just trying to calm me down [by saying] 'things snap all the time.' I wasn't sure if it was broken right away, but I knew it was definitely a bad injury."

Now one of the issues for the team is whether Parker can be redshirted, meaning that Parker would not lose this year of eligibility, and be able to play three more seasons for the team.

"She's right at the percentage of games that they don't allow you to redshirt," Shea said. "That's a situation where we have to appeal to the NCAA and then they make a decision."

Since Parker has been forced to sit on the sidelines, UMass has been on a freefall, having lost six of their last seven games, and has dug itself a 0-2 hole in the A-10 standings coming into this weekend's crucial games against A-10 foes Saint Louis and No. 18 Richmond.

Parker is quick not to blame her injury for all the team's struggles this year, but does acknowledge that one of the team's constant problems has been transitioning the ball from defense to offense, one of Parker's main jobs on the field.

"One of my primary jobs is distributing the ball," Parker said. "I played forward last season and this season they had me play more of a midfield role where my job is to get the ball from the defense and move it up to the offense."

Parker points to UMass' 2-1 loss to the Temple Owls during her absence as a microcosm of the team's recent struggles.

"We've lost a lot of games just because of a few poor decisions," Parker said. "It's just so frustrating, like in the game against Temple where we controlled 80 percent of the play and we just can't finish, which I think has something to do with our inability to transition the ball."

The loss of Parker has forced the team to move sophomore forward Katelyn Orlando, who last year was part of the team's 1-2 punch along with Parker, scoring five goals as a rookie, back to the midfield level.

"It's tough because we had to move Orlando back to midfield and I think she was a big part of our offense," Parker said. "She did a lot for our offensive line. It took me a long time to adjust to midfield, so I think now Kate [Orlando] is trying to adjust to midfield and I think that has a lot to do with our struggles right now."

"When you get injuries it kind of disrupts a lot of your combinations," Shea said. "It really limits the combination work within our midfield and backfield and it limits the formations that we can do and some strategic things we can do."

Before the Dartmouth nightmare, the converted midfielder had picked right up where she had left off last year, scoring two goals and three assists through eight games, giving her seven points.

"I thought I was on an upward hill, I thought I was becoming a lot more comfortable out there," Parker said.

Parker's numbers may be lost, but the team has not lost Parker's enthusiastic encouragement and optimism throughout this grueling stretch of games.

"It was tough at first because I couldn't really walk, so I had to pretty much yell from the sidelines," Parker said about what she did during team practices. "Now I feel like I'm helping my team a lot more, acting like an extra coach I guess."

Since UMass' dynamic threat has been forced out of action, Parker has become the Tommy Heinsohn of UMass field hockey, helping broadcast games in the press box.

"I like to do it if our team plays well because then I don't feel that they necessarily need me down there yelling at them," Parker said. "It's so frustrating watching from up there when we're not playing well, but otherwise its fun.

"I think I'm harder on our team," Parker added. "I have had to bite my tongue a few times when we've messed up and not say something like, 'What the hell are you doing?'"

Katelyn Orlando changed positions when Erin Parker was injured. The Minutewomen have struggled without their top scorer from a year ago.

UM coaches taking advantage of new technology in the pool

By Joe Mellona
Collegian Staff

The technological revolution that the world experienced during the last decade altered life in ways no one ever imagined. The implementation of computers transformed almost every field into a more efficient and more effective version of its former self.

Collegiate swimming is no different.

The Massachusetts men's and women's swimming and diving programs implemented new technology prior to this season aimed at providing athletes with better instruction on their technique and mechanics in the pool and off the board.

CoachCam is a digital underwater camera on the end of a pole that the coaches use to follow the swimmer's progress in the pool. The new perspective allows coaches to see more than they were once able to, so they can diagnose more problems than in the past.

Dartfish is a series of cameras that allows coaches to show two different dives side-by-side. The coaches show the divers one of their better dives juxtaposed with one of their worst. This, like the CoachCam, enables the diver to see exactly what they need to do to adjust for their next showing.

"They are both wonderful pieces of equipment," UMass women's coach Bob Newcomb said. "They replaced older pieces of equipment that weren't particularly successful."

The visual element is what makes the program such an effective coaching tool. Rather than just telling a swimmer what they are doing wrong, the coach now has the ability to break a lap down stroke-by-stroke, enabling them to pinpoint a swimmer's problem area.

"The quality of the picture is great," Newcomb said. "The changes that we've already made are invaluable."

The players can be viewed from all angles so every aspect of their performance can be properly dissected and critiqued.

"We can film underwater," Newcomb said. "We can pull it up and see them swimming above water."

Newcomb and men's coach Russ Yarworth use the camera whenever possible. Although Yarworth considers himself a member of coaching's old guard, he realizes that he must take advantage of new technology to maintain and build on the program's decade of success.

"I'm an old-school coach," Yarmouth said. "But you have to take advantage of new technology."

The coaches discover new uses for CoachCam everyday and are certainly not hesitant to using it.

"I have more film of these guys just from the first four weeks of this season than I had from the last couple of years combined," Newcomb said.

COURTESY MASSMUTUAL.COM

UMass women's swimming coach Bob Newcomb is using video technology to help him improve his athlete's performances in the pool.

The players warmed up to the new technology quickly as well.

"[The players] love it," Yarworth said. "Giving them verbal feedback is one thing, but giving them visual feedback helps a lot more."

The swimmers are not the only members of the program utilizing the new technology. The divers make use of Dartfish and an older version of TiVo.

"I've been using TiVo for years," UMass diving coach Mandy Hixon said. "I set it up at a 12-second delay which allows the players to analyze their dives when they get out of the pool. Ten years before anyone had it in their home I was using it for coaching."

Starting in 2002 the U.S. national team used the program in its everyday training. However, all the kinks had not been worked out of the program, so not many universities used it.

Ohio State, however, tested the software and according to diving coach Vince Panzano, the success of individual divers is a direct product of the software and the adjustments it allowed the divers to make.

As far as CoachCam is concerned, it also enables Newcomb to utilize his time at practice more efficiently.

"Every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday I've been filming," Newcomb said. "And I've had an assistant running the practice. So they've been running the practice and I've been able to focus on technique work."

These new technologies are just another weapon in the coaching arsenal of Yarworth, Newcomb and Hixon. However, they certainly will not abandon the blue-collar approach to swimming that made this program one UMass' most successful.

"The technology is great," Newcomb said. "But at the end of the day, it's about how we perform in the pool."

CINEMARK
The Best Seat in Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Fri 10/13/06 thru Thurs 10/19/06
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Man of the Year (PG13) 1:15 4:20 7:20 10:00*
The Grudge 2 (PG13) 1:30 4:10 7:35 10:05*
The Marine (PG13) 1:10 4:45 7:25 9:45*
The Departed (R) 1:00 2:00 4:25 7:00 7:45 10:20*
Employee of the Month (PG13) 1:05 1:40 4:30 4:55 7:15 7:50 9:45 10:25*
Texas Chainsaw Massacre: The Beginning (R) 1:35 4:40 7:40 9:55*
The Guardian (PG13) 1:00 4:05 7:10 10:15
Open Season (PG) 1:20 4:00 6:50 9:05
Jackass: Number Two (R) 1:50 4:50 7:30 9:50
Jet Li's Fearless (PG13) 4:15 9:35
The Illusionist (PG13) 1:45 7:00
* no passes or supersavers
Senior Show October 19th
The Guardian 10:00 p.m.
Friday Night Rewind November 3rd
The Big Lebowski Midnight
•NO PASSES: NO SUPERSAVERS
Tickets & showtimes available at cinemark.com

Get Published
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andlamo.cc

		2					5
	9	1	5
			1	8				7
					5	4		6
3	6						9	8
4		8	6
9				6	1
					3	2	7
	3					9

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Two things are infinite: the universe and human stupidity; and I'm not sure about the universe."

—Albert Einstein

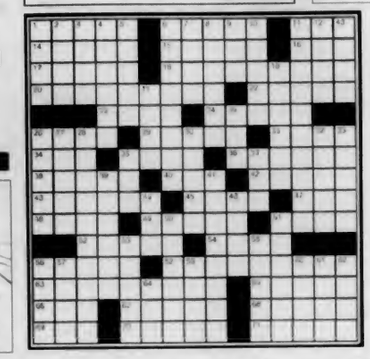
GET FUZZY By Darby Conley

A LITTLE HELP

SIXTY FOUR DOWN

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



BEST BAR AROUND
Seven O's
KARAOKE
EVERY WEDNESDAY
Friday 10/13:
FLOYD PATTERSON
Student Band Wanted!!
Call (413)658-7116
Route 116, 330 Amherst Road
Sunderland, MA 01375
(413) 665-8788
2pm to 1am M-F
12pm to 1am SAT & SUN
NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Eat your meat; unless you're a vegetarian

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You probably have ink on your fingers.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Climb the stairway to heaven, man, climb it.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Flashcards won't help you. Nothing will at this point.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You'll be getting some this weekend so use protection.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your babies will look like monkeys.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Nobody puts leos in a corner.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Go to the women's rugby match on Saturday. It will be a good show.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
That red head you've been eyeing feels the same way. Go for it.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Learn the lyrics to Danity Kane's "Show Stopper." They'll come in handy.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
There are two centaurs running around campus. Find them.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Reggae music will help your situation.

THANK YOU FOR READING
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal Party Weekends Includes Transportation, Hotel and More $115 Complete Montrealexpress.net

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

All money going to school and none for the weekend? Let us pay you to be a student and learn leadership with Army ROTC www.umass.edu/armyrotc

AUTO FOR SALE

92 Toyota Camry Station Wagon $850 549-9639

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837.

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day. Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

EMPLOYMENT

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

McDonald's Crew Members Needed. Full & part-time openings at Michell Bradley/McDonalds. Competitive wages & salaries plus benefits. Start at $9.62 /hr. Apply at Michell Bradley/McDonalds office at Bradley Int'l Airport, Terminal A, 2-5pm, M-W, or send resume to EHmichell@aol.com Call 203-223-0153 with questions.

NTERTAINMENT

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

SERVICES

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992. www.tapestryhealth.com

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SERVICES

Do you have legal questions? We have the answers. Contact the Student Legal Services office at 922 Campus Center or call 545-1995

TRAVEL

Travel with STS to this year's top 10 Spring Break destinations! Best deals guaranteed! Highest rep commissions, Visit www.ststravel.com or call 1-800-648-4849 Great group discounts

submit classifieds online at www.dailycollegian.com

THE BAR GUIDE IS COMING!

Don't miss the Daily Collegian's first ever guide to the Amherst Area bar scene.

DON'T MISS IT.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 13, 2005 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mass Attack back in action tonight

Sophomore Jon Quick takes over this season as the No. 1 goaltender for the Minutemen. While splitting time with Gabe Winer last season, Quick finished with a 4-0-1 record in net with a 2.98 goals-against average. He recorded his first career win over Saturday night's opponent Clarkson.

After losing players UM has new leaders

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The New England chill has been running through the night air for weeks now, which means the Massachusetts hockey team is ready for a new season.

This year's squad will have some new faces, some in new places, as many of the leaders of the team over the past few seasons have moved on. With the first game of the regular season tonight at the Mullins Center, it's time to examine who is playing where.

Goaltender

The biggest change for the Minutemen is in net, where four-year starter Gabe Winer will be replaced by sophomore Jon Quick, who filled the role of Winer's back up last season.

He finished with a 4-10-1 record in 17 games with 15 starts. Quick had a 2.98 goals-against average and a .920 save percentage.

"Jon is very capable athletically," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "He's got a higher end than Gabe, but what Gabe had was a great mental makeup for the position. He was just able to deal with all of it. Jon Quick has got all of that talent, and he's going to be able to develop the same disposition. He'll be able to maintain that focus, concentration, and mentality to be the great player we all know he's capable of being."

Behind Quick are junior Jamie Gilbert and freshman Dan Meyers. Gilbert did not see action last season, playing behind Winer and Quick. During the 2004-05 season he played in four games with no starts. He had a 3.67 GAA and a .833 save percentage, all against ranked opponent.

Meyers started UMass' exhibition last Friday against New Brunswick. He shutout the Varsity Reds for one period, mak-

See POSITIONS on page 6

After a stellar performance his freshman year, junior P.J. Fenton cooled off last year tallying five goals and 12 assists.

Maroon and White needs wins this weekend

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

It is battered but not beaten. It is down but not out. The Massachusetts men's soccer team is on its heels after the first four games of the Atlantic 10 schedule, but the Minutemen are not done fighting for a spot in this year's conference tournament.

After starting the season 6-0-1 – the best start since 1931 – UMass (7-5-2, 1-3 A-10) has gone 1-4-1 in seven games since then, including a 1-3 mark in conference play.

This weekend, Saint Joseph's (1-9-2, 0-3 A-10) and Temple (2-8-1, 1-3 A-10) visit Rudd Field, a place the Minutemen themselves have not seen in three weeks. The Hawks will square off with the Minutemen today at 3:30 p.m.

"I'm very happy [to be playing at home]," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "It will be nice to not have any more layovers in any airports. I don't think I can go into any more convenience stores or restaurants. We've been on the road too long."

After picking up their first conference victory at Dayton last Friday, the Minutemen fell to Xavier on Sunday, finishing up their five-game road trip at 1-3-1. UMass is now in a four-way tie for seventh place in the A-10 standings, three points out of a possible playoff spot.

With only five games left on the schedule, the Minutemen are beginning to feel the heat they felt last season after falling behind early in the conference standings. The 2005 team went on a 4-0-2 tear to squeeze into the A-10 tournament. The latest edition of the Minutemen may need a similar run to get back into the postseason.

"I think more than anything, we have to control the things that we can control," Koch said. "We are going to do everything we can to defend better than we have all year, try to keep the net clean, and get good opportunities on the offensive end to score goals and win games. Do we have to win both games? Mathematically, no. Do we want to win both games? No question, we do."

With St. Joe's and Temple owning a combined three wins on the season, now is as good a time as any to pick up a pair of wins and get back into the middle of the playoff push. However, Koch balked at calling this weekend a must-win situation.

"It's as close to a must-win situation as it can be, without being an absolute must-win," Koch said. "We need to play well and get results this weekend to help us going into the last three games. We need to play well and get results just to get our confidence back, which I think has been in question a little bit.

"We need to get back to what we do well, which I think we did extremely well Friday [against Dayton], and that is defend well as a team and prevent them from getting scoring chances. We have to do that for two games in a row. That's what our goals are for this weekend."

St. Joe's is winless in three games against conference foes, and has just one win on the season. Looking at win-loss records alone, the Hawks appear to be a team UMass should beat. Koch however, sees the potential for a trap game.

"You've got a wounded lion [in St. Joe's]," Koch said. "They are not eliminated mathematically, so they still have a reason to play. They're now in a corner, and it's a dangerous team to play right now. Can we beat them? Yes. Should we beat them? I don't think you can say you should beat anybody. I think we have to do our job to make sure we don't let them make a game out of it."

The Hawks' biggest threat is senior Dean Niedosik. The forward midfielder is the only St. Joe's player with multiple goals this season, with three. He also leads the team in shots with 21. Niedosik scored the game-winner in the Hawk's lone victory, a 3-2 decision over La Salle.

Sunday the Minutemen cap off the homestand against Temple, who with one A-10 victory, are in the same position as UMass heading into this weekend. The Owls visit Rhode Island Friday night before traveling to Amherst.

"Temple will have a tough time at Rhode Island," Koch said. "Hopefully, we'll have a chance to see the second half of that game after our game. I think we'll be able to make our adjustments from that."

While the offense has struggled as of late to score goals – one goal in the last seven games – when UMass does light up the scoreboard, they are undefeated.

The Minutemen are 7-0-1 in games where they have scored at least one goal. Only once did

See M. SOCCER on page 7

Junior Greg Cirillo has started all 14 games for the Minutemen this season. He currently leads the team in assists with four on the year.

Philadelphia trip ahead for UMass

By Eli Rosenwaike
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team (8-4, 2-2 Atlantic 10) leave the friendly confines of Rudd Field and travel to Philadelphia, Pa. for two key A-10 matchups this weekend. Tonight it takes on the Saint Joseph's Hawks and on Sunday afternoon turns its attention to the Temple Owls.

The Minutewomen bring a lifetime 7-2 record against Saint Joseph's (5-7, 2-1 A-10) but it was the Hawks who were victorious in their last encounter, 1-0, in 2004. In that game UMass was shut out by freshman goalkeeper Jen Kuhn, who is still minding the net for Saint Joseph's. However, UMass coach Jim Rudy isn't focusing as much of his attention on her, but rather the rest of her teammates.

"[Kuhn] did record the shutout but it's the six seniors that they have that I'm more concerned about," he said. "They're pretty top-heavy in terms of experience. They also have four juniors and they all play a lot together with the seniors."

Rudy was complimentary of the offensive attack he will be expecting from the three opposing senior forwards.

"They have three jets up front," he said. "They have Megan Schutt for power and strength, Nancy Cook for speed, and Ali Wean for technical and skillful play. As a threesome it's hard to handle. They will also bring fresh players off the bench that will come in and attack, especially [senior midfielder] Kimmy Leigh."

Those four seniors have accounted for 70 percent – 14 out of 20 – of the teams scoring output on the season and they are also the four leading point scorers on the team. Wean has been terrific all season long for Saint Joseph's. She leads the team in goals with six and is tied in assists with three.

Wean has amassed five yellow cards this season alone, which also leads the team. She was suspended for the game against Temple on Oct. 6 due to that high amount. In fact, the Hawks have totaled 13 yellow cards on the season, which is 13 more than UMass has in 2006. This doesn't surprise Rudy in the least bit.

"That's Philly, hall," he said. "When you go to Philadelphia you can expect to play in a physical game. You never know what's going to happen with Wean. The rest of the cards are spread out evenly to the rest of the team."

In addition to the experience of Saint

See W.SOCCER on page 7

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

UMass hockey is 36-36 all-time in season-opening games dating back to 1908. In the past five years under coach Don Cahoon it has posted a 3-2 mark.

UMass blocks Towson's Page 10

Okkervil River performs at Iron Horse Page 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SUNNY : HI: 62 LO: 35 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, OCTOBER 16, 2006

Campus construction projects make progress

Construction expected throughout academic year

The Integrated Science Building has been permanently fenced in, closing off the north end of Stockbridge Road.

By Amber Vaillancourt
Collegian Staff

Construction projects around campus are as plentiful as they ever have been. Construction in Central, along North Pleasant Street, at the Integrated Science Building and, more recently, the Studio Arts Building, is chugging along successfully as the semester progresses.

In the upper Central living area, the steam line project that crosses Clark Hill Road towards Butterfield Residence Hall continues this week.

The steam line construction along North Pleasant Street across from the Worcester Dining Hall area adjacent to the site of the future Integrated Science Building is largely completed, and the lane shift has been removed.

Involved in that same project, pedestrian walkways surrounding the Campus Garage have been changed.

Pedestrian routes through the area are in flux. Officials are asking pedestrians to please take note of posted walkways and avoid gated construction zones.

Updates regarding the Integrated Science Building include a completed site fence permanently closing the north end of Stockbridge Road. The contractor is continuing to remove sewer lines, as well as, replacing water lines in Stockbridge Road.

Less publicized construction on the Student Union has also begun. Work crews have started the reconstruction of the Student Union masonry and roofing. A staging area has been established on the west side of the building, eliminating vehicle access and restricting pedestrian traffic in the immediate vicinity.

The main entrance to the Student Union should remain open for the duration of the project. Construction on the Student Union is expected to continue through November.

The excavation of the long awaited Studio Arts Building continues this week.

"It est fims!," is said of the W.E.B. DuBois Library Courtyard Resurfacing Construction on the Facilities & Campus Planning Web site, meaning "it is done!" Some fencing remains southwest of the library as work crews continue with landscape reclamation in the area.

Shakespeare's work questioned

By Debleena Mitra
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts Center for Renaissance Studies at the University of Masschusetts and the University of Newcastle in Australia are working to confirm that Shakespeare is indeed the author of many of his works and that he may have received unaccredited help on others.

"There have always been debates," says Arthur F. Kinney, director of the UMass Center, "as to whether or not he collaborated with other writers or if he even existed at all. Some say the Earl of Oxford actually wrote all these works and Shakespeare is just a fictional character."

A three-page manuscript found in a play called, "The Book of Sir Thomas More," has been confirmed as Shakespeare's own handwriting and has been instrumental in determining Shakespeare's "literary fingerprint." The manuscript is referred to as "Hand D" and is used to observe the writer's use of words and style. "Hand D," and a few other signatures are the only definite pieces of evidence of Shakespeare's handwriting.

In order to discover Shakespeare's exact "fingerprint," the Renaissance Center collaborates with the University of Newcastle's Centre for Linguistic Stylistics. The team of researchers, led by Hugh Craig, uses a method called computational stylistics that records the frequency of common and rare words to establish Shakespeare's literary fingerprint.

Using "Hand D," researchers can see the pattern of Shakespeare's word usage and enter the data into the computer to come up with his language print. The use of computers also makes it easier to compare writing styles of different writers, such as Christopher Marlowe or Thomas Kyd.

The comparisons even allow for researchers to detect where there were collaborations on certain works, for example, we now know Shakespeare received help in writing the play "Macbeth." The famous lines "Double, double toil and trouble " and the rest of the witches' songs are supposed to have been written by Thomas Middleton – not Shakespeare.

Also, it has been confirmed that Shakespeare contributed to the much-debated Arden of Faversham. "It will probably be included in the next edition of Shakespeare's complete works," says Kinney.

Research has shown that many of Shakespeare's earliest works, when he was first establishing himself as a writer, and his later works, such as the play Henry VIII, are mostly collaborations.

Information about the discoveries and confirmations made possible through computational statistics were presented on July 21 at the Eighth World Shakespeare Congress in Brisbane, Australia. It was a gathering of international Shakespeare scholars who meet every five years.

This year, graduate students working on the project made a presentation on their research.

"It was a very dramatic moment," says Kinney of the presentation. The information will also be available to the public when it is published in a book called "By Me, William Shakespeare." This book is due to be ready for publication in early 2007 and will contain all the research that has been done thus far.

Ultimately the goal of the research team was to learn more about Shakespeare. Even as one of the world's most recognizable writers, he left very few clues about his life and secrets concerning his talent. Researchers are using newly found information to try to organize the volumes of writing and allow later generations to better understand the text with the findings that

See SHAKESPEARE on page 3

Researchers doubt Shakespeare's collaboration with other authors, some believing that he was a fictional character.

Earthquake causes major power outages

By Greg Small
Associated Press

HONOLULU — A strong earthquake shook Hawaii early Sunday, causing a landslide that blocked a major highway on Hawaii Island and power outages across much of the state, authorities said.

The state Civil Defense had unconfirmed reports of injuries, but communication problems prevented more definite reports. Gov. Linda Lingle issued a disaster declaration for the entire state, saying there had been damage to buildings and roads.

The quake hit at 7:07 a.m. local time, 10 miles north-northwest of Kailua Kona, a town on the west coast of the Big Island, said Don Blakeman, a geophysicist at the National Earthquake Information Center, part of the U.S. Geological Survey.

Blakeman said there was no risk of a Pacific-wide tsunami, but there was a possibility of significant wave activity in Hawaii.

The Pacific Tsunami Center reported a preliminary magnitude of 6.5, while the U.S. Geological Survey gave a preliminary magnitude of 6.6. The earthquake was followed by several strong aftershocks, including one measuring a magnitude of 5.8, the Geological Survey said.

"We were rocking and rolling," said Anne LaVasseur, who was on the second floor of a two-story, wood-framed house on the east side of the Big Island when the temblor struck. "I was pretty scared. We were swaying back and forth, like King Kong's pushing your house back and forth."

Betsy Garties, who lives in North Kohala on the northern tip of Hawaii Island, said she was lying in bed with one of her two young children when the quake struck. She first stood under a door frame as safety experts advise, then found that too wobbly for comfort and ran into the yard.

"It was strong enough that it was wobbling, so you almost lost your balance running out into the yard," Garties said. "The house was visibly rocking."

The quake caused widespread power outages, and phone communication was possible, but difficult. By mid-day Sunday, power was restored to Hilo on the Big Island and was starting to be restored to Maui, said Chuck Anthony, a spokesman for the Hawaii National Guard. Officials did not have a firm estimate of how many people were without power.

In Waikiki, one of the state's primary tourism areas, worried visitors began lining up outside convenience stores to purchase food, water and other supplies. Managers were letting tourists into the darkened stores one at a time.

Karie and Bryan Croes waited an hour to buy bottles of water, chips and bread. "It's quite a honeymoon story," said Karie as she and her husband sat in lounge chairs surrounded by their grocery bags beside a pool at ResortQuest Waikiki Beach Hotel.

On Hawaii Island, also known as the Big Island, there was some damage in Kailua-Kona and landslide along a major highway, said Gerard Fryer, a geophysicist at the Pacific Tsunami Center.

Lingle said in a radio interview with radio station KSSK from Hawaii Island that she had no report of any fatalities. She said boulders fell on highways.

See EARTHQUAKE on page 3

Buffalo experiences October snowstorm

At least two feet of snow blanketed parts of the Buffalo area Oct. 13, 2006, in the season's first snowfall in western New York, signaling a possible second record-setting day, and leaving more than 220,000 customers without electricity.

By Michelle Osorio
Collegian Staff

Residents of Buffalo, N.Y. woke to two feet of snow last Friday morning as an early October snowstorm went through the area. The storm brought on its share of problems as 220,000 residents were left without electricity, roads remained unsafe for travel and schools in the area closed for the day.

The 8.6 inches of heavy snow that fell last Thursday night broke Buffalo's previous record of six inches, set Oct. 31, 1917. According to the National Weather Service, 22.5 inches of snow had been recorded by Friday morning at the Buffalo Niagara International Airport.

"This is an extremely rare event for this early in the season," meteorologist Tom Nizio told the Associated Press.

The snow was heavy and unexpected enough to prompt a busy day at the Buffalo Police Department, which received more than 3,000 calls late Thursday, Lt. James Watkins told the Associated Press.

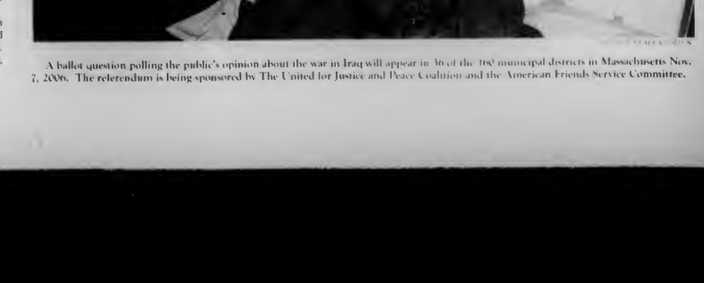
Road conditions prompted police officials to ban unnecessary driving in Buffalo, Amherst, Blasdell, Orchard Park and Hamburg. The New York State Thruway from Rochester to Dunkirk, southwest of Buffalo, was also closed Friday morning due to heavy snow and unsafe road conditions.

Power lines fell faster than the National Grid Energy Co. could fix them, so most customers are expected to remain without power through the week, even though crews worked long hours to begin to restore power last Thursday.

"This is extremely heavy snow and most of the trees still have most of their leaves," National Grid energy company spokesperson Steve Brady said. "We can't do a complete damage assessment until the snow stops falling."

The unexpected weather might have surprised residents and meteorologists alike, but no major incidents were reported by police.

Massachusetts state elections | page 3



A ballot question polling the public's opinion about the war in Iraq will appear in 30 of the 351 municipal districts in Massachusetts Nov. 7, 2006. The referendum is being sponsored by The United for Justice and Peace Coalition and the American Friends Service Committee.

Campfire queen
Cycling champion
Sentimental geologist*

Learn more about Marjon Walrod and tell us more about you. Visit pwc.com/bringit.

Your life. You can bring it with you.

*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

Iraq war question to appear on Massachusetts ballots

It is estimated that Massachusetts taxpayers have, to date, paid over $7 billion dollars for the war in Iraq, and it is expected that the number will soon reach the trillions.

By Matt Kaplan
The Daily Free Press (Boston U.)

BOSTON— The United for Justice and Peace Coalition and the American Friends Service Committee are sponsoring a referendum on the Nov. 7 ballot asking voters whether their representative should vote in favor of a resolution to withdraw troops in Iraq. The ballot question will appear in 36 of the 160 municipal districts in Massachusetts, according to Brian McNiff, spokesman for Secretary of the Commonwealth William Francis Galvin.

Though nonbinding, the referendum would use "a public opinion question to pressure the administration to bring our military forces home now," according to an American Friends Service Committee Iraq Referendum handout.

The referendum will appear on ballots in South Boston as well as parts of Jamaica Plain, Mission Hill and Roslindale, according to an Oct. 11 article in The Boston Globe.

The group's handout said the referendum is necessary because of the tens of thousands of Iraqi deaths and nearly 3,000 American casualties.

"The financial costs are expected to reach staggering trillions and it is estimated that Massachusetts taxpayers have already paid over $7 billion for this war," the handout stated.

"Polls show that a large majority of Americans want the war to end but nothing happens," the handout continued. "It is not enough to just vote for candidates and hope they will act in our behalf."

Joseph Gerson, director of programs for the American Friends Service Committee in New England, said his organization helped with the referendum effort to "provide leverage for members of Congress to take action" against the war in Iraq.

Gerson said the effort in Massachusetts echoes a similar referendum in Vermont. He said the committee chose to use a referendum because "it's a way we can take the issue [of the war in Iraq] to our sister citizens."

In light of the announcement to include the referendum on the ballot, more than 200 people gathered last night at the Harvard University Institute of Politics heatedly debated whether the Bush Administration should withdraw the troops from Iraq or they if should stay until the job is completed.

At the forum, Center for American Progress Senior Fellow Lawrence Korb argued the United States should withdraw troops from Iraq by the end of 2007.

"[The situation in Iraq] will not be solved militarily," Korb said.

Korb advocated a strategy he termed "strategic redeployment," which calls for an American troop withdrawal from Iraq to other places in the region. He said American troops in Iraq undermine the nation's credibility and serve as a crutch for the current Iraqi government.

"[Troop withdrawal] would give the Iraqis an opportunity to do what they need to do," Korb said later adding, "Our troops were not deployed to referee a civil war."

However, Hoover Institution Senior Fellow Victor Hanson reasoned that American troops should stay in Iraq because "if we would leave precipitously, there would be a bloodbath."

"[Leaving Iraq] would be the amoral thing to do," he added.

However, both Hanson and Korb agreed the United States does not have extra troops to deploy to the region.

After a question regarding the United States' Iraq task force than it was five years ago, Hanson said he disagreed because the United States' weakness in Orissa in Afghanistan and Iraq. But Korb disagreed, saying, "The longer we stay the more they [Orissa] re-

Researchers analyze how Shakespeare developed writing style

SHAKESPEARE from page 1

Shakespeare is one of the world's most recognized writers.

research has produced.

Kinney says, "We're analyzing how Shakespeare developed his own individual style not comparing[ ] authors to determine who is the best. We're not changing anything about the actual material — how can we tamper with the magic? The mystery of great poetry will always remain."

Airports still function after earthquake hits

A 6.6-magnitude earthquake jolted residents of Hawaii, knocking out power, but officials were quick to say no tsunami was expected.

EARTHQUAKE from page 1

rock walls collapsed and televisions had been knocked off stands.

Kona Community Hospital on the western side of the island was being evacuated after ceiling collapsed and power was cut off, according to a hospital spokeswoman.

"At least 20 more patients were being evacuated across the island to a medical center in Hilo, [the] Lewis spokeswoman for the hospital [said]. "All nursing care patients were being moved temporarily to another conference center, as well."

"We were told [by] that no one

Power was back up in the hospital, and its emergency room was accepting patients, hospital officials said. One operating room that sustained minimal damage was available for use if necessary.

Airports were functioning despite the power outages, though travel was difficult and some flights were being canceled, officials said.

Rod Haraga, director of the state Transportation Department, told KSSK said that inbound flights were being allowed to land, but outgoing flights were not taking off because the TSA doesn't have enough power to screen passengers.

Associated Press writers Audrey McAvoy, Mark Niesse and Jaymes Song contributed to this report.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVII
Issue 29

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Eric Athas
Business Manager Dan Conti
Production Manager Amanda Allen
Night Supervisor Sheryl Wolnik
Advertising Manager Jamison Porter
Advertising Production Molly Eggleston
Editorial Production Virgina Nielsen
Arts & Living Editor Morgan Rousseau
Comics Editor Sean Daram
Editorial Editor Kristen LaCasse
News Editor Matt Bellveau
Sports Editor Rob Greenfield
Circulation Manager Jeff Penz
Finance Manager David Valade
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Theresa Barba
Assistant Business Phil Smoller
Asst. Arts & Living Tim McCall
Asst. Arts & Living Alex Butler
Assistant News Anna Dobanitsa
Assistant News Nicole Boonjakuakul
Assistant Sports Danny Picard
Assistant Sports Jon Pelland
Assistant Editorial Tucker Merrick
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Matt Bellveau

COPY EDITOR
Kristen LaCasse

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Ginny Nielsen

PRODUCTION STAFF
Nick Belanger, Sarah Belanger

Iowa man charged with shooting parents and three teenage sisters

Iowa Department of Public Safety Public Information Officer James Saunders speaks during a news conference Oct. 15, 2006, on the shooting deaths of five people in Bonaparte, Iowa.

By Henry C. Jackson
Associated Press

BONAPARTE, Iowa—A 22-year-old man has been charged with murdering his parents and three teenage sisters at their home in southeastern Iowa, a sheriff's office said Sunday.

Shawn Bentler is accused of gunning down five family members and faces five counts of first-degree murder, the Van Buren County Sheriff's Office said. He is being held on a $2.5 million bond at the Adams County jail in Quincy, Ill.

The victims were found early Saturday near Bonaparte, according to the sheriff's office. They were identified as Michael Bentler, 53; his wife, Sandra, 47; and their daughters Sheena, 17; Shelby, 15; and Shayne, 14. Autopsies were planned for Sunday.

The sheriff's office said that it received a 911 call from Shayne Bentler at 3:38 a.m. Saturday and that she told the dispatcher her brother was "going to do something."

According to sheriff's documents regarding the 911 tape, a gunshot is heard in the background and someone screams, "Shawn, no." The line then goes dead.

Authorities said they received a second 911 call at the same time from the cell phone of Sandra Bentler. That call went unanswered.

Bentler was arrested Saturday in Quincy, Ill., about 60 miles from the family's home, on an unrelated charge of possession of drug paraphernalia, according to the Adams County sheriff's office.

Earlier Sunday, at the St. Boniface Catholic Church in Farmington, where the Bentler family worshipped, some parishioners wiped away tears as they knelt to pray, while others sat motionless, their hands on their laps or clasped in prayer.

"You saw this in the yard, [a scene] when those girls were alive, and now it's in our backyard," pastor Monsignor Mike Linnenbrink said [regarding] the shooting deaths of five [people] in an Amish school in Pennsylvania] this month. "It's not surprising in the way we turn to church at this time. [We're a tight community, not just in Van Buren County, but in all of southeast Iowa."

The teens' institution, valedictorian and senior attended Harmony High School. School officials said they will have counselors available Monday to speak with grieving students.

Conservatives protest gay marriage

By Brandie M. Jefferson
Associated Press

BOSTON—Conservative religious and political leaders rallied Sunday in opposition of gay marriage, arguing that their rights to religious expression are being threatened.

The event, being broadcast to churches nationally, is part of a larger effort to energize conservative voters before the Congressional elections in three weeks.

Gov. Mitt Romney, a likely Republican candidate for president in 2008, was scheduled to join several members of the Massachusetts clergy and an estimated 1,000 supporters at the Tremont Temple Baptist Church.

The Washington-based Family Research Council chose Boston for the site of its annual "Liberty Sunday" because Massachusetts is the only state that has legalized gay marriage.

"When we look at what has happened with same-sex marriage, as it began in this state and threatens to spread across the country, we've seen in its wake the loss of religious freedoms and the ability to speak out based upon one's moral convictions," Tony Perkins, the organization's president, said on Sunday.

Eight states will vote on November on amendments banning gay marriage, following 20 states that previously approved bans.

Prompted by a ruling from the highest court, Massachusetts legalized gay marriage in 2004. Massachusetts lawmakers will consider a proposed constitutional amendment banning same-sex marriage in a Statehouse session scheduled Nov. 9, two days after the election.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, OCTOBER 16, 2006

"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Men wearing jeans, for her

Katy Bruck

Having a television in my room this year has been quite the blessing in disguise. Such easy entertainment often forces me to recall the ways I chose to amuse myself last semester. One incident that sticks out in my memory is an argument I had with a friend of mine who decided to try and tell me that guys have a harder time finding clothes than girls do. He kept insisting guys have it tougher because it's hard for them to stick out – everything looks the same.

Now, most of my guy friends are pretty standard dressers. With exception to the young man I'm referring to, most of the guys I know are pretty stereotypical in terms of their fashion sense. They have very little ambition to broaden their tastes.

I'm a big people watcher, and it hasn't gone unnoticed that, in various ways, some guys appear to be attempting to open up their fashion options. There seems to be a throwback to the days of 70s punk and rock fashions. For a few years now, I've seen the tight pants and little t-shirts of Robert Plant walking around Boston or the suburbs of Massachusetts. It used to be just a small amount of the population, but now, all over the UMass campus, I'm seeing a strange perversion of this trend. A disturbing amount of males seem to be jumping on the band wagon. Maybe you've noticed it: guys...wearing girls' jeans.

It might seem harsh to describe this personal fashion choice as perverse or disturbing, but let me try to explain where I'm coming from. Not being the most high-maintenance wearer of clothing, I basically build my whole wardrobe (if you could even call it that) around jeans.

In their purest form, they're comfortable, durable and versatile. Notice how I say in their purest form, because, for girls, buying jeans is not as easy as you'd think. This was the main reason I got so agitated by my argument with this friend of mine.

I've done my fair share of research on the subject, and I would like all you guys out there to know there is no bigger frustration for a girl than to go into one store and be a size four, only to walk into the next and not be able to fit into an eight. Not only are girls' sizes not universal, but every fit is different. Some jeans flare from the knee, some flare only at the bottom hem. Some jeans are fitted through the hip, some are looser, some have six inch rises (zippers) and some have nine. Some jeans cover your whole butt, some don't cover it at all.

I'm seeing a stranger perversion of this trend. And a disturbing amount of males seem to be jumping on the band wagon.

You can observe the consequences of these variations any time you take the time to look. When a girl sits down and her jeans ride up and show her socks, that's a girl who bought a regular when she should've bought a long —meaning the jeans she is wearing have an inseam that's too short.

When a girl walks around with her panties hanging out of the back of her jeans, that probably means either her rise is too low (not enough inches), or she chose a jean that was too tight in the hip. These might seem like silly little superficial details to you, but they can be upsetting and frustrating for us.

In America, guys' sizes are based on inches. Of course there's going to be some variation, like the washes or the leg fits, but you guys will know, if one pair of 32 x 32's fits you, chances are, most other 32's will too. You also know there is always going to be a certain amount of room in the hip and butt area.

MARYKATEANDASHLEYSTYLE.COM

I've assumed all these years that there's a pretty obvious anatomical reason for why you'd need more room in there than we do. What baffles and disturbs me is the fact any sane human being would want to forgo such simplicity in favor of trying to cram themselves into a fit that isn't meant for them. Especially when brands like Levi's, which are pretty much universally available, are picking up on the trend of skinny little pants and making such fits for guys. You can indeed find a snug rear-ends and slim fit legs in the guys' section.

So, I guess this article can be taken both as a question of why, and a request that all those girl-pant-wearing males out there try and consider who you're depriving of their fashion rights here. If it truly is as psychologically wearing for you guys not to be able to stand out as it is for a girl to think she's going insane because nothing fits, than I take this all back.

But consider this next time you meander over to the women's side of "AE" or the "GAP" while you're wearing your package-enhancing girly jeans, an actual female might be tearing her hair out in some mall in North America, wondering just why there never seem to be any six longs in stock anymore.

Katy Bruck is a Collegian columnist

House takes the pot?

Chris Eckel

Late in September, the United States Congress passed a bill concerning port security, and the bill was signed into law by President Bush on Friday. As with many bills that go through the legislative process, the bill wasn't really initially noticed by many except for C-Span junkies.

However, the next day, people began realizing The 'Safe Accountability For Every Port' (SAFE) Act of 2006 (H.R. 4954) did not solely concern the protection of water entries into the United States. In a bit of tricky legislating, the bill also sought to prevent banks and credit card companies from sending funds to Internet gambling sites. In essence, the bill made it impossible to conduct online gambling within the parameters of the law.

According to many who voted for the bill, the reasoning was Americans were spending too much online – they needed to be protected from themselves. Americans certainly do spend quite a lot on online gambling: according to Christiansen Capitol Advisors, Americans bet $5.9 billion dollars on Internet gambling last year.

Gambling may be dangerous if one is irresponsible about it, but can the government really claim the moral imperative to prevent it?

Man, even the Yankees don't spend that much money on buying every All-Star they can find. However, even if one accepts there is a lot of money being won and lost in online gambling, does that give Congress the duty, or even the right, to outlaw it?

Consider the degree to which betting has permeated our culture. Each year, millions of people from all over the country head to Las Vegas and Atlantic City for fun under the artificial sun of fluorescent lighting. Local casinos, such as Mohegan Sun and Foxwoods, are also flourishing.

However, casinos are far from the only sign that gambling is a force to be reckoned with: consider that every sports page in the country lists the odds for every game that day. They do that solely so people can make intelligent bets upon the games that day.

Need more evidence? Almost 23 million people play poker online. That's nearly 10 percent of the population. We are so obsessed with gambling that we have now begun watching other people gamble so we can live vicariously. I don't play cards or watch much TV, but even I can name at least a few different poker shows on television. I apologize for beating you over the head with it, but it is pretty clear gambling, in many different forms, has become a reality for many Americans.

With that in mind, what right does the federal government have to forbid online gambling? Gambling may be dangerous if one is irresponsible about it, but can the government really claim the moral imperative to prevent it? They claim online gambling is particularly hazardous because many firms are unregulated, due to the fact they are offshore. If that is the case, why not seek to regulate online gambling, rather than simply outlaw it? Such a solution seems like it would be the best of both worlds.

Online gambling seems to have few outs.

Bush and his government seem to see the world in black and white, but there is definitely a grey area when it comes to online gambling. I am not cocky enough to suggest I have a perfect plan to regulate and control online gambling, but I do know outlawing online wagering is not the answer.

When the government outlaws a particular activity it may become more difficult, but it certainly does not become impossible. Consider how many of your friends have easy access to drugs or drink underage. When there is a will to break the law, there is a way.

This maxim is particularly troubling when one considers gambling is an addictive behavior. Those who really wish to gamble will find a way to do so, even if it leads to dire consequences. Gambling is never a sure proposition, even for the best of players.

However, a certain amount of risk is part of the game. In casinos, the odds are well known, and a plethora of regulatory boards supervise all casinos. With the sorts of unregulated, shady companies that will no doubt seek to assist desperate gamblers, there will be no such regulation.

If the government truly seeks to intervene on behalf of their constituency, would they not be better serving the general public by regulating gambling, rather than seeking to eliminate it? It would not be that difficult. The companies that make up the bulk of online gambling would be only too willing to play along; they have lost a significant portion of their customer base with this new legislation. The government could even demand a tax on gambling, as they have on tobacco products and other such vices.

In this way, everyone would win. New commerce would be generated, those who enjoy gambling could be allowed to pursue their interests and the government would have more money to fund the war against terrorism. That's a hand even pocket aces can't beat.

Chris Eckel is a Collegian columnist. Look for an opposing viewpoint in Friday's paper.

Church and state: a two-way street

Ben Duffy

I'm a Republican, but I won't be voting for Kerry Healey this year, or ever. My main beef with Healey is her opposition stance on Gov. Romney's religious freedom bill.

Last February, Massachusetts legislature passed a decision to force Catholic Charities adoption services branch to give children to gay couples. Gov. Romney then sought to reverse this act through a lawful exemption. In March, Lt. Gov. Healey broke with her boss, saying that she opposed any such exemption, and that Romney is violating the "separation of church and state."

This is why Healey lost my vote, on her invocation and sophomoric understanding on the issue: the separation of church and state.

Let's take a look at this precedent in history. Despite the fact these words do not appear anywhere in the Constitution, they became doctrine after the former KKK-member Supreme Court Justice Hugo Black inserted them into his 1947 opinion of Everson v. Board of Education.

The former Chief Justice William Rehnquist later wrote, "The 'wall of separation between church and State' is a metaphor based on bad history, a metaphor which has proved useless as a guide to judging. It should be frankly and explicitly abandoned."

But even if you believe in Black's "bad metaphor," the separation of church and state is a two-way street, something Healey fails to understand. As I am told over and over again, the wall is actually intended to allow religion to flourish without interference from the state. The idea is the government will keep its nose out of spiritual affairs, and the church will not try to run the government's civic affairs.

The state doesn't bow to the church and vice versa. Gov. Romney's communications director, Eric Fehrnstrom, put it best when he commented, "When it comes to the separation of church and state, we're very good about keeping the church out of the state, but in this case we're not so good about keeping the state out of the church."

Right now, in our Commonwealth, homosexuals have been granted first class citizenship, and Catholics have been granted second class citizenship.

As you can see, this separation Healey fears will be violated by Romney's religious freedom bill has actually already been breached. The state is telling the Catholic Church how to run its affairs, chipping away at the freedom of Catholics to operate without undue governmental intrusion. Right now in our Commonwealth, homosexuals have been granted first class citizenship, and Catholics have been granted second class citizenship.

I have always maintained the gay rights movement is at odds with religious freedom. As a Catholic, I cannot fully exercise and articulate my beliefs because they may be offensive to homosexuals. Yet, the immediate reaction whenever I state this is there is no such conflict. We should struggle to create a tolerant society, in which gays are free to be gay and Catholics are free to be Catholic. Sorry, but Catholics are not free to be Catholic, and the most intolerant people of all are working on Beacon Hill.

Would our legislators force a Muslim to eat pork? Would they force an Orthodox Jew to remove his yarmulke? Of course they wouldn't. So why are they forcing Catholics to act in a way that is contrary to their consciences? Is it because of civil rights? If that's the case, I would say religious freedom issues are civil rights issues of the first degree.

The Constitution guarantees our government will not pass laws prohibiting the free exercise of religion, but it doesn't say a word about adoption or homosexuals.

Our nation has a history of making exceptions to laws in order to accommodate religious beliefs, and an exception desperately needs to be made in this case.

In 1943, the Supreme Court ruled in West Virginia v. Barnette that Jehovah's Witnesses could not be compelled to recite the pledge of allegiance at school, a practice which is contrary to the religious beliefs of Jehovah's Witnesses. Similarly, Jehovah's Witnesses and Quakers are exempted from military conscription because of their religious beliefs.

On March 10, 2006, Catholic Charities of Boston announced it will be getting out of the adoption business. "Sadly," said Boston's Archbishop Sean O'Malley, "we have come to a moment when Catholic Charities in the Archdiocese of Boston must withdraw from the work of adoptions, in order to exercise religious freedom."

Unfortunately, children will probably be the losers in this conflict, but I place the blame solely on the stubbornness of the legislature, not on the Church. They should not be forcing people to choose between faith and charity on the one hand, and complying with an unjust law on the other.

Massachusetts ought to be ashamed that it has made itself such an inhospitable climate for people of faith. It obviously has no respect for the First Amendment of our Constitution. Clearly, our state legislature and lieutenant governor have become a threat to our religious freedom and the welfare of children. So long as Kerry Healey supports such veiled discrimination against Catholics, she can kiss my vote goodbye.

Ben Duffy is a Collegian columnist

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

COMPLEMENT FOR THE COLLEGIAN

As a former student at UMass and current journalist, its great to see you guys printing something funny and refreshing rather than the usual trash you print. Tell Mike Cartwright to keep up the good work.

Daniel Magazu
UMass Alumnus

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!
RESPOND TO WHAT WE PRINT!
(550 WORD LIMIT)

Send letters to: editorial@dailycollegian.com, or go to: dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, OCTOBER 16, 2006

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Okkervil River band played in front of a nearly sold-out Iron Horse venue on Friday night that was chock full of die-hard fans.

First time in the Valley

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

Every year, record labels and major publications push a host of "hot new artists" on an audience, innocent in their desire to find new music. And for all these bands that rise, crash and burn at an increasingly quick rate, there are still artists who slip under the mainstream radar and build up a fanbase the old fashioned way by writing great songs. Okkervil River, a band that fits perfectly in the latter category, showed at the Iron Horse on Friday.

Although this was Okkervil River's first trip to Northampton, they were still greeted by a massive line outside the club and diehard fans inside.

The band, originally from Austin, Texas, has three full-length albums and a host of EPs under their belt. At Friday's show, the band delivered a two hour set packed with some fan favorites from throughout their career. Their set also delivered a handful of covers and some new songs.

Following the release of 2005's "Black Sheep Boy," a majestic record that links so many motifs, themes and images it blows right past the term "concept album," Okkervil's profile has continued to rise. After a year of touring they are still on the road and preparing their next step.

Since they have moved out from under the shadow of alt-country and taken their hyper-literate music far away from their contemporaries, Okkervil has gotten a lot of press. Especially since their latest album landed on many "Best of" lists. Fortunately the band has handled their increased profile in stride and it showed at the Iron Horse.

The band still proved they can be a powerhouse, a talent they grew into gradually, culminating in their album release. Okkervil's fifty-two-minute in the valley sound to be a show a lot of people will talk about, and remember, for a long time. As one of the few bands who have followed a steady upward trajectory in both talent and popularity, the next developments Okkervil takes are sure to be exciting.

The band released the "Overboard & Down" EP, which contains "The President's Dead" and "Love to a Monster," among others, in Australia recently and will be releasing it state-side in December. The stripped down approach reflects the casual attitude of the release and will perhaps foreshadow the next evolution of one of the more exciting and interesting bands around.

Shelf's [illegible] sweet melodies, thoughtful and emotional lyrics and meshing together acoustic guitar strums with inspired keyboards. The set-list was evenly distributed, though it certainly leaned more towards newer material, including the bands new single "The President's Dead." Though the title might song like an anti-Bush protest, it is actually more applicable to the general concept of presidential assassination.

Other new songs included "Love to a Monster" which showed Okkervil getting more in touch with their folksy, stripped-down roots. For this, they traded in raging electric guitars for subtle lap steel work.

The band still proved they can be a powerhouse – a talent they grew into gradually, culminating in the "Black Sheep Boy" releases – as they stamped through tracks like "For Real," a true exercise in the quiet-loud dynamic and "Another Radio Song," which builds from a single guitar strum into a whirlwind. In this song Shelf sings some of his best lyrics and seems to transform into the demons he sings about.

Okkervil's first appearance in the Valley is bound to be a show a lot of people will talk about, and remember, for a long time. As one of the few bands who have followed a steady upward trajectory in both talent and popularity, the next developments Okkervil takes are sure to be exciting.

The band released the "Overboard & Down" EP, which contains "The President's Dead" and "Love to a Monster," among others, in Australia recently and will be releasing it state-side in December. The stripped down approach reflects the casual attitude of the release and will perhaps foreshadow the next evolution of one of the more exciting and interesting bands around

Lead singer guitarist Will Sheff gives his crowd a high dose of charisma when Okkervil River plays their dark lyrics of heart-break and tragedy.

Donna stampedes Pearl Street

By Lauren Moorsmith
Collegian Staff

While UMass students partied hardy on Saturday, October 14, Amherst and Northampton's older music-loving crowd gathered together at "Pearl Street Night Club" for a Donna the Buffalo concert.

With their washboard skills and bumping bass line, Donna got the entire venue bobbing their heads and moving their feet.

The condensed crowd that hovered by the stage consisted mainly of earlier generations of rock and country lovers. They all swayed to the music with their eyes closed and beer bottles gripped tightly as they moved to the groove. Despite the variety of more experienced faces that inhabited the venue, there was a ring of younger faces halving the compact plethora of people and were dancing wildly. The combination of energy the diverse crowd radiated kept the band playing.

Other than Yonder Mountain String Band, this venue has never been so packed with people. The temperature quickly rose as the halo of younger faces danced around the venue.

Donna the Buffalo is a band with a southern-rock and country style sound similar to Fleetwood Mac and Lynyrd Skynyrd.

Mix sound they also had a little reggae flavor to Lynyrd Skynyrd. The southern-rock and country mixture was a refreshing change up for Pearl Street. They offered a variety of different tempos and included a couple always songs which got a good amount of the couples pairing off and remembering the good old days when rock was not making a thousands of dollars since 2002.

If you missed Donna the Buffalo this weekend you still have a chance to see them before the semester is over. They will be touring all over New York over the next couple of months along with Pennsylvania and Virginia. If you can't make those, then keep an ear out and catch them the next time they come around these parts.

The condensed crowd that hovered by the stage consisted mainly of earlier generations of rock and country lovers. They all swayed to the music with their eyes closed and beer bottles gripped tightly as they moved to the groove.

A group called The Herd travels with the band, raising money for various distress organizations that range from food banks to women's shelters.

Donna the Buffalo has a familiar rock sound that has a more southern beat to it with some undertones of country. They wouldn't be classified as a country band, but they offer just enough acoustic style to recognize the influence under their washboards and fiddles. This is the first band I've seen that incorporates an electric fiddle and a washboard into its line-up. Lead singer Tara Nevins has a recognizable vocal sound that resembles Fleetwood Mac's lead singer Stevie Nicks.

Along with a definite Fleetwood name for itself.

Something interesting about Donna is they are associated with a group of people called The Herd. The Herd is a group of Donna the Buffalo followers who travel with the band from show to show raising money for different distress organizations like women's shelters, food banks and other various causes.

Side to Side Charities or The Herd's organization they formed for the soul purpose of helping those in need. The benefits they hold at Donna concerts have raked in tens of

To learn more about Donna the Buffalo check them out at www.donnathebuffalo.com and browse through their bio's and merchandise.

To find out which of your favorite bands are coming to the Amherst area check out www.ihcg.com and surf through line-ups for Pearl Street, Iron Horse and the Calvin Theatre. You are guaranteed to find a band you will enjoy at an affordable price. Keep checking the Arts and Living section for notice of bands coming soon.

NJ student's diet book 'fad-free'

By Jenna Spataro
Collegian Correspondent

Daphne Oz is not your typical college student. She is the published author of "The Dorm Room Diet," which is an eight-step healthy lifestyle guidebook. This isn't your typical diet book where there are quick fixes on how to lose weight, it focuses more on having an everyday healthy lifestyle while in college.

Oz is a 20-year-old junior at Princeton University majoring in Near Eastern Studies. She grew up in Cliffside Park, New Jersey with a household of health conscious family members. Her father Dr. Mehmet Oz is a heart surgeon, her mother a vegetarian and her grandmother a nutritional adviser.

Although she lived in a house that provided healthy options during Oz's high school years she was overweight. She discusses her struggles in the opening chapter of her book. College was the place where she finally became healthy.

I needed the independence to be in complete control of when, when, and how. I ate in order to fully be able to make all my own choices and start to be solely responsible for myself and my health, she said.

Oz did a project in high school that focused on teenage eating habits. She began doing research on healthy foods and forms of exercise. This was the beginning of the start of her book. She also had some writing experience with Ellegirl Magazine while in high school. Once she entered college she expanded on the issues she had learned and wrote the book through her freshman and sopho

The book opens with a description of Oz's previous eating struggles eight steps, reading it is extremely easy. In each chapter there are random dorm room diet tips or facts highlighted in a separate box. One interesting fact is if you indulge in a small piece of whole wheat or whole grain bread dipped in some olive oil rather than butter, before your meal you are less likely to overeat and will consume fewer calories than if you had not eaten the bread.

This book is perfect for all college students, its focus is not centered on counting calories or deprivation of food, but really just on creating healthier lifestyles and how to make more informed choices. College can be a stressful time, and it is easy to fall off the bandwagon and get stuck in some unhealthy routines.

The hardest thing is having the discipline to put the effort into planning ahead and making sure that you're never left famished at 3am, standing in the cookie aisle of the u-store. So much of being healthy is about making sure that you give yourself a leg up wher-

See DIET BOOK on page 6

Princeton University student Daphne Oz, author of the diet book "The Dorm Room Diet," advocates healthy eating choices.

Stephen Kellogg, lead singer of the musical group Stephen Kellogg and the Sixers, a band composed mostly of UMass graduates, plays a show at the Iron Horse in Northampton on Sunday, October 15th. Kellogg, pictured left, graduated from UMass in 2005 with a degree in English. Kellogg started playing solos at small coffee houses and bars.

Stephen Kellogg, a product of UMass

Diet book reveals healthy student eating habits

DIET BOOK from page 5

ever you can by always planning ahead for dangerous scenarios (danger zones), Oz said.

The book is set up in a way that you don't have to read it cover to cover if you don't want to. If you feel like you need some tips on exercise, you have a certain chapter to jump to. It is a good idea to follow all the steps, but some people need more help in certain areas.

The chapter on exercising shows students different exercise moves they can do in their very own dorm room with ease. It expresses the importance of both cardio and muscle training. Oz's personal favorite exercise is the elliptical machine and squats.

Since Oz is still in college she has been getting some positive feed back from readers through Facebook messaging.

I've gotten tons of Facebook messages from girls and guys who have found the book really helpful and have been able to implement the tips easily, said Oz.

Oz is thrilled to hear that students are incorporating healthy choices into their daily routines.

As many students already know, drinking is one of the major causes of weight gain. Oz touches upon the dangers of drinking in the chapter called "Get prepared." The reality of the situation is some students do drink, and it is apart of their social lives. If you must drink, Oz recommends light beer or wine, if you have the option and stay away from sugary mixed drinks.

"The fact of the matter is, you could eat healthfully all week long and then ingest a Thanksgiving meal's worth of calories on a Saturday night out if you're not careful, says Oz.

Oz is talking with her publisher about a second book, but there is nothing on the press yet. When Oz graduates she would like to do work abroad maybe as a businesswoman or diplomat. She says she might want to focus on providing the Middle East with health information.

Unlike many other authors, Oz is a student writing to her fellow peers. She is not a doctor or a nutritionist, which she makes very clear in her introduction. She is the same as everyone else. She made some health changes in her life and wants to inform other students around America.

This is a great book to pick up; a few small changes can make the difference. The health tips Oz gives will carry you much farther than your dorm room, they are facts that will be used throughout your adult life. This is a great read that would be beneficial to all college students.

'Family first' says youth

By Jamie Malernee
South Florida Sun Sentinel

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Gina Cadogan started her own business to work more flexible hours.

Justin Chan quit his job to be Mr. Mom.

Megan Smith pulls weekend shifts so her kids don't have to go to day care.

Amanda Allen persuaded her boss to let her telecommute from home.

These parents have very different lives but one similar goal: to put family first. After watching Baby Boomers spend their lives on the corporate treadmill, divorce in historic numbers and often lose their jobs to downsizing, studies show today's 20- and 30-somethings want something different for themselves and their children.

Following the philosophy of "do it all, just not at once," more women — and a small but growing number of men — are becoming stay-at-home parents while their children are young. Those who can't afford such an option, or don't want to give up their careers, are rebelling against traditional work schedules.

Instead, young parents are demanding flexible hours, alternative shifts or work from home arrangements, even if getting them means they have to switch careers, take pay cuts or start their own companies.

"We both want time for our children than what we had," said Cadogan, 33, an attorney who traded her own law firm's six-figure salary to have more time with her children.

"We sat down and said, 'How are we going to make this work? What's the goal here?'" Cadogan recalled. "And the goal is the family."

Jennifer Rosario, 29, resisted her motherhood role model and admits she's a bit conflicted. Her mother gave up her career to care for her family. Her aunt is a successful professional who has her child in day care all day.

Rosario doesn't like either choice.

"It's about trying to find a balance, but it's hard for me to have any role models," Rosario said. "It seems like it's one or the other."

Balancing home and work life is not a new dilemma. But young adults today say they have special reason to worry. Most grew up things grew up watching both their parents working and know the toll and skill such juggling takes. Divorce rates in the United States hit an all time high when they were just babies. And the number of single-parent families continues to soar, as does the cost of living and housing.

"I dream about it, someone calling you Daddy and running around the house," said Hollando Mathérin, 22. "But it's very scary because you have to devote everything to them. You need to be financially stable."

Tom Kenny, the voice of SpongeBob SquarePants

Spongebob absorbant as ever

Lose the sugar-subs

By Edward M. Eveld

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Let's play a memory game called "Find the High Fructose Corn Syrup." Head down an aisle and gather. Read a label.

Oh, no! There's high fructose corn syrup, a sweetener used by food makers, until it's nearly as common a two ingredients as water and salt. That's because the sweetener packs in added calories, which eventually pack on pounds, many nutritionists say.

You can't play grocery store challenge, but here's the opposite way. Hunt down the items that don't contain the sweetener. Amanda Welch plays this game actually, it's more of a personal Dieticians advise cutting back on sugar substitution products.

they're getting."

Think of every ounce of soda or sugared drink as an extra 12 calories, Rodenberg said. It takes just 100 extra calories a day to put on 10 pounds a year, she said.

Welch feels the call to go deeper into her anti-corn syrup quest than avoiding sweet drinks. But she admits the task is hard.

"There's one brand of hot dog I've found that doesn't have it in it," she said. "I spend twice as long at the grocery store. I know we can't avoid it completely, but I want to avoid it as much as possible."

High fructose corn syrup... what is it, you ask? An inexpensive sweetener made from corn. It's used for sweetness and to promote freshness, soft texture and flavor stability. It's common in soft drinks, canned fruits, baked goods, condiments, flavored milk, yogurt, ice cream and lots of processed foods.

Rodenberg, a registered dietitian, tells us how we can cut back on sweeteners and sugar. She says: except for milk, try not to drink calories, one can of soft drink can equal 10 or more teaspoons of sugar, if you drink juice, choose 100 percent juice rather than fruit "drinks" or "-ades," skip the juice altogether and eat fresh fruit, snack on nuts, fruit and veggies, at meals, eat fresh rather than packaged and processed. Keep in mind it takes just 100 extra calories a day to put on 10 pounds a year.

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas $5 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911

Attention First-Year Students:
Have you completed MyStudentBody? It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, October 16th. For instructions, go to the University Health Services website,
www.umass.edu/uhs

Write for Arts
E-mail us at Arts@dailycollegian.com

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

UMass wins third straight

FOOTBALL from page 10

hold on the field-position game.

When the Tigers went three-and-out deep in their own zone with the wind against them, Coen usually started UMass' drive around the 50-yard line. This, needless to say, helped the Minutemen's offensive attack.

"When we did start getting good field position and getting the run game going, then we kind of threw over the top," Coen said. "Pretty much every single throw was one-on-one coverage. And when there's one-on-one coverage there's probably eight [defenders] in the box, one free safety and two corners."

UMass running back Steve Baylark — the reason that Towson had to put eight defenders up front — had 22 carries for 102 yards on the day. Baylark needed just 73 yards to pass the 4,000-yard mark for his career, and he got it and then some. Baylark's effectiveness forced the Tigers to stop the run, which opened up things for Coen, London and the rest of the receiving corps.

"I was just doing my job," London said. "There are 11 guys on the field and when the ball comes my way then I have to make that play. I really didn't do anything special out there. It just so happened that every time that I was in a position to make the play I did. I think you have to give the offensive line credit because I am had time to throw the ball all day. It's just me doing my part."

One play in particular typified Saturday's offensive performance. With 6:30 left in the fourth quarter, Coen drove the offense into the Towson zone with a 28-0 lead. At the 8-yard line, Coen took the snap and rolled out to his right.

He then lost control of the ball and fumbled. But after stumbling to pick up the ball and finally regaining control — Coen evaded the charging linebacker and lobbed the ball deep into the end zone where London stood trying to get himself free of the defender.

London, a 6-foot-4 monster at wide receiver, leaped and caught the Coen lob for his fourth TD catch of the day. Everything seemed to work out for the Minutemen on Saturday.

"We had actually run that play earlier in the game," Coen said. "The ball was really slick because it was really dry out. To be honest I thought I threw it. It wasn't like I just dropped it out of my hand. I kind of just picked it up. I know you're not supposed to do that but I did saw Brandon back there waving his arms. It was a great play by him and I just kind of got lucky."

"I saw him scrambling when I turned around and originally I was just going to go in front of [the cornerback] and use my body to shield him off and catch it," London said. "But I didn't have any time for that because they were closing in on [Coen]. So I just sat back there and threw my arms up. Liam knows what to do."

He knew what to do Saturday. And the Minutemen walked away

Sophomore quarterback Liam Coen went 21-for-27 with 303 yards against Towson. His five touchdown passes tied a UMass single-game record.

Baylark becomes third back with 4,000 yards

Senior running back Steve Baylark surpassed 4,000 career [illegible] against the Tigers. He currently sits in third place on the [illegible] including four to senior Brandon London. Each tied a school record for touchdown passes and receptions in a single game.

BAYLARK from page 10

Tigers coach Gordy Combs didn't hide the fact that his team's main focus was to stop Baylark and the UMass running game. Towson stacked the box with eight and nine-man fronts all day in hopes of forcing UMass to the air.

"We were trying to run blitz a lot because we knew they ran the football so well," Combs said. "Watching their previous games, we knew we were taking a chance in man coverage so we could get eight and sometimes nine men in the box. It hurt us every once in a while."

UMass coach Don Brown knew the Minutemen's running game was going to be highlighted by Towson coming in, and said he respects Combs' aggressive mentality.

"This guy here [Baylark], He'll tell you that it wasn't an easy 100-yard day," Brown said. "He had some runs where they stacked him up at the line of scrimmage and it didn't come as easy as a week ago. He had to earn it."

Baylark wouldn't concede to the fact that [illegible] on the day [illegible] ond fourth-down [illegible] game. It failed on [illegible] for-eight and [illegible] Coen's [illegible] touchdown [illegible]

Mass Attack has successful first weekend

HOCKEY from page 10

ning," he said. "Where ever the goalie was, I was going to shoot it there. I just made the move at the last second."

Less than four minutes later, Clarkson tied it back up with a quick pass across the crease and a one-timer past Quick. The UMass defense appeared out of place, allowing the puck to pass straight across the crease to Quick's right, where Clarkson's Tim Marks put it home at 9:51.

The Minutemen jumped out early in the game, scoring on a PJ Fenton goal at 1:39. Quirk passed the puck from behind the net to an open Fenton, who beat Leggio glove-side.

The Golden Knights responded with a power-play goal at 5:57. Clarkson's top scorers combined for the score when Nick Dodge sent a pass from the top of the slot to David Cayer, who beat Quick on his right side for his fourth goal in four games.

The Minutemen missed a chance to regain the lead later in the period when Quirk tried to pick up his second point in the frame. Leggio denied Quirk's shot, but the goalie lost the puck in his pads.

It trickled across the crease before Clarkson's Grant Clitsome knocked the puck out of harm's way. The first period ended in a 1-1 tie.

The second period was a scoreless battle until the 11th minute, when Dodge notched his second goal of the season on a power-play shot that was poorly played by Quick. Instead of turning toward the shooter, Quick remained facing out, anticipating a centering pass. Seeing that, Dodge put the puck over Quick's shoulder and under the crossbar.

"I think [Quick] could have squared it up and boxed the area out," Cahoon said. "That's something he'll figure out as he looks at the tape."

The Minutemen once again responded, this time with a power-play goal of their own. Senior assistant-captain Mark Matheson, who splits time between forward and defenseman, sent a faser from the point through traffic. Sophomore Chris Davis redirected the shot through Leggio's legs for the 2-2 tie.

Friday the Minutemen opened their season against Atlantic Hockey's Sacred Heart before a crowd of 4,715 at the Mullins Center.

Four players were suspended for violating unspecified team rules: Alex Berry (six games), Chris Capraro (three games), Topher Bevis (one game) and Jon Quick (one game), missed Friday's game.

Freshman Dan Meyers stepped in goal for Quick and earned a win in his first collegiate start.

SHU jumped on top first with a goal at 5:34, beating Meyers on the first shot he faced, but UMass responded in less than two minutes when junior Matt Burto scored the first UMass goal of the season.

Quirk attempted to push the puck past the defender by going between his legs. He lost the puck, but Berry says there as maintain possession and [illegible] sent a shot past goaltender Jason Smith.

UMass pulled away in the second period with a pair of scores from senior Kevin Jarman and freshman Martin Nolet, putting the Mass Attack up 3-1. Nolet's goal was the first of his career.

The Pioneers scored a late goal in the third to make the score 3-2, but could not get another shot past Meyers.

Quirk had the biggest weekend for UMass, tallying three points on a goal and two assists. Early in the season, it looks like the Brockton native could become an offensive force for the Maroon and White.

"I think Cory's just a real solid hockey player," Cahoon said. "He's put a lot of time into the game. He's always been considered a pretty good player. He came to us last year and had an outstanding freshman year. He's come back this summer and organizably is one of the top two or three most conditioned kids on our team. It's easy to want to put him out on the ice in every situation with all those qualities and traits."

Eleven different players scored points over the weekend on either a goal or on assists.

Meyers gets start in net after Quick and three others suspended

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

When the Massachusetts hockey team took to the ice for its first game on Friday night, there were some notable absences in the Minutemen's lineup.

Before the game, four Maroon and White players were suspended from the team for unspecified team-rules violations. Those not dressed and the length of their suspensions included sophomore Alex Berry — six games, senior Chris Capraro — three games, and sophomores Jon Quick and Topher Bevis who were given one game apiece.

"Well it was predetermined that we weren't going to advertise [our absences]. We decided that we were going to have some people sit out games for a variety of reasons," UMass coach Don Cahoon said after the Minutemen beat Sacred Heart 3-2. "Some of these things started last year and ran themselves right through the fall. We said we were just going to five by the letter of the law right up until game time.

"That's all behind us now and we can move into a situation where people can be back in the lineup and maybe we'll have a little bit more depth."

Quick was the most notable player not on the ice. This year he is slated to take over as the No. 1 goaltender in his second year in the program. In his place, Cahoon went with freshman Dan Meyers in net.

The rookie held his own in his first action at the Mullins Center. He came out with the victory, stopping 18 of the 21 shots he faced. Cahoon said that regardless of the situation with Quick, he planned on putting Meyers in net against the Pioneers.

"Dan started tonight because he really earned the right to play with a shutout last weekend in first period [of the exhibition game]," he said. "It obviously was a good situation [for our young players] because a lot of [them] were able to be put in there. I think everybody has gotten the point. the inmates aren't going to run the asylum."

Meyers faced a lot of shots early in the game with the Pioneers out shooting the Minutemen 10-5 in the first period. At the 5:34 mark they put their first shot by the freshman to go up 1-0.

"The first shot going in didn't really help. Meyers said. "Other than that I got comfortable, felt the puck a little bit and went from there."

Once he settled down, Meyers made some tough saves. With Cory Quirk in the penalty box for tripping, SHU put pressure on Meyers with the man advantage. Nick Johnson took control of the puck between the circles and skated in on the net. He deked once, and got off a shot that Meyers batted out of the air with his blocker.

The Pioneers threatened against two minutes later. Drew Sanders received the puck at the right circle, and shot the puck through traffic. Late to react, Meyers slid across the crease and stopped puck with his left leg pad.

But the save that stood out the most was one he made on the Pioneers' Bear Trapp, who ripped a shot from the left circle. Meyers snagged the puck out of the air with his glove to roaring cheers from those in attendance.

"I might have over exaggerated a little bit, but the nerves are pumping so much you don't want anything to go in," he said afterwards. "I have a lot of things to work on, as coach said. I felt tonight wasn't my best performance, but the 'W' is all that matters."

All-in-all Cahoon said he was pleased with the performance Meyers turned in, but agreed that the freshman has a long road ahead of him.

"He knows we have confidence in him and we knew he was recruited to be able to play at this level and succeed at this level," he explained. "He's got work to do just like everybody else, but he's certainly proven he can contribute at this point in time and did a really nice job tonight of backstopping the win."

Quick was back in net on Saturday night in UMass' 3-3 tie with Clarkson. He made 27 saves in his first action of 2006.

Sophomore goalie Jon Quick was suspended for the Maroon against Sacred Heart on Friday night for unspecified team

Look for the Bud Light Amherst Area Bar Guide
in this THURSDAY'S COLLEGIAN!!

Winter Session
January 3–25
Register Now!
UMassULearn.net
413-545-3430
At UMass Amherst you can start by taking a class. Or earn a certificate, your bachelor's or master's degree!
And you'll find great professors and courses– offered days, nights or online.
UMass Amherst
Continuing & Professional Education
You Choose Your Future Your Way

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
SUICIDEGIRLS
LIVE BURLESQUE
18+ SHOW
plus Tsu Shi Ma Mi Re
TUE. OCT. 17 • 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
STORY OF THE YEAR
plus Anberlin, Greeley Estates, Monty Are I Just Added ♦♦♦ US AGAINST THE ARCHERS
WED. OCT. 18 • 7:00 PM
DOORS OPEN 6:00 PM/BALLROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub 10 PEARL ST. NORTHAMPTON
TO PURCHASE TICKETS ON YOUR HOME PC'S WEST COAST WEBSITE OR CALL!
WWW.IHEG.COM
or 413-586-8686

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

	9
6		7	4	1
			9		6		4
5			1	9	2	3
	2						7
		8	7	5	3			4
	1		5		4
				6	1	9		2
							8

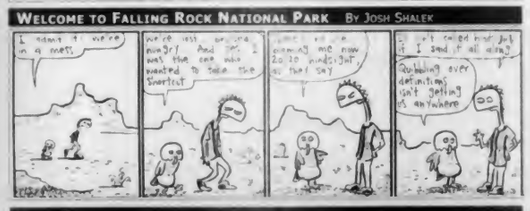
Quote of the Day

"A well-developed sense of humor is the pole that adds balance to your steps as you walk the tightrope of life."
—William A. Ward

Dirt Cookies for Daryl By Sarah Hollman

Ecology By Jen Fell

Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek



I missed it, we're in a meth
We're just gonna go! And me, I was the one who wanted to take the shortcut
Running over deer in the road me now 20 to pinch? or that say
Running over deer in the road is not getting us anywhere

Elsie Hooper By Robert D. Krzykowski

THIS LOOKS AN AWFUL LOT LIKE THE FRANKLIN HOSPITAL IN GREENFIELD.
COUGH!
RIGHT. OKAY. BACK IN THE TRUCK.
I PASS OUT FOR FIVE MINUTES AND YOU DRIVE STRAIGHT OUT OF TOWN...
NICE

A. ROSS
1 Hawaii shoe
5 Lasher
10 Thick piece
14 Copy of 15 Popeye's gal
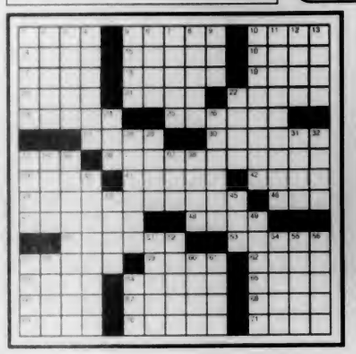
16 Lifted a pallet
17 ___ Of Wight
18 Gun holder
19 State bordering Utah
20 Anti-barrier
21 Hackneyed
22 Tasty tidbit
23 Lapse
25 Naysaying president
27 Tops of overalls
30 Tycoon's author
31 Dr. Leary's drug
36 Awaken to
39 How Ike Rim Rock?
41 Buteo, categorized
42 Neigh
43 Pr. previous earnings
45 Genesis stuff
47 Reread item
48 Big ___ theory
50 Stained ones
52 City in Tibet
53 Whatever
59 Motorcar for short
60 Baseball's Ringolsbee
61 Well, that's special
62 Tiny Bowery Missions star
65 Bangkok native
66 Spike, as punch
67 Humiliate
68 Backpacker's shelter
69 Took a look at
70 Color shades
71 Glass mount

DOWN
1 Duos
2 Bent out of shape?
3 Noisy fight
4 Module
5 Classroom
6 Banter teasingly
7 Chorus voice
8 Imperial Russian Ballet
9 Avoid capture
10 Cellender abbr
11 Barbecue meat
12 Bought on margin
13 Vicinity
19 Bacharach or Young
22 Screwdriver, e.g.
24 Bad: prel
26 ___ and Louise
28 Tongue-lash
29 Tight closure
31 Detective Charlie
32 Sicilian sight
33 Artist's studio
34 Practice boxing
35 Persistence
37 Dam-building grp.
38 Alpert or Caan
40 Accompanied
44 Ages and ages
45 NBC classic
49 Presley hit, "In the ___"
51 Synagogue figure
52 Lazy lady?
54 Cigar droppings
55 Bridges
56 Hill or Loos
57 Carpet feature
58 How bout that!
60 Part of LSAT
61 Fifths of a five?
64 Swallow

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DELANO'S
TRIVIA! TRIVIA! TRIVIA!
TONIGHT
TEAM TRIVIA
WIN $$$ & PRIZES
ALSO $2,000 PRIZE POOL!
8PM
PINOCCHIO'S FOOD SPECIALS DURING TRIVIA, MUNCHIES, PIZZA, AND MORE...
"The Heart of downtown Amherst"



TEN DOWN*

*CONSUMER HEALTH ADVISORY: CONSUMING UNDERWEIGHT MEAT MAY INCREASE YOUR RISK OF OVERDRIVEN ILLNESS

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Have you ever had sushi? You really shouldn't.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You're never gonna get, never gonna get it ... never gonna get it.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Whatever you do your parents will still love you. Well, not always.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Watch out for ghosts and stuff; you're on their turf now.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You got served.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You're alarm clock won't go off tomorrow.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't lend out your pen, you won't get it back.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Pay attention to your work or else.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You're roommate's a perve. Keep an eye on him.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You would make a great fiddler.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Have some tea with breakfast.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Smoke 'em if you got 'em.

Chicago Pizzaria Yes, We Deliver!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
CALZONE SLICES...LIKE NO OTHER!
HOURS
Sun.-Wed. 3pm-2am
Thurs.-Sat. 3pm-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
1051 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Free ride to Church in the Dwight Chapel van. Just be at Haigis Mall @10am or Converse Hall at 10:20 am Sundays. See you there! www.dwightchapel.org

Our Nurses deserve Respect as Army Officers and call the shots! Guaranteed 2 to 3 ½ year Full Tuition Scholarships plus $5,000 yearly Call 413-545-2321 www.umass.edu/armyrotc

Automobiles for Sale

92 Toyota Camry Station Wagon $850 549-9639

Employment

Rent us your ears!

Employment

Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail 545-6837

Bartending $300/day potential. No experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Mystery Shoppers Earn up to $150.00 a day. Experience not required. Undercover shoppers needed to judge retail and dining establishments. Call 800-722-4791

Graphic Designer wanted, undergraduate okay. Only requirements, talent and desire to work. Competitive pay. Resume and Portfoli to bob@buenoysano.com

Employment

Instructors/performers p/t for fun after-school programs, parties... Experience managing groups of children, love of kids, available 2-5pm some days. Theatrical experience helpful. Car required. (413) 584-7243

PT Sales Assoc. positions available in the bakery, deli and produce departments. Evening, weekend, and holiday availability required. Call or email Kelly at 253-9528

Employment

kelly@atkinsfarms.com
Female PCA Wanted Nights, Evening, weekends. $10.48/hour. Must have transport. Call Martina at (413) 210-6301

McDonald's Crew Members Needed. Full & part-time openings at Michell Bradley/McDonalds. Competitive wages & salaries plus benefits. Start at $9.62 /hr. Apply at Michell Bradley/McDonalds office at Bradley Int'l Airport, Terminal A, 2-5pm, M-W, or send resume to EHmichell@aol.com Call 203-223-0153 with questions.

Employment

DJ All music types 413-824-7301 www.4eyes.us

Lost

Lost and Found White Palm Pilot lost 921
Services

Services

Pregnancy Testing, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. STI Screening and Treatment. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Call Someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1800-550-4900 24 hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Services

Have you been ripped off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Travel

Travel with STS to this year's top 10 Spring Break destinations! Best deals guaranteed! Highest rep commissions, Visit www.ststravel.com or call 1-800-648-4849 Great group discounts

Simmons baffles opposing offenses

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

Opposing teams have often walked off Rudd Field with zeros on the scoreboard this season after battling Zack Simmons and the Massachusetts men's soccer team. After Yesterday's shutout over Temple, Simmons has put more zeros on the board this season than any other UMass goalkeeper in history.

Simmons' blanking of the Owls was his 10th this season, a new single-season school record.

"It's gratifying," Simmons said. "It feels good. I'm proud to be on this team with these guys. It's a testament to all the hard work that they've put in, I've put in and the way we've played this year."

The redshirt sophomore broke Jon Gruber's 15-year-old record of nine shutouts in a season, set in 1991. Simmons posted four shutouts a year ago as a freshman.

"It's a team effort, but it's great having a guy like Zack behind you," junior captain Kenny Cook said. "He absolutely deserves that record. It helps everyone on the field when you've got a guy as solid as Zack behind you."

All of the Minutemen's wins have come on Simmons' shutouts. UMass is 8-0-2 in games in which Simmons has kept the net untouched. However, UMass coach Sam Koch knows that preventing goals is not the team's only goal this season; the Atlantic 10 Tournament is still within reach.

"It's nice [to have broken the record], but our main team goal is to get to the Atlantic 10 Tournament, and we haven't done that yet," Koch said. "I'm very happy for them to have accomplished it, but we have to win the game [next] Sunday [against Rhode Island]. That's more important."

A record like this is always credited to the man in front of the net, but often it is the defenders that make it possible for a keeper to put up big numbers (or a lack thereof). Simmons is well aware of the contributions his teammates make in a game like yesterdays'.

"They do everything. All I had to do was just stop a couple shots that came right at me," Simmons said of his defenders. "They make my job very easy. They keep the ball in front of them very well. They stand their men up, and they make play very predictable."

Koch echoed Simmons' sentiments about the Minutemen defenders, emphasizing the predictability that comes when defenders keep the ball away from Simmons and the net.

"It helps a lot," Koch said. "The backs make it predictable. The shots that [Simmons] is getting are usually pretty clean shots that are easy for him to read. When they're not, he's done a hell of a job coming up with those saves.

"But it's one thing to have to save seven very difficult shots, it's another thing to have to save three difficult shots and four easy ones. I think they've done a good job of making it easier for him to play, and that's what they're supposed to do."

The defenders take pride in knowing they've helped rewrite the UMass record books. The biggest numbers in soccer are goals and assists, so defensive play rarely appears in a box score. Shutting out the opposing team is one statistic the backs can feel good about.

"It's a positive for the whole team when something like that happens," Cook said. "It was a team effort, but it's Zack's record. He deserves it 100 percent. He's bailed us out of a lot of [scoring] chances for the other team."

With two shutouts over the weekend, Simmons has lowered his goals-against average to 0.76. He has a save percentage of .847 and an 8-4-3 record in 16 starts. The 10 shutouts are the numbers that mean the most.

"It means a lot," Simmons said. "It's just very gratifying for me and for everyone out here. It really says a lot about what the team is about and how we play. And obviously, it's nice to have a school record."

Minutewomen not out of playoff picture

By Joe Mellon
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 Tournament is still in reach for the Massachusetts field hockey team (4-12, 1-3 A-10) after a weekend that saw it split two games against conference rivals.

On Friday the Minutewomen beat Saint Louis 1-0, and then lost to conference powerhouse Richmond on Sunday, 5-2.

Heading into this weekend's crucial matchups with West Chester and La Salle, the Minutewomen needed something positive to build on.

The Minutewomen held the No. 18 Spiders in check for a portion of the match. Richmond clung to a one-goal lead deep into the game's second half, but a late flurry of goals was the Minutewomen's undoing, and the game ended in favor of the Spiders.

The Minutewomen haven't faired particularly well against Richmond in recent years. They last defeated the Spiders in the 2001 A-10 semifinals. Since then, Richmond is 37-0 in conference games and 8-0 against UMass.

Richmond made the breakthrough at the 18:45 mark of the first half as Lindsey Conrad scored off a rebound. The freshman tallied another goal in the first half to give the Spiders a 2-0 lead.

Sophomore forward Lauren Gillespie cut the lead in half two minutes after Conrad's second goal. Gillespie's goal was the first score Richmond allowed in more than five games. During this stretch, the Spiders outscored their opponents 33-0.

UMass	1
SLU	0
UR	5
UMass	2

The score stayed at 2-1 until the 54:16 mark when Shannon Taylor fired a shot past freshman goalkeeper Sarah Williams. The Spiders scored twice more in the next five minutes, staking themselves to a comfortable 5-1 lead.

Junior forward Rachael Mervine scored her 4th goal of the season as time wound down.

The performance in the loss pleased Shea immensely.

"I'm really proud of the team," Shea said. "I thought they played very well."

The players aren't taking Sunday's defeat as well as Shea, however. The loss was hard to take for Sanders, who is yet to defeat Richmond in her four years at UMass.

"The next time they see us, they better make sure that they're on," Sanders said.

On Friday, the Maroon and White outlasted an aggressive Saint Louis Billiken team en route to a 1-0 victory, putting an end to a four-game losing streak.

The Minutewomen controlled possession for a majority of the game. Although they scored just one goal, they out-shot the Billikens 21-6.

Four minutes into the first half, a Saint Louis player attempted to clear the ball and Sanders was struck in the head. She fell to the turf immediately, and was down for several minutes before walking off the field to a nice ovation from those in attendance.

The Minutewomen score came midway through the second half when Sanders maneuvered through the Billiken backfield and unleashed a slap shot on goal. The Saint Louis goalkeeper made the initial save but couldn't corral it, and freshman midfielder Cher King was waiting to bang home the rebound. It was her fifth goal of the year.

"I should give credit to [Sanders]," King said. "She's the one that penetrated the 'D' and took the shot. I was just in the right place at the right time."

There were two goals disallowed by the officials. Sanders would have received credit for the pair. The officials conferred, but decided against Sanders and the Minutewomen on both occasions.

"The officials got together and talked about it," Shea said. "But it is what it is and we moved on well."

Both goalkeepers played great. Williams held the Billikens scoreless for her 2nd career shutout. And in a losing effort, Saint Louis goalkeeper Amy Wasserman made 14 saves.

"[Wasserman's] a very good goalie," Shea said. "There's a reason she was all conference last season."

Play got quite physical at times. Junior defender Erin O'Brien received a yellow card at the 68-minute mark for retaliating to a vicious takedown by a Saint Louis player. Also, the umpire tagged freshman forward Christine Rodgers with a green card for throwing an elbow after a Saint Louis player did the same to her.

"They were really physical," junior defender Kristina Di-Rosario said. "But, we kind of expected it."

After Friday's matchup, the Minutewomen are now 4-0 all-time against Saint Louis. The Billikens are in the A-10 for just their second year.

UM sweeps St. Joe's, Temple on the road

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

The weekend proved successful for the Massachusetts women's soccer team (10-4-0, 4-2-0 Atlantic 10) as it defeated both Saint Joseph's (5-9-0, 2-3-0 A-10) on Friday, and Temple (3-11-0, 0-5-0 A-10) yesterday.

The Minutewomen recorded two consecutive shutouts, blanking the Hawks by a score of 2-0 and the Owls 1-0.

UMass	2
St. Joe's	0
UMass	2
Temple	0

Senior defender Stephanie Barrett broke a scoreless tie yesterday when she pocketed her first goal of the season with just over six minutes to go in the first half.

In the game's 36th minute, a handball was committed by a Temple player, setting up a Maroon and White free kick about eight yards outside the penalty area.

Barrett launched her kick over a wall of Temple defenders and needled it in between the crossbar and the desperate leap of 5-foot-10 sophomore goalkeeper Tiffany Kasamich. "Barrett stepped up," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "It was a great free-kick."

UMass' leading goal-scorer, junior forward Britt Canfield, was stalemated by a physical Owls defense that played her tight the whole game.

"She had one or two really break- up the left side and served some good balls that we just didn't get a hold of," Rudy said. "They played her pretty tough. She got knocked around a lot."

Junior midfielder Jenny Roehrig was another Minutewoman forced into submission by a ruthless Temple team throughout the course of the game.

"She had a tough day in midfield," Rudy said. "Along with [sophomore forward Vanessa] Pitty just because it was so loaded. They put so many people in the midfield. In between the four midfielders and the two front-runners, often we were looking at six people stretched across right in midfield."

According to Rudy, senior defender midfielder Nadia Villarroel remained unfazed by Temple's defense, and showed the exemplary leadership trait she consistently exhibits.

"She did well," Rudy said. "She attacked the left flank, got forward a few times, did some serves and got us a corner [kick]. She played a very solid game."

Villarroel and Barrett are the team's co-captains.

The goose egg was goalkeeper Kristin Walker's second straight – and sixth of the season. It was the first time she registered back-to-back shutouts in her collegiate career.

The New Jersey native saved five shots in the contest, including a couple of clutch stops late in the first half.

On a Temple free-kick, Walker tapped the initial attempt wide, then when a player tried to capitalize on the deflection, the second any shot found itself nestled in the fingers of the redshirt-junior netminder.

This performance came just two days after Walker and her teammates blanked the Saint Joseph's.

Villarroel and Roehrig scored their fourth and second goals of the season, respectively, lifting UMass to the win.

Within the game's first 10 minutes, Joe Kirby, St. Joe's junior goalie, lived up to her scouting report by coming out of position to play balls that were out of her range.

In the eighth minute sophomore defender Melissa Isodoro got free on the right flank and, under pressure, floated a 50-yard pass to the Hawks' penalty area. Villarroel just beat the oncoming Kirby to the loose ball, heading it into the right corner of the net to put UMass up 1-0.

Twelve minutes later, Roehrig added a much needed insurance goal.

Canfield got a ball around midfield and dished it to freshman Sydney Shill, who Rudy was trying as a withdrawn center-forward. Shill took the pass and played it to her right, where she served up a pass to Roehrig.

The sport management major, who has a specialty for taking long-range shots, took the ball and booted it 37 yards downfield, depositing it just under the crossbar.

"It was a fantastic goal," Rudy commented. The rest of the game went more-or-less uneventful, and UMass held on to the victory.

On top of the victory, Rudy was very pleased with how well his team responded to St. Joe's/Stanford field.

"I think we did very well with it," Rudy said. "Practicing on Garber Field [UMass' lacrosse facility] certainly helped because that's a difficult surface to play on."

Rudy added that, the day prior to the game, he had his players practice on a parking lot to get acquainted with the speed the Astroturf would give the ball.

UMass Amherst Homecoming
Saturday, October 21, 2006
Mullins Center at 8pm
FOXCAST
veri onwireless campus tour presented by SAMSUNG
411 Connect
People, Places and Fun brought to you by 411
featuring
the All-American Rejects with special guests
Fiona Robot.
&
ON SALE NOW!!!!
Tickets are $15.
Available at the Mullins Center Box Office or through Ticketmaster.

Richmond a force in Atlantic 10

By Kevin Doody
Collegian Staff

Most people would have a tough time arguing the fact that the Richmond Spiders have had a stranglehold over the Atlantic 10 field hockey conference and the Massachusetts field hockey team the past five seasons.

Most people, that is, except for senior forward Gina Sanders, who all but guaranteed victory over Richmond if the two teams meet in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

"I honestly don't even think they're that good," Sanders said about the reigning A-10 champs after Sunday's 5-2 loss, which saw the Minutewomen get outshot 30-8. Richmond also had nine of the 10 penalty corners in yesterday's game.

"The way teams lose to them is that they're intimidated because they're a ranked team," Sanders said. "They don't play that well."

"Yeah, they connect passes and stuff, but they're such a one-on-one team that it's amazing how frustrating it is to lose to them and just how many goals they've scored this season just off of penalty corners," Sanders added. "We had some really good attacks against them, they were really stunned."

Sanders is one of only two seniors on the Minutewomen squad, and has witnessed first-hand Richmond's dominance over UMass during her four years.

Sanders and the Minutewomen have lost their last eight games to the A-10 powerhouse. In those eight games, UMass has been outscored 34-6, and has not scored more than one goal in any of those contests.

Sanders may not be fazed by the Richmond mystique or the fact that Richmond is the only nationally ranked team in the A-10, but the Spiders have posted some remarkable numbers this year and throughout their four year-reign as A-10 champions.

The Spiders currently boast a 17-game unbeaten streak against A-10 foes after defeating the Minutewomen on Sunday. The streak dates back to November 2001, when the Spiders went down to the Minutewomen 2-1 in the semifinals of the A-10 tournament. Since then, UMass has dropped every game to the Spiders, and has bowed out to Richmond in three of the last four A-10 championship games, most recently in last year's 7-1 lopsided defeat.

Despite returning only eight players this season that have been part of those A-10 titles, the Spiders have out-scored their three A-10 opponents, La Salle, West Chester and, most recently, Rhode Island, 18-0. Richmond has held its first three A-10 opponents to just 11 shots.

Richmond leads the league in every offensive category, including number of points scored, assists and goals. The St. Joseph's Hawks are in second, trailing by 28 goals.

In fact, Richmond had not allowed a goal in its last five games, totaling 390:27 minutes of keeping its opponents off the scoreboard, until allowing two to UMass Sunday.

UMass coach Patty Shea, along with her outspoken captain, does see some weaknesses in their rival, despite those numbers.

"Part of the mystique they have is when they step on the field they know they're going to win," Shea said. "Part of the fight for opponents is when you step on the field you have to know you can compete with them and you're on the same par as them and that's part of the mystique that they have.

"I think they [Richmond] know how closer teams are to them and that they can compete with them on the field," she said. "The score of the game doesn't really indicate how hard and actually how well the group played."

"They score a majority of their goals off the penalty corner and they score off the rebounds," Shea added. "When we make the initial save we have to do a better job of cleaning up the rebounds."

After the game, Shea added that the best thing the Minutewomen can do is look ahead of them, and not behind.

"It's easy to move forward after a game like this," Shea said. "We're right where we need to be and I'm really comfortable going into next weekend."

Sophomore Katelyn Orlando (No. 3) is fifth on the Minutewomen in scoring with two goals and four assists this season. She has played an even greater role on the team since Erin Parker went down with an injury.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, OCTOBER 16, 2006

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass tears through Tigers defense

By Rob Greenfield
Collegian Staff

TOWSON, Md. – The Massachusetts football team extended its blowout-win streak to three games on Saturday.

On Sept. 23, it was a win vs. non-conference opponent Stony Brook, 48-7, two weeks later a romp over William and Mary by the same score, and now this – a 35-0 shutout of the Towson Tigers on the road Saturday at Johnny Unitas Stadium.

UMass	35
Towson	0

The win brought the Minutemen to 5-1 overall and 3-0 in the Atlantic 10. Sophomore quarterback Liam Coen completed 21 of 27 passes for 303 yards and five touchdowns. Senior wideout Brandon London caught four of Coen's five touchdown passes, tying a single-game record for receiving touchdowns.

Five touchdowns were plenty for the UMass defense, which shutout Towson on Saturday and has allowed just 14 points in the last three games.

"I don't think we got off to a great start on either side of the ball," UMass coach Don Brown said. "But we settled in and put the hard hats on and went to work. I'm pleased with the victory.

"There are some things coaching-wise that we need to do better and obviously there are some things player-wise that we need to clean up a little bit. I thought we hung with it, kept working through it, stayed together, and had a very workmanlike, efficient win down here."

Towson starting quarterback Sean Schaefer came down with an unspecified illness on Friday night, and couldn't play against the Minutemen on Saturday. It was a huge loss for the Tigers, who rely heavily on the passing game for much of their offense.

Schaefer led the A-10 in passing yards coming into Saturday's game, totaling 1,454 yards through five contests.

"I found out about [Schaefer] an hour before the game," Brown said. "That's too bad for him. He's a very good player and we were excited about the challenge. When you have your guy that's leading the league in throwing and he's unavailable to you, that is a difficult situation. I thought that they adjusted and threw the ball real short, tried to run the ball a little bit more and threw some screens."

But even if Schaefer was at the top of his game Saturday, the Minutemen still would have been hard to beat. The wind whipped through the stadium at gusts of up to 27 miles per hour, and it hindered Towson's ability to throw the ball. The UMass defense allowed 167 total yards, and by stuffing the Tigers' repeatedly, it helped the Minutemen gain a firm

See FOOTBALL on page 7

Senior wide reciever Brandon London had a record-tying effort against the Towson Tigers on Saturday. His four touchdown receptions tied a UMass single-game high.

Baylark third to 4,000 yards

By Jon Pelland
Collegian Staff

TOWSON, Md. – Despite being the main focus of the Towson defense, senior running back Steve Baylark still rumbled over the Tigers en route to becoming the third player in UMass history to amass 4,000 yards rushing.

Entering the game, Baylark needed just 73 yards to surpass the milestone. He crept closer to Marcel Shipp (6,250 yards) and Rene Ingoglia (4,624 yards) on a 24-yard run around the left end. Baylark took a hand off from Liam Coen and headed off tackle; he bounced the play outside where he got a block from receiver J.J. Moore.

He cut inside the Moore block and was finally tackled by Kenny Scott at the Towson 41-yard line. Baylark now has 4,029 rushing yards in his career.

Baylark said he was aware all week that he was close to the mark, but said it didn't affect his approach.

"I think it's a big accomplishment for me. I was hearing about it all week, you know 73 yards for 4,000," he said. "You know it sounds good, but I try not to have it in my mindset coming into the game [Judging by] last week I knew this week was going to be a tough running game.

"Obviously because they were going to try to stop the run game, but like I said before, we try to balance [the offense] out with the run game and make it easier for Liam. I think we did a good job and established that."

Baylark was correct in that assessment. Coen threw for 303 yards on the day and five touchdowns,

See BAYLARK on page 7

Minutemen post two shutouts on weekend

By Danny Picard
Collegian Staff

It was deja vu for the Massachusetts men's soccer team yesterday at Rudd Field. Sophomores Prince Ofosu and Tony Bassett have a knack for coming up big in the same game, and did so on Sunday in a quite similar fashion.

Ofosu and Bassett each tallied a goal for UMass in yesterday's 2-0 victory over Temple (2-10-1, 1-4 Atlantic 10). The Minutemen battled Saint Joseph's (11-10-3, 0-4-1 A-10) to a scoreless stalemate on Friday, and as a result, UMass remains out of the playoff picture for the time being.

UMass	2
Temple	0

UMass	0
St. Joe's	0

It is now in seventh place in the A-10 standings, with only six of the top 14 teams in the conference advancing to the postseason.

The Minutemen hope Ofosu and Bassett's performances will spark a much-needed winning streak, as it did when they each scored a goal in their season-opening 2-0 win over Maine.

"We moved the ball better today," UMass coach Sam Koch said after Sunday's win over Temple. "I think we defended well as a team. A couple times we got stretched, and a couple times we didn't put pressure on the ball as much as we needed to. But overall, I thought we defended as much as we needed to."

"Offensively, we took chances and we took shots," Koch added. "Tony [Bassett] finally took a shot. Prince [Ofosu] got free and got the shot, and we got them on target, which we haven't been doing."

The Minutemen (8-5-3, 2-3-1 A-10) entered yesterday's game with a bad taste in their mouths after playing the lowly Saint Joseph's Hawks to a 0-0 draw. On paper, yesterday's match against the Owls wasn't a must-win game, but UMass played with the intention of a do-or-die scenario.

"Our season was over if we didn't win today," Koch said. "In a must-win game, we came to play for the 90 minutes, and I'm very pleased about that."

"I think now we have to win at least two of [the last three games]," he added. "If we lose one then we're going to have to rely on some other people to do certain things. The bottom line is if we win the next three, then we have pretty much done everything we can."

Ofosu put UMass on the board when he scored his second goal of the season with just under 12 minutes to play in the first half. He received a cross from Bassett on the right flank, and chipped a shot over the head of Temple goalkeeper Bryant Hosler and into the back of the net.

"When I scored I thought, 'We have to hold on to this lead and just win the game,'" Ofosu said. "Then I was hoping that we could score some more, and we did."

Bassett was credited with the assist and, not long after, set a new career high of three points in one game when he gave UMass an insurance goal in the second half. With 20 minutes remaining in regulation, Bassett took a shot from outside of the box and into the lower right corner of the net. It was his third of the season.

"I just wanted to hit it as hard as I could and got a lucky deflection," Bassett said on his insurance goal. "We'll take whatever we can get right now, as far as scoring goals. We took advantage of our chances, and we usually do not do that."

Bassett's goal gave UMass a 2-0 lead – it's first two-goal lead since Sept. 2 – and also provided some much-needed support for sophomore goalkeeper Zack Simmons.

"Two goals is a pretty good feeling," Simmons said. "It's been a while since we've scored some goals, so two feels really good. I always like to have the zero [on the scoreboard], but when these guys are scoring, it takes a lot of pressure off of myself and the rest of the defense."

No game is a guaranteed victory, but the Minutemen know they should have taken advantage of a Hawks team that has only one win on the year.

"This was a game that was, on paper, the easiest one to get," Koch said. "But we didn't get it, so that opportunity is lost. You can't focus on that now because it's over. We have to look at the things that we didn't do well, and move on. We have to stay positive and look forward."

Quirk leads Mass Attack

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team started their season off with a bang this weekend. The Minutemen (1-0-1) fought No. 17 Clarkson (3-1) to a 3-3 tie Saturday, after knocking off Sacred Heart (0-1-2) in a 3-2 decision Friday.

UMass	3
SHU	2

UMass	3
Clarkson	3

UMass is off until next Thursday, Oct. 26, when it visits New Hampshire.

Sophomore Cory Quirk had a goal and an assist, and Jon Quick had 27 saves in his first start this season against Clarkson.

"We're disappointed with the tie," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "We play to win. I thought the two teams were very evenly matched. There were points in the game where I thought we took control and we had some good chances. There were other points where I knew we were hanging on, and [Clarkson] had some good chances."

UMass out-shot the Golden Knights 34-31 in front of 3,521 fans, despite losing the shots battle in overtime 3-1.

"I was pleased with the way we were able to come back from struggling in certain areas," Cahoon said. "We gave up two power-play goals early in the game and came back to be very strong in the penalty kill as the game went on."

With the game knotted at 2-2 midway through the third period, Quirk made a sensational move to put UMass on top late in the game.

"With the puck in Clarkson's end, Quirk stole the puck off the stick of a Clarkson defender and quickly skated past him, breaking away toward the net. He deked twice and beat Golden Knights net minder, David Leggio, on the blocker side at 6:08.

"I was forechecking, and the kid had the puck on his forehand so I went at him with my backhand to try to force him up the boards," Quirk said. "I was fortunate enough to strip the puck from him and put a shot on net."

After making the steal, Quirk seemed surprised to have done it so easily. He quickly made a couple of moves to try to beat the goal tender. It certainly worked out in his favor.

"I really didn't have a clue where I was going in the begin-

See HOCKEY on page 7

Sophomore Cory Quirk led the Minutemen this weekend with two goals and an assist against the Pioneers and the Golden Knights.

Midnight Madness aimed at gaining support

By Ron Greenfield
Collegian Staff

It was a night for the fans. The dunk contest, the speeches, the three-point contest, the scrimmage at the end of the night – it was all to put fans in the stands come November.

The students packed the long ends of the stands at the Curry Hicks Cage on Friday night for Midnight Madness, the annual pre-season basketball event that borders on the ridiculous.

Travis Ford, Marnie Dacko, Sam the Minuteman, the Maroon Platoon and Athletic Director John McCutcheon were all in the house to see the men's and women's basketball teams have a couple hours of fun.

Introductions began the night. The announcer alternated between men's and women's teams until the spotlight shined on Ford, who promptly took the microphone, and did some serious public relations work with the fans.

"We got a group of guys who worked really hard to prepare for this season," Ford said. "We think we're one of the best teams in the Atlantic 10 this year, but we can't do it without you. We need you this year."

Last season, in Ford's first campaign attendance numbers went up from the 2004-05 season, but still fell short of forming a raucous home-court crowd. So this night, even though it meant relatively little for his team basketball-wise, takes high precedence with Ford because of the direct contact with the student body.

After Ford and Dacko finished their brief speeches at mid-court, the players warmed up on opposite ends of the court. The women wore white Midnight Madness shirts, and the men wore maroon practice jerseys. UMass cheerleaders used this in-between time to toss some free shirts into the crowd to keep the students occupied.

The three-point contest ensued, and it was the battle of the sexes. The men – represented by Luke Bonner, James Life and Brandon Thomas – squared off against the women, and took the competition for the second straight year, winning 32-23.

Then there was the dunk contest, preceded by lay-up lines, which proved entertaining because the players practiced for the contest with a couple of windmill dunks and tosses off of the backboard.

Gary Forbes, Etienne Brower, Tony Gaffney, Stephane Lasme and Ricky Harris participated. Sam the Minuteman and the leader of the Maroon Platoon were among the judges who determined the winner. Brower, the defending champion, successfully defended his title after donning an old-school Jeff Viggiano jersey for his final dunk.

The night ended with an intra-squad scrimmage from the men's team, and the festivities ended at 11. Most fans in attendance left after the dunk contest, but some students, who showed up at 11:15 p.m. on Friday night, weren't happy to see things end earlier than advertised.

"I came for Midnight Madness and we got here at 11, and it was all over," said Ben Weisman, a UMass senior.

Weisman and his friends shared their thoughts about the Minutemen's upcoming season.

"I think it's all in the coach to make us a cohesive unit," Weisman said. "We have the talent. We need the organization. Oh yeah, and bring Marcus Camby back."

Weisman wasn't the only one with strong opinions about Ford and company.

"I think they have some good potential, but it's probably a long shot to win the A-10," said John Clark, another UMass senior. "They got Travis Ford, and he's got to keep them focused, rally the troops and keep the talent on line. They'll definitely win the A-10 if they keep the talent on line. In two years we are going to be legit."

Another senior in the entourage, Greg Mann, had some choice words for Ford.

"I e-mail the coach all of the time, and I always get nothing back," Mann said. "This is my fourth year as a fan, and I want to see them do something this year."

Clark also chimed in about senior captain Rashaun Freeman's game.

"Rashaun has to learn how to pass out of double teams," Clark said. "If they can fix that, then they could be amazing."

This group of seniors plan to attend most of the home games this season, and are contemplating forming the "Stephane Lasme SWAT Team" if they are able to make enough T-shirts.

McCutcheon watched the action from the second level of the Cage, and cheered for Forbes and Brower during the dunk contest. In a recent interview, he called the UMass student body a "sleeping giant," and said UMass sports have barely "scratched the surface" as far as participation is concerned. McCutcheon and Ford hope that nights like last Friday are just the beginning of a season full of fan enthusiasm.

If the Minutemen can get more fans like the UMass seniors planning to form the SWAT Team, then they should receive a warm welcome in their home-opener on Nov. 11 against Dartmouth.

SPORTS FACT OF THE DAY

Jeff Suppan's home run off Steve Trachesel on Saturday made him the only pitcher to homer off of the same pitcher in the regular (2005) and postseason (2006).

Cavaliers-Heat Preview Page 8

Pixies DVD showcases the band in Boston Page 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 58 LO: 47 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 2006

Bill Cosby attends film screening at UMass

By Debleena Mitra
Collegian Correspondent

Decked out in University of Massachusetts attire, Bill Cosby visited UMass yesterday to attend a screening of the film "Akeelah and the Bee" and to discuss teaching in low-income communities. Students who are members of Commonwealth College and the UMass School of Education were invited to attend the event in the Bezanson Recital Hall and ask Dr. Cosby questions about their concerns as future teachers.

"Akeelah and the Bee," was shown to provide a foundation for the conversation. The story of the movie revolves around 11-year-old Akeelah Anderson who uses her knowledge and remarkable ability to spell to overcome her underserved community and win the national spelling bee. It demonstrates the power of education and the impact that teachers can have, even upon the most unwilling students who live in environments that do not encourage them to make much of their lives.

After the movie, Chancellor John Lombardi introduced Cosby, who walked onto the stage and began the discussion by saying "Whatever you're learning in these institutions, you will always need to learn more."

He explained that in order to really connect with students, especially students who come from various backgrounds, a teacher must understand himself and his own hardships outside of school. One has to share his experiences and learn from them because "we don't want teachers to misinterpret behaviors in students, they can't be angry, [and] make snap judgments. They should be armed with compassion," said Cosby.

Another important idea that Cosby stressed throughout the evening was that teachers must know their subject and understand why it is significant.

"You can't be a bigot, prejudiced, politically too far liberal or too far conservative. You have to be able to recognize the truth and be able to defend your discipline," said Cosby. "Why do you teach that subject? What's your passion, where is the beauty in it?"

He warned the audience that students will constantly challenge them but they must remain persistent, because in many underprivileged communities the teachers are the only connection to any hope of a future.

Cosby's speech was filled with anecdotes which, along with his casual UMass logo-bearing attire, made the whole event much more comfortable

See COSBY on page 3

UMass alumnus Bill Cosby attended a screening of "Akeelah and the Bee" and led a discussion about the importance of teaching in the Bezanson Recital Hall Oct. 16, 2006.

U.S. population hits 300 million

By Matt Belliveau
Collegian Staff

By the time you've finished reading this story the United States will have incurred approximately 26 births, 14 deaths and six immigrants. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, the United States takes on one person every 11 seconds, and today, at about 7:43 a.m., saw their total resident population jump to 300 million.

The United States first hit the million-mark in 1915, and needed until 1967 to reach 200 million residents.

University of Massachusetts sociology professor and director of the Universities' Population Studies Certificate program, Sanjiv Gupta, says that while underdeveloped countries like China and India are seeing faster population, United States is the fastest growing developed country in the world.

The United States is alone in its rapid population increase, with some nations seeing a drastic decrease.

Russia's population peaked in the early 1990s (at the time of the end of the Soviet Union) with about 148 million people in the country. Today, Russia's population is approximately 143 million. The United States Census Bureau estimates that Russia's population will decline from the current 143 million to a mere 111 million by 2050, a loss of more than 30 million people and a decrease of more than 20 percent.

The U.S. Bureau says the primary causes of Russia's population decrease and loss of about 700,000 to 800,000 citizens each year are a high death rate, low birth rate, high rate of abortions, and a low level of immigration.

Italy is another country seeing a decrease in resident population. Gupta attributes the decrease to low fertility rates in Italian women.

Advances in the American medical field have also attributed to the increase of population. Since 1970, life expectancy at birth has jumped about seven years to a record 77.9 years, according to the Bureau. The share of the population age 65 or older grew from 9.9 percent to 12.4 percent. The median age is up from 28.1 to 36.2 years.

Students at the UMass were split in their initial reactions to the population landmark.

"Part of me thinks 'more people in the United States, more money for the United States,'" said Steven Adams, UMass junior. "But I know that more people could put some stress on the economy and the environment."

Gupta agrees the population swell has its pros and cons.

"It can cut both ways. Having more people in the workforce can be a boost to the American economy – social security is paid for people currently working," said Gupta. "But any population can cause stress on its environment. The United States is already the leading country in terms of carbon dioxide omissions and its regulation of industries is much more lax than other places."

According to the World Census Bureau the world population increased from 3 billion in 1959 to 6 billion by 1999, a doubling that occurred over 40 years. The Census Bureau's latest projections imply that population growth will continue into the 21st century, although more slowly.

Gupta projects the United States population to reach 400 million in 2043.

"It should take less time to reach the next hundred million," said Gupta.

The population landmark comes a month before midterm elections in which illegal immigration is a volatile issue.

Gupta understands that most American will accredit the population boost to increased immigration, but claims that the percentage of immigrants entering the United States is actually lower today than it was in the 1920s.

Price of a new home
2006: $290,600
1967: $24,600 ($149,147 in 2006 dollars)
1915: $3,200 (64,158 in 2006 dollars)

Cost of a gallon of regular gas
2006: $2.26
1967: 33 cents ($2.00 in 2006 dollars)
1915: 25 cents ($5.01 in 2006 dollars)

Pop Culture
2006: iPods and "American Idol" reign supreme and cell phones are the rage.
1967: Color TV is the rage. "The Lucy Show", "Andy Griffith", and "Gomer Pyle" are the top-rated television shows.
1915: The "Model T" and silent movies are the rage. Raggedy Ann, aspirin in tablet form and processed cheese are introduced. The milk carton is invented.

Working Women
Percentage of women in the labor force, age 16 and older (10 and older for 1915)
2006: 59%
1967: 41%
1915: 23%

Education
Percentage of the population age 25 and older who had at least a high school diploma.
2006: 85.2%
1967: 51.1%
1915: 13.5%

Names
The most popular baby names for boys and girls, respectively
2006: Jacob and Emily
1967: Michael Lisa
1915: John and Mary

Safer on our roads
2006: 42, 643
Number of traffic fatalities in 2003. This amounted to 1.5 fatalities per every 100 million vehicles mile traveled.

1967: 51,559
Number of traffic fatalities. This amounted to 5 fatalities per every 100 million vehicles mile traveled.

1915: 6,779
Number of traffic fatalities. This amounted to 35 fatalities per every 100 million vehicles mile traveled.

UMass engineering students develop life-saving seat belt

Sara Schewe, a Georgetown University student died in a bus accident while studying abroad in India nearly 10 years ago. Her parents, Carles and Anne Schewe, founded the philanthropic Sara's Wish Foundation.

By Anna Doliantis
Collegian Staff

A group of engineering students at the University of Massachusetts developed a lightweight, portable seat belt which aims to lower the amount of fatalities in automobile accidents internationally, according last week's press release.

"Such a seat belt will go a long way to keeping our children safe and whole. And we know that would be Sara's wish," he said.

The seat belt is suitable for carrying in luggage, and includes a lap belt and over-the-shoulder belts. The two retractable belts are sewn together around a single male buckle component, creating a V-structure over the passenger's torso when buckled to the female buckle between the legs. The seat belt is compatible with at least three different models of bus seats and resists the force of collision, according to the press release.

"This project was based on the needs of real people and a human interest story," said Krishnamurty. "There were so many students affected by the presentation and the challenge of creating a portable seatbelt that would save lives. As a result, seven teams ended up working on this idea."

At the completion of the course, nine judges, two of whom were Charles and Anne Schewe, selected the seatbelt design created by mechanical engineering students Ronald Leung, Joshua Doolittle and Clint Walton as the winner.

"Our main focus on this project is to make a safe, easy-to-use seatbelt that will save as many lives as soon as possible," said one of the design teams.

The students on the winning team each received a $100 gift certificate to Sensata Technologies, the company that donated $800 to help the seven teams to research and develop their models.

The Sara's Wish Foundation plans to have one of the remaining six teams prevent its creation at the foundation's next meeting in June, and also plans to become active in patenting and marketing portable seatbelts.

"When one's child is taken from you, many decide to go into a room and not come out," said Charles Schewe. "Anne and I decided not to follow that road but rather to become committed to making the study abroad community a safer group of global travelers."

Government assesses city crime

By Lara Jakes Jordan
Associated Press

BOSTON – The Justice Department will study local crime rates in selected cities to see why homicides and other violent criminal activity is on the rise nationally, Attorney General Alberto Gonzales said yesterday.

The government's survey of an unidentified number of cities will look for trends in gang violence, drug trafficking, and released prisoners returning to society that may have contributed to the increase.

Nationally, violent crime rose 2.2 percent last year, the first increase since 2001.

The study "will help us find and use the tools that work most effectively to fight crime and keep our communities safe," Gonzales said in a statement before speaking in Boston to the annual meeting of the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

He said the government is "committed to making sure that every American city and town can share in the success of low violent crime rates."

Mayors and police chiefs recently reported seeing spikes in violent crime for 2006, calling for greater support from federal law enforcement. Last month, Gonzales said cities will need to work harder to combat a spike in crime but shouldn't count on more federal funding, citing growing demands in the war on terrorism.

Officials said the new study will be rolled out in three phases: looking at crime increases in cities, analyzing those results for any trends, and identifying federal programs that can help. It was not clear whether more federal funding will be available for cities, but officials said that "new initiatives" could be created, if necessary.

The government will analyze at least five cities, and potentially dozens more, to get a broad enough picture of crime trends, officials said.

Last month, the FBI found there were 1.39 million violent crimes – including rape, murder, robbery and aggravated assault – reported in the United States in 2005, up from 1.36 million the previous year.

However, Justice officials said Monday that even with the recent surge, the overall national violent crime rate remains lower than any year ever measured except for 2004.

Woman charged with ignoring daughter's severe infection

Deborah Robinson appeared in court Oct. 16, 2006.

By Denise Lavoie
Associated Press

BOSTON – The teenage girl spoke matter-of-factly on the witness stand Monday when asked what her mother did to care for her after she became gravely ill following complications from a bellybutton piercing.

"She was trying to get me to eat because I was getting skinny," she said. "You could tell I was sick, so she was trying to tend to me while I was sick."

The girl's mother, Deborah Robinson, is on trial for endangering the life of her 13-year-old daughter by not seeking medical attention until the girl was near death from a severe infection that spread through her body.

A jury began deliberations Monday afternoon after hearing the girl testify in her mother's defense.

The girl, now 14, showed no emotion as she testified, giving short answers to questions from her mother's lawyer. The Associated Press is not identifying the girl to protect her privacy.

She said she did not have

See INFECTION on page 3

Saddam letter urges Iraqis to put end to sectarian violence

An open letter dictated by former Iraqi leader, Saddam Hussein to his lawyer said that liberation is at hand, and asked that insurgents be merciful with their enemies.

By Qassim Abdul-Zahra
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Gunmen killed the brother of the chief prosecutor in Saddam Hussein's genocide trial Monday, as the ex-president called in an open letter for Iraqis to forgive their American enemies and stop sectarian killings because the country's "liberation is at hand."

The letter appeared to be an effort by Saddam to cast himself in the role of a statesman who could reconcile and rebuild a nation now torn by intensifying sectarian bloodshed between Shiites and Sunnis, continuing attacks by Sunni insurgents and worsening economic problems.

Many Iraqis have come to believe that the United States has decided to begin pulling out of Iraq despite President Bush's denials. And the letter seems to argue that the tide may be turning against U.S.-led foreign troops and the Shiite-dominated government they support.

"The hour of liberation is at hand, God willing. But remember that your near-term goal is confined to freeing your country from the forces of occupation and their followers, and not to be preoccupied in settling scores," Saddam wrote in the Arabic-language letter.

He signed it as "President and commander in chief of the holy warrior armed forces."

The letter, a copy of which was obtained in Jordan by The Associated Press, was dictated to his lawyers during a meeting over the weekend.

Court officials said Monday that a verdict and sentence would be handed down Nov. 5 in the first trial against Saddam, for the killings of 148 Shiite Muslims from the town of Dujail after an assassination attempt against him in 1982.

Many fear the sentence — which is widely expected to be death by hanging — will further inflame sectarian animosities across Iraq, where Saddam remains popular among pockets of the once-dominant Sunni Arab minority.

The slaying of the brother of the top prosecutor in Saddam's second trial, Irrad al-Faroun, added to the fears of sectarian violence. Al-Faroun was shot and killed in front of his wife at his home in Baghdad.

His brother is chief prosecutor Muqth al-Faroun, a Shiite overseeing the case against Saddam on charges of crimes against humanity for a military campaign that killed thousands of Iraqi Kurds during the Iran-Iraq war.

There was no immediate word from law enforcement authorities about the killing or who might be responsible. Irrad al-Faroun worked as a legal adviser to Ahmed Chalabi, an Iraqi exile who returned to a prominent position in the early days after the U.S.-led invasion toppled Saddam.

Al-Faroun's slaying came less than three weeks after the fatal shooting of a brother-in-law of a judge in the genocide trial, which was to resume Tuesday.

Saddam said he resorted to a letter because "my chances to express my opinion are limited" in detention.

"It was only a few times that I managed to address you through the farcical, so-called trial when the microphones were not switched off," he said.

The judges in Saddam's two trials have repeatedly censured him, occasionally expelling him from the courtroom, for contempt of court and making political statements.

Saddam urged Shiites and Sunnis to set aside their differences and focus instead on driving U.S. forces out of Iraq. Expressing pain over sectarian fighting, he said "my heart fails me" over what he called foreigners' success in "sowing divisions among us."

Iraqis are "living the most difficult period in history because of the occupation, killing, destruction and looting," Saddam said, adding that he yearned for a "great unified Iraq, which is not split by any color, segment or allegation."

He urged Sunnis to forgive their Iraqi opponents and also to forgive those who tracked down his two sons, Odai and Qussai, who were killed in a battle with American soldiers in the northern city of Mosul in 2003.

"You must show genuine forgiveness and put aside revenge over the spilled blood of your sons and brothers, including the sons of Saddam Hussein," he said.

Saddam also urged the Sunni-dominated insurgency to choose targets carefully, warning that they are alienating the Iraqi public by using excessive force.

Military requires anthrax vaccine

By Lolita C. Baldor
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon said Monday it will once again begin requiring anthrax vaccinations for troops heading into dangerous regions, reinstating a program that has been challenged repeatedly over possible health risks.

Dr. William Winkenwerder Jr., the assistant secretary of defense for health affairs, said the vaccinations will begin in 30 to 60 days, and will involve troops and civilian Defense Department personnel and contractors who are serving in the Middle East, Central Asia and the Korean Peninsula.

"This is a safe and effective vaccine," Winkenwerder said in a conference call with reporters. He said the move to reinstate the vaccine does not suggest there is any new or elevated threat but the possibility of an anthrax attack is "very real and it has not gone away."

Opponents of the program promised a fresh challenge. Mark S. Zaid, one of the lawyers who previously sued to stop the mandatory program, said he would file a new lawsuit "as soon as needles start going into arms." Other groups who have opposed the program also criticized the new requirements.

"This is a vaccine that is unproven, unnecessary and has the potential to jeopardize the health of a service member where little benefit will be derived," Zaid said. "It's always been a public relations program and nothing more."

He questioned why the Pentagon is inoculating troops in the Middle East when the 2001 anthrax attacks that left five people dead and sickened 17 took place in the United States.

Winkenwerder said the vaccine has been thoroughly reviewed by the federal Food and Drug Administration and several independent groups and deemed safe.

He said anyone who refused the vaccine would be reminded of its importance and safety. Then, if needed, their supervisor would get involved and the matter would be resolved "like any other refusal to follow a lawful order."

He said that while significant numbers of troops refused the vaccine in 1998-99, very few have objected to taking it since then. About 10 people were discharged for refusing the vaccine in 2004, but he said he did not know how many may have refused and gotten other punishments. He was unsure what would happen if a civilian employee or contractor refused the vaccine.

The drug has been at the center of a multiyear lawsuit that began when six members of the military challenged the mandatory vaccination program.

Since 1998, at least 1.2 million troops have been vaccinated against anthrax in six-shot regimens. Hundreds of service members had been punished or discharged for refusing them until U.S. District Judge Emmet Sullivan in December 2004 suspended the vaccinations after he found fault in the FDA's process for approving the drug.

Several months later Sullivan said the Pentagon could resume vaccinations on a voluntary basis. Then, last December the FDA affirmed its earlier finding that the vaccine was safe and effective.

According to Winkenwerder, there is enough vaccine to inoculate the sev-

See ANTHRAX on page 3

700-mile fence to deter illegal immigration across U.S. border

Members of the U.S. National Guard work along a new border fence near the U.S-Mexico border in Otay Mesa, San Diego July 21, 2006.

By Quentin Kilpatrick
The BG News (Bowling Green State U.)

BOWLING GREEN, Ohio — The U.S. House and Senate recently passed the Secure Fence Act of 2006 – an act that calls for the construction of a 700-mile, double-layered fence across sections of the Southern border.

In addition to this, a virtual fence of unmanned aerial drones, ground-based sensors, satellites, radar and cameras will become a permanent fixture of the border landscape by 2008.

"The first step is strengthening our borders," said Brad Mascho, press secretary for Ohio's fifth district U.S. representative Paul Gillmor, who voted for the bill.

Mascho espoused Gillmor's five-point plan on immigration –strengthening the Southern border, enforcing current immigration laws, expanding the guest-migrant worker program, opposing amnesty for illegal immigrants and changing the focus on legal immigrants to bringing in skilled workers or "people that benefit American society."

Gillmor is currently campaigning for re-election in November to retain his seat in the House.

According to The Washington Post, critics say House Republican leaders needed to pass the bill in an attempt to shore up their voting base.

"If you're a Republican, you want to sound tough on immigration," said David Jackson, assistant professor in the political science department at the University.

The bill's timing—less than three weeks before recess for campaigning—certainly isn't coincidental.

But simply sounding tough does little to bring about a pragmatic debate on the estimated 12 million illegal immigrants already here.

"From a policy standpoint, we need to be more realistic," Jackson said. "We're not going to deport 12 million people. That breaks practical and probably moral boundaries."

Another problem is public misperception on immigration.

Gillmor's press secretary said roughly 1 million illegal immigrants have criminal records.

